Coming to the actual facts in the present case, the only objection to the award which is argued before me is the conduct of the arbitrators with regard to the alleged letter acknowledging the debt of Rs. 86-12-0. The petitioner (defendant) is one Savarala Venkatasubbayya. The disputed letter is signed 'S' in English and Venkatasubbayya in Telugu and this is very important in considering the conduct of the arbitrators. It is necessary here to quote the award on that point in full. It states as follows:

"We saw many letters written by the defendant himself:

1. Letter dated September 24, 1927, written to Venkatanarayana
2. " " May 17, 1927, to Ramayya
3. " " August 27, 1927, "
4. " " September 12, 1925, "

The defendant admitted having written these letters. Therein in some the defendant has written ..... (S. Venkatasubbayya in Telugu) in some Savarala Venkatasubbayya... ..... When we made enquiries privately we ascertained that in the account maintained in the sundry bazaar of Meda Lakshminarayana in Kadiranathakota in the account of Savarala Venkatasubbayya at p 63 (July 22, 1929), p. 132 (July 15, 1928), p. 280 (September 15, 1928), p. 286 (August 26,) there is found signature of the defendant as (S. Venkatasubbayya) (S. .....). So in the examination made by us in all ways we believe that the letter filed by the plaintiff was written by the defendant. We also think that the letter was written by the defendant with a bad motive. Therefore, we decide the 2nd issue in favour of the plaintiff"

Exhibits on behalf of defendant: Nil."

Several things are to be noted about this judgment. This is a judgment of men who have some acquaintance with the rules of evidence and even the manner of drawing up a judgment. They have drawn up a separate award. They called on the defendant to state whether he had written the four letters therein exhibited and got his admission. They carefully note that in some letters he has written 'S' in English and Venkatasubbayya in Telugu and that in some other "Savarala Venkatasubbayya" in Telugu. They have also been careful to mark these letters as exhibits for plaintiff as well as to give the list of witnesses examined for the plaintiff and for the defendant, and also to note that the exhibits on behalf of the defendant are nil. It is also to be observed that in the sentence "When we made enquiries privately," they use the English word "Privately." It is also perfectly clear that the defendant must have relied strongly in denying the disputed letter on the fact of the English "S" which is found in the signature there but which is not found in any of the letters which he admitted, and which were signed entirely in Telugu characters. One would never suppose on reading this judgment that this highly important account which contained his signature written with English "S" was shown to the defendant or his statement about it taken. This is strongly borne out by the fact that it is not marked as an exhibit, nor is the name of Meda Lakshminarayana, in whose account is the signature of the defendant, found in the list of witnesses examined. There can be no question that if this document of vital importance was not shown to the petitioner, the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct and that therefore the award should be set aside. This would be a case exactly like Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. v. Firm Kidai Pershad Cheddi Lal (1), quoted above and in this respect it would be clearly distinguishable from Sheikh Mohidin Sahib v. Ramaswami Chetty (9), quoted for the respondent. The lower Court got over this objection by relying on the evidence of one of the arbitrators given before it, and if that evidence could be reconciled with what is stated in the award, then the fact that this Court might not attach the weight to it which the lower Court has done, would not be a sufficient reason for holding that the lower Court acted without jurisdiction or with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, though there would be still one more matter outstanding which I shall mention later. I shall set out the evidence of this arbitrator in so far as it concerns this matter. He says in examination-in-chief:

"We compared the signature of Subbayya in the presence of both parties before all the arbitrators by looking into account book of Lakshmidassayya. The account was sent for on the request of the plaintiff. We held no private enquiries."

In cross-examination he says:

"We acted on the evidence before us only. The private enquiry referred to in the award relates to the comparison of signature. Really there was no private enquiry as the accounts were sent for publicly."

I must confess that I cannot see how this statement can be reconciled with what is so clearly set out in the arbitrator's judgment. It is there distinctly stated:

"When we made enquiries privately we ascertained that in the account of M. Lakshminarayana, there is found the signature of the defendant".

No doubt that in itself would not have been irregular if the account had been brought to the notice of the defendant before the arbitrators. That is not the sort of explanation which the witness attempts to give. He now says that the account was sent for on the request of the plaintiff, and that the arbitrators held no private enquiries, and in cross-examination he says "The private enquiry referred to in the award relates to the comparison of signature." This explanation of private enquiry seems to me a pure subterfuge. The comparison of signature by arbitrators is not a private enquiry. It is most important to note that even in his deposition there is no statement that the defendant was asked whether he admitted or denied his signature in this account. I have remarked above that the arbitrators have expressly stated in their judgment that the defendant admitted his signature in the letters there exhibited. In the nature of things, when this much more important document containing what was alleged to be his signature was in question, had he been present, he must have been asked whether he denied or admitted it. When we find that fact neither noted in the original judgment nor deposed to by the witness and when the judgment does not contain the document as one of the exhibits, the conclusion seems to be irresistable that the evidence of the witness cannot be reconciled with the judgment. The lower Court makes no attempt to do so. It simply ignores the apparent difference. For the lower Court to have thus accepted the evidence of the arbitrator which was in direct conflict with the judgment and which evidence it was of course natural for the arbitrator to give in order to excuse himself and the fellow-arbitrators if they had adopted the procedure which on the face of the judgment they appear to have adopted, was a material irregularity in exercising its jurisdiction.

Another point to be mentioned is this, and even accepting the arbitrators' evidence, as the lower Court does, it still remains outstanding. There is no proof that any evidence was taken that this entry in the account was in the writing of the defendant. As I have said, Meda Lakshminarayana is not stated in the arbitrators' judgment to have been examined by the arbitrators. His name does not appear in the list of witnesses given in their judgment and it is not stated by P. W. No. 1 in his evidence before the Court that he was examined or was called as a witness. It is just arguable that it was still open to the arbitrators by mere comparison of the signatures in the admitted letters with the signature in the account to conclude that both are similar and that therefore that the disputed letter was written by the defendant. But if that was the case, the signature in the account did not really amount to any additional evidence at all because the question then was exactly the same as to whether the signature in the disputed letter was the same as the signature in the admitted letters, and if that could be determined by a mere comparison of the writing of the documents, then an unproved signature in the account would not be any additional evidence. In Sanyasi Rao v. Venkata

Rao (10), Dobson v. Groves (11), is quoted wherein Lord Denman, C. J., observed:

"When once the case is brought within the general principle by a possibility that the arbitrator's mind may have been biassed, there is a sufficient objection."

In the same Madras case, it is stated

"In any event, it is settled law that if evidence is improperly admitted, the Courts will not consider the question whether such evidence had or had not an effect upon the arbitrator's mind, and in this case the arbitrator having made private enquiries and obtained information, his award is thereby vitiated."

Here, the evidence improperly admitted is crucial evidence in the case. There can be no doubt that it must have very strongly affected the arbitrators' minds.

In the result, therefore, the whole award must be set aside, the petition allowed with costs, and the suit remanded for disposal.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision Petition No. 179 of 1934

March 29, 1934

JAI LAL, J.

UTTAM SINGH—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, RAWALPINDI—OPPOSITE PARTY

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), s. 173—Scope and applicability of—Structure made with permission of Municipality years ago—Continuance after expiry of period without payment — Offence, if committed —Remedy of Municipal Committee—Civil suit.

Section 173, Punjab Municipal Act, applies only to encroachments which have recently been made and it is the act of building or erecting the encroachment which has been made punishable and the section does not apply to encroachments or erections which have existed for some years. Where a movable encroachment or projection was made some years ago and with the permission of the Municipal Committee on payment of rent, no offence is committed if the structure is continued after the period fixed without payment of rent. In such a case the relation between the parties is that of landlord and tenant or licensor and licensee and hence the aggrieved party should seek his remedy in the Civil Court.

Cr. R. P. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Rawalpindi, dated January 31, 1934.

Facts.—The petitioner had a hut erected on a site leased by him from the Municipal Committee but the permission to occupy the site had expired and he had not paid any rent for some several months before he was prosecuted.

The ground of revision is that as the petitioner had erected his hut originally with the permission of the Municipal Committee and had kept it on the site for some time with that permission, he could not now be prosecuted under s. 173 for mere non-payment of rent. On behalf of the petitioner the ruling Kirpa Ram v. Municipal Committee, Amritsar (1), was cited in which a conviction under s. 172, Municipal Act, regarding some encroachments which had been in existence for a period of 8 to 15 years was held to be illegal. The wording of s. 172, although it deals with slightly different offences from those covered by s. 173, is the same to the extent of saying: "Whoever without the written permission of the Committee builds, places or erects....." It is clear from the prosecution evidence in this case that when the petitioner placed his movable hut on the site in question, he did so with the permission of the Municipal Committee and even if that permission has now expired, he cannot now be said to have committed the offence of placing his hut there and I do not think the section is intended to cover cases in which a man has merely failed to pay rent for a site which he occupied originally with the permission of the Committee.

I accordingly forward the case to the High Court with the recommendation that the conviction be set aside.

Mr. Gobind Ram Khanna, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Rawalpindi recommending that the conviction of the petitioner, Uttam Singh, under s. 173, Punjab Municipal Act, be set aside.

The facts found by the learned Sessions Judge are that the petitioner applied to the Municipal Committee of Rawalpindi for permission to place a movable structure in front of his building, which amounted to an encroachment on or over a street. This permission was granted to him on payment of rent fixed by the Municipal Committee. It appears that this structure was then built or placed on or over the street by the petitioner and he continued to pay the rent to the Municipal Committee for some time. Later, however, he ceased to pay the rent and after making some attempts to recover it from him, the Municipal Committee prosecuted him under s. 173, Municipal Act. The question is whether under the circumstances mentioned above, that is to say, when it is established that the encroachment on or over the street was originally made with the sanction of the Committee, assuming that the sanction was conditional, the petitioner could be convicted under s. 173, even on breach of the condition. In other words, whether it can be said that on the breach of the condition, which, in this case, is the non-payment of the rent, the petitioner can be said to have placed in front of his building a movable encroachment on or above the street.

The learned Counsel for the Municipal Committee has also contended before me that in this case the period for which the lease has been granted by the Municipal Committee originally had expired. There is no documentary evidence on the record to establish this and the learned Sessions Judge has not found this to be the case. But assuming that the lease had expired in this case, the question is whether s. 173, applies. In my opinion, the same considertions apply to both the cases so far as the interpretation of s. 173 of the Act is concerned.

No direct authority has been cited before me. But there are a number of cases in which s. 172, Punjab Municipal Act, has been interpreted by this Court. The only difference between the two sections is that s. 172 relates to immovable encroachments on or above the streets and s. 173 relates to movable encroachments. Section 172 lays down that whoever places or erects an immovable encroachment shall be punishable. Section 173 says that whoever places in front of any building any movable encroachment shall be punishable. It has been held that s. 172 applies only to encroachments which have recently been made and it is the act of building or erecting the encroachment which has been made punishable. The section has therefore been held not to apply to encroachments or erections which have existed for some years. In the present case, the movable encroachment or projection was made some years ago and with the permission of the Municipal Committee. Can it, therefore, be asserted with any justification, that because either the sanction has expired, or rather the tenancy or license has expired, or because having made the projection or encroachment, the petitioner has failed to comply with the conditions which had to be performed on his part, he placed the encroachment without the sanction of the Committee. In my opinion the view of the learned Sessions Judge is correct that s. 173, as it is worded, cannot be applied to such cases. On the other hand, it applies to cases of recent encroachments made without sanction of the Municipal Committee. The result may be unfortunate, but, in my opinion, according to law, as it is, the remedy of the Committee is to have recourse to the Civil Courts and not to prosecute in the Criminal Courts. The Committee having sanctioned the encroachment on payment of what is described to be rent and the relationship between the Committee and the petitioner being that of landlord and tenant or licensor and licensee, it seems to me that it is all the more reasonable that the aggrieved party should seek its remedy in the Civil Courts.

I accordingly accept the recommendation of the Sessions Judge and acquit the petitioner and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded to him.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal from the Madras High Court

March 5, 1935

LORD THANKERTON, LORD ALNESS AND SIR SHADI LAL

RAMAKRISHNA AYYAR—APPELLANT

PARAMESWARA AYYAR AND OTHERS —RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law—Joint family—Transfer of one member's share to near relation for nominal consideration to save it from creditors—Whether constitutes separation—Right to share in outstandings realised by other members—Practice—Privy Council—Concurrent findings based on appreciation of evidence—Whether will be disturbed by Privy Council.

Where a member of a joint Hindu family is induced to assign his share in the family property to a near relation (his father-in-law), for a nominal consideration, the transfer being intended not to deprive him of his property, but to save it from his creditors, the transfer does not extinguish his interest in the estate and he does not cease to be a co-parcener in the joint property and he is entitled to a share in the outstandings, if any, realised by the other members on behalf of the family.

Concurrent findings of the Courts below, proceeding upon an appreciation of the evidence adduced by the parties, will not be disturbed by the Privy Council

Mr. Subba Row, for the Appellant.

Sir Shadi Lal.—This appeal arises out of an action brought by the plaintiff Parameswara Ayyar for partition of the property belonging to a Hindu co-parcenary consisting of himself and his father and brothers. The main defence to the claim was that the plaintiff had parted with his share in the estate by a deed executed by him on August 31, 1916, and ceased to have any interest in the property sought to be partitioned. This plea has been over-ruled by the Courts in India with the result that the plaintiff has been granted a preliminary decree for partition of the joint estate.

On this appeal preferred by one of the brothers of the plaintiff (the father having died during the pendency of the suit in the trial Court), it is again urged that the deed referred to above operates as a bar to the action. The circumstances which led to the execution of the document may be briefly stated. The plaintiff, who was an improvident young man of loose character had embarked upon a career of extravagance and reckless borrowing. Both his father and father-in-law were, therefore, anxious to prevent his creditors from seizing his share in the estate in satisfaction of the debts due to them. They accordingly induced him to assign his share in favour of his father-in-law for a nominal consideration of Rs. 1,000. But the High Court in concurrence with the trial Judge have decided that the transfer was intended not to deprive him of his property but to save it from his creditors, and that it did not extinguish his interest in the estate. The concurrent findings of the Courts below, proceeding, as they do, upon an appreciation of the evidence adduced by the parties, cannot be disturbed, and it is clear that the plaintiff having successfully removed the obstacle in his way must be held to be a co-parcener in the joint property.

In order to determine the property which was available for partition, the Courts had to adjudicate upon certain alienations of the co-parcenary property, which were made by the plaintiff's father after August 31, 1916. There are only two transactions which now require consideration. One of them is a gift made by the father in October 1916. Now the deed evidencing the gift contains an express clause to the effect that in the event of the donee dying without leaving any male issue, the gifted property would revert to the donor. It is beyond dispute that the donee has died and left no male issue. The clause in question, therefore, comes into operation and without impeaching the deed of gift the plaintiff is entitled to claim the property as part of the estate which should be partitioned.

The other transfer was made by the father on November 12, 1916, by an instrument which purported to sell to his sister for a sum Rs. 7,000 the property specified therein. There is, however, no evidence that she ever paid the money which was the ostensible consideration for the transfer. Indeed, as stated by the High Court she does not lay any claim to the property, and has, in fact, re-conveyed it to the appellant who represents the joint family. The learned Judges of the High Court were, therefore, justified in treating it as part of the joint estate.

No reasonable objection can be taken to the finding that the plaintiff is entitled to a share in the outstandings, if any, realised by the defendants on behalf of the family.

Their Lordships are of the opinion that there is no substance in any of the grounds raised by the appellant, and they will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed and the judgment and the decree of the High Court be affirmed.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal from the Calcutta High Court

March 1, 1935

LORD TOMLIN, LORD THANKERTON, LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON AND SIR SHADI LAL

EMPEROR—APPELLANT

DAHU RAUT AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 421, 422, 423, 439—Powers of Appellate Court to dismiss appeal summarily—Appeal not dismissed summarily—Duty of Court to comply with provisions of ss 422 and 423—Powers of Appellate Court under s. 423 and High Court under s. 439—Whether same—Jurisdiction of Courts conferred by Statute—Courts cannot go outside the provisions.

Upon the true construction of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Appellate Court is not entitled to dismiss an appeal summarily in terms of s. 421 unless the Court is satisfied that there is no sufficient ground for interfering in accordance with the relief sought in the appeal, and where the appeal is not dismissed summarily, the Court, is bound in order to the disposal of the appeal, to comply with the provisions of s. 422 as to notice, and with the provisions of s. 423 as to sending for the record, if such record is not already in Court.

The terms of s 421 exclude the possibility of partial summary dismissal, e. g., in so far as the conviction is appealed against. Failing summary dismissal, the provisions of ss. 422 and 423 apply and, the provisions as to notices in s. 422 and the provision as to sending for the record in s. 423 are clearly peremptory, and there can be no room for revision at that stage. The words "admitted" and 'admission' in reference to appeals which are not summarily dismissed, though not infrequently used in the Courts in India, are not happily chosen From their ordinary meaning they would imply that the appeal requires to be admitted at this stage, whereas the Appellate Court are bound to deal with the appeal, and they can only do so when they have complied with the preliminary steps of giving the statutory notices under s. 422, and sending for the record, which will enable the Court to deal with the appeal in accordance with the provisions of s. 423. The powers conferred on the Appellate Court under s. 423 are as ample as the High Court would have on revision under s. 439, with the exception of the power to enhance the sentence, and if the appeal is before a High Court, and it is thought to be desirable, there is no reason why the accused should not be warned that, at the hearing on the petition, he may be called on to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced. The jurisdiction of the Court in these matters is statutory, and the Court, however admirable its intentions, is not entitled to go outside these provisions and, in effect, to legislate for itself.

A. against the judgment of Mr. Justice Lort-Williams and Mr. Justice McNair of Calcutta High Court in admitted. Appeals Nos. 326, 340, 407 and 432 of 1933, dated August 29, 1933, reported as 145 Ind. Cas. 937; 34 Cr. L. J. 1100.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and W. Wallach, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Majid and J. M. Pringle, for the Respondent.

Lord Thankerton.—These are consolidated appeals by special leave from four judgments of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal dated respectively May 29, May 29, May 31, and June 7, 1933, which reduced the sentences passed on the respective respondents by the respective Criminal Courts of first instance on the March 25, the February 28, the April 1, and March 18, 1933.

In each case the respective respondents presented petitions of appeal to the High Court against both the conviction and the sentence, in exercise of the statutory right conferred on them by the Criminal Procedure Code, and the question in the present appeals is whether the orders of the High Court in each of the four cases by which the sentences were reduced, were in conformity with the requirements of the Code. The Crown, as appellant, maintains that the orders were passed in violation of the statutory provisions and were beyond the jurisdiction of the High Court. The Crown desires to test the validity of the procedure adopted by the High Court, but does not ask for any interference with the reduction of the sentences made by these orders.

The sections of the Code which prescribe the procedure to be followed on presentation of a petition to the Appellate Court—in this instance, the High Court,—are as follows:—

"4 9. Every appeal shall be made in the form of a petition in writing presented by the appellant or his Pleader, and every such petition shall (unless the Court to which it is presented otherwise directs) be accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order appealed against, and, in cases tried by a jury, a copy of the heads of the charge recorded under s. 367.

"420. If the appellant is in jail, he may present his petition of appeal and the copies accompanying the same to the officer in charge of the jail, who shall thereupon forward such petition and copies to the proper Appellate Court.

"421.—(1) On receiving the petition and copy under s. 419 or s. 420, the Appellate Court shall peruse the same, and, if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering, it may dismiss the appeal summarily;

"Provided that no appeal presented under s. 419 shall be dismissed unless the appellant or his Pleader has had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same.

"(2) Before dismissing an appeal under this section, the Court may call for the record of the case, but shall not be bound to do so.

"422. If the Appellate Court does not dismiss the appeal summarily, it shall cause notice to be given to the appellant or his Pleader, and to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf, of the time and place at which such appeal will be heard, and shall, on the application of such officer, furnish him with a copy of the grounds of appeal; and, in cases of appeals under s. 417, the Appellate Court shall cause a like notice to be given to the accused.

"423.—(1) The Appellate Court shall then send for the record of the case, if such record is not already in Court. After perusing such record and hearing, the appellant or his Pleader, if he appears, and the Public Prosecutor, if he appears, and, in case of an appeal under s 417, the accused if he appears, the Court may, if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering dismiss the appeal, or may—

"(a) in an appeal from an order of acquittal, reverse such order and direct that further inquiry be made, or that the accused be re-tried or committed for trial, as the case may be, or find him guilty and pass sentence on him according to law;

"(b) in an appeal from a conviction, (1) reverse the finding and sentence and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be re-tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court or committed for trial, or (2) alter the finding, maintaining the sentence, or with or without altering the finding, reduce the sentence, or (3) with or without such reduction and with or without altering the finding, alter the nature of the sentence, but, subject to the provisions of s. 106, sub-section (3), not so as to enhance the same;

"(c) in an appeal from any other order, alter or reverse such order;

"(d) make any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper.

"(2) Nothing herein contained shall authorise the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury, unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him".

The following facts are common to each of the four cases:—No order was passed for summary dismissal of the appeal under s. 421 (1); no notice was sent in terms of s. 422 to the Legal Remembrancer, who is the officer appointed by the Local Government; the record was not sent for, as provided by s. 423 (1); in each case an Advocate was present on behalf of the accused, when the order was made by the High Court, but none was present on behalf of the Crown.

There were slight variations in the form of the orders. In the case of two of the orders it was stated that the appeal was admitted, while a third order stated "This appeal is allowed on the question of sentence only"; the fourth order is silent on this point. But all four orders are expressed as pronounced in exercise of the Court's criminal appellate jurisdiction.

On becoming aware of what had been done, the Deputy Legal Remembrancer approached the Acting Chief Justice (Sir Charu Chandra Ghose) on the matter, and on August 8, 193', the latter passed an order in the following terms:—

"This matter was mentioned before me on Thursday last by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer. I have no jurisdiction whatsoever to interfere with the orders of the Division Bench. As Mr. Justice Lort-Williams has written to me as Chief Justice that he would like to look into the matter further, I direct that the two learned Judges referred to on this page (Lort-Williams and McNair, J J.) do form a Division Bench on Friday August 11, at 4 P. M., when the Crown, if so advised, may mention the matter to the learned Judges."

Subsequently, the matter was mentioned before the two learned Judges named in the above order, when the Advocate-General, on behalf of the Crown submitted that the orders in the four petitions of appeal were made without jurisdiction in respect that they had been passed without notice to the Legal Remembrancer and without sending for the records, that they were therefore, null and of no effect, and that the petitions should be disposed of according to law. Lort-Williams, J., passed one judgment in all four cases on August 29, 1933, and McNair J., delivered a separate judgment on August 31, 1933. Both of the learned Judges held that they could not review or alter their orders, except in regard to clerical errors within the meaning of s. 369 of the Code, but they differed as to the existence of such errors in the orders in question, and no alteration or correction was made.

In explanation and justification of the orders Lort-Williams, J., stated as follows:—

"It is complained that as the appeals were admitted, the usual notices ought to have been given, and the appeal heard as provided in ss. 422 and 423 of the Criminal Proceuure Code. In each of these orders as drawn up, there are clerical errors, and the form of the order is not in accordance with the judgment which I gave. This was overlooked when the orders were signed—what I said was, that there was no necessity to send for the record, and then I proceeded to give reasons why the sentences ought to be modified According to my recollection, nothing was said about admitting or dismissing the appeal, but the effect of the order was, that the appeal was dismissed summarily under s 421 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the sentence was varied under the Court's revisional powers, the proceedings having otherwise come to its knowledge within the meaning of s. 439, Criminal Procedure Code.

This kind of order is not the usual one of admission or rejection of the appeal, and doubt seems to have arisen in the mind of the Bench Clerk, and in the office, about the correct form of the order. In future, the senior Judge of the Criminal Bench should be consulted, when any doubt or difficulty arises about the from of the judgment of the Court.

A number of similar orders were made by the Criminal Bench over which I presided two years ago, and no complaint was made by the Crown or by any one. This form of order is convenient and useful, and is intended to save unnecessary waste of time, labour and expense, which is a matter not to be lightly disregarded in these difficult days. Where the Court is satisfied that the conviction was justified, but thinks that there may be grounds for reduction of sentence, it will generally invite the Crown and the appellant, or either of them, to furnish information in order to assist the Court to arrive at a decision. In such a case, the practice is to admit the appeal on the question of sentence only, though it is doubtful whether this procedure is strictly within the provisions of the Code But where the Court does not require any further information on the point, it would be merely a waste of time, money and labour, to issue notices, and send for records, and summon parties whom the Court does not wish to hear.

It must be remembered that the question of punishment is peculiarly a matter for the Court. In revision the Crown has no right to seek to influence the Court on this question unless invited by the Court to do so. The Deputy Legal Remembrancer must have overlooked this, when he complained to the Acting Chief Justice that he had a great deal to say upon the subject in connection with the four sentences to which I have referred. The Court always hears him with patience, but in revision neither party has any right of audience, though no order must be made to the prejudice of the accused, unless he has had an opportunity of being heard. (Sections 439 and 440, Criminal Procedure Code.)

I am satisfied that the Court has jurisdiction to proceed as it did. If such procedure were not strictly within the provisions of the Code, provision for it ought to be made without delay. But in my opinion we have the power already. The powers of the Court in revision are almost unlimited. In particular it has all the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by ss. 423, 426, 427 and 428, Criminal Procedure Code. In an appeal under s. 423 the Court has no power to enhance the sentence, but it may do so in the exercise of its revisional powers. If the Court has power to enhance the sentence in revision, surely it has power to modify or reduce it. The Court when hearing an appeal may alter the finding, and then under its revisional powers enhance the sentence. (See the case of In re Bali) Reddi (1). In the case of Hridoy Mondal v. Emperor (2) the accused had pleaded guilty to murder, and had been sentenced to transportation for life, and had appealed. The Court dismissed the appeal, because he had pleaded guilty, and the minimum sentence had been passed, but in exercise of its revisional powers, the Court altered the conviction to one under s. 304, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced the appellant to seven years' rigorous imprisonment."

McNair, J. stated as follows -

"The facts of each case and the orders made have been referred to in detail by my learned brother, and it is unnecessary for me to analyse the exact procedure which was adopted, or the reasons which prompted us to make the orders. It may well be, as stated by my learned brother, that we intended to dismiss the appeals and to deal with the question of sentence under our powers of revision.

The orders, as worded, purport to show that the appeals were admitted and the sentences reduced."

These observations of the learned Judges appear to show either a confusion of thought as to the provisions of the Code or an attempt to justify a practice which is inconsistent with its provisions. The jurisdiction of the Court in these matters is statutory, and the Court, however admirable its intentions, is, not entitled to go outside these provisions and—in effect—to legislate for itself.

Chapter XXXI of the Code, as its title bears, is a complete Code relating to appeals and the Appellate Court referred to includes other Courts than the High Court. Chapter XXXII, on the other hand, confers a special jurisdiction on the High Court only as regards references and revision.

On presentation of a petition of appeal in exercise of the statutory right conferred on the accused the Appellate Court is given a power of summary dismissal by s. 421, "if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering," and their Lordships have difficulty in understanding the suggestion of Lort-Williams, J., that the appeals could have been summarily dismissed in the present case, since each appeal asked for reduction of sentence, and the Appellate Court took the view that there was sufficient ground for interfering with the sentences. The terms of the section equally exclude the possibility of partial summary dismissal, e. g., in so far as the conviction is appealed against. Failing summary dismissal, the provisions ss. 422 and 423, apply and, in their Lordships' opinion, the provisions as to notices in s. 422, and the provision as to sending for the record in s. 423, are clearly peremptory, and there can be no room for revision at that stage. The words 'admitted' and 'admission' in reference to appeals which are not summarily dismissed, though not infrequently used in the Courts in India, do not appear to their Lordships to be happily chosen. From their ordinary meaning they would imply that the appeal requires to be admitted at this stage, whereas the Appellate Court are bound to deal with the appeal, and they can only do so when they have complied with the preliminary steps of giving the statutory notices under s. 422, and sending for the record, which will enable the Court to deal with the appeal in accordance with the provisions of s. 423. The powers conferred on the Appellate Court under s. 423 appear to be as ample as the High Court would have on revision under s. 439, with the exception of the power to enhance the sentence, and if the appeal is before a High Court, and it is thought to be desirable, there is no reason why the accused should not be warned that, at the hearing on the petition, he may be called on to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced. A similar course was taken in the case of In re Bali Reddi (1), which was referred to by Lort-Williams, J., although the decision of the Madras High Court on the main point in that case has been doubted in the decision of this Board in Kishan Singh v. Emperor (3). In the other case referred to by the learned Judge, Hridoy Mondal v. Emperor (2), the High Court first dismissed the appeal and, thereafter, exercised their power of revision. In re Chunbidya (4).

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the procedure of the High Court in the four appeals here in question was in violation of their statutory duty in respect of their failure to comply with the provisions of s 422 as to notice to the Crown, Accordingly, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals should be allowed, and that it should be declared that, upon the true construction of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Appellate Court is not entitled to dismiss an appeal summarily in terms of s. 421, unless the Court is satisfied that there is no sufficient ground for interfering in accordance with the relief sought in the appeal and that where the appeal is not dismissed summarily, the Court is bound, in order to the disposal of the appeal, to comply with the provisions of s. 422 as to notice, and with the provisions of s. 423 as to sending for the record, if such record is not already in Court. In respect that the appellant does not desire any order with regard to the reduction of the sentences, no further order is necessary.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

First Civil Appeal No. 309 of 1930
December 5, 1933
KING AND RACHHPAL SINGH, JJ., SRI NATHJI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS —APPELLANTS
versus
Musammat PANNA KUNWAR—PLAINTIFF —RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 132, 123—Plaintiff asking only for money decree—No prayer for enforcement of charge—Art. 132, if applies—Suit for recovery of legacy from persons in possession who are legally bound to pay it—Limitation for suit.

Article 132, Limitation Act will not apply to a case in which the plaintiff does not ask for the enforcement of any charge but simply asks for a money decree against the defendants. [p. 391, col. 1.]

A suit for recovery of a legacy from persons in possession of the estate who are legally bound to pay the same is governed by Art. 123, Limitation Act.

F. C. A. from the decision of the Additional Sub-Judge, Mutura, dated March 11, 1930.

Messrs. S. N. Sen and G. S. Pathak, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Respondent.

Rachhpal Singh, J.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit to recover a sum of money. The facts which have given rise to this litigation between the parties may briefly be stated as follows: Musammat Panna Kunwar, the plaintiff-respondent, is the daughter of one Pandit Baldeo Narain Singh who died on January 11, 1912. He was the owner and in possession of considerable property. On January 5, 1912 B. Baldeo Narain Singh executed a will in favour of one Keshab Deo alias Kabli Singh, his nephew. Under the terms of the aforesaid will he directed Keshab Deo to pay a sum of Rs. 500 yearly to Musammat Panna Kunwar and her son. On the death of Pandit Baldeo Narain Singh a dispute arose between the plaintiff on the one side and Keshab Deo on the other as regards the estate left by the deceased. The plaintiff Musammat Panna Kunwar instituted a suit to recover possession over the entire estate left by the deceased on July 11, 1915, on the allegations that she was the sole heiress of her father and that the will set up by the defendant was a forgery. The suit was decreed by the first Court but that decree was reversed by the High Court which decision was finally upheld by their Lordships of the Privy Council on December 16, 1925. On December 10, 1928, Musammat Panna Kunwar plaintiff-respondent instituted a suit to recover the arrears of maintenance from January 5, 1912, till the date of the suit together with interest thereon. She claimed a sum of Rs. 8,000 on account of principal and Rs. 4,547-8-0 for interest, the total amount claimed being Rs. 12,547-8-0. It appears that Babu Keshab Deo alias Kabli Singh had died before the date of the suit. He had on August 23, 1922, during the pendency of the appeal in the suit which the plaintiff had instituted for possession over the estate of her father, executed a will under which he left his entire estate which he had got under the will of Pandit Baldeo Narain Singh in favour of Thakur Sri Nathji an idol. The other defendants in the case before us are trustees of the temple in whose favour Keshab Deo had made a will.

The defendants resisted the claim and alleged inter alia that the suit was not within limitation that it was barred by the rule of res judicata and was not maintainable and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover interest; all these pleas have been decided against the defendants and it has been held by the learned Subordinate Judge that the claim is within limitation and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount for which she sued. The present appeal has been preferred against the decree made by the learned Subordinate Judge.

The plea that the suit of the plaintiff was barred under s. 11, Civil Procedure Code, was abandoned in this Court.

Only two pleas have been urged in this appeal before us one is that of limitation and the other relates to interest.

We proceed to consider the plea of limitation first. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that either Art. 132 or Art. 123, Sch. I, Limitation Act, is applicable. We are of opinion that Art. 132 is not applicable to the case before us. That Article applies to a case where the plaintiff seeks to enforce payment of money by enforcing his charge upon an immovable property. In the case which we are hearing, the respondent did not ask for the enforcement of any charge but simply asked for a money decree against the defendants. The learned Counsel for the respondent had to concede that Art. 132, Limitation Act could not be made applicable to the case before us in view of the fact that the plaintiff in her plaint did not seek to enforce her charge against the immovable property in possession of the appellants. He, however, made an application on behalf of the respondent during the hearing of the appeal asking for permission to amend the plaint by adding a relief for enforcing a charge against the immovable property which is liable for the payment of the maintenance of the plaintiff-respondent. That application was rejected by us for the reasons recorded in our order. As the plaintiff asked for a money decree only, it must be held that Art. 132, Limitation Act, would not apply to the case. This Article would apply only where the claim is to realise the money by a sale of the property upon which it is charged.

The next question for our consideration is whether Art. 123, Limitation Act, is applicable. Article 123 enacts that in a suit for a legacy or for a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator, or for a distributive share of the property of an intestate, the period of limitation is 12 years from the time when the legacy or share becomes payable or deliverable. The contention which has been raised by the learned Counsel for the appellants is that the suit of the respondent is governed by Art. 120 and not by Art. 123. This question came up for consideration in a case before a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Parthasarathy v. Venkatadri (1). There the Court held that a suit of this description would be governed by Art. 123. The learned Chief Justice Schwabe, C. J., dealing with the question made the following observations on this point which are to be found at p. 205*:

"But it is contended that this Article only applies to actions against executors and administrators and that neither the defendants nor their fathers were either. But, in my judgment this Article applies to any one in possession of the state and bound to pay the legacies."

Coutts Trotter, J., at p. 209* dealing with this question remarked:

"I agree further with my Lord in thinking that Art. 123 applies to such a case as the present even where the person sued is not an executor but a person who is in fact in possession of the estate in circumstances which render him accountable in equity to those having claims upon the estate."

Kumaraswami Sastri, J., at p. 246* in the same ruling remarked as follows:

"Whatever doubts there may be as regards cases of intestacy, I do not see any reason for holding that a suit for a legacy or for a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator can fall under Art. 123 only if it is against an executor and not if it is against one in possession of assets which are liable for payment of the legacies. The wording of Art. 123 is general. It refers to a suit for a legacy or for a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator and if the legatee has a cause of action against the person in possession of the assets of the testator, I do not see why there should be a further qualification that the person in possession of the assets should be an executor or administrator. I think it will be reading into the Article words which are not there, namely, that the suit should be for a legacy or for a share of a residue against an executor or administrator."

In the case before us the suit of the respondent is one against persons who admit that the estate in their possession is liable for the legacy. The very fact that the defendants-appellants concede their liability for the payment of the maintenance for six years prior to the date of the suit goes to show that they are persons who admit their liability for the maintenance claimed by the respondents. It may be remarked that the Full Bench case of the Madras High Court mentioned above went in appeal before their Lordships of he Privy Council and the judgment in appeal is to be found in Venkatadri v. Parthasarathi (2), in which the decision of the Full Bench was affirmed. The learned Counsel for the appellants has, however, contended that the case reported in Ghulam Muhammad v. Ghulam Husain (3), which is a Privy Council case supports his contention. In that case at p. 252* their Lordships of the Privy Council made the following observations:

"Before the Board it was for the first time suggested that the suit in reality falls under Art. 123, which applies to a suit for a legacy or for a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator, or for a distributive share of the property of an intestate. The period of limitation in such a case is 12 years from the date when the legacy or share became payable or deliverable."

A perusal of that ruling will show that in fact it does not support the contention of the appellants. The argument raised before their Lordships of the Privy Council was based on the assumption that the owner of the property must be deemed to have died intestate and that what the appellants were claiming was a distributive share in the estate. It was on this assumption that the contention was put forward that to a case of that nature Art. 123, Limitation Act, would be applicable. Their Lordships of the Privy Council were of opinion that this contention was not well founded because in a long series of rulings of various High Courts in India it had been settled that in a case between several co-heirs of an intestate the Article applicable would be 144 and not 123. It will be seen that most of the cases referred to by their Lordships in that judgment were cases between co-heirs and the question which had to be considered in those cases was whether the period of limitation under Art. 123 should be applied or the cases should be governed by Art. 144. The Courts were of opinion that if Art. 123, Limitation Act was made applicable, then it would be in conflict with the rule of law under which the possession of one co-heir is to be deemed as possession of the other co-heirs. It was under those circumstances that their Lordships of the Privy Council held that in suits between co-heirs, the Article of limitation applicable would be Art. 144 and not Art. 123. The decision reported in Ghulam Muhammad v. Ghulam Husain (3), has no application to a case in which the plaintiff claims a legacy and that is why we find that there is no mention of the Madras Full Bench ruling in it. In a case reported in Bai Jivi v. Bai Bihanboo (4), it was held by a Bench of two learned Judges that:

"The word 'distribution' has a peculiar meaning of distribution of an estate which has vested in an executor or administrator. Article 144, and not Art. 123 therefore applies to a suit to recover a share by a Muhammadan heir from a person in management of the property."

In dealing with this point the following observations were made:

"On the first question as to whether Art. 123 applies, we think that Art. 123 is restricted to suits where a share is sought to be recovered as such from a person who legally represents the estate of the deceased either as executor, administrator or otherwise, and who is bound by law as such representative to pay or deliver the share. The appellants rely on the decision in Shirinbai v. Ratanbai (5), and particularly on the remarks of Macleod, J., at pp. 860 and 861* and the ruling of the Privy Council in Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (6), and the decision of the Madras High Court in Parthasarathy v. Venkatadri (1). In the subsequent decisions of this Court in Kallangowda v Bibishaya (7), and Nur Din v. Bu Umrao (8), Sir Norman Macleod was of opinion that Art. 144 would apply where a suit is brought by a Muhammadan sharer to recover his share of the immovable property from the person in possession of such property. Fawcett, J., in Nur Din v. Bu Umrao (8), expressed the view that the decision of the Privy Council in Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (6), which related to the right of succession of the eldest son under the Burmese Buddhist Law to be asserted not within a certain limited period of time but within the period of limitation did not really decide the point as to whether Art. 123, Limitation Act, applied to a case of a Muhammadan suing to recover his share, from a person in possession or management of the property and preferred to follow the earlier Privy Council decision in Muhammad Riasat Ali v Hasin Banu (9), and held that the word 'distribution' has a peculiar meaning of distribution of an estate which has vested in an executor or administrator. The Madras case of Parthasarathy v. Venkatadri (1), and Venkatadri v. Parathasarathi (2), refer to a suit to recover a legacy and to such a suit Art. 123 would clearly apply The view of the Madras High Court in the earlier Full Bench decision in Khadersa Haji Bappu v. Ayssa Ummah (10), was followed by this Court in Maktumawa v. Allama, Second Appeal No. 108 of 1916, decided on February 25, 1919, by Scott, C. J , and is consistent with the decision of this Court in Keshav Jagannath v. Narayan Sakharam (11). The same view was taken by the Calcutta High Court in Ahidinnessa Bibi v Isuf Ali Khan (12). The decision in Nur Din v. Bu Umrao (8) was followed by this Court in Fatemiya v. Sardarkhan Cross Appeal No 276 of 1925 decided on January 31, 1928 by Patkar and Baker, JJ. We think, therefore, that we should follow the decision in Nur Din v. Bu Umrao (8), and hold that Art. 123 would not apply to a suit such as the present to recover a share by a Muhammadan heir from a person in management of the property. It would, therefore, follow that Art. 144 would apply."

It may be pointed out that in the case of Ghulam Muhammad v. Ghulam Husain (3), it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that Art. 123 applied not only to suits against executors or administrators, but also in suits against persons legally charged with the distribution of the estate. We are, therefore, of opinion that the case before us which is one for the recovery of a legacy by the respondent from persons who are in possession of the estate and who are legally bound to pay the same, is governed by Art. 123, Limitation Act.

The plaintiff's suit for the recovery of maintenance for a period of 12 years would be within limitation. The plaintiff, however, has sued to recover maintenance for a much longer period, that is from January 5, 1912. The contention of the plaintiff which has found favour with the learned Subordinate Judge is that there was an acknowledgment of liability by Keshab Deo in the will which he had executed in favour of the idol Thakur Srinathji which would bring her claim for maintenanee for the prior period also within limitation. Reliance is placed in support of this contention on a statement made by Keshab Deo in the will executed by him on August 23, 1912, and which is printed at pp. 49 and 50. This statement runs as follows:

"Under the will made by him my younger maternal uncle wished that Rs. 500 a year should be paid to his daughter Musammmt Panna Kunwar during her lifetime but she did not accept it and at the instigation of my adversaries, entered into litigation with me. If she wants to take it now, it shall after deducting the expenses which I have defrayed in the case against her be paid to her for three years preceding the date of payment and also in future annually till so long as she is alive although on account of the improper litigation and also for the reason that she did not abide by will, and gave it out to be false she is not entitled to it according to law and justice."

It was contended by the respondent that this statement amounted to an acknowledgment of liability in respect of the maintenance which was due before that date. We are of opinion that this contention cannot be accepted, and the statement referred to above would not, in our opinion, attract the consequences of s. 19, Limitation Act. After reciting the fact that a maintenance has been fixed for the plaintiff, Keshab Deo, goes on to say that if she wanted to take it now it shall after dedcuting the expenses which he had defrayed in the case against her, be paid to her for three years preceding the date of the suit and also in future annually. He does not admit his liability for the payment of past maintenance. All that he says is that if she agrees to certain conditions, then the maintenance for three years before the date on which he made the will would be paid to her. He does not admit any legal liability on his part, but says that as a matter of grace it might be paid to her. Under these circumstances we do not agree with the view taken by the Court below on this point.

The question for our consideration is whether the plaintiff-respondent should have been awarded any interest at all on the amount claimed by her. We are clearly of opinion that no interest should have been awarded to the plaintiff till August 25, 1927. After the execution of the will by her father, the plaintiff declined to accept its genuineness. On the other hand, she instituted a suit challenging the validity of the will When she adopted that attitude it could not be expected that the defendant would make any payment to her for her maintenance nor was it likely under those circumstances that she would have accepted even if she had been offered the same. It appears that in 1927 a notice was sent by the defendants to the plaintiff asking her to pay the costs incurred by them in the litigation which was started by her. The plaintiff in reply to that notice sent a letter printed at p. 55 and which is dated August 25, 1927, in which she said:

"That I would request you to ask your clients, the decree-holders, to deduct their proper dues from the aforesaid sum and remit the balance to me per money order."

This statement may be taken to be a request for the payment of maintenance which was due to the plaintiff at that time and as no payment was made after this demand, it would be quite reasonable to allow the plaintiff interest under the provisions of Act XXXII of 1839 (Indian Interest Act). Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the plaintiff should get simple interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum.

The result of our finding is that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for a sum of Rs. 6,000 for 12 years' maintenance. She will also get interest in the manner which will be indicated in our order.

For the reasons given above we allow this appeal and modify the decree of the Court below and grant the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 6,000. On the amount which was due to the plaintiff on August 26, 1927, she will get interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, from that date. She will further get interest on the subsequent instalments at the above-mentioned rate as they fall due. For the purpose of reckoning interest, we direct that it will be taken that each instalment of Rs. 500 is payable each year on December 10, and that the first instalment for the first year, would be deemed to be payable on December 10, 1917, and the last on December 10, 1928. The parties will pay and receive their costs in both the Courts in accordance with their success and failure. The decree money will be realised from the assets of Baldeo Narain Singh in the hands of the defendants. Out of the decretal amount realised, the court-fee which the plaintiff had to pay in the Court below will be realised as first charge by the Government.

Mortgage—Undertaking by mortgagor to third party subsequent to mortgage—Mortgagee, if bound.

A mortgagee is not bound by any undertaking given by his mortgagor to a third party subsequent to the date of the mortgage.

S. C. A. from a decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated July 29, 1932.

Messrs. Fakir Chand and Chandra Gupta, for the Appellants.

Judgment.—This is the plaintiffs' appeal which arises out of a suit for a perpetual injunction, restraining defendants Nos. 1 to 4 from opening a door marked D in the plan, Ex. P-2, and further prohibiting them from making any opening in their wall towards the chabutra marked A, belonging to the plaintiffs. The trial Court decreed the plaintiffs' claim ordering the defendants to close the opening in dispute and to refrain from making any aperture in the southern wall of their house which would open upon platform B. Only defendant No. 4 went in appeal to the learned District Judge. The position of the houses of the parties and the disputed door and the chabutra is clearly mentioned in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court with reference to the plan, Ex. P-2, (not Ex. P-3 as mentioned in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court) and it is not necessary for the purpose of this appeal to go into details in respect of them. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the owners of the house which lies to the north of the plaintiffs' house. Defendant No. 4 is the mortgagee from defendants Nos. 1 to 3. There was a litigation in 1926 between defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and the present plaintiffs. In that suit the then plaintiffs (now defendants Nos. 1 to 3) sued the defendants (now plaintiffs) for demolition of a portion of the chabutra contiguous to their house. The trial Court dismissed that suit. There was an appeal to the lower Appellate Court, but the matter was compromised on April 22, 1929. In that compromise the present defendants Nos. 1 to 3 who were plaintiffs gave an undertaking that they would not make any opening in their wall on this side.

The mortgagee, Pali Ram, has now broken open the southern wall in the house of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 with the object of ultimately making a door in it. This led the plaintiffs to bring the present suit for the relief already mentioned. There were two points really argued in appeal before me. One is a question of law, namely, how far Pali Ram, a mortgagee, was bound by the undertaking given by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in the previous litigation which ended in the compromise. In my opinion the Judge of the Court below was quite right in holding that since the mortgage of Pali Ram was executed on November 2, 1921, he cannot be bound by any undertaking given by his mortgagors to a third party subsequent to the date of the mortgage. Therefore this plea raised by the appellants fails.

The next point argued was whether the plaintiffs were the exclusive owners of the chabutra marked B on which the door contemplated by Pali Ram is to open. The learned Judge has held on the evidence that the plaintiff is not the exclusive owner of this chabutra, a finding of fact which is binding upon this Court in second appeal. This being so, the plaintiffs cannot restrain the defendant from making an opening in the wall of the house of which he is a mortgagee with possession. In fact, even if it be assumed in favour of the plaintiffs for the sake of argument that the chabutra marked B is their exclusive property, there is no law to prevent the defendant Pali Ram in the present case from making a breach in the wall and converting the same into a door.

The result is that so far as Pali Ram is concerned, the plaintiffs' suit stands dismissed. When the mortgage in favour of Pali Ram is redeemed, then there would be time enough for the plaintiffs to raise the question of the compromise as against the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. I therefore affirm the finding of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the plaintiffs' appeal with costs throughout.

Crown—Prerogative—Servant, dismissal of, at will—Railway—Damages.

The right of the Crown to dismiss its servant at will and pleasure exists even though there is included in the contract of service an express term to the contrary, unless the Crown has deprived itself of the prerogative by statute. Denning v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1), referred to.

F. C. A. against a decree of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated May 19, 1933.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Kabul Chand, for the Appellant.

Diwan Ram Lal, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

Young, C J.—Jamun was engaged as a cleaner in the North Western Railway. After serving some years his sight was found to be defective and he was dismissed. He brought a suit in the lower Court against the Secretary of State for India in Council for damages for wrongful dismissal. The defendants pleaded, firstly, that the Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit and, secondly, that they were justified in dismissing the plaintiff. The learned Judge in the lower Court came to the conclusion that no action lay against the Secretary of State and dismissed the suit. Jamun appeals.

The Secretary of State in this matter represents the Crown. The plaintiff as a servant of the Crown is liable to be dismissed at will and pleasure unless the Crown has deprived itself of the prerogative by statute. The law on this point is well settled: see Denning v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1). The right to dismiss a servant of the Crown at will and pleasure still exists even though there is included in the contract of service an express term to the contrary. Counsel for the appellant cannot point to any statutory protection in favour of the plaintiff. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed. The Counsel for the Secretary of State does not press for costs.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 215, 439—Order admitting evidence in preliminary inquiry prior to committal—Interference in revision.

The High Court will not in the exercise of its revisional powers interfere with an order admitting a certain piece of evidence made by a Subordinate Court in the course of a preliminary inquiry prior to commitment to the Sessions in view of the fact that if the case is committed for trial, it will rest upon the trial Court independently to decide upon the admissibility of the evidence and if it is not committed intervention would have been unnecessary. In re Ponnusami Chetty (1), commented upon.

Cr. R. P. under ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the orders of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kovvur, dated August 12, 1924, on petitions dated August 5, 1934, and July 26, 1934, respectively, in P. R. C. No. 1 of 1934.

Mr. S. Sreenivasa Ayyangar for Messrs. K. S. Jayarama Ayyar and B. T. M. Raghavachari, for the Petitioner.

The Advocate-General for Mr. V. Suryanarayana for the Respondent.

Mr. K. Venkataragahavachari, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The question which these criminal revision petitions raises is as to the admissibility of certain statements made by the complainant in an Income-tax return. The case is in the stage of a preliminary enquiry, and if committed will eventually be heard by the Sessions Court. In these circumstances it has been urged upon us by the complainant that we should not interfere with the order of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate admitting the evidence. We believe it to be very unusual for this Court to hold up a preliminary enquiry while it adjudicates upon an order of this kind. Indeed, only one reported case, a recent one decided by Burn, J., in In re Ponnusami Chetty (1) has been brought to our notice in which a question of the admissibility of evidence at this stage has been entertained, and it does not appear that any objection, such as is raised now, was preferred. We are influenced by the consideration that if the case is committed for trial, it will rest upon the trial Court independently to decide upon the admissibility of this evidence, and it seems undesirable that, by a decision at this stage, we should in any way interfere with that Court's discretion. If the case is not committed, our intervention will have been unnecessary. Mr. S. Sreenivasa Ayyangar objects that this petition has passed the admission stage, when it was open to the Court to throw it out on these grounds. We do not think that our hands are thereby tied, as on the previous hearing, there was no occasion for the objection to be raised.

For these reasons, we decline at this stage to interfere with the decision to admit the evidence and dismiss these petitions.

Mahant NARAIN DAS AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Sikh Gurdwaras Act (VIII of 1925), ss. 8, 14 (2), 15, 12, 7, 9, 2 (4), 16 2) (iii)—Petition under s. 8—Persons competent to file—Locus standi—Parties to petition—Death of petitioner—Procedure—Dismissal of petition—Effect—S. 15, scope of—Succession from Guru to chela—Presumption as to dedication—Hereditary office-holder, meaning of —Sikhs and Udasis, differences—Gurdwara Baghichi thakran in Gujranwala City, if a Sikh Gurdwara.

A petition under s. 8, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, is only competent, if made by (1) any hereditary office-holder or (2) twenty or more worshippers of the Gurdwara; and under s. 14 (2) the forwarding of the petition to the Tribunal for disposal is conclusive proof that the petition was received by the Government in time and in the case of a petition forwarded by worshippers of a Gurdwara under the provisions of s. 8, that the provisions of s. 8 with respect to such worshippers were duly complied with. Nothing is said about a petition forwarded by a hereditary office-holder under s. 8 except that it must be held to have been presented in time. It follows that the locus standi of such a petitioner can be challenged and would have to be decided before the trial can proceed. This position is not affected by s. 16 (1) of the Act, which can only apply to a petition, properly before the Tribunal. [p. 397, col. 2.]

There are no respondents in a petition presented under s. 8, and hence s. 15 has been enacted, empowering the tribunal by advertisement or otherwise, to enquire if any person desires to be made a party and to join any person whom it considers should be made a party. The practice is that the Tribunal ascertains the names of the Sikh worshippers who forwarded the petition under s. 7 of the Act and these persons are notified by beat of drum in the locality to come forward while notice is sometimes sent to some of them. The Shromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee is also notified. This Committee sometimes is added as respondent, called objector by the Tribunal, but it refuses to be so added as a rule if the original worshippers named in the petition under s. 7 or some of them are prepared to contest the petition under s. 8 and to be made objectors. The intention of s. 15 is to allow the Tribunal to consolidate rival or conflicting claims, if convenient, and to furnish a means of getting respondents or objectors to contest petition and thus to permit of petitions being tried as suits because the petitions themselves name no objectors. There is nothing in this section which can be read as permitting the Tribunal arbitrarily to add or substitute one petitioner for another, while such a course is clearly against the scheme of the Act. A petition can only be put in under s. 8 within 90 days of the notification published under s. 7 (3). [p. 397, col. 2; p. 398, cols. 1 & 2; p. 399, col 1.]

It is not open to a petitioner or petitioners under s. 8 to dispute the existence of a Gurdwara, which may be interpreted as meaning place of worship. It can only be claimed that it is not a Sikh Gurdwara, i. e., Sikh place of worship. A petition under s. 7 can only be presented by 50 or more worshippers of a Gurdwara, and that petition along with a list of all rights, title or interests in immovable properties, inclusive of the Gurdwara, and in all monetary endowments, which the petitioners claim to belong to the Gurdwara, is published by the Local Government by notification under s. 7 (3) When such a notification is published, an hereditary office-holder, can petition under s. 8 within 90 days that it should be declared not to be a Sikh Gurdwara. Further, by virtue of s. 7 (5) the publication of a notification under the provisions of s 7 (3) shall be conclusive proof that the provisions of sub-ss. 7 (1) (2) (3) and (4) have been duly complied with, that is, that the petition was presented by 50 or more Sikh worshippers of the Gurdwara etc., etc. The trial of a petition under s 8 must thus presuppose that there are at least more than 50 worshippers and that there is a Gurdwara, or place of religious worship frequented by them. It cannot be contended in such a petition that there is no Gurdwara or place of worship. [p. 400, col 2; p. 401, col 1.]

The Sikhs are a Hindu sect. The first Guru preached the unity of God but, apart from that, he was in other respects apparently a Hindu. History of Sikhs and Udasis and their practices described. [p. 401, col. 2.]

The Udasis occupy a position between Hindus proper and Sikhs proper, and in some cases where they become heads of Sikh Gurdwaras, it is difficult to distinguish them from Sikhs proper, except that they may privately worship at the samadhs of their predecessors. [p. 402, col 2.]

Where natural heirs have been excluded from succession, there is a presumption that the institution has been dedicated to religious uses even though there is no direct evidence of dedication. Indar Singh v Fateh Singh (2), referred to. [p 401, col. 1.]

The definition of the term 'hereditary office-holder' in s. 2 (4) of the Act, contemplates participation in the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara or in the management or performance of any rituals or ceremonies observed therein. [p. 401, col. 1.]

Gurdwara Baghichi Thakran in Gujranwala City is not a Sikh Gurdwara within the meaning of s. 16 (2) (iii), Sikh Gurdwaras Act.

F. C. A. from a decree of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, Lahore, dated August 31, 1932.

Mr. Bhagat Singh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Badri Das, J. L. Kapur, Achhru Ram and Mohan Sunder Das, for the Respondents.

Addison, J.—More than fifty-six Sikh worshippers of an institution described as Gurdwara Baghichiana or Baghichi Thakaran in Gujranwala City, forwarded to the Local Government under the provisions of s. 7 (1), Sikh Gurdwaras Act, a petition praying that the Gurdwara be declared a Sikh Gurdwara. Under s. 7 (3), the Local Government published it along with the accompanying list, by notification No. 416-1723-G., dated May 28, 1928. Under s. 7 (5) the publication of this notification is conclusive proof that the provisions of s. 7 (1), (2), (3) and (4) have been complied with. Thereupon, a petition under s. 8 was forwarded to the Local Government by one Thakur Narain Das, an Udasi, claiming that the institution was his private property, and was not a Sikh Gurdwara or even a place of worship. In para. (11) of the petition he, however, added that, if it was held to be a Gurdwara, he was the hereditary owner thereof. He stated in the petition that two Hindus, Nihal Chand and Hara Mal, had made an application under Act XIV of 1920, in the Court of the District Judge to the effect that the Baghichi Thakaran was wakf for religious and charitable purpose, that the proceedings were stayed to allow him to institute a regular Civil suit against him and that he had done so and obtained a declaration in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, on May 26, 1926, to the effect that it was his private property and not wakf. Lastly, it was said that Sikhs had never had anything to do with the place and that his predecessors and he were Udasis who believed in the Hindu Shastras.

This petition under s. 8, by Thakar Narain Das was forwarded to the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal for trial by the Local Government under s. 14 (1). It may be noted here that a petition under s. 8 is only competent, if made by (1) any hereditary office-holder or (2) twenty or more worshippers of the Gurdwara; and under s. 14 (2) the forwarding of the petition to the Tribunal for disposal is conclusive proof that the petition was received by the Government in time and in the case of a petition forwarded by worshippers of a Gurdwara under the provisions of s. 8 that the provisions of s. 8 with respect to such worshippers were duly complied with. Nothing is, however, said about a petition forwarded by a hereditary office-holder under s. 8 except that it must be held to have been presented in time. It follows that the locus standi of such a petitioner can be challenged and would have to be decided before the trial can proceed. This position is not affected by s. 16 (1) of the Act, which can only apply to a petition, properly before the Tribunal.

There are no respondents in a petition presented under s. 8, and for this reason

s. 15 has been enacted, empowering the Tribunal, by advertisement or otherwise, to enquire if any person desires to be made a party and to join any person whom it considers should be made a party. The practice appears to be that the Tribunal ascertains the names of the Sikh worshippers who forwarded the petition under s. 7 of the Act, (this petition is not sent to the Tribunal) and these persons are notified by beat of drum in the locality to come forward while notice is sometimes sent to some of them. The Shromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee is also notified. This committee sometimes is added as respondent, called objector by the Tribunal, but it refuses to be so added as a rule, if the original worshippers named in the petition under s. 7 or some of them are prepared to contest the petition under s. 8 and to be made objectors. These worshippers were the objectors here.

They pleaded that the petitioner, Mahant Narain Das, had no locus standi to present a petition as he did not come in as a hereditary office-holder, but denied the existence of a Gurdwara as place of worship and claimed it as his private property, a matter which should form the subject of a petition under s. 10 of the Act. On the merits they pleaded that it was a Sikh Gurdwara, commonly known to have been founded by Bhai Gurdial Singh, a Granthi of Maharaja Ranjit Singh, as a Sikh place of worship, since when it had been used as a Sikh Gurdwara. There had never been any other object of worship except the Granth Sahib. It was admitted that the petitioner under s. 8 was the Mahant Granthi or Manager of the Gurdwara. It was denied that it was the private residence of the petitioner. It was admitted that Baba Kulla was the first Mahant, appointed by the Sikh residents of Gujranwala, just as the petitioner was. It was denied that there had been any kathas (religious dissertations) from the Shastras or Puranas, that is, the Hindu scriptures, and it was claimed that the kathas which took place were based on the Granth Sahib.

The issues were then, framed as follows: (1) Whether the institution is a Sikh Gurdwara ? (2) Whether the petitioner has any locus standi to bring the petition? (3) Whether the previous litigation has any effect on the present case. Before evidence commenced Thakar Narain Das died on November 21, 1931, and his chela Pandit Parma Nand applied to be brought on the record as his legal representative. This was objected to and two other issues were framed: (4) Is Pandit Parma Nand the legal representative of Thakar Narain Das deceased ? (5) Does the right to prosecute the petition survive to Pandit Parma Nand ?

A certain amount of evidence was taken on the last two issues, but without determining them, the Tribunal decided to join Parma Nand as a party under s. 15 which I have already referred to. Evidence was then led on the merits. In the final judgment the findings of the Tribunal were: (a) that it was conceded that the previous litigation in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, had no effect so far as these proceedings were concerned (Issue No. 3); (b) that Thakar Narain Das had a locus standi to bring the petition as he had taken up the alternative position that he was an hereditary office-holder and as under s. 16 of the Act, the question whether it was a Sikh Gurdwara had to be tried before anything else was decided (Issue No. 2); (c) that Pandit Parma Nand had the right to prosecute the petition of Thakar Narain Das because he had been joined by the Tribunal under s. 15 of the Act, because that question also could be gone into, only after the issue as to the place being Sikh Gurdwara was tried, and because, in any case, Pandit Parma Nand was an hereditary office-holder, successor, chela and legal representative of Thakar Narain Das in possession (Issues Nos. 4 and 5), and (d) that the institution had not been proved to be a Sikh Gurdwara within the meaning of s. 16 (2) (iii) of the Act, the case set up for the objectors, though it was held to be a religious institution, of which the successive heads had been various Mahants, and where Hindus in general as well as Sikhs had worshipped, (issue No. 1). A decree was accordingly granted, declaring it not to be a Sikh Gurdwara within the meaning of the Act, and the objectors have appealed.

It will be best to dispose of the preliminary points at once. I agree with the learned Counsel of the appelants that Pandit Parma Nand could not be joined by the Tribunal under s. 15 of the Act. In effect this order substituted one petitioner for another while the intention of s. 15 was to allow the Tribunal to consolidate rival or conflicting claims, if convenient, and to furnish a means of getting respondents or objectors to contest petition and thus to permit of petitions being tried as suits because the petitions themselves name no objectors. There is nothing in this section which can be read as permitting the Tribunal arbitrarily to add or substitute one petitioner for another; while such a course is clearly against the scheme of the Act. A petition can only be put in under s. 8 within 90 days of the notification published under s. 7 (3). If no petition is put in within that time, the Local Government shall publish a notification declaring Gurdwara to be a Sikh Gurdwara under the provisions of s. 9 (1) and this notification takes the place of a judgment in rem. Thereafter petitions under s. 10 could of course be tried, but in these trials the existence of institutions notified to be Sikh Gurdwaras, could not be challenged. It follows that a petition must be forwarded to the Local Government within the time fixed and it is that petition which is sent for disposal to the Tribunal. It must therefore be prosecuted by the original petitioner or his legal representative, the Tribunal being bound to follow in this respect the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. This is clear from s. 12 (9) and (11) of the Act.

Similarly, before anything else is done, the question of locus standi of the petitioner must be decided; for, if there is no competent petitioner, there is no petition to be disposed of. I have already shown that the question of the locus standi of a petitioner under s. 8, who claims as an hereditary office-holder, is left open under the provisions of s. 14 (2) while the status of petitioners under s. 8, who claim to be twenty or more worshippers of the Gurdwara cannot be contested. The words, "any other matter in dispute relating to the said Gurdwara" in s. 16 must be interpreted according to the plain words. Whether the petition is competent or not is a matter in dispute relating to the Gurdwara. What is meant, for example, is that if a petition under s. 10 or s. 11, comes before the Tribunal, before there has been a decision that the Gurdwara is a Sikh Gurdwara, the latter question must first be tried or that a petition under s. 8 must be tried before one under s. 10 or s. 11. I might add that this question has already been before this Court and decided in this sense: see, Tehal Singh v. Harnam Singh (1). It is, therefore, necessary, to see whether Thakar Narain Das was competent to bring the petition and whether Pandit Parma Nand is entitled to continue it as his legal representative.

Before doing so, I desire to notice certain matters, which were mentioned before us, but which do not directly arise in this appeal. If there is no petition under s. 8 the Local Government must, under s. 9 (1), notify the Gurdwara to be a Sikh Gurdwara and this notification is in effect a judgment in rem. If a petition is put in within time, it is forwarded to the Tribunal under s. 14 (1) for disposal, the question of the locus standi of a petitioner, claiming to be an hereditary office-holder being left open under the provisions of s. 14 (2), while the question of the locus standi of the twenty or mere worshippers of the Gurdwara is not left open. When the Tribunal or this Court on appeal has found that the Gurdwara should be declared to be a Sikh Gurdwara, then the Local Government must under s. 17 of the Act, publish a notification declaring the institution to be a Sikh Gurdwara, and this notification, like the one under s. 9 (1), is in effect a judgment in rem. In the case of a petition by worshippers, there must be a decision on the merits whether the institution is or is not a Sikh Gurdwara, unless the petition is withdrawn or not prosecuted. In the case of a petition by a person claiming to be an hereditary office-holder, there may be a finding that there is not a competent petition before the Tribunal as the petitioner has no locus standi, while such a petition may also be withdrawn or not prosecuted.

The question is what should be done when petitions under s. 8 are withdrawn or not prosecuted or when it is held that the petition is not competent. Should such a petition merely be dismissed, leaving the Local Government to notify the institution under s. 9 as a Sikh Gurdwara, on the ground that no petition had been presented in accordance with the provisions of s. 8 of the Act; or should the Tribunal proceed to hear ex parte evidence on behalf of the objectors without allowing the petitioner or petitioners to intervene so as to be able to give a declaration that the Gurdwara is a Sikh Gurdwara, and thus enable the Local Government to issue a notification under s. 17; or should the Tribunal automatically grant such a declaration without taking evidence on the merits, on the ground that the dismissal of the petition as incompetent or for want of prosecution or by reason of its withdrawal must entail such a consequence? It would appear that, where a petition is dismissed by reason of its being incompetent, it must be taken not to have been presented in accordance with the provisions of s. 8 and that the Local Government could notify the institution under s. 9. But where it is withdrawn or not prosecuted, there is room for some difference of opinion. I understand that petitions are now being withdrawn or not prosecuted in the hope that the intention of the Act may be defeated: that is, the notification under s. 9 does not issue because the petition is presented, and it is thought that a notification under s. 9 or s. 17 will not issue.

If the petition is merely dismissed and no declaration is given that the Gurdwara is a Sikh Gurdwara, as under s. 17 it is a condition precedent for the publication of a notification that such a declaration be given. In fact the Act seems to contemplate that all petitions will be fought to a conclusion and by far the best course would be to amend either s. 9 or s. 17 so as to make it clear that when a petition is withdrawn or not prosecuted or when it is held that the petitioner has no locus standi, then, either the Local Government must publish a notification declaring the Gurdwara to be a Sikh Gurdwara or the Tribunal should be directed to inquire into this matter ex parte in the absence of the petitioner and give a declaration one way or the other. If it is not amended, the question will have to be decided one day whether the Tribunal would not be justified in giving automatically, in the above circumstances, a declaration that the institution is a Sikh Gurdwara, or whether it should hear ex parte evidence on behalf of the objectors in the absence of the petitioner and give on such evidence whatever declaration it finds to be established. If neither of these courses is adopted and the Local Government does not see its way to issue a notification under s. 9, the whole object of the Act can be defeated by putting in an incompetent petition or withdrawing a competent petition. It was said that, in the beginning, the Tribunal used to hear evidence ex parte on behalf of the objectors in such circumstances and either grant or not grant the declaration, but latterly that it has been dismissing the petitions or allowing them to be withdrawn without giving any declaration. Until the question comes directly before the Court, it is impossible for me to decide it finally.

I am of opinion that Thakar or Mahant Narain Das had a locus standi to present the petition and that Pandit Parma Nand is his legal representative and is competent to continue its prosecution. Mahant Narain Das presented two petitions, one under s. 8 and one under s. 10. The latter has not yet been tried and if the decision of the Tribunal in the petition under s. 8 is upheld, no trial will be necessary. It is under s. 10 that a petitioner can claim a right, title or interest in property notified under s. 7 (3) by the Local Government, while the petition under s. 8 must be confined to a claim that the Gurdwara is not a Sikh Gurdwara. It is true that Narain Das claimed in the petition under s. 8 that the place in dispute was his private property and that there was thus no Gurdwara or place of worship of any kind in existence, though he had been allowing preaching (giving kathas) from the Hindu Puranas and Shastras to take place there, just as many private individuals did in their houses. He went on to say that in any case the Sikhs had nothing to do with the place and that he and his predecessors had been Udasis who believed in the Hindu Shastras. Finally he said that, if, by any chance, it was held to be a Gurdwara he was its hereditary head and he prayed that it should be held not to be a Sikh Gurdwara. His alternative claim thus falls within s. 8, and only this claim has been tried and it was properly presented if he was an hereditary office-holder.

At this stage I might say that, in my judgment, it is not open to a petitioner or petitioners under s. 8 to dispute the existence of a Gurdwara, which may here be interpreted as meaning place of worship. It can only be claimed that it is not a Sikh Gurdwara, i. e., a Sikh place of worship. A petition under s. 7 can only be presented by 50 or more worshippers of a Gurdwara, and that petition along with a list of all rights, titles or interests in immovable properties, inclusive of the Gurdwara, and in all monetary endowments, which the petitioners claim to belong to the Gurdwara, is published by the Local Government by notification under s. 7 (3). When such a notification is published, an hereditary office-holder, to take the present case only, can petition under s. 8 within 90 days that it should be declared not to be a Sikh Gurdwara. Further, by virtue of s. 7 (5) the publication of a notification under the provisions of s. 7 (3) shall be conclusive proof that the provisions of sub-s. (1), (2), (3) and (4) have been duly complied with, that is, that the petition was presented by 50 or more Sikh worshippers of the Gurdwara, etc., etc., The trial of a petition under s. 8 must thus pre-suppose that there are at least more than 50 worshippers and that there is Gurdwara or place of religious worship frequented by them. It cannot be contended in such a petition that there is no Gurdwara or place of worship.

The objectors stated in their pleas that Mahant Narain Das was not an hereditary office-holder and that he was appointed by the Sikh residents of Gujranwala as Mahant of the Gurdwara. There is no proof of the latter assertion and there is abundant evidence that he was an hereditary office-holder, succession being from Guru to Chela, and the office-holders being as follows: Baba Kulla or Kuljas (died 1834), Ram Das (died 1845), Sant Das (died 1879). Narain Das (died 1931) Parma Nand.

There is also evidence that natural heirs have been excluded from succession and there is thus a presumption: [see Indar Singh v. Fateh Singh (2)], that the institution has been dedicated to religious uses, even though there is no direct evidence of dedication. Besides, it was admitted by the objectors in para. (1) of their pleas that Narain Das was the Mahant, while the Counsel appearing for them, in stating his case, said that the petitioner's predecessors were the Mahants of the institution and the succession had been from Guru to Chela. During the examination of the first witnesses Counsel appearing for Mahant Narain Das said that his client admitted that succession had been from Guru to Chela. It follows that Narain Das was an hereditary office-holder as defined in s. 2 (4) of the Act, though that definition contemplates participation in the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara or in the management or performance of any rituals or ceremonies observed therein and Narain Das falsely denied the existence of public worship in part of his petition, a position which also was not open to him. His petition was, therefore, competent.

I am further am of opinion, that Pandit Parma Nand is his legal representative and, as such, competent to continue the petition. Succession has been from Guru to Chela to the exclusion of natural heirs; there is no proof that any confirmation of the new Mahant is necessary; there is a registered will dated July 9, 1922, by Mahant Narain Das in his favour and he is in possession. Clearly he is the legal representative. This takes me to the merits, namely, whether the Gurdwara or institution in question is a Sikh Gurdwara within the meaning of s. 16 (2) (iii) which is the case set up on behalf of the objectors. Section (2) (iii) runs as follows:—

"If the Tribunal finds that the Gurdwara was established for use by Sikhs for the purpose of public worship and was used for such worship by Sikhs before and at the time of presentation of the petition under sub-s. (1), s. 7, the Tribunal shall decide that it should be declared to be a Sikh Gurdwara and record an order accordingly."

A few general remarks are here essential. It must be accepted that the Sikh are a Hindu sect. The first Guru preached the unity of God, but apart from that, he was in other respects apparently a Hindu. It is difficult to define the Hindu faith, but it includes the worship of numerous deities and idols and belief in various incarnations of God; while there is authority for the proposition that it commenced with the conception of one God, Guru Nanak's mission, it seems to me, was to attempt to get back to this original conception and to stop idolatry, but he continued to follow the old Hindu custom and faith in other respects. He was not succeeded by his son Sri Chand and the latter founded the monastic order of Udasis, which was celibate in its origin, though many of them from time to time married, especially when the institution, where they lived, became wealthy. As time went on the Sikh doctrines, became more dogmatic, but the practice remained much the same. Then came the Akali movement which is responsible for the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, in s. 2 (9) of which a present day Sikh is defined as one who makes the following declaration:

"I solemnly affirm that I am a Sikh, that I believe in the Guru Granth Sahib, that I believe in the ten Gurus and that I have no other religion," though in the case of a deceased person, he will be held to be a Sikh if he professed the Sikh religion or was known to be a Sikh during his lifetime. The definition of a present day Sikh would appear to mean that the Sikh religion has nothing to do with Hinduism, though it sprang from it. In actual practice, however, in spite of the Sikh doctrines Sikhs have since the inception of the sect tended to retain many of the Hindu rites and ceremonies, such as performing Shrads, reverence towards Samadha (the resting place of the ashes of Gurus and holymen) and even toleration of idols, etc. Belief in the Gurus and the Granth Sahib has often been an addition to Hindu ceremonies though of course the latter are secondary considerations. The Akali movement, which is responsible for the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, has its object the strict enforcing of the beliefs stated in the definition just given which would mean the divorce of the Sikh faith from Hinduism, but it has been found difficult to insist on this. Sikhs still inter-marry with Hindus freely; in many families some members profess to be Sikhs and others profess to be Hindus. Many Hindus believe in the Gurus and Granth Sahib and read it, but strenuously object to being called Sikhs. There is another class, who shave their hair, and appear to be Hindus and yet call themselves sehjdhari Sikhs, and who would be prepared to make the declaration already set forth, though in reality in many matters they follow Hindu ceermonies and are in sympathy with great portions of the Hindu scriptures.

It is not very long ago that the Sikhs used to be included in the generic name of Hindus, and even in the beginning of this century the Guru Granth Sahib might be seen in a place where there were Hindu idols and the Sikhs of that day were only distinguishable from Hindus in the great respect they paid to the Granth Sahib and the reverence they had for the Gurus. If questioned, they would probably have called themselves Hindus, unless they were specially asked if they were followers of the Gurus. All along Sikhs have followed Hindu Law, and still do so though, amongst agriculturists, they are mainly governed by Customary Law just as Hindus and Muhammadans are. This state of affairs is responsible for the definition of a deceased Sikh as a person who professed the Sikh religion or was known to be a Sikh during his lifetime, but it will be apparent that in this confusion it may often be difficult to ascertain what faith a deceased Sikh or Hindu had. Often there will be little more than the name "Singh" to distinguish the one from the other.

The Udasis never took the name "Singh," but always that of Das. As they are an order founded by the son of the first Guru, they do worship and read the Granth Sahib. It is customary amongst them to erect Samadhs (tombs) over the ashes of their Mahants (heads of the institution) and to reverence these, though in many instances they do not erect Samadhs. The usual form of worship of Samadhs is washing them at dusk reverentially and lighting one or more lamps which are set out on the plastered mound, but this worship is usually confined to the Udasi order and is not participated in by others. In some cases also this order worships a ball of ashes and the picture of Baba Sri Chand and even some of the Hindu deities. It was held in Basant Das v. Hem Singh (3), that the Udasi order constituted a separate sect of schismatics, distinct from the orthodox Sikhs and that whereas some of the "Singhs" had renounced Hinduism, the Udasis had all remained within its pale: that the acceptance of and showing of reverence to the Granth Sahib was in no way inconsistent with remaining a Hindu, that the Udasis are Hindus and in the wide sense of the word they are Sikhs: see also Ram Parshad v. Shiromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee (4). On the other hand, the reverence paid by Udasis to the Gurus and the Granth Sahib has resulted in very many of them becoming the priests of Sikh institutions, strictly so-called. In the majority of cases, which have come before me, this has been so.

This is due not only to their belief in the Gurus and Granth Sahib, but to the fact that they form a large body of men, who have had a theological training mostly in the Granth Sahib, but also sometimes in the Hindu Scriptures. As pointed out in Arjan Singh v. Indar Das (5), Udasis are usually either found in an Udasi Monastery or College which is purely an Udasi institution, where the reading of the Granth Sahib in Punjabi and of Hindu sacred books in Sanskrit is taught, or they are found as priests in Sikh Gurdwaras. Many of them leave the parent institutions and become the priests of Sikh Gurdwaras, or set up new Udasi institutions. They occupy a position between Hindus proper and Sikhs proper, and in some cases where they become heads of Sikh Gurdwaras it is difficult to distinguish them from Sikhs proper, except that they may privately worship at the Samadhs of their predecessors. Everything has thus always been very fluid, and still is. The practice of certain Hindus approaches that of certain Sikhs, these Hindus revering the Granth Sahib and those Sikhs having tended to lapse back into many Hindu observances, if ever they had given them up. There is in fact no way of distinguishing such a Hindu from a Sehjdhari Sikh unless the latter makes the declaration mentioned, except that the Sehjdhari may call himself a "Singh." Some Udasis have retained many of the Hindu beliefs, but all of them revere the Gurus and read the Granth Sahib, while others are much nearer to Sikhism than to Hinduism. The Hindu religion is very wide embracing and it now includes the sect of Arya Samajists, who also, like the Sikhs, preach and believe in the unity of God, though, of course, they do not accept the Gurūs and the Granth Sahib. In this respect they may be said to be nearer to Sikhs than to orthodox Hindus.

The position taken up by the Mahant in this case is that the institution is his own private property and that there is no public worship. This is of course false and there is ample evidence that it is a place of worship and that Sikhs have for a considerable time worshipped there. That of course does not necessarily mean that it is a Sikh Gurdwara within the meaning of s. 16 (2) (iii) of the Act. It is certainly not an Udasi Monastery or College, but a place of public worship. Was it however established for use by Sikhs for public worship and was it used for such worship by Sikhs before and at the time of the presentation of the petition under sub-s. (1), s. 7, which is dated October 20, 1926? The question is far from easy.

The appellant's case was that the place in dispute was established for public worship by a Sikh Bhai, Gurdial Singh, the Granthi of Maharaja Ranjit Singh, who was born at Gujranwala, and that it has ever since been used for such worship by Sikhs. The respondent's case was that an Udasi, Baba Kulla, the first Mahant, settled there at the beginning of the 19th century and that he and his successors added to the property which belonged to them. It is agreed that succession has been from Guru to Chela to the exclusion of natural heirs and this in itself is sufficient to establish that it is dedicated to religious purposes: see Indar Singh v. Fateh Singh (2), and that it is not the private property of the Mahant. The respondent maintained that the various heads have been Udasis with Sanatanist Hindu beliefs and that preaching from the Hindu scriptures (kathas) only have been allowed to take place there, and he denied that the "Granth Sahib" was ever installed. The appellants' case was that the Granth Sahib was ceremonially opened there and that that was the only form of worship, apart from preaching from the Granth Sahib. The evidence has been summarised in the judgment of the learned President and need not be detailed by me. The respondent's witnesses had to admit that the Granth Sahib was read at any rate since 1896 in the institution, but stated that Mahant Narain Das kept it for his private use. This evidence is shown to be false by the will of Sant Das, the predecessor of Mahant Narain Das, dated October 14, 1875, Ex. O-9, which establishes that the Granth Sahib was being daily recited there and had been recited for some time before that. The will also refers to Kirtans, which undoubtedly means the singing of hymns from the Granth Sahib. The oral evidence proves that the Granth Sahib was kept for public recital there, that hymns from the Granth were sung and that Sikhs worshipped there prior to 1875 up to 1921 at least. Mahant Narain Das produced books kept by him from about 1896 and they contain entries which show that bhog and akhand path of the Granth Sahib were performed from time to time, and karapershad distributed with due ceremony at the conclusion of the readings. In 1901 certain articles were purchased which were used for wrapping the Granth Sahib in, and for the ceremonial reading thereof.

I am, however, of opinion that the evidence does not establish that the institution was founded by the Sikh Granthi Bhai Gurdial Singh, for public worship by Sikhs. There is some oral evidence to this effect which is founded on hearsay and which I think was properly rejected. In any case it has little or no value. There is no deed of grant to Bhai Kulla. There is a parwana, Ex. O-6, of the year 1827, in Sikh times, to the effect that certain property, including the Baghwala Well at Gujranwala, had been given long before by way of dharmarth (charity) to Bhai Sahib Gurdial Singh and his two sons Amir Singh and Wazir Singh. There is an extract from the Jagir Register of 1853 (Ex. O-4), that the Bhagwala Well was muaf to Wazir Singh and the four sons of Amir Singh, namely, Jawahir Singh, Daya Singh, Tegh Singh and Kirpal Singh, the original grantor being Maharaja Ranjit Singh. The patwaris deposed to 40 years' possession and the above parwana or sanad, which is not the original sanad, was referred to. By that time, the institution was in existence, but no reference to it in any revenue paper is forthcoming, and there is nothing to show that this institution stands on land which formed part of the grant just mentioned. Exhibit O-16, is the copy of a plaint in a suit, instituted on July 28, 1856, by a Brahman Pandit Dila Ram, against the then Mahant Sant, Das, in which he claimed Rs. 150 from the Mahant on the ground that Bhai Gurdial Singh had appointed his ancestor to recite Kathas in his Bagh, that this right was hereditary and that he had been unjustly ousted by the Sant. The most important point established by this plaint is that Brahmans were reciting Kathas in the institution in 1856, and the only possible inference is that they were based on the Hindu scriptures. The recital that the bagh or garden was that of Gurdial Singh, does not establish that it was so, nor is the plaint relevant for that purpose. There is no doubt, however, that the dispute was about the recital of kathas in the institution in dispute. The suit was dismissed, the Deputy Commissioner pointing out that he had already dismissed a similar suit brought by Dila Ram against another Brahman Radha Kishan. The judgment in this last mentioned case is dated July 18, 1853. These documents go to show that so far back as 1853, there was public worship going on at the institution and that it consisted of preaching by Brahmans from the Hindu scriptures, and in practice I have no doubt that the congregation consisted of Hindus in general, including Sikhs.

Certain other documents Exs. O-3, O-10, O-11 and O-12, have been referred to. These relate to the gift of a piece of land to the Mahant in the year 1874. They show that the muafidars, who were descendants of Bhai Gurdial Singh, gave up their muafi rights in the plot, then handed over to the institution, but they do not mention that the site of the original institution was handed over by their ancestor. This plot was handed over to the institution as the place was used by the public and by fakirs, wayfarers and mendicants. I agree with the finding of the Tribunal that it is not proved that the Gurdwara was established by Bhai Gurdial Singh.

The will of Mahant Sant Das, dated October 14, 1875, is a document evidencing the nature of the worship then existing. It is a statement of one of the Mahants and is thus of importance: see Mahomed Raza v. Syed Yadgar Hussain (6) and Ram Kishan v. Bur Singh (7). Pandit Parma Nand stated that the will, which was a registered one was destroyed. The appellants were thus entitled to put in a certified copy. It was said that it had been revoked. As to this, there is no tangible evidence and in any case that would not affect its value as a statement of the then Mahant at a time (1875), when there was no dispute and when the Sikhs scarcely claimed to be different from the Hindus, except as to their belief in the Gurus and the Granth Sahib. A summary of the will may be given:

"The Makan (institution) Baghichi, in which were the Samadhs of Baba Kulla and Thakur Ram Das was his Gurdwara. He had no Chelas left. The congregation (or worshippers) and he desired that it should be continued. The buildings had been acquired and repaired by him and were owned and possessed by him. Hence he with the consent of the congregation made this will for the perpetuation of the Gurdwara Baghichi where the citizens offered prayers, holy men rested, where a fair was held on every Amawas day, and where preaching (katha) was done and the Granth Sahib read. He reserved to himself the right of appointing a Chela to succeed him but stated that when appointed he would be under one Bhai Prem Singh who undoubtedly was a Nirmala Sadh, (Nirmalas being Sikh priests proper). If a Chela was not appointed this Nirmala was to manage the Gurdwara with all powers except that of alienation The Amawas Fair Katha reading of the Granth Sahib and Shabad Kirtan were to go on and the manager had power to choose any Pandit (presumably, a Brahman) to do the Katha. The Nirmala's Chela, was to succeed him. If he had no Chela a committee of five from the families of Rai Mul Singh Madhok, Bhai Amar Singh, Mul Singh Kapur, Bhagat Singh and Bhagat Chattarpati was to manage the Gurdwara in consultation with the congregation (worshippers). A member of the congregation had no right to interfere with the Nirmala's management but he had with respect to others. It was added that the buildings were wakf property meant as a place of worship for the entire Hindu community."

It would seem that this will was impliedly revoked when Sant Das appointed his own Chela, Mahant Narain Das, before he died, but the will is important as proving what was going on in the time of Sant Das in the institution. It follows from it and the rest of the evidence that the Gurdwara was a public place of worship where a fair was celebrated on Amawas days, Katha was done by Brahmans, holy men rested and reading of the Granth Sahib and singing of hymns from the Granth Sahib took place and that it was meant for the whole Hindu community, including of course Sikhs. The preaching must be held to have been based on Hindu scriptures, but there is no doubt that the Granth Sahib had the highest place in the institution. This may be explained by the fact that the Mahants were Udasis who do venerate the Granth Sahib, which was then held in great respect also by many Hindus as it often is now. Orthodox Sikhs were probably few in number, and the cleavage between Hindus and Sikhs was not marked. I would hold on the evidence that the public worship at this institution was not purely Sikh, but was intended for all Hindus though it is obvious that the reading of the Granth Sahib held a very high place there and was most regularly performed, and that the Hindus were prepared to hear it read and to listen to its hymns. One family from which the committee was to be appointed was a Hindu one, though apparently the other four were Sikhs. But, as I have already pointed out, there was not a very sharp cleavage between Hindus and Sikhs then. There were, however, no idols in the institution though, of course there were the samadhs of the Mahants. This is the normal state of affairs as regards Udasis and these samadhs are erected by them, whether they are priests in Sikh Gurdwaras or whether they have continued to live in Udasi or other institutions. The existence of the samadhs therefore means nothing more than that the Mahants have all along been Udasis, and does not help to establish that the institution is not a Sikh Gurdwara. There is no evidence worth the name that there was ever any samadh worship though the Udasi incumbent may have paid reverence to the samadhs.

To sum up, there is no evidence as regards the foundation of the institution worthy of consideration. There is, however, evidence that there was preaching by Brahmans from before 1853, and that by 1875, worship of the Granth Sahib and singing of hymns therefrom regularly took place and continued to take place till 1921 at least, the preaching by Brahmans still going on as well. All the incumbents have been Udasis, who hold an intermediate position between Hindus and Sikhs proper, though, as already pointed out, Hindus and Sikhs may be very similar and yet one will call himself a Sikh and the other call himself a Hindu. In 1875 the institution was looked upon as dedicated to the Hindu community which then undoubtedly included the Sskhs and, as far back as we can go, preaching by Brahmans has been part of the routine of the institution. The Mahant Narain Das used to go on pilgrimage to Hindu as well as Sikh sacred places. He used to feed Brahmans, perform Shradhs, and purchase Hindu sacred books, etc., etc. It is impossible to infer from the nature of the worship that the institution was established for use by Sikhs for public worship. In my judgment, therefore, the decision of the Tribunal was correct and I would dismiss this appeal.

The second question does not now arise. It is whether the institution was used for such worship by Sikhs before and on October 20, 1926, when the petition under s. 7 (1) was presented. The Akalis tried to take forcible possession of the Gurdwara in 1921. This appears to have frightened Mahant Narain Das. Then came the application under Act XIV of 1920, which compelled him to institute the civil suit already referred to. At about this time Narain Das cut his hair and trimmed his beard. From this time also he commenced to try to prove that the institution was his private property. This renders very probable the evidence that the Granth Sahib was removed sometime after 1921. The Judge trying the civil suit inspected the place sometime early in 1926, and Sundar Singh, O. W. No. 5, appellant's witness, has deposed that the Granth Sahib was not open at that time. Mathra Parshad, P. W. No. 7, said that it was removed in 1922-1923. Ganga Ram, P. W. No. 17, deposed that Narain Das ceased to read the Granth Sahib after the Akalis tried to take possession. Parma Nand, who succeeded Narain Das was educated at Benares, and he leans decidedly towards the Hindu Shastras and beliefs. He had returned to the institution by that time. It seems to me that the Sikh worship, which used to take place, ceased sometime after 1921, and long before 1926. The requirements of s. 16 (2) (iii) are thus not fulfilled in this respect also.

There is a cross-appeal by Parma Nand which was not argued except as to the question of costs. The proper order as to costs, however, in view of the attitude of Mahant Narain Das and Pandit Parma Nand is that parties should bear their own costs throughout. With this remark I would dismiss both the appeals.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision Application No. 695 of 1933

December 5, 1933

NIAMAT-ULLAH, J.

SADLU—APPLICANT

EMPEROR OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 103—Search—Witnesses, to be selected—Qualifications—Provisions should be complied with—Non-compliance—Inference—Dangerous Drugs Act (II of 1930), ss. 2 (b) (i), (iii), 14—'Cocaine,' if implies substance prepared according to formula given in s. 2 (b) (iii)—Cocoa derivatives, if includes 'crude cocaine'.

Where respectable persons can be found in the neighbourhood, and the Police Officer making a search takes with him persons whose respectability is questionable or who come from a distant locality, the inference is that he was prompted by a desire to have such witnesses as would be easily persuaded to support any story which he might put forward.

Section 2 (b) (iii), Dangerous Drugs Act, makes mention of cocaine; and to distinguish it from "crude cocaine" the usual chemical formula has been stated. The word cocaine implies the substance prepared according to that formula, which is well known to chemists. The expression 'cocoa derivatives' also includes crude cocaine.

Cr. R. App. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Benares, dated September 22, 1933.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision by one Sadlu, who was convicted by a Magistrate, 1st Class, Benares, of an offence under s. 14, Dangerous Drugs Act (II of 1930), and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 18 months and a fine of Rs. 200. His appeal to the Sessions Judge, Benares, was dismissed. It has been found by both the Courts below that the applicant, who was once convicted of a similar offence and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment in 1932, was in possession of two packets of a substance which has been declared by the Chemical Examiner to be cocaine.

The circumstances which led to the discovery were described by the officer in charge of the Benares Kotwali. In consequence of an information received he proceeded to search the premises of the accused. There is a room on the second storey of the applicant's house, which was found to be locked. The Sub-Inspector asked the accused to furnish the key for opening that room. The applicant produced a key from his person, with which the lock was opened. On search being made two packets were found concealed under the bed on a charpoy. These facts, except as regards the manner in which the accused handed over the key to the Sub-Inspector, are not disputed.

The accused stated in his defence that the room in which the two packets were found did not belong to him but to his brother Mangru, who actually occupied it. He also alleged that the key which he had handed over to the Sub-Inspector was not on his person but had been sent for by him from his brother, who was at his shop. There can be no doubt that, unless the accused's statement that the room was in the actual occupation of his brother, who was in possession of the key, be accepted, the offence has been brought home to him. He produced two witnesses, who were considered by the trying Magistrate as respectable. They deposed to the room in question being the property of his brother Mangru, to whom it had been allotted at a partition a few years ago. The witnesses, however, being outsiders, could not say as to whether his brother Mangru actually occupied the room. It is easily conceivable that the room, though allotted on partition to Mangru, contiued to remain in the occupation of his brother, the applicant. It is not disputed that the families of both the brothers live in the same premises, and all that was determined at the partition of the joint property was the proprietary title.

The learned Advocate for the applicant has strongly criticised the action of the Police in not taking respectable persons residing in the neighbourhood as search witnesses. The trying Magistrate made the following observation on this part of the case :

"The learned Counsel for the accused attacked the evidence of Monnu and Gopal, the two search witnesses. They have, no doubt appeared as witnesses in criminal cases before and they are not of proper character to be selected for this purpose. The statement of the Sub-Inspector that he did not select witnesses from the locality as most of the neighbours of the accused are ex-convicts of modak and cocaine offences is preposterous. Evidence has been given to show that many respectable persons live in the immediate neighbourhood of the accused, and it would have been better if the Sub-Inspector had not taken with him persons of doubtful character to witness the search."

It is not an uncommon practice for Police Officers to disregard the provisions of s. 103 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This Court has had occasions to emphasise the necessity of the due compliance with that section. Where respectable persons can be found in the neighbourhood, and the Police Officer making a search takes with him persons whose respectability is questionable or who come from a distant locality, the inference is that he was prompted by a desire to have such witnesses as would be easily persuaded to support any story which he might put forward. In this case nothing turned on the facts stated by the search witnesses; otherwise the Court would have been justified in disregarding their evidence on the point in controversy. The case can be, and was decided by the two Courts below, without reference to the evidence given by the search witnesses, except so far as they deposed to the recovery of the two packets of cocaine, a fact which is not in dispute.

Both the Courts below have rejected the accused's version that the key was in possession of his brother, from whom he got it before handing it over to the Sub-Inspector. The latter's evidence corroborated by the probabilities of the case, was considered to justify the inference that the accused carried the key on his person. Stress has been laid by both the Courts below on the fact that Mangru was not produced. Though it is possible to urge that Mangru would not have admitted that the room was in his occupation in view of the Police having found two packets of cocaine on search, I think there was enough justification for the Court below to hold that Mangru was not in possession of the room. It is in evidence that the accused did not mention this fact to the Sub-Inspector when the latter proceeded to a search the house. If Mangru had, in fact, been in possession of the room, the accused would most naturally have said that he had nothing whatever to do with that room and that if the Sub-Inspector desired to search it he should send for his brother, who was in possession of the key. The fact that he took upon himself to produce the key, as if he were the owner of the room, strongly suggests that his defence on this point was an afterthought. Probably he thought that the Police would break open the lock if he did not hand over the key and relied on the chance of the Police not being able to discover the packets of cocaine, which he knew were concealed under the bed.

The learned Advocate for the applicant has contended that s. 14 of the Dangerous Drugs Acts does not in terms apply, as that section makes possession of "manufactured drug" punishable, and as the cocaine found in the packets has not been shown to be 'manufactured drug', that the expression "manufactured drug" is not exhaustively defined in the Act; s. 2 (g) merely provides as to what "manufactured drug" includes. Among other things it includes "all coca derivatives", which expression is defined in s. 2 (b) (iii) as "cocaine, that is methyl benzoyl laevo-ecgonine having the chemical formula C-17, H-21 No 4 and its salts."

It is argued that there is no evidence on the record to show that the cocaine found in those packets contained the ingredients mentioned in the formula given in the definition. This question was not raised at the trial; otherwise more light could have been thrown on this aspect of the case. The expression "Coca derivatives" also includes "crude cocaine": see s. 2 (b) (i). The Chemical Examiner's report is as follows:

"More than 3 per cent. of cocaine admixed with novocaine was detected in the contents of each of the two puryas marked Exs. 5 and 4. The cocaine being impure in each case was unfit for medicinal use."

Section 2 (b) (iii) makes mention of cocaine; and to distinguish it from "crude cocaine" the usual chemical formula has been stated. I have no doubt that the word "cocaine", occurring in the Chemical Examiner's report, implies the substance prepared according to that formula, which is well known to chemists. I do not think that anything is lacking in this case to make out an offence under s. 14 of the Dangerous Drugs Act. The applicant was rightly convicted.

The learned Advocate for the applicant has strongly pressed for the reduction of sentence. As already stated, the applicant has once before been convicted of a similar offence. I do not think that the sentence of 18 months' rigorous imprisonment is too severe. I would, however, remit the fine, maintaining 18 months' rigorous imprisonment as the only sentence. The order of the trying Magistrate as regards sentence is modified to that extent. In other respects the revision is dismissed.

N. Revision dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 295 of 1934
August 21, 1934
PAKENHAM WALSH, J.
THIRUPATHURAN—ACCUSED—APPELLANT
versus

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 300, Excep. I—Deceased catching hold of accused's tuft—Latter also catching tuft of deceased and stabbing him with knife—Held, case came within s. 300, Excep. I.

In an altercation the deceased returned the abuse and caught hold of accused's tuft of hair, and gave him a blow with his fist on the back. The deceased and accused then closed with each other and accused caught hold of deceased's tuft also and stabbed the deceased to death by a knife:

Held, that the offence came under s 300, Penal Code, Excep. I as there was grave and sudden provocation. Nagalu v. Emperor (1), relied on

C. A. against an order of the Sessions Judge, Salem, in Case No. 11 of 1934.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The accused has been convicted of murder and sentenced to transportation for life. He prefers this jail appeal. The facts according to the prosecution are these. On November 6, 1933, the accused reported shortly before midnight to P. W. No. 6 that the deceased had come to his house the previous evening when he was absent at a shandy, knocked at his door, pushed his wife and attempted to seduce her. He asked P. W. No 6 to convene a panchayat about this and P. W. No. 6 did so, summoning P. W's. Nos. 7, 9, 10 and others. Deceased was called and accused laid his complaint before the Panchyat. Deceased denied the charge and suggested that accused's wife be sent for. This was done and she stated that somebody had knocked at her door the previous night, that on opening it she had found nobody there and had not seen the deceased. Deceased then asked accused why he had come forward with a false complaint, on which accused abused him in filthy terms saying that deceased had not only attempted to seduce his wife but was now telling lies about it. The deceased returned the abuse and caught hold of accused's tuft of hair, and gave him a blow with his fist on the back. The deceased and accused then closed with each other and accused is said to have caught hold of deceased's tuft also. As P. W. Nos. 7 and 9 approached with a view to separate them deceased fell down saying that he was stabbed. Accused ran away. A knife was found sticking in the abdomen of the deceased. Prosecution Witness No. 7 took it out and handed it to P. W. No. 6. Of the village officers the karnam P. W. No. 17 was the first to arrive on the scene and he was followed by the Village Munsif, P. W. N. 16 who lives about a mile from the scene of offence. The deceased was still alive when the latter came and told the village Munsif that accused had stabbed him. The village Munsif sent for the accused who admitted that he had committed the offence unknowingly. The village Munsif despached his report which the karnam wrote. (After discussing evidence His Lordship continued).

The circumstances of the case are such as to render it immaterial whether it was dark at the time or whether there was some starlight, for in view of the statement of the accused in the Sessions Court the highly improbable theory that somebody else came up and stabbed the deceased is not possible or else accused would certainly have known of it. I have no doubt that the prosecution evidence is substantially true. Next I have to consider whether the offence amounts to murder. The learned Sessions Judge says on this point:

"No doubt the accused may have received some provocation but it was certainly not of such gave and sudden nature as to deprive him of the power of self-control. Besides the accused was dealing with an unarmed man and he seems to have taken undue advantage over him by stabbing him with a knife and thus acted cruelly. There was really no need for the accused to have used the knife against the deceased in an ordinary fight like this."

I must say that until Mr. Bewes drew my attention to the case reported in Nagalu v. Emperor (1), I was inclined to agree with the lower Court. In that case the facts were very similar. The two Judges who heard the appeal differed, Jackson, J. holding that the offence was murder and Thiruvenkatachariar, J. holding that it was not. On a reference to a third Judge, Wallace, J., the latter agreed with Thiruvenkatachariar, J. The case is clearly parallel and I am not able to see any real distinction. In that case the deceased (while a fight was going on between some other relations of the parties) ran out of his house calling 'Where is this Nagulugadu? (the deceased)". Accused in that case standing near a tree in front of his house defied the deceased and told deceased to come on. Comparing that with the present case the accused no doubt began the abuse of deceased before the Panchayat and then deceased abused him in return. I see no substantial difference at this stage between this case and the case under reference where the deceased "was provoking a fight" (to quote Wallace, J.) and the accused took up the challenge. The question, who first began the abuse does not seem to me to make any material difference. After this the cases are almost exactly parallel. The deceased in that case began the fight by catching hold of the tuft of the accused and giving him blows with his fist exactly as here. Then there was a struggle during which the deceased held the accused firmly by the tuft and then accused stabbed the deceased with a dagger which he had with him. It is true that in the present case there is evidence that after the deceased caught hold of accused's tuft and given him a blow with his fist the accused also caught hold of deceased's tuft. Even that perhaps is open to some doubt (vide evidence of P. W. No. 6 discussed above). But certainly if accused seized hold of deceased's tuft under such circumstances, it would be no offence, and could not alter the question as to whether he was justified in stabbing him. The only other difference is in favour of accused in the present case because the accused in that case stabbed with a dagger and here only with a knife.

Thiruvenkatachariar, J. held that both Exceps. 1 and 2 of s. 300, Indian Penal Code applied, i. e., that the deceased seizing accused by the tuft and giving him blows with his fist was grave and sudden provocation (I may note here perhaps the evidence of P. W. No. 6 in this case "we did not expect this sudden trouble)," and also that accused in that case exercised the right of self-defence in stabbing his asssailant though he exceeded it. Wallace, J., does not appear to have held that the case would come under Excep. 2, at least he does not mention it in his judgment, but he held that it came under Excep. 1. I cannot distinguish that case in essence from the one before me, and as there was an express difference of opinion between the two learned Judges who tried the appeal on the point, and it was referred to a third Judge for decision, the case carries much more authority than would the mere opinion of a single Judge sitting alone here. I feel therefore bound to follow it and to reduce the conviction to one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under the first part of s. 304, Indian Penal Code on the ground that the case is covered by Excep. 1, s. 300. In that case the sentence given was three years' rigorous imprisonment. In the present case the accused began the abuse, but on the other hand he had probably good cause to be angry. It seems unlikely that if his wife had told him nothing more than she told the panchayat he would have made the complaint and have had a panchayat held at all. I reduce the sentence to one of five years' rigorous imprisonment.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal from the Allahabad High Court

LORD THANKERTON, SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON AND SIR SHADI LAL

PATEL CHHOTABHAI SINCE DECEASED AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

JNAN CHANDRA BASAK AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (IV of 1920) —Trust—Validity of trust under the Act—Tests—Trust deed executed by Central Council of a Cult—Guru regarded as spiritual head—Gifts made to Guru in accordance with mandates of religion—Donors, if can be supposed to have intended to create trust—Deed—Construction—Held, deed could not be treated as title deed.

In order that a trust of a religious and charitable nature may be valid and enforceable according to law, certain material matters must be ascertainable. In the first place it is material to ascertain the author or authors of the alleged trust. Next the intention to create a trust must be indicated by words or acts with reasonable certainty. The purpose of the trust, the trust property, and the beneficiaries must be indicated in such a way that the trust could be administered by the Court if the occasion arose. [p. 41', col. 2.]

A trust deed was executed by certain members of the Central Council Radha Swami Satsang and the objects of the trust were that "the trustees named above or those that may be appointed hereafter to succeed them, all of whom will hereafter be called 'trustees,' shall collect, preserve, administer, and if necessary, alienate the properties, movable or immovable, that have been or may hereafter be dedicated to the Supreme Being, Radha Swami Dayal, or that may be acquired for or presented to the Radha Swami Satsang and its branches, in accordance with such directions as may, from time to time, be issued in this behalf by the said Council or the Sant Sat Guru for the time being, if any who is recognised as the representative of the Supreme Being Radha Swami Dayal, and as such is the sole master of all movable and immovable properties of the aforesaid Satsang, provided that samadhs and places of public worship of the Radha Swami Satsang shall at no time be alienated :"

Held, (i) that the deed could not be treated as a title deed creating a legal trust. [p. 414 col. 1.]

(ii) that according to the tenets of the Radha Swami religion, and in consideration of the position and authority of the Sant Sat Guru, the complete and absolute submission of his followers to him and the teachings and doctrines, the followers of the true faith when making their gifts to the "Sant Sat Guru," whom they regarded as their spiritual head (whether he was the incarnation of the Supreme Being or only his representative) in accordance with the mandates of their religion, could not be supposed to have intended to create any trust and it could not be said that the donors of the gifts were the authors of the alleged public trust; [p. 412, col. 2.]

(iii) that the provisions in the deed were wholly inconsistent with any intention on the part of the "Sant Sat Guru" for the time being, to alter his position as "Sant Sat Guru" or to divest himself of the control of the property and to create a trust for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature, such as is contemplated by the Act XIV of 1920, but on the other hand, the regulations relating to the Central Council and the provisions of the so-called 'trust" deed were in consistent with a desire on the part of the Sant Sat Guru to obtain the assistance of some of his followers in the management of the property, which was increasing as the years passed; [p. 412, col 1]

(iv) that in view of the essential and unalterable doctrines of the faith with respect to the "Sant Sat Guru," his supremacy and his control over the offerings, by which the properties were acquired, it would be difficult to arrive at the conclusion that it was ever intended that such a trust as is contemplated by Act XIV of 1920, should be created. [p. 415, cols. 1 & 2.]

[Doctrines, principles and tenets of the Radha Swami religion discussed.]

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., and DeGruyther, K. C. for the Appellants.

Messrs. Parikh and B. B. Lal, for the Respondants.

Sir Lancelot Sanderson.—This is an appeal against a decree of the High Court of Allahabad dated June 12, 1929, which affirmed a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge at Benares dated November 30, 1926.

The litigation relates to a dispute between the plaintiffs and the added defendants on the one hand and the first three defendants on the other, with regard to certain property mentioned in the schedule to the plaint. All the parties are followers of the Radha Swami religion and the questions relating to the said property involve the consideration of the doctrines, tenets and principles of that religion, which are of vital importance to them and are of great interest to any student of theology.

The suit was brought by the plaintiffs (one of whom, viz., Patel Chotabhai has died since the initiation of the suit) who alleged that they were followers of the true faith of the said religion against Jnan Chandra Basak, Anand Sarup and the Radha Swami Satsang Sabha, a registered body through its Secretary, Mr. Nihal Chand, for a declaratory decree to the following effect—

(I)—"(a) That the so-called Radha Swami Trust administering the properties shown in the schedule marked A is not, in law, a legal and valid trust, nor of the kind or nature alleged by the defendants.

(b) That the said trust, if any, is not a trust created or existing for public purpose of a charitable or religious nature or one to which the provisions of Act XIV of 1920 apply.

(c) That the defendant No. 1 or No. 2 or any follower or followers of defendant No. 2 represented by defendant No. 3, individually or collectively possess no interest in the alleged trust or in the properties administered by it or in the affairs of the Satsang and its branches attached to the Radha Swami Central Administrative Council.

(II) To grant such further relief as the Court may deem fit and proper."

These defendants were alleged by the plaintiffs to be dissentients from the true faith, and that the 2nd defendant, Anand Sarup Sahib, had been set up as the "Sant Sat Guru" by these defendants and other persons acting with them. Subsequently, certain other persons were added as defendants to the suit, one of whom, viz, Gurmouj Saran alias Moti Ram, afterwards became a plaintiff, and the added defendants are now respondents Nos. 4 to 9.

One of the added defendants, viz., Sahib Madho Prasad, is alleged by the plaintiffs to be the recognised Sant Sat Guru of the true faith of the said religion. As already stated, the added defendants supported the case of the plaintiffs.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court which, on June 12, 1929, dismissed the appeal with costs, hence this appeal by the plaintiffs to His Majesty in Council.

The defendant-respondents did not file any case in reply to the plaintiffs' appeal; consequently their Lordships have not had the advantage of hearing any argument on their behalf, but the learned Counsel who appeared for the plaintiff-appellants, have drawn their Lordships' attention very carefully and fully to the material documents and evidence in the suit, and to the contentions set up by the defendants in the Courts in India.

The suit was instituted in consequence of the following matters.

In September, 1923, Jnan Chandra Basak the first defendant presented an application in the Court of the District Judge of Agra against Gurmouj Saran, described as the Trustee and Secretary, Radha Swami Trust, Allahabad, and Madhav Prasad Sinha Sahib, described as Trustee of the Radha Swami Trust.

The application purported to be made under s. 3 of the Charitable and Religious

Trusts Act, 1920 (Act XIV of 1920), which provides as follows—

"Save as hereinafter provided in this Act, any person having an interest in any express or constructive trust created or existing for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature may apply by petition to the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any substantial part of the subject-matter of the trust is situate to obtain an order embodying all or any of the following directions, namely:—

(1) directing the trustee to furnish the petitioner through the Court with particulars as to the nature and objects of the trust, and of the value, condition, management and application of the subject-matter of the trust, and of the income belonging thereto, or as to any of these matters; and

(2) directing that the accounts of the trust shall be examined and audited;

Provided that no persons shall apply for any such direction in respect of accounts relating to a period more than three years prior to the date of the petition."

The material parts of the petition are as follows:

"1. That there is in existence a Charitable and Religious Trust, known as the 'Radha Swami Trust,' which was formed in 1904 by the Radha Swami Central Administrative Council, a body elected in 1902 by the votes of the members of the Radha Swami Faith, for the collection, preservation and administration of properties, movable and immovable, that had till then been dedicated or might thereafter be dedicated to Radha Swami Dayal or that might be acquired for a present to Radha Swami Satsang

2. That the immovable properties vested in the said Trust include the Holy Samadhs of the past Sant Sat Gurus, i e, the Leaders of the Radha Swami Faith and other places of worship held sacred by the Radha Swami community and properties dedicated to, or acquired with monies, presented to, Radha Swami Dayal in the form of 'bhents' and other contributions by the members of the Radha Swami community.

4. That the applicant is a person having an interest in the said Trust in the following ways:—

(a) That he is a follower of the Radha Swami Faith for over thirty-three years and that for a long time, both before and after the creation of the said Trust, he has contributed his humble mite towards the properties and funds made over to, and administered by, the said Trust and that he has all along been in the enjoyment of his right of access for religious purposes to all the Holy Samadhs and other places held sacred by the members of the Radha Swami community and administered by the said Trust as part of the Trust property.

(b) That the applicant made a 'bhent' (present) of Rs. 2,000 about the year 1903 and in lieu thereof was granted a life allowance of Rs. 5 per mensem which the applicant has since then been receiving from the said Trust."

The applicant prayed that the Court should order that the said persons mentioned in the petition should furnish the information therein asked for as to immovable properties, cash balances, value of the alleged trust property and many other matters.

It was alleged that this application gave great offence to the followers of the true faith and thereupon three of such followers (two of whom were subsequently plaintiffs in the suit), submitted to the Court that there was no legal and valid trust, that the provisions of Act XIV of 1920 did not apply and that the petitioners had no interest in the matters referred to and they undertook to file a suit in accordance with the provisions of s. 5 (3) of the said Act.

The District Judge accordingly, by his order on December 20, 1923, stayed the proceedings, and the suit was filed on March 17, 1924.

The main question in the appeal is whether there is a valid legal trust in respect of the properties mentioned in the schedule attached to the plaint, known as the "Radha Swami Trust" as alleged by the contesting defendants. They alleged that there was a trust for a public purpose of a charitable and religious nature. Both the Courts in India decided the question in favour of the contesting defendants.

In order to appreciate the contentions which have been urged by the respective parties during the litigation with regard to this question, it is necessary in their Lordships' opinion to refer shortly to the foundation and nature of the religion, its tenets and doctrines, the position of the Sant Sat Guru, and the manner in which the properties which are said to be subject of the alleged trust, were acquired.

It is common ground that the faith or religion was founded in the year 1861 by Swami Shiv Dayal: he departed from this world, to use the expression of his followers, in 1878. All persons, whether Hindus, Muhammadans, Parsis or Christians can be initiated into this religion provided they are found to be fit and suitable by the spiritual head or "Guru," and when initiated, they are called "Sat Sangis."

The object of the religion is to attain true and perfect salvation by the liberation of the spirit from the bondage of mind and matter, which can only be achieved by following the practices prescribed by the religion.

The founder was the first "Sant Sat Guru." After his departure from this world one called "Huzur" was the second "Sant Sat Guru", he acted from 1878 until 1898, when he, too, departed from this world. Then one called "Maharaj Sahib became Sant Sat Guru" until 1907. Both parties recognise the above-named three persons as "Sant Sat Gurus."

The doctrines and tenets of the religion depend upon the writings and teachings of these three persons, and there is no dispute between the parties as to them. Both parties regard them as authoritative and binding upon the Sat Sangis: they do not, however, agree as to the position of the "Sant Sat Guru" in relation to the Radha Swami Faith.

As regards this last-mentioned matter, the plaintiffs hold that the spiritual leader of their religion for the time being known as the "Sant Sat Guru" is the incarnation of the Supreme Being in human form.

On the other hand, the contesting defendants say that the "Sant Sat Guru" is the representative of and is in communion with the Supreme Being but they do not accept the plaintiffs' contention that the Supreme Being is incarnate in the "Sant Sat Guru."

The learned Subordinate Judge, after hearing the evidence, came to the conclusion that the "Sant Sat Guru" may be described as "a person who has risen to such height spiritually that the Supreme Being sends a ray or current from his own to him that he may accomplish His mission under His impulse."

The learned Judge said that as an issue had been raised upon this matter he had to deal with it, otherwise he would have refrained from saying anything on this point.

Fortunately, their Lordships do not find it necessary to express any opinion in respect of this issue, inasmuch as the appeal falls to be decided upon grounds which are independent of the above-mentioned issue and are sufficient for the disposal of the appeal whichever view of the above-mentioned question is taken.

The following passages illustrate the teachings and doctrines as to the relations between the "Sant Sat Guru" and the initiated; they have been accepted by both parties as Supreme and uncontrollable mandates—

"Serve the Sat Guru with your heart, body and riches and consider him as Sat Purush."

The service performed by means of money is that "it may be utilised in the services of the Spiritual Guide."

"Worship the Guru every moment, no other deity is equal to him."

"Those who slavishly follow the Shariyat (creed of law) always remain tied to the world. They will never find access to Durbar of the Supreme Being. But those who serve the Sat Guru of the time with body and mind and wealth will secure entrance to the presence of the Supreme Being. The Sat Guru Himself is the Supreme Being; to serve him is to serve the Supreme Being. Those who seek the Supreme Being ignoring the Sant Sat Guru will never find the Supreme Being. Those who are engaged in service of the Sat Guru have actually met with the Supreme Being. When their eyes open they will see it (i e that the Sant Sat Guru is the Supreme Being Himself) and until their eyes open fully they should, relying on the word of Sant Sat Guru continue in His service, go on attending Satsang and continue increasing their Faith in and love for the 'charans' of Sant Sat Guru. One day the whole secret will be revealed to them."

"Any one desirous of reaching the Supreme Being must search for a Sant Sat Guru (incarnation of the Supreme Being) or a Sadh Guru (one who has reached the top of the second grand division) and invok His help, and receive instructions from one of these Supreme Guides as to the manner of his devotion and procedure.

A Sant Sat Guru is He who has either descended directly from the Highest Division or reached that quarter by practice of Surat Shabd Yoga under the immediate direction of the former.

The first personage or the Supreme Father and sole master is a vast and boundless Ocean of Spirit and Love and Joy from whom the Original Spirit or word current emanated. The second personage or the Supreme Mother is the Original Spirit and Sound Current the prime mover, creator, nourisher and supporter of the whole creation. It is the connecting link between the Supreme Father and the son or disciple, and leads the way and helps the son in returning to the Father's Highest Mansion.

The third, the Supreme Son or Sant Sat Guru is the Representative of the Supreme Father in human form on this earth. This incarnation of the Supreme Father or His Special and Beloved son Sant Sat Guru appears now and then in this world for the purpose of saving spirits from going down to the lower regions and raising them to the higher spheres, and finally to the Mansion of the Supreme Father. The fourth, the disciple, the son or human being is a ray or drop descended from the Supreme Sun or Boundless Ocean of Spirit, Love and Joy, but his attention having been diverted by mind and matter towards the material creation down below, he has lost all knowledge of the Supreme Father and His Highest Mansion, and cannot now return to His Holy Abode without the help externally of Supreme Father or His Special and Beloved Son assuming human form of a Sant Sat Guru, and internally, of the Supreme Mother or the connecting Spirit and Sound Current between the Supreme Father and the disciple or son who illumines the heart of a sincere lover and devotee and sheds grace and mercy upon him."

There are many other extracts to which their Lordships' attention was directed; they are to much the same effect and it is not necessary to refer to them in detail.

The properties which are the subject-matter of the suit were acquired with monies presented to the "Sant Sat Guru" in the form of "bhents" or other contributions by the followers of the Radha Swami Faith and one of the points strongly relied upon by the plaintiff-appellants is that having regard to the spiritual position of the "Sant Sat Guru" whether he is regarded as the incarnation of the Supreme Being in human form or as one of such spiritual height as to be in communion with the Supreme Being and to be his Representative on earth it is almost inconceivable that the followers of the Faith when making their gifts to the "Sant Sat Guru" intended to create a "trust" within the meaning of Act XIV of 1920, of which they the donors and worshippers should be the beneficiaries.

It is necessary now to refer to certain material facts.

In 1902, while Maharaj was the "Sant Sat Guru" a Council was formed, called the Central Council Radha Swami Satsang. In the notice issued to the followers of the Faith calling a meeting to form the Council it was stated that—

"We have repeatedly received the news which show that some of the Satsangis take such proceedings and are of such character as cause interference with the proceedings of Radha Swami Satsang and it is apprehended that by formation of different parties, the real object of Radha Swami Mat that all the persons should make and render service to Radha Swami Dayal may be lost.

The object of establishing the Sabha is not to offer any kind of obstruction to the devotion, Sewa (service) and Supremacy of the Sant Sat Guru whenever in future He manifests Himself. At that time this Sabha will only help Him in the management of the Satsang and His orders will have priority in respect of all matters and He will be treated a Nijputra or successor of Radha Swami. In every matter He shall have full and unquestionable power".

The document declaring the constitutional powers of the Central Council appears to have come into being in June, 1904, and the material passages are as follows:—

"1. The constitutional powers of the Central Council Radha Swami Satsang which was established in the year 1902 by a majority of votes of the members of the Radha Swami Faith are as below:—

(a) To regulate the conduct of business pertaining to the Radha Swami Satsang and its branches and of the followers of the Radha Swami religion.

(b) To collect, preserve and administer the properties, movable and immovable that have been or may hereafter be dedicated to Radha Swami Dayal or that may be acquired for or presented to the Radha Swami Satsang for the furtherance of the objects of the Satsang.

(c) To do the above and all such other things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects in accordance with the directions of the Sant Sat Guru for the time being, if any, who is recognised as the representative of the Supreme Creator, Radha Swami Dayal, and whose mandates shall be paramount and absolute in all the matters referred to above.

9. All property of Radha Swami Satsang and its branches both movable and immovable which exists at present or may hereafter be presented to Radha Swami Dayal or be otherwise acquired, will, for the maintenance and advancement of the objects of the Satsang, be vested in a body of trustees designated the "Radha Swami Trust."

22. The Radha Swami Trust shall prescribe rules for the proper care and custody of the movable and immovable property belonging to the Satsang and its branches and for the proper maintenance of accounts.

25. The Trust shall be revocable at the discretion of the Council and the Trustees shall hold their office at its pleasure.

27. All immovable property as soon as acquired by Satsang, either as a present or offering, shall be conveyed in the name of the Radha Swami Trust."

In October, 1904, what was called a "Trust Deed" was executed by certain members of the Central Council. The executants included the then "Sant Sat Guru," "Maharaj," who used his own name, viz., Brahm Shankar Misra, Madho Prasad, the "Sant Sat Guru" recognised by the plaintiffs and their party after the death of "Maharaj," and Kamta Prasad Sinha, who was the first "Guru" adopted by the alleged dissenters, namely the party, to which the contesting defendants belong.

The objects of the "Trust" as stated in the deed were as follows:—

OBJECTS OF THE TRUST.

"The trustees named above or those that may be appointed hereafter to succeed them, all of whom will hereafter be called 'trustees,' shall collect, preserve, administer, and if necessary, alienate the properties, movable or immovable, that have been or may hereafter be dedicated to the Supreme Being, Radha Swami Dayal, or that may be acquired for or presented to the Radha Swami Satsang and its branches, in accordance with such directions as may, from time to time, be issued in this behalf by the said Council or the Sant Sat Guru for the time being, if any, who is recognised as the representative of the Supreme Being Radha Swami Dayal, and as such is the sole master of all movable and immovable properties of the aforesaid Satsang, provided that Samadhs and places of public worship of the Radha Swami Satsang shall at no time be alienated."

A similar clause appears in a later deed, viz., January 2, 1920.

By a clause relating to Bye-laws, it was provided that—

BYE-LAWS OF THE TRUST.

"1. Irrespective of what is prescribed by the following rules, all mandates of the Sant Sat Guru of the time regarding the disposal of the movable and immovable properties of the Satsang and its branches or other matters connected with the Trust, shall be carried out by the trustees

2. The Trust shall be revocable at the discretion of the Council and the trustees shall hold their office at its pleasure.

4. All immovable properties, as soon as acquired by the aforesaid Satsang either as present or offerings or by purchase, or otherwise, shall be forthwith conveyed in the name of the trustees."

There was attached to the deed a specification of the properties alleged to be held in trust.

In April, 1907, certain "loan rules" were issued by the Central Council; it was stated that in order to obviate the serious difficulties, hardships and loss which Sat Sangis have often to undergo in obtaining loans, and to afford them all reasonable facilities, the rules were sanctioned for grant of loans to them.

These rules provided for the carrying on a sort of banking business, whereby loans were to be made at interest either on security or guarantee: an object which is hardly consistent with the alleged trust being of a religious or charitable nature.

In 1907, "Maharaj" the third "Sant Sat Guru" died. It was alleged by the plaintiff appellants that before he died he had indicated, as to his successor, that the divine current was in female form in his own sister, who was known as Buaji Sahiba; but he declared that she would not publicly hold or preside at Satsang, as she was a pardanashin lady, and that, during her lifetime the Satsang would be conducted in accordance with her directions and orders under the presidency of Rai Sahib Madho Prasad Sinha Sahib, known as Bapuji Maharaj (respondent No. 4), who would succeed her, and that the followers of the true faith, in accordance with the tenets thereof, acted upon this declaration and accepted the lady as the next Sant Sat Guru accordingly.

In 1910, some Sat Sangis followed the lead of Kamta Prasad Sinha and he became the "Sant Sat Guru" of the so-called dissentient party, who formed themselves into a body called the Radha Swami Satsang Sabha at Agra, which body was the third defendant in the suit; subsequently, Anand Sarup, the second defendant became the "Guru" of that party.

In 1913, Buaji Sahiba died and Madho Prasad was accepted by the plaintiff-appellants' party as the true and only "Sant Sat Guru."

Both the Courts in India held that the deed of October, 1904, cannot be treated as a title deed creating a legal trust, and their Lordships agree with them in this respect.

The High Court, however, considered that it was to be regarded as a document containing admissions in unmistakable terms as to the character and nature of the properties therein referred to, and the High Court's conclusion was as follows:

"We think that the statements contained in this deed coupled with those contained in the notices and the circulars as well as the subsequent conduct of the Gurus themselves, can leave no doubt in our minds that these properties were not treated as the private properties of the Gurus, but were set apart as the properties belonging to the Satsang and its branches and held in trust by the trustees for the furtherance of the object of the Satsang"

With great respect to the learned Judges, their Lordships are not able to agree with their decision.

It may be that the offerings to the Sant Sat Guru, by means of which the properties were acquired, were not only for the personal use of the Sant Sat Guru, but also for the advancement of the faith, but in order that such a trust, as is relied upon by the contesting defendants in this case, may be valid and enforceable according to law, certain material matters must be ascertainable. In the first place it is material to ascertain the author or authors of the alleged trust. Next the intention to create a trust must be indicated by words or acts with reasonable certainty. The purpose of the trust, the trust property, and the beneficiaries must be indicated and in such a way that the trust could be administered by the Court if the occasion arose.

It is necessary, therefore, to consider who was the author or who were the authors of the trust which is alleged by the contesting defendants, to have been for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature. Their Lordships agree with the contention of the plaintiff-appellants that the followers of the true faith when making their gifts to the "Sant Sat Guru," whom they regarded as their spiritual head (whether he was the incarnation of the Supreme Being or only his representative) in accordance with the mandates of their religion cannot be supposed to have intended to create any trust. In this connection, it is material to notice that the High Court accepted the same view in that they said that when the members of this faith make gifts to Radha Swami Dayal in the person of the Guru, they do not concern themselves with the manner in which the gifts will be used.

This seems to their Lordships an eminetly reasonable conclusion when the position and authority of the "Sant Sat Guru," the complete and absolute submission of his followers to him, and the above-mentioned teachings and doctrines are taken into consideration. It cannot therefore be said that the donors of the gifts were the authors of the alleged public trust.

But it is to be remembered that the properties, which are alleged to be the subject of the trust, were acquired by means of the said gifts made to the Sant Sat Guru in the form of "bhents" and other contributions. Can it then be said that any of the three "Sant Sat Gurus" to whom the gifts were made created such a trust as is relied upon by the contesting defendants?

Their Lordships can find no trace of the creation of any trust prior to the time when the above-mentioned Council was formed. When the constitutional powers of the Central Council were declared, it was at the very outset provided that the Council was to do the things mentioned in the declaration and other matters incidental thereto, in accordance with the directions of the Sant Sat Guru for the time being, if any, who is recognised as the representative of the Supreme Creator Radha Swami Dayal and whose mandates shall be paramount and absolute in all the matters referred to therein.

In the alleged trust deed itself the "Sant Sat Guru" for the time being is recognised as the representative of the Supreme Being and as such, is the sole master of all movable and immovable properties of the Satsang. Further, the deed is stated to be revocable at the discretion of the Council.

These provisions, in their Lordships' opinion, are wholly inconsistent with any intention on the part of the "Sant Sat Guru" for the time being, to alter his position as "Sant Sat Guru" or to divest himself of the control of the property and to create a trust for a public purpose of a charitable or religious nature, such as is contemplated by Act XIV of 1920.

On the other hand, the regulations relating to the Central Council and the provisions of the so-called "Trust" deed are, in their Lordships' opinion, consistent with a desire on the part of the Sant Sat Guru to obtain the assistance of some of his followers in the management of the property, which, no doubt, was increasing as the years passed.

The arrangement thereby made would no doubt facilitate the dealing with the property during the lifetime of the "Sant Sat Guru," and would obviate difficulties which might arise as to succession on the death of the "Sant Sat Guru," but in view of the essential and unalterable doctrines of the faith with respect to the "Sant Sat Guru," his supremacy and his control over the offerings, by which the properties were acquired, it is difficult to arrive at the conclusion that it was ever intended that such a trust as is contemplated by the Act XIV of 1920, should be created. This is confirmed by the express provisions which have already been referred to, e. g., that the Council were to act in accordance with the direction of the "Sant Sat Guru" for the time being, who is recognised as the representative of the Supreme Creator, whose mandates were to be paramount and that the trustees were to follow the directions of the "Sant Sat Guru," who was the sole master of all movable and immovable property.

This conclusion is, in their Lordships' opinion, fatal to the contention of the contesting defendants, but there are other considerations which would render it difficult to hold that the alleged trust was of a religious or charitable nature only.

Reference has already been made to the carrying on of a sort of banking business. In this connection it may be noted that Jnan Chandra Basak who presented the above-mentioned petition, alleged that he had made a gift of Rs. 2,000 in 1903 to the alleged trust and he was granted a life allowance of Rs. 5 per mensem; in other words, he bought an annuity of Rs. 60 for the sum of Rs. 2,000. In 1905, it was proposed to start a factory in which only Sat Sangis and their relations should take part. It was stated that five lakhs of rupees would be required and that the shares would be Rs. 50 each and Sat Sangis were invited to invest their money. Whether this proposal was carried out, their Lordships do not know, but the above-mentioned matters go to show that even if the alleged trust could be taken as having been created, it would be difficult to hold it was for a public purpose of a religious or charitable nature within the meaning of Act XIV of 1920. For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal must be allowed, and the decrees of the Courts in India set aside and that a declaration should be made in accordance with paragraph one, sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) of the prayer in the plaint, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The defendants one to three must pay the costs of the plaintiff-appellants in both Courts in India, and of this appeal.

Criminal Revision No. 811 of 1934

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 70, 71, 134 (2)—Procedure under s. 134 (2), when can be resorted to.

It is only if the order cannot be served in the manner provided for service of summons that the publication of a proclamation under sub-s. 2, s. 134, Criminal Procedure Code, may be resorted to.

Mr. S. C. Talukdar, for the Petitioner.

Order.—This Rule must, in my opinion, be made absolute not on the ground that the petitioner had no knowledge of the order in question, (for I entirely agree with the Courts below that he had such knowledge), but on the ground that the order for the disobedience of which the petitioner has been convicted had not been duly promulgated. Section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, lays down that an order under that section shall be served in the manner provided by s. 134, and s. 134 says that such an order shall, if practicable, be served on the person for whom it is made in a manner provided for service of summons. It is only if the order cannot be served in the manner provided for service of summons that the publication of a proclamation under sub-s. 2, s. 134, may be resorted to. The provisions regarding service of summons are found in ss. 68 to 74, Criminal Procedure Code. Section 69 lays down that a summons shall, if practicable, be served personally. Section 70 lays down that where a person summoned cannot by the exercise of due diligence be found, the summons may be served by leaving one of the duplicates for him with some adult male member of his family or in a Presidency town with his servant residing with him. Section 71 lays down that if service in the manner mentioned in ss. 69 and 70 cannot, by the exercise of due diligence be effected, the summons shall be served by affixing it to some conspicuous part of the house or homestead in which the person summoned ordinarily resides.

What happened in the present case was this. The constable who went to the locality to serve the order could not find the petitioner and he forthwith instead of resorting to the procedure laid down in ss. 70 and 71, caused the order to be proclaimed by beat of drum and by attaching a copy thereof to a tree. He also took the precaution by obtaining the signature of one Kinu Mondal, who is said to be a relative and a neighbour of the petitioner, and himself one of the persons against whom the order was directed. The procedure adopted by the constable appears to have been substantially in compliance with the provisions of sub-s. (2), s. 134. But it was not, in my opinion, open to the constable to resort to that procedure, inasmuch as he had not made any attempt to serve the order through any relative of the petitioner as laid down in s. 70, or by affixing to the petitioner's house as laid down in s. 71. The constable is of course not to blame in this matter for it was not to be expected that he would be acquainted with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code relating to the service of an order of the kind which is at present under consideration He ought to have been given clear directions on the point and the result of the failure to give him such directions has been that the order was not served in the manner required by law.

It is further a matter for surprise that the Magistrate at the time of issuing the order, and the local Police Officer when he received the order, did not take any steps or direct any steps to be taken for the purpose of enforcing the order in the locality, and for the purpose of preventing the mela, the holding of which the order purported to prohibit, from being held. The Rule is made absolute. The conviction and sentence are set aside and the petitioner is acquitted. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

D. Rule made absolute.

BAQA ULLAH KHAN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
GHULAM SIDDIQUE KHAN AND OTHERS —DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Mussalman Wakf Validating Act (VI of 1913), s. 3, proviso—Reservation of ultimate benefit contemplated by the proviso—Whether can be made impliedly—Wakf created in perpetuity—Portion of usufruct reserved for pious and charitable objects—Wakif having in view possible extinction of line of descendants—Use of words 'wakf fi-sabi-lillah'—Wakf—Validity of—Deed—Construction—Deed to be read as a whole—Effect to be given to all provisions.

The reservation of the ultimate benefit contemplated by the proviso to s. 3 of the Mussulman Wakf Validating Act can either be made expressly or impliedly. The answer to the question whether the reservation of the ultimate benefit for those purposes has been made by a deed of wakf must depend on the intention of the wakif as disclosed by the deed. In a case where the words "wakf fi-sabi-lillah" have been used and wakif has been created in perpetuity, and there is provision for the appointment of the mutwallis for all time to come, and a portion of the usufruct of the wakf property has been reserved for pious and charitable purposes, and the wakif had in contemplation the possible extinction of the line of his descendants who were to be the principal recipients of the profits of the wakf property, the irresistible conclusion is that the wakif intended by implication to reserve the ultimate benefit for the purposes enumerated in the proviso.

It is one of the recognized canons of the interpretation of a document that the document must be read and construed as a whole and due and legitimate effect be given to each and every one of its provisions.

F. C. A. from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated October 24, 1930.

Mr. A. M. Khwaja, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. C. Das, Janaki Prasad and K. N. Jha, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—One Wilayat Husain Khan executed a deed of wakf on April 28, 1925, and the sole question for consideration in the present appeal is whether by that deed a valid wakf was created in accordance with the provisions of the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act (Act VI of 1913), and on the answer to that question depends the decision of this appeal.

After the execution of the deed of wakf Wilayat Husain on August 10, 1925, filed a suit for the revocation and cancellation of the deed and in the alternative for the rectification of the same. The suit was based mainly on the allegation that the execution of the deed was brought about by the exercise of undue influence on Wilayat Husain by Ghulam Siddique Khan, one of the defendant-respondents before us, and that as there was no ultimate dedication by the deed in favour of the poor or for some pious, religious or charitable purpose, as enjoined by the proviso to s. 3 of the Wakf Validating Act, the wakf was invalid. It was further stated in the plaint that Wilayat Husain intended to make provision by the deed for the maintenance, amongst others, of his nephew Imdad Husain and his descendants and that, in the event of the Court refusing to cancel the deed, provision for the maintenance of Imdad Husain and his descendants be also made in the deed by rectification of the same. The defendants to the suit were Musammat Taslimunnisa, the wife, and Kaniz Fatma, the daughter of Wilayat Husain and Ghulam Siddique, the husband of Kaniz Fatma, and these very persons were the principal beneficiaries under the deed of wakf. The suit was contested by the defendants and the learned Subordinate Judge directed Wilayat Husain to appear in person on the date fixed for striking issues, "For his examination for elucidation of material facts" Wilayat Husain did not attend in person on the date fixed and the Court on October 12, 1925, passed an order dismissing the suit for default with costs to the answering defendants.

Wilayat Husain died on January 13, 1930, and the suit giving rise to the present appeal was filed on March 20, 1930, by the plaintiff-appellants, who are the sons of Imdad Husain and the grand-nephews of Wilayat Husain. In the plaint the validity of the deed of gift was assailed on the very grounds on which Wilayat Husain had prayed for the cancellation of the wakf in the suit filed by him. The plaintiffs alleged that the execution of the deed of wakf was brought about by the exercise of undue influence on Wilayat Husain and that as there was no ultimate dedication in favour of the poor or for some religious, pious or charitable purpose, the wakf was invalid.

Kaniz Fatma had died in the life-time of Wilayat Husain and the defendants to the present suit were Ghulam Siddique and Musammat Taslimunnisa. Both the defendants contested the suit. They denied the allegation of the plaintiffs about the exercise of undue influence and maintained that the wakf was valid. They also pleaded that the order of the Subordinate Judge dated October 12, 1925, dismissing the suit filed by Wilayat Husain operated as res judicata and was a bar to the present suit in view of the provisions or O. IX, r. 9 Civil Procedure Code.

The learned Subordinate Judge upheld the contention of the defendants that O. IX, r. 9, Civil Procedure Code was a bar to the suit. He, however, held that "the ultimate benefit" was not, by the deed, expressly or impliedly reserved for the poor or for any other purpose recognized by the Muhammadan Law as religious, pious or charitable purpose of a permanent character, and, as such, the wakf was invalid. But, in view of his finding that the dismissal of the former suit was a bar to the present suit, he dismissed the suit.

In appeal before us the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellants has contended that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that O. IX, r. 9, Civil Procedure Code, was a bar to the suit. In our judgment there is considerable force in this contention but, as we are of the opinion that the wakf created by the deed was valid and the plaintiff's suit must fail on the merits, we refrain from expressing an opinion on the point.

The deed of wakf is couched in plain and simple language and is mostly free from legal technicalities. It begins with a recital of the fact that Wilayat Husain, the wakif, is the owner of the properties covered by the deed. It is then stated that the wakif has a daughter Kaniz Fatma and a wife Taslimunnisa and that he is anxious to make a wakf of his entire property in the name of God (Fi-Sabi-Lillah) for the sake of maintenance of himself, his wife and daughter and also with a view to obtaining the blessings of the next world so that he may be receiving blessings after his death. The deed then goes on to provide that the wakif had made a wakf alal-alad and a wakf fi-sabi-liallah in perpetuity and for ever and that he had no proprietary rights left in the property and that he had removed his proprietary possession and entered in possession of the same in the capacity of a mutwalli. Then follows the provision as to the line of mutwallis. The wakif was to be the first mutwalli and he reserved to himself the right of appointing any person as mutwalli in his lifetime in his place. After the wakif's death Kaniz Fatma was to be the mutwalli of the dedicated property and after her death the male and the female issues of Kaniz Fatma were to be the mutwallis in succession. Power was, however, reserved to Kaniz Fatma to appoint in her life-time any of her descendants as mutwalli. In the event of the extinction of the line of Kaniz Fatma, Ghulam Siddique Khan or his descendants or his nearest relations were to be the mutwallis of the property. The deed then went on to provide that:

"In future for discharging the duties of the mutwalli, preference will be given to a person, who shall be religious and honest and who shall be selected for the purpose by the members of the community (Biradri) and the members of the family."

Detailed provision is thereafter made by the need for the application of the usufruct of the dedicated property. It is provided by the deed that after the payment of Government revenue, etc., and the meeting of necessary expenses, 1/16th share of the net profits of the wakf property shall be spent in the way of God for the expenses of a mosque and for the support of the poor, widows, orphans, etc., and that the remaining profit shall be utilized for the maintenance of the wakif, his wife, his daughter and the descendants of his daughter. It is then declared by the deed that the wakf:

"shall be governed by all the rules and legal provision of the Muhammadan Law of the Sunni sect of the Hanafi School of Law to which" the wakif belonged.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellants has contended that as there was no express or implied reservation of the ultimate benefit arising from the wakf property in favour of the objects mentioned in the proviso to s. 3 of the Act, the wakf was invalid. We are unable to agree with this contention.

It is not disputed that Wilayat Husain intended by the deed in question to make a wakf in accordance with the provisions of the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act (Act VI of 1913). In accordance with that Act, it is essential for the validity of a wakf for the maintenance and support of the family, children or descendants of the wakif or for the maintenance of wakif during his life time, or for the payment of his debts out of the rents and profits of the dedicated property, that the ultimate benefit should expressly or impliedly be reserved for the purposes mentioned above. It is also clear that the ultimate reservation of the benefit for the above mentioned purposes was not expressly made by the deed under consideration. The only question, therefore, that remains is whether or not there was an implied reservation of the ultimate benefit for those purposes. In our judgment the answer to the question must be in the affirmative.

It is one of the recognized canons of the interpretation of a document that the document must be read and construed as a whole and due and legitimate effect be given to each and every one of its provisions. A reference to the deed of wakf in dispute puts it beyond doubt that the wakif did dedicate the property in perpetuity for the maintenance of his family and in the way of God. Further the provision in the deed as to the appointment of the mutwallis in the event of the extinction of the line of the mutwallis specifically prescribed by the wakif, makes it abundantly clear that the wakif intended the whole of the wakf to be in operation for ever. Similarly the provision in the deed as to the application of the 1/16th of the income of the wakf property for charitable and pious purposes was clearly meant to be in force for al time to come. There is, however, no express provision about the ultimate application of the 15-16ths of the income of the wakf property in the event of the extinction of the line of the wakif's daughter and her descendants, but a perusal of the deed leaves no room for doubt that the wakif did contemplate the possible extinction of the line of his daughter. That being so, the wakif must be deemed to have contemplated the ultimate application of the 15/16ths of the income of the wakf property on the extinction of the line of his daughter for some pious or religious purposes, as he in terms created the wakf not only for the benefit of his descendants but also in the way of God fi-sabi lillah. The interpretation contended for by the learned Counsel for the appellants suffers from this infirmity that it leads to the conclusion that, though the wakif purported to create a wakf in perpetuity in accordance with the provisions of the Wakf Validating Act and, though he intended the wakf to be in operation for ever administered by mutwallis appointed in accordance with the provisions of the deed, and also realised the possibility of the line of his daughter becoming extinct, he inadvertently failed to make any provision as ragards the ultimate application of the 15/16ths of the profits of the wakf property. The reservation of the ultimate benefit contemplated by the proviso to s. 3 of the Wakf Validating Act can either be made expressly or impliedly. The answer to the question whether the reservation of the ultimate benefit for those purposes has been made by a deed of wakf must depend on the intention of the wakif as disclosed by the deed. In a case where the words "wakf fi sabi lillah" have been used and wakf has been created in perpetuity, and there is provision for the appointment of the mutwallis for all time to come, and a portion of the usufruct of the wakf property has been reserved for pious and charitable purposes, and the wakif had in contemplation the possible extinction of the line of his descendants who were to be the principle recipients of the profits of the wakf property, the irresistible conclusion is that the wakif intended by implication to reserve the ultimate benefit for the purposes enumerated in the proviso.

For the reasons given above, we hold that a valid wakf was created by the deed dated April 28, 1925, and the plaintiffs' suit was rightly dismissed by the Court below.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

N. Appeal dismissed.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Civil Revision Petition No 78 of 1934
February 28, 1935
WORT, J.
MRS. M. D'SILVA—PETITIONER
MRS. MINNIE LAL—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 58, s. 100 — Possession with a person — Court, if precluded from entering into question of whether possession was of judgment-debtor—Mixed question of law and fact—Erroneous decision—Interference in revision—Legality of.

Although it is true that when once a person is found to be in possession under O. XXI, r. 58 the Court has no jurisdiction to go behind that possession and enter into a question of title yet it cannot be said that the Court is precluded from entering into the question of whether the possession of the person actually found in possession was the possession of the judgment-debtor or not. When the Court finds that some person other than the judgment-debtor is in possession, it becomes necessary to determine whether that person is in possession for the judgment-debtor and in many cases it is often necessary to go into the question if that possession was the result of a purchase and whether the purchase was a benami purchase or not. Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (1), referred to.

Where the question is a mixed one of fact and law, and from one point of view, the lower Court has decided erroneously, this fact does not give the High Court jurisdiction to interfere in revision

C. Rev. P. from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi, dated February 3, 1934.

Messrs B. C. De and K. K. Banerji, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. S. K. Mitter and L. K. Choudhury for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The result of the order made by the Subordinate Judge as far back as February 1934 may have turned out to be unfortunate for the petitioner, but that does not extend the jurisdiction which I have to revise that order. The point that arose was whether a share in the hotel which had been attached by the petitioner decree-holder should have been released from attachment as the learned Judge in this case has ordered. It is unnecessary to state the matter in detail.

A partition action was going on between Mrs. Oates and Mrs. D'Silva and a Receiver was appointed. During the course of the partition action the share of Mrs. Oates was sold to a third party. The interes of Mrs. Oates, as I have already stated, had been attached before judgment by the petitioner in execution of a decree for rent. The learned Judge in the Court below in the application which was made under O. XXI, r. 58, went into two questions: first, whether the third party claimant to whom I have referred, was in possession as purchaser from the judgment-debtor; and secondly, whether the purchase was legal or illegal.

I shall dispose of the latter point first, because Mr. De appearing on behalf of the petitioner contends that the decision of the learned Judge should have been other than that at which he has arrived by reason of s. 64 which makes any alienation of an attached property void. But it is sufficient to say that the question was not raised in that form in the Court below where the point argued was whether the purchase was legal or illegal by reason of the possession of the Receiver. That in my judgment disposes of that point.

The substantial question was whether the property was in possession of the purchaser from the judgment-debtor. As I understand Mr. De's argument, in the first instance, it was this that when once a person is found to be in possession under O. XXI, s. 58, the Court has no jurisdiction to go behind that possession and enter on to a question of title. Baldly stated there is no dispute that that proposition of law is correct. But if Mr. De meant by his argument that the Court was precluded from entering into the question of whether the possession of the person actually found in posseseion was the possession of the judgment-debtor or not, I must say that with that I cannot agree. The very order itself precludes any such proposition of law being established. Order XXI, r. 60, provides:

> "Where upon the said investigation the Court is satisfied that for the reason stated in the claim or objection such property was not, when attached in the possession of the judgment-debtor or of some persen in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, or that, being in the possession of the judgment-debtor at such time, it was so in his possession, not on his own account ..... but on account of or in trust for some other person", then the property is released from attachment. Now the question, therefore, for the Judge in the Court below was the possession of the judgment-debtor or some person in trust for him. It is true that the Court found that some person other than the judgment-debtor was in possession. It therefore became necessary to determine whether that person was in possession for the judgment-debtor, and in many cases of that kind it is often necessary to go into the question if that possession was the result of a purchase and whether the purchase was a benami purchase or not. Mr. De went so far as to say that in no circumstances could the question of benami be gone into. But the very case relied upon disposes of that argument. I refer to Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (1) where Lord Hobhouse in delivering the opinion of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee said in as clear terms as it is possible to say that the extent of the investigation under this part of the Code depended upon the circumstances of each case and expressly stated that their Lordships were not laying down any definite rule as to the extent of that investigation. If I may say so with great respect, from the mere reading of the order itself that seems to be obvious. Therefore I clearly come to the conclusion that there was no doubt that the Judge had jurisdiction to go into the question of whether the possession of Mr. Smith, the Receiver, was the possession of the judgment-debtor or not. If it had been the possession of the judgment-debor then prima facie the claim would fail.

The order can be looked at in my judgment from another point of view. Unless the decree-holder can establish that the possession of the person is the possession of the judgment-debtor, it seems to me impossible to say that he is entitled to claim against this property. That is only another way of stating the same proposition of law to which I have previously referred.

Having entered into that question as a matter of mixed question of fact and law, the Judge had to determine what that possession was. Mr. Smith was the Receiver appointed by the Court in the partition proceedings. Apparently, therefore, the possession of the Receiver would be the possession of the Court; and the only way Mr. De can succeed on this point is by saying, following the decision in Kristamma Naidu v. Chapa Naidu (2), that the decision was in direct violation of some principle of law. It is often very difficult question as to what is to be considered to be the possession of the Receiver: whether it is the possession of one person or another person is by no means an easy question. In any event it would be impossible for me to say that the Judge was acting in direct violation of some principles of law in deciding in a favour of the claimant. Indeed from the judgment of the Judge in the Court below, it would seem to appear that the parties depended upon the two points which they raised and possibly agreed as to the proper principle of law to be applied. From the judgment as I understand it and from a perusal of the statement as to what the true position of law was, I should feel inclined to come to the conclusion that the parties in the Court below agreed to a position of law diametrically opposed to that which was argued by Mr. De in this Court.

(2) 17 M 410.

But I do not propose to decide the case on that ground. It is impossible for me, however, to say, as Mr. De would suggest that the law was so clear that it must be held that when the Judge decided the question erroneously, he was deciding consciously in violation of an established principle of law. It was a mixed question of fact and law in this case and from one point of view the Judge decided erroneously; but that does not give me jurisdiction as has been pointed out so many times.

On the merits of the case, as the possession appears to have been the joint possession, there seems no particular reason why at this stage of the proceedings the petitioner should be allowed to execute against this property. But again that is a matter which has no relevance to the point before me, and I therefore, do not come to any definite conclusion with regard to it.

It seems to me from any point of view that the application must be held to fail. The Rule must be discharged with costs: hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Criminal Revision No. 245 of 1934

April 20, 1934

SHADI LAL, C. J.

DINA NATH—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Electricity Act (IX of 1910), ss. 39, 50—Theft of Electric energy—Prosecution not instituted by Government Electric Inspector but by Executive Officer of Cantonment Board—Quashing of prosecution.

Prosecution for the theft of electric energy can be instituted only by one of the persons mentioned in s. 50 of the Electricity Act. A prosecution not instituted at the instance of the Government or an Electric Inspector, but by the Executive Officer of the Cantonment Board who had no authority from the Board to institute proceedings, should be quashed.

Cr. Rev. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Ambala.

Messrs Gobind Ram Khanna and Lakshmi Narain Varma, for the Petitioner.

Mr. R. A. Jeremy, for the Crown.

Order.—I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that s. 39, Electricity Act, IX of 1910, creates an offence, and that prosecution for the theft of electric energy can be instituted only by one of the persons mentioned in s. 50 of that Act. Now the prosecution in the present case was not instituted at the instance of the Government or an Electric Inspector, but by the Executive Officer of the Cantonment Board. But he had no authority from the Board to institute the proceedings, and I cannot hold that he should be deemed to be an aggrieved person within the meaning of the section.

I accordingly accept the recommendation made by the learned Sessions Judge, and quash the proceedings instituted against the accused.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Special Bench

Criminal Revision No. 39 of 1935

March 5, 1935

MOHAMMAD NOOR, JAMES AND AGARWALA, JJ.

RAM SINGH—PETITIONER

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal trial—Case and counter-case—Court, if should wait for results of steps in counter-case—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 195, 186, 353—Absence of written complaint by public officer—Conviction under s. 186, legality of—Police Act (V of 1861), ss. 15, 16—Cost of additional Police quartered in village—Distress warrant for realization given to Assessment Officer—Whether can be endorsed to clerk—Property attached, not exclusive property of accused but joint family property—Liability to be attached—Assault—Ingredients of offence—Use of abusive language—Threatening with lathi in heat of temper—Assault, if committed—Sentence.

Where there is a case and counter-case, the Court is not in any way bound to adjourn the hearing of the case indefinitely, waiting for the results of the steps taken in the counter-case. When the accused has not in any way been prejudiced by the Magistrate's refusal to grant adjournment, he cannot complain that he was not given proper facilities to have his case argued before him.

Under s. 195, Penal Code, cognizance of an offence under s. 186, Penal Code, cannot be taken in the absence of a written complaint by the public officer concerned. Where the public officers concerned, the District Magistrate who issued the warrant, and the Assessment Officer to whom the warrant was addressed, have not filed a complaint and all that was done was that information was given by the person to whom the warrant was endorsed and this did not amount to a complaint under s. 195, there can be no conviction under s. 186.

Where a distress warrant for realisation of amount due by way of cost of additional Police quartered in a village is entrusted for execution to the Assessment Officer, there is no provision either in the Code or the rules framed by the Local Government under s. 386 of the Code of Criminal Procedure enabling him to endorse the warrant to his clerk.

Where the warrant is not for the realisation of fine imposed on any individual but for the realisation of cost of the additional Police quartered in a particular village which was apportioned on the inhabitants of that village, the entire family is the defaulter and the warrant for realization is issued against its head not in his individual capacity but in his capacity as head of the family which was assessed to that cost and the family property is liable to be seized. The cost may be realized as a fine but is not fine.

When an officer is entrusted with a warrant to attach the property of certain persons, his first duty is to ascertain by all means possible what property belonged to that person which is liable to be attached. Having satisfied himself that certain property belongs to that individual, it is his duty to attach that property unless some objection is raised which raises in his mind a reasonable doubt that the property does not belong to the person against whom the warrant has been issued. When no objection is raised, the Assessment Officer will be performing a legal duty when he proceeds to attach property.

Whether a particular act amounts or does not amount to an assault depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. A particular act may not amount to an assault in one case, but the same act taken along with the other surrounding circumstances may amount to an assault in another case. Where, therefore, the accused interposed between the attaching officer and the cattle which he was proceeding to attach and being removed under the orders of the officer, he indulged in the use of abusive language and thereafter went away threatening that he would return and teach them a lesson and soon afterwards he came back with a lathi with companions and came sufficiently close to the officers to raise in their minds a reasonable apprehension that actual force was likely to be used:

Held, that the act of the accused came within the definition of assault.

Held, also that as the accused's subsequent appearance on the scene was in the heat of the moment and soon realising the situation he ran away from the spot and no violence or force was used by him, a sentence of fine would meet he ends of justice.

Cr. R. from an order of the Sessions Judge of Monghyr, dated January 11, 1935, affirming that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Monghyr, dated July 11, 1934.

Messrs. Baldeo Sahay, B. N. Rai and Chaudhary Mathura Prasad, for the Petitioner.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Mohammad Noor, J.—The petitioner Ram Singh has been convicted by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Monghyr under ss. 353 and 186 of the Indian Penal Code. Under the former section he has been sentenced to suffer three months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 20, and under the latter to suffer three months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 50. The two sentences of imprisonment are to run concurrently. The conviction and the sentences have been upheld by the Sessions Judge of Monghyr.

The case is an outcome of an incident which took place at Barhee in the District of Monghyr in connection with the realisation of the costs of Additional Police quartered in that village. It seems that one Dhanukdhari Singh had defaulted in payment of the cost, and the District Magistrate issued a distress warrant for the realisation of the amount due, i. e. Rs. 49-5-0 and entrusted it for execution to the Assessment Officer of Monghyr, the Assessment Officer being Mr. Rizvi, a Deputy Magistrate. The warrant was returnable by December 16, 1933. Mr. Rizvi endorsed that warrant to his clerk Maulvi Kamrul Hussain for execution. Maulvi Kamrul Hussain was unsuccessful in realising the amount and reported the matter to Mr. Rizvi, saying that he could not find Dhanukdhari Singh at his home. Thereupon Mr. Rizvi made over the warrant for execution to his head clerk. No name is mentioned in the endorsement but it is admitted that the head clerk referred to is Yad Ali. Mr. Rizvi added to the endorsement that be would also go to execute the warrant if necessary. On January 15 Mr. Rizvi himself accompanied by, amongst others, Yad Ali, Mamsul Hussain, some Police constables and chaukidars, went to the house of Dhanukdhari Singh to execute the warrant. Demands were made from Karu Singh, son of Dhanukdhari Singh who said that he was unable to pay. What happened thereafter can best be given in the language of the learned Sessions Judge:—

"The chaukidar identified three cattle tethered in the sahan in front of the house of Dhanukdhari as his and Mr. Rizvi ordered these cattle to be attached and driven away. At that moment the appellant, whose house is shown on a Police map (Ex. 3) as being a short distance away, entered the sahan and interposed between Mr Rizvi and the cattle saying that Danukdhari was his uncle and that he would not allow the attachment to be made. Mr. Rizvi expostulated, but the appellant (Ram Singh) stood there in a defiant and menacing attitude and refused to move and then Mr. Rizvi ordered the constables to remove him and a constable and a peon caught hold of him and moved him away. The appellant then flew into a temper, abused the witnesses, went away saying, that he would return and teach them a lesson. Soon afterwards there was a hulla, and the appellant was seen returning with a lathi followed by some other persons. The appellant then approached within ten or twelve paces of the witnesses, and apprehending a breach of the peace, Mr. Rizvi called on the constables to remove him. The appellant and his companians then fled and disappeared, and meanwhile the cattle under attachment also disappeared."

I must point out at the outset that the learned Sessions Judge is not correct in saying in his judgment that when the petitioner Ram Singh returned later with a lathi in his hand, his companions were also armed In fact, there is clear evidence on the record that they were not armed. Yad Ali informed what had happened to the officer in charge of the outpost located at Barhee. Information to that effect was sent to the officer in charge of the Police Station at Lakhi Sarai, who took up the case and sent up the petitioner for trial.

There was a counter-case lodged on behalf of the petitioner against Mr. Rizvi in which there was an allegation of assault by that officer. The complaint was entertained by the Sub-Divisional Officer, but later on the proceedings were quashed on the ground that cognizance could not be taken of the complaint against Mr. Rizvi in the absence of sanction by the local Government under s. 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and that order was upheld by this Court.

Coming to the facts of this case, the learned Sessions Judge has found the facts stated above to have been sufficiently proved. Several questions of law, however, have been raised before us by Mr. Baldeo Sahay in support of his revision application. They are these :—

(1) That the conviction under s. 186 of the Indian Penal Code is bad on the ground that there was no written complaint before a Magistrate as required by s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

(2) That Yad Ali on whose information this case has been started was not performing any legal function when he is said to have been assaulted, inasmuch as the warrant of realisation of the dues could not legally be delegated to him by Mr. Rizvi.

(3) That the property sought to be attached was not the exclusive property of Dhanukdhari Singh but was a joint family property, and therefore, was not liable to be attached. Consequently neither Mr. Rizvi nor Yad Ali was performing a legal duty when they were engaged in attaching that property.

(4) That what the petitioner is alleged to have done, namely, interposing between Mr. Rizvi and the cattle, did not amount to resistance under s. 186 of the Indian Penal Code.

(5) That the facts alleged do not constitute assault and the offence does not come under s. 353 of the Indian Penal Code, as neither Mr. Rizvi nor Yad Ali whom the petitioner is said to have assaulted, was engaged in the performance of any legal duty on the grounds stated above.

(6) That the learned Magistrate did not give the petitioner proper facility to have his case argued before him.

So far as the last ground is concerned, it can be dismissed at once. It seems that when the petitioner wanted to have his cases transferred from the District of Monghyr, the learned Chief Justice had ordered that the two cases be tried simultaneously. It was in consequence of this order that after the case against the petitioner was closed, the learned Sub-Divisional Officer summoned Mr. Rizvi and postponed the hearing of the arguments in the present case. Thereafter the proceedings against Mr. Rizvi were quashed on the ground of want of jurisdiction. The petitioner was called upon to argue this case and his applications for postponement on June 28 and July 3, were rejected. On the first day postponement was sought on the ground that the petitioner wanted to move the Sessions Judge against the order quashing the proceedings and on the second day on the ground that though the Sessions Judge was moved, no order for stay in the present case could be obtained from him. I do not think the learned Sub-Divisional Officer was in any way bound to adjourn the hearing of this case indefinitely waiting for the result of the steps taken by the petitioner in the counter-case. He had come to the conclusion that the counter-case could not proceed for want of jurisdiction, and so far as he was concerned, that case had come to an end. Be that as it may, the petitioner was not in any way prejudiced on account of the refusal of the learned Magistrate to grant postponement. In fact as the learned Government Advocate has pointed out, the petitioner had the fullest opportunity of arguing on facts before the learned Sessions Judge.

Coming to the objections which are directed against the conviction under s. 186 of the Indian Penal Code, the learned Government Advocate has, in my opinion, rightly conceded that the conviction under that section cannot stand, Section 195 of the Indian Penal Code clearly lays down that cognizance of an offence under s. 186 Indian Penal Code, cannot be taken in the absence of a written complaint by the public officer concerned. The public officers concerned in this case were the District Magistrate who issued the warrant, Mr. Rizvi to whom the warrant was addressed and Yad Ali, assuming that Mr. Rizvi would endorse the warrant to him. There is no complaint either on behalf of the District Magistrate or Mr. Rizvi. No doubt there was an information given by Yad Ali to the officer in charge of the outpost at Barhee, but it does not amount to a complaint within the meaning of s. 195. It is, therefore, not necessary to consider whether the act attributed to the petitioner amounts to an offence under s. 186 of the Indian Penal Code. In my opinion the conviction under s. 186 of the Indian Penal Code is bad and must be set aside.

Coming now to the conviction under s. 353, Indian Penal Code, the first question raised by Mr. Baldeo Sahay is that the warrant addressed to Mr. Rizvi could not be entrusted for execution to Yad Ali. There seems to me to be some force in this contention. It is at any rate doubtful whether Mr. Rizvi could make over to his head clerk the warrant addressed to him. There is no provision for such delegation either in the Code or the rules framed by the Local Government under s. 386 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The question is, however, of academic interest in this case. Mr. Rizvi was himself present on the spot and the attachment to which the petitioner is said to have offered resistance was being carried out by him. Yad Ali and the other public servants who were there, were assisting him in the execution of that warrant. If under the law the execution of the warrant could be delegated to Yad Ali, Yad Ali was there to execute the warrant. If, on the other hand, it could not be done, Mr. Rizvi, was there and was executing the warrant. The warrant was being legally executed either by Mr. Rizvi or by Yad Ali, or by both. In fact, both of them were present there and were taking part in executing it. I confess I have not been able to appreciate the contention of Mr. Baldeo Sahay in this connection. He argued that Yad Ali could not execute the warrant as it could not legally be entrusted to him, and Mr. Rizvi himself could no longer execute it as, though not legally empowered to do so, he had in fact made it over to Yad Ali. The argument is self-destructive.

The next point urged is that the property sought to be attached was joint family property, and not the exclusive property of Dhanukdhari Singh and, therefore, its attachment was illegal. A reference is made to a Full Bench decision of this Court in Rajendra Prasad Missir v. Emperor (1). In my opinion the facts of that case have absolutely no application to the present case. In that case the question was whether the joint family property could be attached in execution of a warrant for the realisation of fine imposed on a member of the family. It is obvious that under s. 386 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the rules made thereunder only the property of the offender can be seized, and not of any other person. In this case the warrant was not for the realisation of fine imposed on any individual but for the realisation of cost of the Additional Police quartered in a particular village which was apportioned on the inhabitants of that village. The law regarding realisation of cost is laid down in ss. 15 and 16 of the Indian Police Act of 1861. Section 15, after authorising the Local Government to quarter Additional Police in a particular area, provides in sub-cl. (4) as follows:—

"The Magistrate of the District, after such enquiry as he may deem necessary, shall apportion such cost among the inhabitants who, are as aforesaid, liable to bear the same and who shall not have been exempted under the next succeeding sub-section. Such apportionment shall be made according to the Magistrate's judgment of the respective means within such area of such inhabitants"

Section 16 provides the mode of realisation of cost and says:—

"All moneys payable under ss. 13, 14, 15, and 15-A shall be recoverable by the Magistrate of the District in the manner provided by ss. 386 and 387

of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, for the recovery of fines, or by suit in any competent Court."

The money may, therefore, be realized as a fine, but it is not fine.

Under s. 15 the cost has to be apportioned on the inhabitants of the area concerned, except on those who may be specifically exempted by the Local Government. In this case it is in evidence of Karu Singh, son of Dhanukdhari Singh, himself that the cost was assessed on his family. He says "our family was assessed to tax." It is clear, therefore, that the tax by which he means the cost of the Additional Police was assessed not on Dhanukdhari Singh individually but on the entire family. Therefore, the entire family was the defaulter: and the warrant for realization was issued against Dhanukdhari Singh not in his individual capacity but in his capacity as head of the family which was assessed to that cost and the family property was liable to be seized. Apart from this, so far as the facts of the present case are concerned, the question whether or not the joint family property can be attached is again of no importance. In this case it is in evidence that when Mr. Rizvi and his companions demanded money from Karu Singh, son of Dhanudhari Singh, and he did not pay the amount the chaukidar pointed out the cattle as the property of Dhanukdhari Singh. There is nothing on the record to show that at any time any objection was raised, or any claim was made, that the cattle were not the property of Dhanukdhari Singh. When an officer is entrusted with a warrant to attach the property of certain persons, his first duty is to ascertain by all means possible what property belongs to that person which is liable to be attached. Having satisfied himself that certain property belongs to that individual, it is his duty to attach that property unless some objection is raised which raises in his mind a reasonable doubt that the property does not belong to the person against whom the warrant has been issued. No objection was raised in this case. The chaukidar had pointed out the cattle as the property of Dhanukdhari Singh, and therefore Mr. Rizvi was performing a legal duty when he was proceeding to attach those cattle.

The next question to be considered is whether the re-appearance of the petitioner on the scene with a lathi in his hand and coming up to a distance of about 12 paces where the officers were, amounted to an offence of assault. As has been urged by the learned Government Advocate, whether a particular act amounts or does not amount to an assault depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. A particular act may not amount to an assault in one case, but the same act taken along with the other surrounding circumstances may amount to an assault in another case. In this case we have it that when the petitioner interposed between Mr. Rizvi and the cattle he was removed under the orders of Mr. Rizvi, and he then indulged in the use of abusive language and thereafter went away threatening that he would return and teach them a lesson. Soon afterwards he did come back armed with a lathi. He had his companions also, though as I have said, they were not armed. He came sufficiently close to the officers to raise in their minds a reasonable apprehension that actual force was likely to be used. In the circumstances I think the petitioner's act comes within the definition of assault.

Now comes the question of sentence. In my opinion a sentence of imprisonment is not called for in this case. It seems that when the petitioner was removed by the constables, perhaps he lost his temper and his subsequent re-appearance on the scene was in the heat of the moment. He soon realised the situation and ran away from the spot. No violence or force was used by him. Under the circumstances, I think a sentence of fine will meet the ends of justice. While maintaining the conviction under s. 353 of the Indian Penal Code, I would set aside the sentence of imprisonment and sentence him to pay a fine of Rs 50 including the fine imposed upon him by the Magistrate under this section; in default of payment of the fine, he will suffer rigorous imprisonment for fifteen days. The conviction and the sentence under s. 18 of the Indian Penal Code are set aside.

James, J.—I agree.

Agarwala, J.—I agree.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal from the Oudh Chief Court

February 28, 1935

LORD TOMLIN, LORD THANKERTON, LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON AND SIR SHADI LAL

H. HUNTER, LIQUIDATOR, BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LIMITED AND OTHERS— APPELLANTS

Rani KANIZ ABID AND OTHERS— RESPONDENTS

Insolvency—Trust Deed executed by insolvent—Receiver in insolvency—Whether can deal with property comprised in trust—Property, if subject to be administered by Receiver on behalf of general body of creditors—Assets, if can be administered by Receiver in terms of trust deed—Money in Receiver's hands consisting of rents of property mortgaged to Bank—Claim by Liquidator of Bank—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 47, 48—Applicability—Receiver's right to deal with the money.

Where property of the insolvent is comprised in a trust deed, it is not the insolvent's property but is vested in the trustees, it is not competent for the Receiver in insolvency to deal with the property in any way. After the execution of the trust deed the insolvent has no interest in the properties comprised therein and consequently, they never vest in the Receiver in insolvency and are not subject to be administered by him on behalf of the general body of creditors. Nor has the Receiver in insolvency any right to administer the assets in accordance with terms of the trust. [p. 428, cols 1 & 2; p. 429, col. 2.]

Where the money which remains in the Receiver's hands, consists entirely of the rents and profits of the property which was the subject-matter of mortgages in favour of a Bank which has subsequently gone into liquidation, the provisions of ss. 47 and 48 of the Provincial Insolvency Act are not in any way material to the claim of the Liquidator of the Bank and the Receiver in the insolvency has no right to deal with the said money. [p. 429, col. 2]

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C., Amiend Jackson and S. Hyam, for the Appellant.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., Pringle and Wallach, for the Respondent.

Sir Lancelot Sanderson.—These are six consolidated appeals from decrees of the Chief Court of Oudh. Mr. H. Hunter, is the Liquidator of the Bank of Upper India, Limited, Lucknow, which is in liquidation, and for the sake of brevity he is hereinafter referred to as "the liquidator." The Bank appeals against a judgment and decree of the Chief Court dated December 22, 1930.

Rani Kaniz Abid is the beneficial owner of certain decrees obtained in respect of promissory notes executed by Chaudhri Shafiz uz-zaman, hereinafter called "the insolvent," and she appeals against a decree of the Chief Court dated October 15, 1929.

Chaudhri Sharf-uz-zaman, is the son of the insolvent, and K. B. Sheikh Matin-uz-zaman, Mohammad Wasim, Chaudhri Hyder Husain, Chaudri Ehsan Husain are the trustees of a deed of trust executed by the insolvent and dated January 30, 1912. They are hereinafter referred to as "the trustees." The above-mentioned Chaudhri Sharf-uz-zaman and the trustees appeal against a decree of the Chief Court, dated August 4, 1930, and the said decree of December 22, 1930, as well as the said decree of October 15, 1929.

Pande Piare Lal is a creditor of the insolvent upon certain bonds in respect of which he obtained decrees. He supports Rani Kaniz Abid in her appeal against the said decree of the Chief Court, dated October 15, 1929.

The insolvent is the Talukdar of Bhilwal in the Bara Banki District; he succeeded to the taluqa on September 19, 1907.

Apparently by the end of 1911 he had incurred considerable debts and on January 30, 1912, he executed the above-mentioned deed of trust and appointed certain persons as trustees of the whole of his estates. Only three of the named trustees took the trust. By the terms of the deed all the insolvent's estates as specified in Sch. A of the deed were conveyed to the trustees to be held in trust for the use and benefit of the insolvent's son Sharf-uz-zaman for the objects and on the conditions thereinafter specified.

Clauses 15, 16 and 21 are material, and are as follows: –

TRANSFER OF ESTATE.

15. That the said trustees shall from the date of this indenture enter upon and take possession of all the estates and properties mentioned in Sch. (A) aforesaid and at once apply for and obtain mutation in their names in place of mine in all the Revenue Records and shall out of the rents and profits of the said estates and properties after deducting therefrom the cost of management, the Government Revenue and after public charges payable in respect thereof and the expenses of litigation, if any, incurred in instituting or defending suits in respect of the property aforesaid or in contesting liability for any debt and the necessary repairs of houses, maintenance of private roads and the improvements in respect of the aforesaid properties such as sinking of wells, constructing of aqueducts and other improvements which the trustees may in their discretion consider necessary for the improvement and preservation and enhancement of rent of any land or lands in the aforesaid estates and properties, apply the balance to the payment of monthly allowance of—

I. Rs 400 to me for my personal use and expenses which shall be payable to me during the natural term of my life.

II. Rs. 200 to my aforesaid wife, Musammat Razi-un-nisa, during the term of her natural life for her personal use and expenses.

III. Rs. 100, for the education and bringing up of my aforesaid son Sharf-uz-zaman during the continuance of the trust. But the Trustees shall be at liberty to spend more money on the educational advancement of my aforesaid son either in India or abroad.

IV. Rs. 80 to my sister Musammat Zarif-un-nisa during the term of her natural life.

V. Rs. 50 to Chaudhri Ehsan Husain, the son of my eldest sister deceased, during the term of his natural life.

VI. Rs 50 to Ali Haider and Ishtiaq Ahmad, the sons of my sister Musammat Manzur-un-nisa deceased, for the terms of their natural lives jointly or the survivor of them, and other petty allowances which the estate may be liable to pay; and the balance to be applied towards the liquidation of my debts and liabilities chargeable upon the estate as specified in Sch. (B) and others not so charged as specified in Sch (C) aforesaid in the manner and the order the trustees may consider proper and beneficial to the estate.

AUTHORITY TO TRANSFER.

16. That the annual profits available for the payment of the aforesaid debts and liabilities being insufficient, the trustees are hereby empowered and given full authority to transfer the whole or part of any of the aforesaid estates and properties by sale, mortgage, Zar-i-peshgi lease or other beneficial lease of the properties but in the exercise of their discretion in matter of sale of the aforesaid properties, ragard may be had that Sikandarpore and Sharifabad estates may be sold first and in case it be necessary to sell other properties for the purpose aforesaid, the fractional shares and pattis of the Khanpur and Bhilwal estates may be next sold and in case the sale of the aforesaid properties be not sufficient and the trustees deem a further sale necessary for the payment of debts, the Khanpur estate may then be sold and even if this be not sufficient, then the remaining villages of Hasanpur Estate may be sold. But in no case the villages of Bhilwal and Subeha with their hamlets and appurtenances shall be sold.

NATURE OF EXPENSES AND INVESTMENTS.

21. That after payment and discharge of all debts and liabilities, the trustees shall, if there are surplus profits, increase my monthly allowance from 4 to 6 hundred and that of my aforesaid wife from 2 to 3 hundred and the surplus, if any, after meeting the aforesaid expenses shall be accumulated to accrue for the benefit of my aforesaid son, his heir and assign and it shall be lawful for the trustees to invest such surplus in Government Promissory Notes, Railway shares, debentures, village properties, house properties at Lucknow or any other advantageous investments as the trustees may think fit."

Previously to the execution of the said deed the insolvent had executed four mortgages in favour of the said Bank, which was shown as a secured creditor in Sch. B of the said trust deed in respect of the said mortgages. This schedule was described as "approximate debts to the extent chargeable upon the estates and properties mentioned in Sch. A."

The debt in respect of which Pande Piare Lal claims to be a creditor of the insolvent was not included in the schedules of the trust deed.

The name of Rani Kaniz Abid does not appear in either of the schedules, but it was alleged that she had an interest in the debts standing in the names of Raja Bhagwan Bakhsh and Debi Lal Moolchand which appear in Sch. C of the trust deed.

Their Lordships are not in a position to express and do not express any opinion upon this last-mentioned allegation.

A few months after the execution of the trust deed the insolvent succeeded in preventing the trustees from managing the estate, with the result that in proceedings instituted by the trustees under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Magistrate took possession of the properties under s. 146 of the said Code.

The trustees then applied to the Court of the District Judge for their discharge and on August 12, 1912, the District Judge discharged the trustees, refused to appoint new trustees and held that the trust had become extinguished. The result was that the insolvent resumed management of the estate.

In 1913, the aforesaid Bank went into liquidation and at a later date, viz., in 1917, Mr. Hunter was appointed Liquidator. Shafiz-uz-zaman was adjudicated an insolvent on January 27, 1914, the Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki was appointed Receiver in the insolvency and he took possession of the properties covered by the deed of trust and other properties belonging to the insolvent.

The trustees of the deed, while in possession of the estate, had executed a further mortgage on the above-mentioned properties in favour of the Bank to secure advances needed for the management of the estate; so that at the time of the adjudication of the insolvent, there were five mortgages held by the Bank secured upon the estate of the insolvent.

On July 22, 1918, Sharf-uz-zaman, the son of the insolvent, instituted a suit in the Court of the Additional District Judge against the Receiver in the insolvency, the insolvent, the liquidator and certain other parties praying for a declaration that the properties which were the subject-matter of the suit, were comprised in the trust deed and that the deed was binding on the defendants. The District Judge dismissed the suit, but on appeal, the Judicial Commissioner's Court held that the trust was a valid trust. The Receiver in the insolvency then applied in the Insolvency Court for an order to annul the deed of trust under s. 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The result of the proceedings thus initiated was that on April 14, 1924 the Court of the Judicial Commissioner on appeal held that the deed of trust was made in good faith and for valuable consideration and was not voidable as against the Receiver. That decision has been accepted by all the parties appearing before their Lordships as a final decision binding upon them, and this appeal, therefore, has to be decided upon the assumption that a valid trust was created by the deed of January 30, 1912, in respect of the properties specified therein.

On the August 8, 1924, the insolvent appointed the trustees who are parties to these appeals as trustees of the deed and the properties specified in the deed thereupon vested in the trustees.

In 1921, the Liquidator, on behalf of the Bank, had instituted a suit on the abovementioned five mortgages against the insolvent, the Receiver in the insolvency and others. He obtained the usual preliminary mortgage decree on the May 31, 1923; the decree absolute was made on the March 11, 1924, and the total decretal amount was Rs. 16,59,929-13-6.

In August, 1924, the new trustees applied to the District Judge's Court for delivery of the insolvent's property comprised in the said trust deed to them after removing it from the control of the Receiver in insolvency. This application failed: the Judge apparently regarded the Court of Insolvency as a "de facto trustee" and decided that there was no necessity for "a Civil Court dealing with a trust to remove that trustee and make over possession of the trust property to other trustees." The trustees appealed, but the Chief Court on the August 3, 1926, dismissed the appeal, and expressed the opinion that there was no necessity to award the trustees relief because the Receiver had stated frankly and clearly that in distributing the assets of the estate he would take into full account anything which might be due under the trust after the liabilities of the trust had been satisfied.

The learned Judges thought that the District Judge was well justified in exercising his discretion to refuse to accede to the prayer of the trustees.

The learned Judges seem to have lost sight of the fact that the property comprised in the trust deed was not the insolvent's property, but was vested in the trustees, and that consequently, it was not competent for the Receiver in insolvency to deal with the said property in any way.

At the instance of the Liquidator the consent of the Government to the sale of the Taluqa was obtained, and in September, 1926, the properties comprised in the mortgages were sold at auction in pursuance of the mortgage decree, for Rs. 13,49,216-15-6.

Taking into account a sum for poundage, the balance due to the Bank after the sale under the decree was Rs. 3,24,227-14-0.

On the August 1, 1927, the Liquidator applied to the Judge of the Small Cause Court, sitting on the Insolvency Side under section 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (Act V of 1920), for permission to prove in the insolvency for the said balance, together with future interest at 6 per cent. per annum up to the date of settlement. From that time there were numerous proceedings initiated by one party or the other, and numerous orders made in respect thereof; their Lordships are of opinion that it is not necessary to refer to them in detail.

They were due to the fact that none of the parties seem to have appreciated the position which was created as soon as it was finally decided that the trust deed of the January 30, 1912, was a valid deed and that the property comprised therein was not part of the insolvent's estate, but belonged to the trustees.

These proceedings culminated in a judgment and decree of the District Judge, dated the January 29, 1929, whereby he allowed an appeal from the Judge of the Small Cause Court, sitting in his insolvency jurisdiction, which had rejected the Liquirdator's application for permission to prove for the said balance.

The District Judge held that the Liquidator, under section 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, was entitled to share in the money in the hands of the Receiver and he directed that the Liquidator's claim for Rs. 3,24,227-14-0 be allowed to rank rateably with the claims of other creditors in the distribution of the assets in the hands of the Receiver.

Rani Kaniz Abid appealed against the above-mentioned decree to the Chief Court which, on the October 15, 1929, dismissed the appeal.

This is the decree against which the said Rani and the insolvent's son and the trustees have appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The next judgment to which it is necessary to refer is dated the August 4, 1930. There were no less than four appeals before the Chief Court for consideration and in the judgment it was stated that "the point now for decision is whether other creditors whose names are not included in the trust deed executed by Chaudhri Shafiz-uz-zaman on the January 30, 1912, are entitled "to share in the distribution of assets included in the trust deed."

The Chief Court decided that all creditors who had a claim against the estate prior to the execution of the deed of the January 30, 1912, had a right to share in the assets and they remanded the case to the Insolvency Court in order that the Court should prepare for the use of the Chief Court under section 61 of the Provincial Insolvency Act a complete list of all debts incurred by the insolvent prior to the date of the execution of the said deed whether they were due to persons named in the deed of trust or persons who were not so named.

This is the judgment of the August 4, 1930, against which the son of the insolvent and the trustees have appealed to His Majesty in Council.

On the December 22, 1930, the matter came again before the Chief Court.

The said Court had then received the list of the debts incurred by the insolvent, in accordance with the Court's direction of the August 4, 1930, and certain objections which had been made to some of the items in the list.

The material part of the judgment is that which dealt with the objection which had been raised to the sum which the Insolvency Court had declared to be due to the Bank for dividend.

Strange to say, this objection was taken by the trustees who, according to the judgment of the Chief Court, had the support of all the other creditors.

It, therefore, appears that the trustees, instead of supporting the interests of the Bank, their cestui que trust were opposing its claim. It may be mentioned incidentally that even during the argument before the Board, the learned Counsel for the trustees was inclined to resist the appeal of the Bank until his attention was drawn to what might be the result if his client persisted in taking up such an attitude.

The Chief Court came to the conclusion that s. 48 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act applied to the claim of the Bank and accordingly they deleted from the list the amount stated therein to be due to the Bank.

The effect of the order of the Chief Court was a dismissal of the appeal, inasmuch as it appeared to the Chief Court that the above-mentioned decision was in accord with the view taken by the District Judge.

This is the judgment and decree against which the Bank by the Liquidator, the insolvent's son and the trustees have appealed to His Majesty in Council.

It was agreed during the argument before the Board that the money which remains in the Receiver's hands, consists entirely of the rents and profits of the property which was the subject-matter of the above-mentioned mortgages, and that being so, their Lordships fail to understand how the provisions of ss. 47 and 48 of the Provincial Insolvency Act are in any way material to the claim of the Liquidator, or how the Receiver in the insolvency had any right to deal with the said money. It is true that it was not until April, 1924, that it was finally decided that the deed of trust dated January 30, 1912, was a valid deed, and that when the adjudication of the insolvent was made in January, 1914, the Receiver took possession of all the property which he considered to belong to the insolvent, which included the property covered by the mortgages, but the greater part of this unfortunate litigation, which has lasted for so many years, is due to the failure to recognise the true position when once it had been established that the deed of January 30, 1912, was a valid and effective deed of trust. By that deed, the insolvent's interest in the mortgaged properties became vested in the trustees to be held and administered by them on the trusts mentioned in the deed, which trusts included the payment of certain specified creditors, one of whom was the Bank.

After the execution of the said trust deed the insolvent had no interest in the properties covered by the mortgages and consequently the said properties never vested in the Receiver in insolvency and were not subject to be administered by him on behalf of the general body of creditors. Nor had the Receiver in insolvency any right to administer the asset in accordance with the terms of the trust, as seems to have been the view at one period of this litigation; such a proposition is altogether untenable.

It is, therefore, obvious that the three decrees against which the appeals are directed must be set aside, and this will involve the setting aside of other decrees and orders to which their Lordships will presently refer.

It remains to be considered what is the proper course to adopt in order that the rights of the parties may be duly determined and that this litigation should be brought to a conclusion. With this end in view, their Lordships are of opinion that the declaration and order hereinafter set out should be made.

In view of the fact that the judgment deals only with the rights of the parties before the Board they desire to make it clear that the declaration is not intended in any way to prejudice the rights of the persons specified in clause fifteen of the trust deed as being entitled to monthly allowances.

Their Lordships are not aware what is the position with regard to this matter, and express no opinion in respect thereof, but they make the above-mentioned reference to it in case it may be necessary for the Court which administers the trust, to deal with this matter.

Their Lordships are of opinion—

I. That a declaration should be made that having regard to the validity of the trust deed of January 30, 1912, and in the events which have happened, the rents and profits received by the Receiver from the trust properties since the date of the adjudication of insolvency (A) are held by him as trustee for the trustees of the said deed and accordingly are subject to the provisions of the trust deed and in particular to the provisions of clause fifteen thereof, and (B) do not form part of the estate of the insolvent and accordingly do not fall to be administered under the Provincial Insolvency Act.

II. That the orders and decrees set forth in the schedule attached to this judgment should be set aside, except in so far as they deal with costs.

III. That upon the Liquidator undertaking forthwith to institute a suit for the administration of the trust in the appropriate Court in India having jurisdiction in that behalf and to apply to the Insolvency Court for a transfer to the Court of administration of the funds in the hands of the Receiver and for the necessary accounts if any, no further order on these appeals should be made and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

WORT, MOHAMMAD NOOR AND AGRAWALA, JJ.

In the matter of Babu SURJA NARAIN, A MUKHTEAR

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), ss. 14, 12, 13—Legal practitioner becoming surety for accused persons—Propriety of—Court refusing to accept a person as surety—Mukhtear standing surety and entering into contract of indemnity with that person—Forfeiture of bail bond—Attempt at concealment of true facts—Conduct of mukhtear, if unprofessional—Suspension from practice—Propriety—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 513—Bail—Surety bond, nature and effect of.

There is nothing against a legal practitioner becoming a surety for accused persons. But where a mukhtear enters into an agreement, with a person whose security the Court has refused to accept, to the effect that the amount deposited by that person with the mukhtear would indemnify the latter if he suffered any loss on account of the bail bond being forfeited, and the bail bond is forfeited and the mukhtear tries to conceal the above facts from the Court, the contract of indemnity is a public mischief, is highly unprofessional and is unquestionably illegal, being against public policy as it hampers the administration of justice. The further attempt at concealment of the agreement at the early stages of the proceedings is a serious aggravation of the crime. [In such circumstances the mukhtear was ordered to be suspended for three months.] Herman v. Jeuchner (1), Consolidated Exploration & Finance Co. v. Musgrave (2), Rex v. Porter (3), Rex v. Brailsford (4) and Laxman Lal Kanak Kirt Pandit v. Mulshankar Pitambardas Vyas (5), discussed

C. Ref. made by the Sessions Judge of Bhagalpur in his Report No. 1994 VII-9, dated June 28, 1934.

Messrs. Yunus and Hareshwar Prasad Sinha, against the Reference.

The Government Advocate, for the Ref-rence.

Wort, J.—This matter comes before this Court under s. 14 of the Legal Practitioners' Act, and is reported to the Court by the Sessions Judge of Bhagalpur.

Four accused persons were brought before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under arrest. Ultimately on December 22, 1933, they were released on bail, Babu Surja Narain becoming surety for their appearance. It would appear that one Ramzan Khan had offered himself as surety to the District Magistrate but this had been rejected. In these circumstances the Mukhtear in question came forward and was accepted by the District Magistrate. It ultimately appeared that unknown to the District Magistrate an agreement had been entered into by Ramzan Khan with the Mukhtear that Ramzan Khan should idemnify the latter. Bail had been fixed in the sum of Rs. 200 in respect of each person and the agreement was that Ramzan Khan should deposit with the Mukhtear the sum of Rs. 800 but in the result Rs. 730 only was deposited.

The charge made against the Mukhtear was that he was guilty of professional misconduct in accepting the indemnity; and further in showing cause against the escheat of the bail as the accused persons did not appear, that he suppressed the fact that he had been so indemnified and that loss would fall upon him.

The facts are not seriously disputed. A number of arguments have been advanced by Mr. Yunus who appears on behalf of the Mukhtear which, in my judgment are not relevant to the question. It has been ugred that the date upon which the accused persons should appear was not January 6, as alleged; but this, as I have indicated, has no relevance to the matter in question which is quite apart from whether the accused persons appeared or not.

The charge is that this agreement of indemnity was entered into between Ramzan Khan and the Mukhtear. The facts apart from those which I have stated are as follows. On January 22, 1934, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate before whom the accused had been brought in custody, made this order:

"The accused are absent. The bailor says that they were discharged on January 13, 1934 The bailor files a petition showing cause as to why the accused were absent on January 6, 1934. Put up before S. D. O. for orders on February 7, 1934."

On that date, i. e., February 7, 1934, Surja Narain was again heard, and the order of the Magistrate on that date was that the bill should be escheated. On Ferburary 22, 1934, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate made a note in his order-sheet that the penalty had not been paid, but there appears to have been a statement before him that in the meantime there had been an appeal to the District Magistrate. The appeal came before Mr. Mansfield, the District Magistrate, for the first time on February 19, 1934. For reasons which do not clearly appear from the order-sheet, an enquiry had been ordered, the result of which came before the District Magistrate on March 10, 1934. The Magistrate on that date made this order:—

"Report of the Post-master seen The enquiry is adjourned to March 12, 1934."

It then appears that on March 12, the District Magistrate was satsified that this sum of Rs. 730 had gone into the Post Office Savings Bank Account of Surja Narain. On March 19, 1934, there was a petition before the District Magistrate, which is not before us but which has been referred to by Mr. Yunus appearing on behalf of Surja Narain. On this date a statement appears to have been made by Surja Narain which is, in my judgment, of very considerable importance having regard to the argument addressed to this Court in his behalf. It appears that before Mr. Mansfield he made the statement that he was a poor man without means. The words contained in the District Magistrate's order-sheet are these:

"If the appellant denies the allegation he should explain whence he got this sum, and why he informed me that he was a poor man without means".

I should correct what I have just said as it would appear from what I have read that this statement as regards poverty of Surja Narain was made on the occasion when the matter first came before, the District Magistrate in appeal from the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate escheating the bail. By this date it was established to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate that Surja Narain had received this sum of Rs. 730, and this fact is not disputed. It is this fact of being indemnified which is characterized as a professional misconduct. A suggestion has been made that the Mukhtear in entering into this agreement with Ramzan Khan was merely assuring himself that the accused persons would appear on the date named by the Magistrate: in other words, he had no control over the accused himself and by the methods which he adopted he was able to give the undertaking by means of the assistance of a person who had more control over the accused than himself. But it seems to have been forgotten that this is some sense made the offence all the more grave. The fact is that Ramzan Khan had already been rejected as a surety by the District Magistrate and this agreement of indemnity resulted in the Magistrate accepting in ignorance the surety which he had already rejected.

Now it is said by Mr. Yunus that there was no moral offence, nor was it contrary to the practice that this Mukhtear should stand surety for accused persons. There is nothing against a legal practitioner becoming a surety for accused persons. But again one has to come back to the point of the charge. He is not charged with acting as surety, but charged with the offence, if I may call it such, of entering into a contract of indeminty.

This matter has been dealt with in a large number of cases in England and I can state in advance that the law as laid down, there has been accepted as being the law of India. One of the earlier cases, by no means the earliest, was the case of Herman v. Jeuchner (1), where it was held that:

"A contract is illegal, whereby a defendant in a criminal case, who has been ordered to find bail for his good behaviour during a specified period, deposited money with his surety upon the terms that the money is to be retained by the surety during the specified period for his own protection against the defendant's default, and at the expiration of that period is to be returned".

During the course of the judgment of the Court of Appeal in that case Brett, M. R. made this statement putting the matter in the form of a question:

"That is the subtance of the contract; is it illegal? To my mind it is illegal, because it takes away the protection which the law affords for securing the good behaviour of the plaintiff. When a man is ordered to find bail, and a surety becomes responsible for him, the surety is bound at his peril to see that his principal obeys the order of the Court".

That was a case of surety for good behaviour: and it has been sought in the course of the argument to differentiate that Icae from the case which we have before suswhich was surety for the appearance of the accused persons. The case to which have just made reference, it will be noticed, was a contract for indemnity between the accused person and another. But the question of an indemnity between two persons other than the accused was specifically decided in the case of Consolidated Exploration and Finance Co. v. Musgrave (2). There North, J., stated in question the authorities:

"An agreement by an accused person with his bail to indemnify him against liability on his recognizance is illegal as depriving the public of the security of the bail."

And later, in referring to the bail:—

"When Musgrave became bail he had cast upon him duties and given to him corresponding powers to enforce them, which powers no third person who became respondsible could have".

And later:—

"It is essential for the security of the bail that the principal should be compelled to appear at the time and place specified in the recognizance".

Then the matter came before the Court of Criminal Appeal in England which Court decided that such an agreement as that to which reference is now being made was common law conspiracy [Vide Rex v. Porter (3)], and Lord Alverstone, Lord Chief Justice of England, in the course of the judgment of the Court stated this—

"This question was very fully discussed in Rex v. Brailsford (4), and I there pointed out that it cannot of course, be maintained that every fraud and cheat constitutes an offence against the Criminal law, but the distinction between acts which are merely improper or immoral and these which tend to produce a public mischief has long been recognised"

Later –

"It is the interest of the public that criminals should be brought to justice and, therefore, that it should be made as difficult as possible for a criminal to abscond; and for many years it has been held that not only are bail responsible on their recognizance for due appearance of the person charged, but that, if it comes to their knowledge that he is about to abscond, they should at once inform the Police of the fact".

I do not refer to the case of Rex v. Porter (3), as an authority in this country on the question of conspiracy. That question it is unnecessary to decide, and I do not decide it but I refer to it, more particularly for the statement of Lord Alverstone that such an agreement constitutes a public mischief and public mischief in the sense that it is against public policy as it would tend towards obstructing the administration of justice by the Criminal Courts. This matter has been discussed in the Indian Courts more particularly in the case of Laxmanlal Kanak Kirt Pandit v. Mulshankar Pitambardas Vyas (5), where some of the cases to which I have made reference have also been relied upon and the passage of Bachelor, J., which I wish to adopt, is as follows after quoting the various authorities:—

"This definite principle of public policy has been admitted in England and depend upon considerations affecting the administration of public justice, which have certainly not less force in India than they have in England".

I have no doubt in my mind that an agreement of this kind can properly be described as a public mischief as being against public policy.

In the circumstances the only question that we have to determine in this case is whether the report which has been made to us has been established. The facts are not seriously disputed. It was said during the course of the argument that the Mukhtear apologised at the first possible moment and it is in regard to that matter that I made reference to the order of the District Magistrate dated March 19, 1934, in which reference was made to a statement made on a previous occasion to the District Magistrate. Now, not until the report had been made by these persons making the enquiry on behalf of the District Magistrate, and which report established the fact that the Rs. 730 had been received by the Mukhtear was an apology or anything in the nature of an apology made to the District Magistrate. Indeed not only was the suggestion that an apology was made not established, but the statement about which I have no doubt, which Mr. Mansfiled states was made by Surja Narain, indicates an attitude by him entirely opposed to the attitude of apology. This was, as I have already stated and repeat, that he was a poor man without means. Now in a sense that statement was a fraud on the Court. The fact of his being a poor man was not in issue: but it did result in the Magistrate's understanding that he (the Mukhtear) was to bear the loss which would result in the bail being escheated. In this connection Mr. Yunus seeks to justify the attitude of his client on the ground that in any event he was responsible for something like Rs. 70. Now, can the question of responsibility of Mr. Yunus's client for a sum of Rs. 70 out of a total sum of Rs. 800 make any substantial difference to the matter? That question seems to me to be best answered by asking another question, and that is, could the Magistrate have accepted as surety in the sum of Rs. 70 for these four accused persons? The whole matter was a fraud on the Court: and the statement that the Mukhtear was a poor man was, in my judgment, a clear indication by the Mukhtear to the Court that he was to bear the loss by this escheat. Now that attitude has a bearing upon the decision which this Court will come to in the circumstances of the case.

There is no doubt, and it is not disputed that this agreement was entered into and I do not think it can be disputed that up to the very last Surja Narain attempted to justify his conduct and that has been, as far as one can see, the instructions which he has given to Mr. Yunus in appearing before us to-day. Had Surja Narain, when the matter came before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in the first instance, clearly stated what were the facts, I have no doubt the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in that event would have called his attention to what he considered professional misconduct and if then Surja Narain had stated that he was unaware of the gravity of his offence or that he was unaware that he was committing an offence, his explanation might have been accepted. Had there been no attempt to justify, the course this Court would adopt, would be different. There is very little more to say about the matter. The Sessions Judge recommends in his letter of Reference that the Mukhtear be severely reprimanded if it is not thought necessary to impose a severer penalty. In coming to a decision on this point not only the facts of the case but the position of the defendant must be considered. The defendant is a member of a legal profession whose duty it is to assist in the administration of justice, and to whom the Courts, look and ought to be in the position to expect to act in an honourable way and in such a way as to assist in every possible way in administering justice.

Taking all the circumstances into consideration, therefore, the conclusion that we arrive at is that in this case the order of the Court should be that the Mukhtear should be suspended for three months from this date.

Muhammad Noor, J.—I agree.

The facts are very simple. Four accused persons were ordered to be relased on a bail of Rs. 200 each by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Supaul. One Ramzan Khan offered to stand surety for them, but the learned Sub-Divisional Officer refused to accept him in spite of the fact that Ramzan Khan was willing to deposit the amount of surety in Court. Later on the Mukhtear concerned in this proceeding, stood surety for the four accused persons. The accused did not turn up on the date fixed, namely, January 6, 1934, and the learned Magistrate ordered the amount of the bond to be forfeited.

The Mukhtear appealed to the District Magistrate. In the course of the hearing of the appeal it transpired that before standing surety for the four accused persons, the Mukhtear had received from Ramzan Khan (and deposited in the Post Office Savings Bank) the sum of Rs. 730 on the understanding that the amount would go to indemnify him in case the accused persons did not turn up on the date fixed and the amount of the bond was forfeited. On this the present proceeding was started.

The charges against the Mukhtear are:—

1. That he entered into an agreement with Ramzan Khan to the effect that the amount deposited by Ramzan Khan with him would indemnify him if he suffered any loss on account of the bail bond being forfeited; and

(2) That he tried to conceal the above fact from the Court by representing to the District Magistrate that he was a poor man and the amount forfeited was too much for him to bear.

As shown by my Lord, the facts are practically undisputed. So far as the first question is concerned, there is no doubt that the conduct of the Mukhtear was unprofessional. A contract like the one into which the Mukhtear and Ramzan Khan entered was unquestionably illegal, being against public policy as it hampers the administration of justice. When a Court orders an accused to be released on bail on his offering surety or surties the question of the forfeiture of the amount of surety in the case the accused does not appear on the date fixed, is of secondary consideration; the primary consideration is the personal element of the surety or sureties concerned. When an accused is released on bail on his offering surety for the amount ordered, the Court expects the surety to see that the accused appears on the date fixed and also the surety will take steps for getting the accused arrested in case there is any attempt on the part of the accused to abscond or to avoid attendance in Court. The surety or sureties must have a personal stake in seeing that the accused carries out his obligation. Our attention has been drawn to s. 513 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which, in my opinion, clearly shows that the legislature never intended that money should be the only consideration in accepting a surety. The section runs thus:

"When any person is required by any Court or officer to execute a bond with or without sureties, such Court or officer may, except in the case of a bond for good behaviour, permit him to deposit a sum of money or Government promissory notes to such amount as the Court or Officer may fix, in lieu of executing such bond".

It is obvious that under this section it is optional for the Magistrate in cases specified to allow a man who has been called upon to execute a bond with or without surety to deposit the amount in Court. Had the question of the forfeiture of the money been the only consideration, accepting the deposit to lieu of surety would not have been left to the discretion of the Court or of the Officer and the acceptance of deposit of money would have been obligatory. This shows that the finding out of a surety in cases where the Court does not think it fit to allow the deposit of a money, is essential, and that, as I have said, is intended to make some person or persons responsible for the due performance of the obligation by the man who is asked to furnish surety.

In this particular case it must have been obvious to the Mukhtear that the Magistrate refused to accept Ramzan Khan as surety for the due attendance of the accused in Court though Ramzan Khan offered to deposit the entire amount of bail. The Mukhtear did practically the very thing which the Magistrate refused Ramzan Khan to do. The practical effect of this transaction was that the real surety was Ramzan Khan who was to forfeit the amount deposited by him with the Mukhtear in case the accused persons did not turn up on the date fixed. Obviously therefore the Mukhtear frustrated the order passed by the Magistrate. This, in my opinion, was an unprofessional conduct.

Coming to the second charge, though there was no deliberate mis-statement on the part of the Mukhtear, yet there was a clear attempt on his part to conceal the fact that he had received Rs. 730 from Ramzan Khan. The learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the Mukhtear in this Court has attempted to show that the objection raised against the forfeiture of the amount of bail was because the Mukhtear was afraid that in the event of his not pressing the objection, Ramzan Khan might call upon him to refund the amount deposited on the ground that it was wrongly forfeited. This, however, was not the reason put forward by the Mukhtear in his application of June 8, 1934, filed before the District Magistrate wherein he stated that he never wanted to conceal the fact that Ramzan Khan did deposit Rs. 730 with him but that he tried to reduce the amount so that he might not lose Rs. 70 which amount was the difference between Rs. 800 and Rs. 730. In spite of all these I should have been inclined to hold that a reprimand would be enough in the circumstances of the case, had the subsequent attitude of the Mukhtear been one of regret and we would have been satsified that the Mukhtear has realised that what he did was illegal and improper. Up till this moment there is no admission that what he did was wrong. It would have been open to the Mukhtear, when he was called upon to show cause to state that he did not realise at the time when he received the money from Ramzan Khan that he was doing something wrong but that he realised it then and therefore expressed his regret. Up till now his attitude has been that what he did was not wrong and that he was justified in what he did.

In these circumstances I agree with the order of my Lord suspending the Mukhtear for a period of three months.

Agarwala, J.—For the reasons already given by my learned brothers, I agree that the agreement between the Mukhtear and Ramzan Khan was one which it was highly improper for a legal practitioner or any bailor to enter into, and that the conduct of the Mukhtear in concealing the agreement during the early stages of the present proceedings must be viewed as a serious aggravation of the original offence that he committed. I, therefore, agree with the order of suspension proposed in his case.

N. Suspension ordered.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 377—Attempt at unnatural offence—Some activity on part of accused to thrust male organ in to anus of passive agent necessary—Mere preparation is not enough.

The offence made punishable under s. 377, Penal Code, requires that penetration, however little, should be proved strictly. Thus an attempt to commit this offence should be an attempt to thrust the male organ into the anus of the passive agent. Some activity on the part of the accused in that particular direction ought to be proved strictly. A mere preparation for the operation should not necessarily be construed as an attempt. [p. 437, col. 2.]

Where there was an intention on the part of the accused to satisfy his lust by a carnal intercourse against the order of nature and he made every preparation to satisfy that lust, but before he could thrust his organ in he spent himself; then he cannot be said to have done any act which might be construed as an attempt to commit the offence of sodomy.

Mr. H. P. Minwalla, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. N. Kotwal, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The appellant, a young Irani restaurant-keeper, was charged before the learned Additional City Magistrate of Karachi, with an offence punishable under s. 377, Penal Code, in that he voluntarily had carnal intercourse against the order of nature with a lad, named Ratansi, aged 18. The learned Magistrate held that the main offence had not taken place, but that the accused could be convicted of an attempt to commit that offence. Consequently the accused was convicted under s. 377 read with s. 511 and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 100, in default, to undergo further rigorous imprisonment of one month.

This appeal has been admitted by the learned Judicial Commissioner to a regular hearing. The point to be determined in this appeal is, whether the conviction of the appellant is justifiable on the record. The prosecution story as unfolded at the trial is briefly this: Ratansi, a youth of about 18, called in the judgment of the lower Court "a boy," employed in the firm of Rali Bros., as a marker, went on Sunday afternoon to Keamari. He visited the hotel of the appellant and had tea there. When he was paying the bill for what he had consumed, the appellant asked him why he had not been to the hotel for a long time. Ratansi replied that he had had no occasion for it. He then went over to the pier with a view to take a trip to Manora by boat; but finding that he was short of the necessary cash, started back. When he came up to near the Musjid Street, he saw the appellant standing on the road at a little distance from the hotel. The appellant called out to Ratansi and took him to his house close by. He then locked the door and began to take liberties with the youngster, who resented the overtures and wanted to be allowed to go away. The appellant nevertheless removed his own pants, loosened the trousers of Ratansi and made the lad sit on his lap on top of his organ. Ratansi got up from the lap; but in the meanwhile the appellant had spent himself, wiped his organ and put on his pants.

Whilst this incident was taking place inside the house of the appellant, one Solomon, who is in the Police and who lives next door to the appellant, having suspected something unusual, came up to the door of the appellant's house and started peeping through a chink in the door panels. He called out to one Gulabdin who was coming out of the mosque. Gulabdin had just a momentary glimpse. Being disgusted he went away. After the appellant had adjusted his dress, Solomon announced his presence and insisted that the appellant and Ratansi should march off to the Police Station with him. A complaint was got filed there in the name of Ratansi which started the prosecution with the result as noticed above. Such, in the main is the prosecution story. The original version as given at the Police Station, was that the lad was laid down on a cot, and that the appellant was seen actually on top of him committing an act of sodomy and that Solomon had witnessed the act from beginning to end. This version was entirely changed when the witnesses came before the Court. Neither Ratansi nor Solomon nor Gulabdin would now admit that he had told the Police that an unnatural offence was completed on the cot, the boy lying on the cot and the appellant lying over him although the Police Officer has had to admit that the original statements before him were to that effect. This circumstance affords a very important indication in the case as to whether the prosecution witnesses could have at all seen what actually had transpired in the room. The learned Magistrate glosses over such a glaring discrepancy by saying:

> "This seems to me to have been due to a mistake or misunderstanding on the part of the investigating Sub-Inspector who is a young man aged 25 and inexperienced. There is no reason why the witnesses should have given a different version on this point."

There is enough material on the record for the adoption of a contrary view. In the first place, there is the positive testimony of the Police Officer supported by documentary evidence which there is no good ground to discredit merely because of his youth or inexperience. A mistake may occur in one statement. It is not likely to creep into all the three statements. It appears, however, from the record that the witnesses had a motive in changing their original version. As no seminal stains were found on the cot, but some were found on the floor, the witnesses had to turn round and say that the offence did not take place in the usual manner on the cot but that what had happened was that the accused having unbuttoned his pants, was sitting on the cot with Ratansi, whose back had been bared, in his lap and that it was in that posture, that he had a discharge. Moreover, the medical evidence militates against the story of a forcible connection on the cot, the appellant who is a fairly hefty young man having intercourse in the manner stated originally. There was not the slightest symptom of violence on the hind part of the lad.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that Solomon is his enemy: that Solomon's family do not pay regularly and in full for the refreshments consumed at the shop of the appellant. Some evidence has been led to prove this sort of disagreement between the two. It is not quite necessary to decide whether Solomon does or does not bear the appellant a grudge. Solomon's evidence as it is does not inspire much confidence. His conduct was very strange. He suspected, he says, that the lad had been locked in by the appellant for some immoral purpose yet he quietly goes and looks on through the chinks of the door and does not raise a hue and cry to prevent the appellant from pursuing his nefarious purpose any further although the lad according to him had been shouting out "chhoro, chhoro" and complaining of force being used. The conduct of Gulabdin is equally queer. He says he had a peep just for an instant and then quietly went away. But there must have been some connection between Solomon and Gulabdin. Solomon being in the Police knows that if he admitted that connection, Gulabdin may not be looked upon as an independent witness so Solomon had the hardihood to say that he had not known who Gulabdin was, although Gulabdin had to admit that his friendship with Solomon was of some 10 or 12 years' duration. Under these circumstances, I am not prepared implicitly to rely on the evidence of these two witnesses, although it is not altogether unlikely that they may have suspected something wrong.

Coming to the evidence of the young man Ratansi, I must say that he appears to be a despicable specimen of humanity. On his own admission he is addicted to the vice of a catamite. The doctor who has examined him is of the opinion that the lad must have been used frequently for unnatural carnal intercourse. If he was in the house of the accused behind locked doors, I have not the smallest hesitation in believing that he had gone there voluntarily. Had there been the slightest resistance on his part, there would have been noticed some symptoms, such as torn clothes, or scratches, or some kind of injuries on his anus. After reading the medical evidence, it is unnecessary to criticise minutely the evidence of this lad who poses, or perhaps is made to pose, as a complainant before us. He has made hopelessly discrepant statements in very important particulars from time to time as it suited him during the course of his examination and cross-examination. In examination-in-chief, for instance, he tells us that the accused threw him down on a cot and unbuttoned his pyjamas. In cross-examination he changes the story and says that the accused sat on the cot and he, that is, Ratansi was made to sit in the accused's lap. The medical officer says that he could not notice any marks of a fresh act of sodomy on the boy. Under the circumstances, it is difficult to find any reliable evidence to convict the appellant of unnatural offence or even an attempt to commit one. Although, mainly because of the unreliable nature of the evidence in this case, I am not prepared to uphold the conviction of the appellant, I might as well discuss a particular feature which is too interesting to be omitted from consideration in this judgment.

The offence made punishable under s. 377 requires that penetration, however little, should be proved strictly. Thus then an attempt to commit this offence should be an attempt to thrust the male organ into the anus of the passive agent. Some activity on the part of the accused in that particular direction ought to be proved strictly. A mere preparation for the operation should not necessarily be construed as an attempt. All that we have in this case, if believed, is that the appellant made Ratansi sit on his lap. From the version given by Ratansi it appears to me that owing to mere friction the appellant got a discharge. That would negative the probability of an attempt at penetration. None of the witnesses says distinctly that the appellant did any act from which it may be inferred, that if successful, it would have caused the male organ of the appellant to force its way into the rear orifice of the lad. It appears to me that if the prosecution story is believed, there was an intention on the part of the appellant to satisfy his lust by a carnal intercourse against the order of nature, that he made every preparation to satisfy that lust but that before he could thrust his organ in, he spent himself; and that therefore he had not done any act which might be construed as an attempt to commit the offence of sodomy. At the most it was an inchoate offence; and if the appellant was at all guilty of any offence, it was that of wrongful confinement. At the same time, I am not prepared to believe that the young man had been kept there against his will. Consequently, even the offence of wrongful confinement cannot be said to have been made out.

As the appellant had not, even if we take the worst view against him, gone beyond a certain stage of lascivious companionship, I do not think he deserves to be convicted for any of the offences with which he was charged or could have been charged. I therefore set aside the conviction and sentence, and order that if the fine is paid, it should be remitted.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 75—Previous convictions outside British India—Relevancy of, in determining sentence.

Previous convictions outside British India cannot be made the basis of a charge under s. 75, Indian Penal Code and a Magistrate is not bound to consider such convictions in determining the sentence even though it is open to him to do so.

Cr. R. P. under ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, dated February 21, 1934, and passed in C. C. No. 246 of 1934.

The Crown Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application by the Crown Prosecutor, Madras, to enhance the sentence passed on the accused in C. C. No. 246 of 1934 on the file of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Madras. The accused in the case was found guilty of having stolen some cash and clothes worth in all about 12 rupees belonging to P. W. No. 1 in the case while the latter was bathing at a bathing ghat in Madras. The Magistrate found the accused guilty of an offence punishable under s. 379, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to pay a fine of rupees thirty, and in default of payment thereof to undergo rigorous imprisonment of three months, and directed Rs. 12 out of the fine, if collected, to be paid as compensation to P. W. No. 1. It would appear that the fine has not been paid. The conviction and sentence are dated February 21, 1934, and it is clear that the accused in the case must have undergone the entire sentence of imprisonment.

The only ground on which it is contended before me that the sentence imposed by the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate is inadequate is that he failed to consider the antecedents of the accused which were mentioned to him orally by the Prosecuting Inspector of Police who conducted the prosecution. It would appear that the Prosecuting Inspector of Police in reply to a question put by the Court about the previous record of the accused for the purpose of determining the sentence, stated that the accused had four previous convictions in the Police Courts of Colombo, three for theft and one for cheating, the last of them being on September 24, 1932, for which he had been awarded six months' rigorous imprisonment. It is stated that the accused admitted these convictions but that the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate declined to take these convictions into consideration for the purpose of determining the sentence on the ground that these convictions were not convictions pronounced in British India. It is contended that this view of the Magistrate, viz., that convictions had out of British India should not be taken into consideration in determining the punishment is wrong. If at all it was open to the Magistrate to take into consideration the previous antecedents of the accused, the convictions outside British India were relevent. But in view of the fact that these convictions could not be made the basis of any charge under s. 75, Indian Penal Code, evidence of these convictions could be admissible only as evidence of bad character, and as there is no provision of law which compels a Magistrate to consider the antecedents of the accused before determining the sentence to be imposed upon him, I am unable to say that the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate acted illegally in the exercise of his discretion in declining to consider the previous convictions in this cease. The attempt of the prosecution was really to give these convictions outside British India the same effect for practical purposes as convictions within British India, that is to say, to induce the Magistrate to give a higher punishment than he would otherwise award. It may be that the Magistrate is not disentitled, if he thinks fit, to make such enquiries as he thinks proper, and as are not prohibited by the law, about the previous antecedents of the accused. But if he declines to look into these antecedents, he cannot be said to act illegally in the exercise of his discretion. The question of sentence is always within the discretion of the Court and ordinarily the sentence is determined only with regard to the facts and circumstances of each case unless indeed there is a liability to enhanced punishment by reason of any specific provision of law such as s. 75, Indian Penal Code. Apart from these convictions outside British India it is not contended that the sentence is inadequate The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate was not bound to consider these convictions in determining the sentence, even though it might have been open to him to have considered them. I am not prepared to interfere in revision and enhance the sentence in this case.

The Criminal Revision Petition is, therefore, dismissed.

Cr. A. from an order of the First Class Magistrate, Karachi.

Messrs. Balkishen H. Lulla, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. N. O'Sullivan, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against the judgment and sentence of the First Class Magistrate, Karachi. In that Court the allegations made by the prosecution were these: The accused was a working partner in the firm of Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal. In this capacity he had entire charge of the oil department. Yusuf, Ex. 1, is another partner of the same firm. On an inspection of the firm's books, Yusuf observed that a sum of Rs. 350 was due from another firm known as Vishindas Khanchand. The amount had been outstanding for a long time. In November 1931 Yusuf sent Mathradas to collect the money. Mathradas brought back word that the money had been paid in full on April 4, 1931. On inquiry it was discovered that the accused had in fact on that date issued to Vishindas a receipt for the whole outstanding balance which was Rs. 762-4-3. He had, however, credited the firm with no more than Rs. 412-4-3. Sometime after this discovery had been made relations between the firm of Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal and the accused became very unfriendly. The disputed entry was made in the suspense account on April 5, 1931. On February 15, 1932, the accused was called upon to answer a charge of misappropriation.

The trial went on for some 18 months and on August 4, 1933, the learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that the accused was guilty of criminal breach of trust by a clerk or a servant and convicted him under s. 408, Penal Code. The sentence was imprisonment until the rising of the Court and fine of Rs. 1,000 to be paid within one week. In case of default the convict was to suffer rigorous imprisonment for 6 months. Of the fine if recovered, half was to be paid to the complainant's firm as compensation.

Against this conviction and sentence the present appeal has been brought. The appellant makes no attempt to deny those facts which are indisputable. He does not deny that on April 4, 1931, he issued to Vishindas Khanchand a receipt for Rs. 762-4-3 and that he signed it by procuration of the name of Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal. This receipt is Ex. 2-C. The appellant also does not deny that the sum which was entered in the suspense account on April 5, 1931, was no more than Rs. 412-4-3 and that the same amount was carried to cash book on April 13, 1931. The balance of Rs. 350 continued to be shown a debit due from Vishindas Khanchand in the ensuing months of May and June.

These facts the appellant has not attempted to deny. He has, however, an explanation and it is this: The appellant before he became a partner in the firm of Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal, had been doing business of a similar kind in partnership with Vishindas Khanchand and others in the name and style of Khanchand Jeramdas and Co. Khanchand Jeramdas did not prosper and on August 6, 1929, the partnership was formally dissolved by a written agreement which is Ex. 2-G. It was then agreed between the partners that the whole of the partnership concern with all its assets, outstandings and liabilities whatsoever and wheresoever were to be taken over absolutely and exclusively by Vishindas and Sugnomal. It was also argeed that Bhikchand, the present appellant, should have no right, interest or concern whatever in any assets or effects of the aforesaid firm. Among the assets of that firm were two trade marks known as "OM" and "TALVAR" and also the punches or dies with which those trade marks were impressed upon the tins in which oil was contained.

The oil business being temporarily at a stand-still on October 24, 1929, Vishindas Khanchand wrote the letter which is Ex. 2-F. He therein allows to Bhikchand the appellant, the use of the dies "OM" and "TALVAR" subject to the condition that if the khopra business should ever be set on foot again those dies must be returned by Bhikchand to Vishindas. According to the appellant this revocable and permissive right to make use of the trade marks and the punches was carried by him into the partnership of Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal. The partnership deed between the appellant and that firm is Ex. 11-B. A draft of that agreement is also put in as Ex. 11-C. It was originally proposed to include the clause relating to the dies; in the final form of agreement no such clause is to be found. There is no allegation in the agreement that the accused undertook to bring in dies for the use of the partnership or that the dies belonged to him. On May 21, 1930, a letter was addressed under the name of Khanchand Jeramdas to Messrs. Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal. The letter complains that:

"it has come to our knowledge that two dies, viz, Om and Talvar are being used in Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal's khopra business."

The writer claims those dies as his registered trade marks and he invites his correspondents in civil terms to show cause why a criminal prosecution should not be filed against them for using these trade marks. On behalf of Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal an answer was made that since the firm of Khanchand Jeramdas had long since been dissolved and ceased to manufacture and sell any goods distinguished by the trade marks in question, it followed that the rights, if any, of the said firm of Khanchand Jeramdas to the exclusive use of those marks had been abandoned and ceased to exist. It was, however, stated that after the dissolution of the firm of Khanchand all the goodwill, right and use of the dies were taken over by Bhikchand Gangaram who thereafter joined Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal as a partner and by virtue thereof Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal were in any case entitled to use the dies in question. This answer appears for the time being to have put an end to the correspondence Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal continued to make use of the dies which are said to have become popular and well known in the market. During all this time the firm of Vishindas Khanchand were going from bad to worse. It happened, however, that in March or April, 1931, the dissolved firm of Khanchand Jeramdas became entitled to receive certain payments from the firm of Lunidaram Pahlumal. The appellant informed the principal partner in the firm of Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal of this opportunity and impressed upon him the necessity of recovering sums which were due from Vishindas to Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal and of settling with Vishindas the dispute concerning the dies. The appellant's case is that Seth Osman agreed and authorised the appellant to pay for the purchase of the dies such an amount as he thought fit.

The appellant accordingly saw Vishindas and settled with him. The amount due was found to be Rs. 762-4-3. It was, however, agreed that payment of Rs. 350 should be made to Vishindas, son of Khanchand in respect of the trade marks and the punches which had come to him when the firm of Vishindas Khanchand was dissolved. Accordingly the balance of Rs. 412-4-3 was paid to the appellant in currency. Acting on behalf of the firm of Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal the appellant passed a receipt for Rs. 762-4-3. This receipt was made out in favour of the firm of Vishindas Khanchand. In this firm there are two partners both of whom bear the name of Vishindas. The payment for dies was not to be made to the firm but to Vishindas, son of Khanchand personally. This Vishindas accordingly passed a receipt for Rs. 350 which he received on account of his trade marks. This receipt is Ex. 2-D. At the same time a third document was drawn up which is Ex. 2-C. It was written by the witness Tarachand who is a partner in the firm of Lunidaram Phalumal. The settlement between the appellant and Vishindas was made at Tarachand's shop and Tarachand is also the writer of Ex. 2-K. This exhibit is in the form of a letter addressed by Vishindas to Bhikchand. It says that the price of the dies has been received in full settlement and ends with these words:

"I am fully entitled to the right over these dies as well as of your debt inasmuch as I have purchased the same from my brother."

These documents explain the defence which the accused desires to make. They explain why it was that he did not enter in the accounts of Saleh Muhammad Umar Dossal the whole sum of Rs. 762-4-3 for which he had given the receipt. The appellant's case is that with the asset of the managing partner he had settled the outstanding dispute concerning the use of "OM" and "TALVAR" trade marks, and on this account, he had paid Rs. 350 to Vishindas Khanchand. The reason why no mention of this payment is made in the receipt Ex. 2-C, is that that receipt was given to the firm of Vishindas Khanchand. The payment of Rs. 350 was made to Vishindas in his private capacity and not to the firm of the same name. The reason why there was a delay in carrying the entry from the suspense account to the regular account books is that the managing partner refused to acknowledge the liability of the firm. He contended that Bhikchand had brought into the firm the right to use these dies and that if there was any defect in Bhikchand's title, it was Bhikchand's business to make the defect good at his own expense. This dispute remained unsettled. It was, therefore, necessary that the sum of Rs. 350 should continue to be shown as a debt due from Vishindas and until there was a corresponding credit entry, the debit must, as a matter of book-keeping, continue to remain in the same place. This explains also the reason why in the books of May and June no mehta was instructed to attempt to recover the debt shown as due from Vishindas. The appellant points out that there was no attempt made to conceal. The books are written in the Gujrati language and Bhikchand cannot write Gujrati. The entries were, therefore, made by mehtas and those mehtas were fully aware of the true state of the case. To the managing partner himself the facts were also fully known from the first. It is provided in the partnership agreement that the working partner shall submit every day to the capitalist partner a true copy of the entries in the cash book. This, according to the appellant, was being done and the managing partner was aware of the facts from the day on which the disputed incident occurred. That was in April. It was not until the end of the year that the matter came to a head. The appellant was laying claim to a large sum which he alleged to have become due to him by the wrongful act of the capitalist partner. He was demanding arbitration in accordance with the terms of the partnership deed. To prejudice the appellant, the capitalist partners elected to take criminal proceedings. In January 1932 they lodged a complaint regarding an incident which had occurred in April 1931.

The points for decision which arise in this case are these: Has the prosecution proved (1) That Bhikchand was a clerk or servant. (2) That he was in that capacity in any manner entrusted with dominion over Rs. 762-4-3 due from Vishindas. (3) That out of this sum he converted Rs. 350 to his own use. (4) That he did so dishonestly. On the first question the prosecution did not lay any great stress. They quoted indeed authority to show that in certain circumstances a partner may be included within the words 'clerk" or "servant," but they pointed out that the sentence which has been inflicted under s. 408 would have been competent even under s. 406 and they, therefore, thought that it was of no consequence whether the element distinguishing s. 408 from s. 406 could or could not be established.

To me, however, this point seems, for reasons which will appear hereafter, to require some consideration. There can be no doubt that a clerk or a servant can be guilty of embezzlement. It has, however, been seriously doubted whether a criminal prosecution of this charge can be sustained by one partner against another. This position has been recently asserted in the High Court of Calcutta by Lort-Williams, J., in Bhupendra Nath Sinha v. Giridhari Lal (1). The learned Judge there observes that:

"partners are joint-owners or co-owners of the partnership property, that is to say, of the common stock. Each partner is co-owner of the whole of this common stock, though he receives or pays a share only in profits and losses arising therefrom and though his share in the partnership property is only the value of his original contribution, increased or diminished by his share of profit or loss. It is difficult, therefore, to conceive how he can be entrusted with, or with dominion over his own property, or how he can dishonestly misappropriate it or convert it to his own use."

The learned Judge by this argument was evacuating of all effect the decision of a Full Bench in Queen v. Okhoy Coomar Shaw (2). He also expressed his inability to appreciate the distinction drawn by Sir John Beaumont, C. J., in Emperor v. Jagannath Raghunath Das (3).

The distinction which the High Court of Calcutta could not appreciate seems to be the distinction which the High Court of Bombay has expressed in these words:

"We have here a capitalist partner and a working partner. The capitalist partner is one who supplies the capital for the working partner and it seems to me that in such a case it can certainly be said that the working partner is entrusted with dominion over the capitalist partner's property."

To me this appears to be a perfectly intelligible distinction. In the agreement of partnership, which is Ex. 11-B in this case, cl. 5 provides that:

"the capital of the partnership shall be the sum of Rs. 1,00,000 (Rupees one lac) which shall be paid by the firm to the working partner from time to time in such sum or sums as they in their sole discretion shall deem fit."

The High Court of Calcutta in the passage above quoted refers to the Contract Act, s. 253 (1). It has not, however, quoted the exact words of that section which are these:

"All partners are joint owners of all property originally brought into the partnership stock or bought with money belonging to the partnership, or acquired for purposes of the partnership business. All such property is called partnership property. The share of each partner in the partnership property is the value of his original contribution increased or diminished by his share of profit or loss."

Now, in the present case, the original contribution of the working partner was nothing. The capital was provided by others and it was entrusted to the working partner at their discretion in such sums and at such times as they thought fit. I find no difficulty in drawing a distinction between the capitalist partner who supplied the fund and the working partner who "managed the same in accordance with the instructions given by the firm from time to time."

It has no doubt been held in Debi Prasad Bhagat v. Nagar Mull (4) that a partner cannot be held guilty of misappropriation but is only entitled to be called upon for an account of the expenditure of the money which he has received. But so long ago as 1874 a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court decided in Queen v. Okhoy Coomar Shaw (2), that a partner who dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use any of the partnership property with which he is entrusted is guilty of an offence under s. 405. This Full Bench case is referred to with approval by the High Court of Bombay in Emperor v. Laloo Chella (5) and the same view had been reaffirmed in Emperor v. Jagannath Raghunath Das (3).

In spite of the criticisms which have been raised against this decision by Lort-Willims, J., I continue to think that the decision of the High Court of Bombay is a safe guide to follow and in this particular case I am of opinion that the appellant may be regarded as coming within the meaning of the words "clerk or servant" as used in s. 408, Penal Code. To the first point for decision my answer is therefore "yes." On the second point, it will not be necessary to say much. Of the contention that one partner cannot be entrusted with dominion over the partnership property or any part of it, all that is necessary has been said. The learned Counsel who appeared for the Crown denounced with some indignation what he called "the monstrous and incredible" doctrine that a partner cannot be criminally convicted for any misappropriation of property of the firm to which he belongs.

Without adopting these epithets I should think it regrettable if no criminal remedy could be found in a case of this kind, and should it be necessary I should perhaps be prepared to hold that the Rs. 762-4-3 were entrusted by Vishindas to Bhikchand and that Bhikchand entered into an implied contract that he would discharge that trust by using the money for the extinction of the debt due by the firm of Vishindas to the firm of Saleh Mahomed Umar Dossal. In any case it appears clear to me that Bhikchand was in some way entrusted with dominion over those Rs. 762-4-3 and I find upon the second point accordingly. There remains the question whether the prosecution has proved that Bhikchand converted Rs. 350 to his own use. Now, on this point the appellant says that there is not on the record any evidence worth the name to show that this Rs. 350 were ever misappropriated by the appellant. What evidence there is, is to the contrary effect. The appellant says that he paid those Rs. 350 to Vishindas.

(4) 35 C 1198; 9 Cr. L J 74.

(5) 6 Bom. L R 553.

Vishindas says the same thing. He is Ex. 2, and his words are these:

"The price of the dies was settled at Rs. 350 I got that amount. I gave a receipt for that amount to Bhikchand which he has now produced Ex. 2-D."

The prosecution attacks this evidence with vigour. They must admit that the receipt, Ex. 2-D is authentic in so far as it is actually in the handwriting of Vishindas. They allege, however, that it is a forgery in so far as it was made with the intention of causing it to be believed that the document was signed at a time when it was not. They allege also that the oral testimony given by the witness in the box is false. The witness whom they are thus attacking is their own witness. It was the prosecution who called Vishindas. But the prosecution cannot succeed unless they can show that Vishindas has been guilty of giving false testimony in a judicial proceeding, of fabricating false evidence, and of forgery. The learned Magistrate who tried the case has not definitely committed himself to the conclusion that these points have been established. In my opinion, they remain open to very great doubt.

On this subject the law has been thus laid down by the Bombay High Court in Queen Empress v. Hari Dagdu (6). In a trial under s. 406 where the accused admitted having received the money alleged to have been misappropriated by him but defended himself by saying that he had made it over to the proper person, the onus did not lie on him to prove payment but on the prosecution to prove non-payment for it is only when the latter is proved that the presumption will arise of misappropriation or breach of trust.

This case is unreported but it is quoted with approval by the High Court of Lahore in Pritchard v. Emperor (7). It cannot in the present case be said that the Crown had succeeded in proving non-payment. The recipient of the money has given a receipt and he has gone into the box to say that that receipt is genuine and that the money was actually received by him accordingly. It is admitted that direct proof of misappropriation is altogether wanting. I am asked to infer that the appellant must have put the Rs. 350 into his own pocket because he did not enter them in the books of the firm. But he has accounted for that fact and his explanation is neither far-fetched nor hard to believe. I find it therefore impossible to hold that the prosecution has discharged the burden which rests upon them of affirmatively proving the alleged felonious conversion.

After what has been already said, the fourth point will require but little discussion. There is a presumption in favour of innocence and that presumption in this case has not been rebutted. It has not been proved that appellant had any intention of causing a wrongful gain to himself or wrongful loss to his partners. I have been asked to infer this dishonesty from the supposed fact that in defending himself the accused made use of false testimony and forged documents. It has not, however, been proved to my satisfaction either that the testimony of Vishindas is false or that the receipt which he gave is a forgery. Even however had these things been established, the inference which the prosecution desires me to draw would not follow. In this country a difficulty which constantly confronts every Criminal Court is this: Innocent persons not infrequently put forward false defences. A man may do a thing in April which at that time he believes in good faith to be innocent and lawful. Afterwards doubt is thrown upon the transaction. Criminal proceedings are threatened. The man loses his head and in the following February he puts forward a false defence. I am not saying that this is what has happened in this case. I am merely saying that if a man is so ill-advised as to set up a false defence in February, it cannot safely be inferred from that fact that an act which he did in the preceding April was tainted with dishonesty. By this reasoning I am led to these conclusions. The prosecution has not proved either that the appellant converted Rs. 350 to his own use or that he did so dishonestly. The conviction, therefore, cannot stand. The appellant is acquitted, and the security which he has given for the payment of the fine is discharged.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision No. 793 of 1934
September 6, 1934
PATTERSON, J.

DURGA PADA CHATTERJEE AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS
NILMANI GHOSE—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 339—Voluntary obstruction of vehicle—Whether constitutes wrongful restraint.

The voluntary obstruction of a vehicle cannot be held to amount to wrongful restraint within the meaning of s. 339, Penal Code.

Mr. Suresh Chandra Talukdar, for the Petitioner.

Order.—This Rule is directed against an order convicting the petitioners under s. 341, Indian Penal Code, on the allegation that they had prevented the carts of one Kali Pada who had purchased some paddy from the complainant Nilmony from proceeding along the public road, their object being to compel the payment to their master, the landlord of the village, of certain so-called dues known as weighman's dues. It may be remarked that it is difficult to understand why the complainant Nilmony or his master Atul Pada should have felt themselves aggrieved by the alleged action on the part of the accused, for it appears that not only had Nilmony handed the paddy in question over to Kali Pada, on receiving payment of its price in full, but that he had also realized from Kali Pada the amounts claimed by the landlord's men on account of weighman's dues, although he had no intention of making over those amounts to the landlord's men, his master having expressly forbidden him to do so. If anyone was aggrieved it was Kali Pada who, according to his own showing, had purchased the paddy and paid the so-called weighman's dues, but was prevented from removing the paddy by the accused, the present petitioners. In spite of this, for some reason which is not apparent to me, it was Nilmony and not Kali Pada who moved in the matter and who after informing the local Police, instituted the present proceedings. Whatever the explanation may be, the only question which this Court is now called upon to determine is whether the action of the petitioners in preventing Kali Pada's carts from proceeding along the public road comes within the mischief of s. 341, Indian Penal Code.

This question must, in my opinion, be answered in the negative, inasmuch as s. 341 is to be found in Chap. XVI, Indian Penal Code, which deals with offences affecting the human body, and inasmuch as it expressly makes punishable wrongful restraint of any person and not of any vehicle or anything of that sort. The definition of the offence in s. 339, Indian Penal Code, makes the matter still clearer, the offence being defined as voluntarily obstructing any person from proceeding in any direction in which that person has a right to proceed. Having regard to the wording of the definition of the offence of wrongful restraint, it is clear that the voluntary obstruction of a vehicle cannot be held to amount to wrongful restraint within the meaning of s. 339, Indian Penal Code. There is no evidence on the record from which it might be inferred that Kali Pada or Nilmony or the carters were themselves prevented from proceeding along the public road or wherever else they might have wished to go and this being so, it is clear that the conviction under s. 341, Indian Penal Code, must be set aside. I am fortified in this view by the decision of this Court in Juggeshwar Das v. Koylash Chunder (1), and by the decision of the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Rama Lala (2). The other allegations against the petitioners, namely the allegations of theft, mischief and so forth, have been negatived by the trial Court, and it would not be proper at this stage to consider whether or not the petitioners might have been convicted under any of these sections, or even of simple assault. The Rule is accordingly made absolute, the convictions and sentences are set aside and the accused are acquitted. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 89 of 1934
April 12, 1934
MONROE, J.

In the matter of CONDUCTOR ALFRED BEEDHAM, QUETTA

Army Act (VIII of 1911), ss. 87 (1), 90 (1), 100 (1), 158 (1)—Soldier, if can be retained for trial—Retention order must be from competent Military Authority—S. 90 (1), if applies to soldiers who have served for 21 years—'Convenient', meaning of—Soldier under arrest—Pay, if a subsistence allowance—Person, no more subject to military law—He can be arrested and tried within three months, else he cannot be tried by Court Martial—Contract—Breach of—Defaulter, if can defeat his own contract.

Section 87 (1), Army Act gives a power to retain a soldier in order to have the benefit of his services as a soldier and has no bearing on his retention for the purposes of his trial by Court Martial. Before the section can operate, it is necessary to have an order of the competent Military Authority in which the period of retention must be specified. [p. 446, col. 2.]

Section 90 (1) does not apply to a soldier who has served the full period of 21 years. The word "convenient" refers only to the speed with which the discharge is effected and the section does not entitle the superior Military Authority deliberately to hold up a soldier's discharge if he has become legally entitled to it.

The subsistence allowance provided to enable a soldier to live is not his pay; the allotment and other payments not paid at his request is the unilateral act of the Military Authorities, and cannot affect his legal position.

Section 158 gives powers of arrest and trial of a person who has ceased to be subject to Military Law and his trial must commence within three months of his ceasing to be so subject: and after the expiration of this period of three months the person charged with an offence ceases to be liable to arrest or trial by Court Martial.

No one by his own default can be allowed to defeat his own contract. Malins v. Freeman (1), referred to.

Mr. B. R. Puri, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Saunders, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—On March 16, 1934, a writ of Habeas Corpus for the production of Conductor, Alfred Beedham, was issued from this Court to the Superintendent of the Detention Barracks at Quetta, on the application of Mr. B. R. Puri who alleged that Conductor Beedham was wrongfully detained, not being a person subject to Military Law. A return has been made to the writ jointly by Lieutenant-General Sir Torquhil G. Matteson, K. C. B., C. M. G., General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Western Command, and Staff Quarter Master Sergeant Eric Whittaker, Superintendent, Military Detention Barracks, Quetta. So far as the relevant facts are concerned, there seems to me to be no dispute. Conductor Beedham, enlisted on August 11, 1908, for 12 years and re-engaged in 1921, for a further period of nine years, making in all a period of 21 years. He was promoted to the rank of Warrant Officer on February 4, 1924, and by a declaration then made he agreed to continue to serve until legally discharged. The period of 21 years came to an end on August 10, 1929. He was then on the Indian Unattached List and continued to serve, annual extensions being granted to him each year the last of which expired on August 10, 1933. In April 1933, he applied for one year's leave, presumably anticipating a further extension of his period of service and his leave was granted from May 1. He was recalled to duty and arrived at Quetta on July 24, 1933. On arrival he was arrested and a general idea of the nature of a number of charges which had been made against him was communicated to him. On January 11, 1934, the Director of Grass Farms, Army Headquarters, the head of Conductor Beedham's Department, granted an extension from August 10, 1933. In January 1934, Conductor Beedham made an application for discharge: this was received on January 29, and was refused. On March 2, 1934, the trial of Conductor Beedham before a General Court Martial began. It is the long delay between the arrest and the commencement of the trial which has given rise to the present proceedings, because if the trial had been commenced within three months on August 10, 1933, the raising of any objection would clearly have been precluded by the provision of s. 158, Army Act.

There is only one other fact relating to the case to which I would now draw attention. Conductor Beedham refused to receive his pay after August 10, 1933, and I shall take it as established that it was because he was under arrest and not because he considered that his service had terminated. During the whole period up to the present, he has received a small daily allowance for subsistence and certain payments have continued to be made on his behalf by the Pay Department. It does not appear to me to be material why Conductor Beedham refused to receive his pay. It will be necessary to consider later whether he was "in pay as a soldier," etc. (in the words of s. 100 (2), Army Act).

Mr. Puri, for Conductor Beedham admitted that his client had not as a matter of fact been discharged and argued that he was entitled to his discharge on August 10, 1933, and it had been improperly (i. e., unlawfully) withheld. He put forward the proposition that no one by his own default can be allowed to defeat his own contract and cited in support of it Malins v. Freeman (1), and other cases to which I need not refer, because the proposition was not disputed. This proposition Mr. Puri applied to this case, his contention being that Conductor Beedham's period of service terminated on August 10, when two alternatives were open, either he might with his consent have had a further extension or he was entitled to be discharged with all convenient speed: no question arose of an extension of this period and it was not open to the Military Authorities by refraining from performing their duty of discharging him to extend their powers over him: if he had been discharged, as ought to have happened, the power of causing him to be tried by Court Martial would, in the circumstances of this case, have ceased to exist on or about November 10. Mr. Puri's case is, in my opinion, one that requires an answer.

The return to the writ is obscure, argumentative and even truculent: Mr. Saunders informed me that he was not responsible for it and very wisely argued that certain portions of it might be regarded as non-existent: to them I shall not now make any further reference. The grounds on which Conductor Beedham's retention in custody is justified are set out in para. 14 of the return and I must examine separately each of them.

"(a) Under Army Act s. 92, as he has never been legally discharged."

I have in summarising Mr. Puri's argument indicated his case on this point. He admits the absence of a legal discharge and that the section in terms applies to the facts of the case and argues that the improper withholding of the discharge cannot put his client in a worse position than that in which he would have been, if the Military Authorities had carried out the duty imposed upon by s. 90 (1) and s. 95, by virtue of which sections a soldier whose term of service has expired is entitled to be discharged with all convenient speed. Mr. Puri drew my attention to the note appended in the Manual of Military Law to s. 92 which states that "any undue delay in carrying out the discharge would give good ground for complaint on the part of the soldier." The case, in my opinion, must be decided on this point and I postpone further discussion of it, until I have mentioned the remaining grounds of objection.

"(b) Under Army Act s. 158 (1) as he committed offences under the Army Act while subject to Military Law and was taken into custody while so subject."

This ground is more fully stated in para. 13 of the Return where it is claimed that s. 158 (i) expressly sanctions the retention in the service in Military custody and the trial by Court Martial of any person subject to Military Law alleged to have committed any offence under the Army Act, while so subject; and that this interpretation is borne out by Note I to s. 90 in the Manual of Military Law which states that s. 158 gives power to detain for trial a man charged with an offence under the Act, though entitled to his discharge or transfer to the reserve. A perusal of the section shows that its terms give no warrant for this construction: the section gives powers of arrest and trial of a person who has ceased to be subject to Military Law and his trial must commence within three months of his ceasing to be so subject: it is clear that after the expiration of this period of three months the person charged with an offence ceases to be liable to arrest or trial by Court Martial.

"(c) Under Army Act s. 87 (1), even if he had been entitled to discharge from August 10, 1933, he can be legally detained till August 10, 1934, and therefore is only entitled to be discharged with all convenient speed."

In my opinion, this section has no application to the present case. The section gives a power to retain a soldier in order to have the benefit of his services as a soldier and has no bearing on his retention for the purposes of his trial by Court Martial. And further before the section can operate, it is necessary to have an order of the competent Military Authority in which the period of retention must be specified; no order under the section was made.

"(d) Under Army Act s. 90 (1), even if it were accepted that he became entitled to discharge on August 10, 1933, he can only claim to be discharged 'with all convenient speed.' It is obviously not convenient to discharge him until the charges against him are disposed of. Until he is so discharged he remains subject to Military Law. The expression 'convenient' can only mean 'convenient having due regard to the interests of the service': the superior Military Authority is the sole judge of what is and what is not convenient, as he must be of all (?) military nature."

Much might be written on this argument. Section 90 (i) does not apply to a soldier who has served the full period of 21 years: but s. 85 applies it by reference to such a soldier. There is no reference to the question whether it is convenient or not to discharge the soldier; that matter is dealt with in s. 90 (i); the word "convenient" refers only to the speed with which the discharge is effected and the section does not in my opinion entitle the superior Military Authority deliberately to hold up a soldier's discharge if he has become legally entitled to it. The argument here used might prove very damaging to the case now before me: if I were convinced that Conductor Beedham's discharge had been deliberately held back in order that contrary to the spirit of s. 186 the period during which he might be retained in custody before trial should be indefinitely prolonged, I should have no hesitation in declaring such a course illegal and releasing him.

"(e) Under Army Act s. 100. Although the contention by the General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Western Command, that Conductor Beedham is still subject to Military Law is not based on this section (because it is not admitted that Conductor Beedham's service legally terminated on August 10, 1933), should it be held that he should have been discharged or re-engaged on that date, then by accepting portion of his pay in the form of family allotment and subsistence allowance for more than three months after August 10, 1933, he would thereby become subject to Military Law in view of the provisions of sub-s. 1 of this section. He did not claim his discharge (on the grounds that he had not been engaged) till January 29, 1934. He has not yet been discharged in pursuance of that claim. In the words of sub-s. 2 of this section 'until he is discharged in pursuance of that claim' he is still subject to Military Law."

This argument overlooked the fact that after his arrest Conductor Beedham was no longer a free agent. He did not himself receive pay; it is absurd to suggest that the subsistence allowance provided to enable him to live was pay: the allotment and other payments were not paid at his request and the unilateral act of the Military Authorities, in making these payments could not affect his legal position.

It remaints now only to consider what was the true position on and after August 10, 1933. He had clearly become entitled to his discharge, in the absence of any lawful order to the contrary and there was no such order. But, in my opinion, there was no obligation on the Military Authorities to press his discharge on him. He did not ask for it till the end of January 1934 well within three months from the commencement of his trial and if the Military Authorities had discharged him without any request from him, it would have appeared that they were giving an indication of the result of the trial. It must be remembered that it was Conductor Beedham's intention if permitted to do so, to remain in the service after his then current year of employment: and I can see no reason why, if his trial had resulted in his acquittal, his services should not have been obtained with his consent. As far as the evidence before me goes, I can come to one conclusion only: neither party directed his attention to the question of discharge and this question was allowed tacitly to remain in abeyance pending the result of the trial. In the circumstances, I am unable to hold that on August 10, 1933, the Military Authorites became subject to an obligation of their own mere motion to discharge Conductor Beedham with all convenient speed: and accordingly, I have no power to release Conductor Beedham.

I accept the return to the writ the order for which I discharge.

Criminal Revision No. 1242 of 1933

February 2, 1934

TEK CHAND, J.

KALYAN DAS—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Special Powers Ordinance (X of 1932), s. 17—Ordinance in force on date when prosecution is begun but not in force on date of conviction—Conviction, legality of—Applicability of s. 6, General Clauses Act (X of 1897), to temporary Statute.

The provisions of s. 6, General Clauses Act, are not applicable to a temporary Statute, which expires automatically on a given date, but applies only to Statutes which are "repealed" by another enactment, and, therefore, proceedings which are pending under an Ordinance on the date of its expiry could not be continued, in the absence of a clear statutory provision to this effect. Consequently where a prosecution is begun when the Ordinance is in force but it is not in force on date of conviction, conviction is illegal and ultra vires. Bansgopal v. Emperor (1) followed, Jogendra Chandra v. Superintendent, Dum Dum Special Jail (2), distinguished.

Cr. R. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated August 7, 1933.

Mr. J. L. Kapur, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Din Muhammad, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner, Kalyan Das, has been convicted under s. 17, Special Powers Ordinance, X of 1932, and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months and pay a fine of Rs. 200 or in default, to suffer further rigorous imprisonment for three months. His appeal has been rejected by the Sessions Judge and he has filed a petition for revision in this Court.

The relevant facts are that on August 20, 1932, a notice, issued by proper authority under s. 4 of the Special Powers Ordinance No. X of 1932, was served on the petitioner directing him not to join or continue in any procession or meeting (other than a purely religious procession or meeting) of six or more persons in any public place within the limits of the Lahore district, without the previous permission in writing of the City Magistrate, Lahore. This notice was duly served on the petitioner on the same day. It was alleged that the petitioner, in violation of the terms of the aforesaid notice, joined a political procession at Lahore on September 20, 1932. He was accordingly prosecuted under s. 17 of the Ordinance. The prosecution was started on September 30, 1932, and the case continued till March 31, 1933, when the Magistrate convicted the petitioner and sentenced him as stated above.

The first contention raised on behalf of the petitioner is that the conviction is illegal, as the Ordinance was not in force on the day on which he was convicted, it having expired automatically on December 29, 1932. In support of this contention, reliance is placed on a recent decision by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, reported as Bansgopál v. Emperor (1). The facts of that case were very similar to those of the one before me, and the question decided by the Full Bench was the same as that raised here. The learned Judges held that the provisions of s. 6, General Clauses Act, were not applicable to a temporary Statute, which expired automatically on a given date, but applied only to Statutes which were "repealed" by another enactment, and therefore proceedings which were pending under an Ordinance on the date of its expiry could not be continued, in the absence of a clear statutory provision to this effect. It was also pointed out that Act XXIII of 1932, which to some extent took the place of Ordinance X of 1932, came into force on December 19, 1932, but s. 20 of that Act specially saved proceedings under certain sections of the Ordinance, s. 17 not being one of them. It was accordingly ruled that the Magistrate had no power to continue proceedings in a prosecution under s. 17 of the Ordinance which had been started before, but not completed on December 29, 1932.

The learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer referred me to a Division Bench ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Jogendra Chandra v. Superintendent, Dum Dum Special Jail (2), but the facts of that case were quite different. There, the petitioner had been convicted, at a time when the Ordinance was in force, and was actually undergoing his sentence on the date when the Ordinance expired. He contended, however, that after that date, he could not be detained in Jail, to serve out the remaining portion of his sentence. This contention was rejected by the learned Judges and, if I may say so with all respect, quite rightly. The case is clearly distinguishable, and it is not necessary to discuss it any further. In my opinion the law has been laid down correctly in the Allahabad decision cited above, and following it, I hold that the conviction of the petitioner under s. 17 of the Ordinance on a date on which the Ordinance was not in force is illegal and ultra vires. In this view of the case, it is not necessary to consider the further question as to whether the procession in question was or was not a purely religious procession. I accept the petition, quash the conviction and sentence, and direct that the petitioner be discharged from his bail bond.

D. Revision accepted.

Criminal Appeal No. 167 of 1934
September 25, 1934
FERRERS, J. C. AND O'SULLIVAN, A. J. C.
RAHIMBUX KARIMBUX—APPELLANT
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 190, 556—Sessions Judge ordering arrest and production of witness before him, for trial before City Magistrate—Magistrate committing him to Sessions—Same Judge convicting him—Magistrate, if justified in taking cognizance—Permission under s. 556 not taken—Defect, if fatal.

In the trial in the Sessions Court a man was produced and examined as a witness for the prosecution. The Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that this witness ought to have been charged as a receiver of stolen property. He consequently recorded the following order. "From the evidence recorded by me in the Sessions Case, I find that there is sufficient material before me for trying the witness under s. 411, Penal Code. I, therefore, order him to be arrested and produced before the City Magistrate, to be tried for the same offence." The City Magistrate took cognizance of this offence and committed the witness for trial in the Court of Sessions. This trial went on before the same Judge who had made the order for the arrest and for his production before the City Magistrate to be tried. The trial in the Sessions Court ended in a conviction :

Held, that the City Magistrate was justified by s. 190 (a) Criminal Procedure Code, in taking cognizance of this offence.

Held, also, if at the initial stage when the Sessions Judge first took up the case himself he had requested the permission of the High Court to try the case, the disqualification might perhaps have been removed, and that there was a technical defect more serious than could be overlooked. Sergeant v. Dale (1), relied on.

Mr. R. Minwalla, for the Appellant.
Mr. Partabria D. Punwani, for the Crown.

Ferrers, J. C.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are these: The City Magistrate of Sukkur committed certain persons to the Sessions Court for trial under ss. 380 and 450, Penal Code. They were committed to the Sessions Court and not dealt with by the Magistrate himself because they had previous convictions. In the trial in the Sessions Court a man named Rahimbux, who is the present appellant, was produced and examined as a witness for the prosecution. The Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that this witness ought to have been charged as a receiver. He consequently recorded the following order:

"From the evidence recorded by me in the Sessions Case No. 51 of 1933, I find that there is sufficient material before me for trying witness Rahimbux under s. 411, Indian Penal Code. I therefore order him to be arrested and produced before the City Magistrate, Sukkur, to be tried for the same offence. The Public Prosecutor, Sukkur, is requested to conduct the prosecution and give the list of witnesses, etc., there."

The City Magistrate took cognizance of this offence and committed Rahimbux for trial in the Court of Sessions. This trial went on before the same Judge who had made the order for the arrest of Rahimbux and for his production before the City Magistrate to be tried. The trial in the Sessions Court ended in a conviction, and the convict was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. Against this conviction and sentence he has made the appeal with which we are now concerned. His principal points are two. The first is, that the proceedings against the appellant before the City Magistrate, Sukkur, were not initiated in any manner prescribed by s. 190, Criminal Procedure Code. Section 190, Criminal Procedure Code, provides that a Magistrate may take cognizance of any offence in three different ways. The first of these is "upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence." Now, the word "complaint" is thus defined:

"Complaint" means the allegation made orally or in writing to Magistrate with a view to his taking action under this Code that some person whether known or unknown has committed an offence."

The order made by the Additional Sessions Judge has already been quoted in full. It will be found to contain all the ingredients which are necessary to constitute a complaint. There is the allegation made in writing to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under this Code, that Rahimbux has committed an offence punishable under s. 411, Penal Code. In the ordinary course, a Magistrate proposing to initiate proceedings on a complaint shall at once examine the complainant on oath. This requirement is, however, subject to an exception. When the complaint is made in writing, the Code does not require the examination of a complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court or by a public servant acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties.

It would seem, therefore, that the City Magistrate was justified by s. 290, cl. (a) in taking cognizance of this offence. If, however, there is any legal irregularity, it would be covered by s. 529 which provides that if any Magistrate not empowered to take cognizance of an offence under s. 190, cl. (a) or cl. (b) erroneously in good faith does that thing, his proceeding shall not be set aside merely on the ground of his not being so empowered.

Now, in the present case, no imputation upon the good faith of the City Magistrate has been attempted. There seems, therefore no substance in the first objection taken by the appellant. The second objection is in these words: That the appellant has been prejudiced by the fact that he has been prosecuted and judged by the same learned Judge.

Now, this objection rests upon s. 556, Criminal Procedure Code, which lays down that no Judge shall, except with the permission of the Court to which an appeal lies from his Court, try any case to or in which he is a party or personally interested. Now, the Public Prosecutor has justified proceedings taken before the City Magistrate on the allegation that the Judge was the complainant. But a complainant is undoubtedly a party to the proceedings which ensue upon his complaint. The illustration to s. 556 shows that from a purely official connection with the initiation of criminal proceedings, a disqualifying interest may result. It was held in Sergeant v. Dale (1):

"The law does not measure the amount of interest which a Judge possesses. If he has any legal interest in the decision of the question one way he is disqualified, no matter how small the interest may be. The law, in laying down this strict rule, has regard not so much perhaps to the motives which might be supposed to bias the Judge as to the susceptibilities of the litigant parties. One important object at all events is to clear away everything which might engender suspicion and distrust of the tribunal, and so to promote the feeling of confidence in the administration of justice which is so essential to social order and security."

This rule, as it appears from the section itself, is not to be so interpreted as to make insuperable the disqualification of any Judge who may happen to come within the letter of the law. It is provided that the permission of the Court to which an appeal lies would exempt a Judge from the disqualification. In a case such as that with which we are now dealing, we imagine that the Sessions Judge expected the Magistrate to deal with the case himself. It was a charge under s. 411, Penal Code, which was within the competence of the Magistrate, and as the sentence, which was ultimately inflicted did not exceed six months, it would seem probable that the Sessions Judge did not expect the case to be committed to his Court. But if at the initial stage when he first took up the case himself he had requested the permission of this Court to try the case, the disqualification might perhaps have been removed. As it is, we think that the principle concerned is too important to allow us to suffer this conviction to stand. Upon the personal probity of the Judge concerned, no reflection was at any time suggested, nor is any implied by this decision.

On the merits we do not think the appellant has made out any case. It is not upon the merits that we propose to deal with this conviction. There is a technical defect and that is a defect more serious than we think ourselves entitled to overlook. In most cases, when we proceed upon these lines, we should think it proper to order a re-trial. But in the present case we find that out of a sentence of six months, the convict has already served nearly the half and he has presumably earned also a certain amount of remission. Taking these facts into consideration, we do not think that it is necessary that the public funds should be put to the expense of a second trial of this same offence. We, therefore, without making any order as to re-trial quash this conviction and sentence and direct that the prisoner's bail bond be discharged.

O'Sullivan, A. J. C.—I entirely concur in all my learned brother has said and in the order he proposes to make. There is of course absolutely no question as to there being any distrust or suspicion about the impartiality or honesty of the learned Judge, but there must be no relaxation at any time of the very salutary principle nemo debet esse judex in propria cause.

SUBEDAR, A. J. C.
Sardar DIWAN SINGH MAFTOON —ACCUSED —APPLICANT

Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act of 1922, ss. 3 (1), 5—Sanction to prosecute under s. 3 (1)—Sanction regarding prosecution of one offence only—Prosecution for all offences under s. 3 (1)—Proceedings, legality of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 233, 234, 235, 439—Joinder of charges—Offences under s. 3 (1), Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, whether can be consolidated—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 500—Press and Registration of Books Act (XXV of 1867), s. 7—"Publication", meaning of, as used in Penal Code, s. 500 and s. 3 (1), Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act—Declaration under s. 7, Press and Registration of Books Act—Presumption—'Same transaction' in s. 235, Criminal Procedure Code—Composing of article, editing and printing at one place, and publishing at different places at different times, if one set of acts—Sanction required under s. 5, States Protection Act accompanying the libellous matter—Proof that the matter in question was the same regarding which the prosecution was authorised—Interpretation of Statutes—Court's duty to examine language of Statute without any reference to English Law—Criminal trial—Power of High Court to interfere with findings of fact in revision—Restrictions in s. 439, Criminal Procedure Code—First trial breaking on account of illegality in conducting it—Re-trial, if can be ordered—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), ss. 114, ill. (e), 58—Documents filed in Court, whether can be presumed to be documents referred to in order of sanction by Governor-General, in absence of prima facie indication that they are annexures to order of sanction—Identity must be proved.

Where the sanction necessary for the prosecution for an offence under s. 3 (1), Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) authorised the prosecution of the accused only "in respect of the publication of an article (of which a copy and translation are hereto annexed)", and the complainant failed to establish that the article referred to in the sanction was the one on which the complaint was lodged :

Held, that the complainant failed to prove that he was authorised by the Governor-General to lodge the complaint in respect of the article. [p. 457, col. 1.]

Section 3 (1), Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, creates four distinct offences in respect of a written matter which brings or is intended to bring into hatred or contempt, or excites or is intended to excite disaffection towards any Prince or Chief or his administration. It hits anyone or more or these four persons, viz., the author, the editor, the printer and the publisher of the libellous matter. Where the sanction of the Governor-General authorises the complainant "to make complaint of an offence under s. 3 of the Act", and very clearly restricts the prosecution to one of the four offences under the section by specifying that it is to be "in respect of the publication" of an article, there is no room for the contention that the prosecution was sanctioned in regard to all the four offences covered by s. 3 (1) of the Act. It follows then that the trial of the accused in respect of the three distinct offences of his being the editor, the printer and the author of the offending article is clearly illegal for want of sanction and vitiates the whole proceedings. Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (2) and Barendra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (3), relied on. [p. 457, col. 2, p. 458, col. 1]

Since being the author, the editor the printer and the publisher are distinct offences under s. 3 (1) of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922, they cannot be consolidated for the purpose of holding a joint trial without violation of the mandatory provisions of ss. 233 and 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The several acts of the accused in composing the offending article, editing and printing it at a certain place and publishing the same at six different places on different occasions cannot be regarded as "one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction" within the meaning of s. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 458, col. 2.]

The word "publisher" appearing in s. 3 (1) of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act cannot possibly be construed in the narrow sense of the local publisher in which it is apparently used in Act XXV of 1867, but must be given its ordinary meaning. "Publishing" in s. 3 (1) cannot, therefore, be restricted to publishing libellous matters merely turned out of a printing press or be confined to "publishing" by an editor or printer thereof. The section fastens criminal responsibility upon any one or more of the four persons, viz., the editor, the printer, the publisher and the author of any handwritten or printed libellous matter against a Prince. The word "publishing" must then be understood in its ordinary significance of "making known, announcing publicly, or bringing to notice". Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (2), explained. [p. 459, cols. 1 & 2.]

At the trial of a person for publishing a libel contained in a newspaper, the presumption permitted to be raised by s. 7 of Act XXV of 1867, as to his identity with the publisher of the offending matter, on production of the copy of his declaration given under s. 5 (2) ibid, is restricted to the prima facie proof that he was the publisher only at the place specified in the declaration and does not extend to the proof of the fact that he was also the publisher of the libel at places not specified in the declaration. [p. 460, col. 2.]

In interpreting the statutory provisions of an Indian Act the Courts should examine the language of the Indian Statute itself uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the English Law on which it might have been based. [p. 461, col. 1.]

[Case-law referred to.]

Although the powers of the High Court to interfere with findings of fact in revision are not in any way restricted by s. 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in practice they are only exercised in exceptional cases and under exceptional circumstances They are, however, invariably exercised in cases where it is established that the findings of fact reached by the two Courts below are based either on no evidence or on inadmissible evidence or on legally inadequate evidence or are perverse. [p. 464, col. 2.]

When the first trial breaks down on account of any illegality in conducting it, the normal course is a re-trial. Subrahmania Ayyar v Emperor (4), explained, Manavala Chetty v. Emperor (17), Chetto Kalwar v. Emperor (18) and Gunno v. Emperor (19), relied on. [p. 468, col. 1.]

The Court should not presume that the documents referred to in the order of sanction by the Governor-General were documents in question and that they were only forwarded by the Governor-General and reached the complainant through the usual channel, unless there be any indication on the face of the questioned documents to show that they were the annexures to the order of sanction. In the absence of any such indication it would be a violent presumption to raise that these were the documents mentioned in the order sanctioning prosecution. [p. 456, cols. 1 & 2.]

Cr. R. against an order of the Sessions Judge, Hoshangabad, dated October 30, 1933.

Messrs. M. Y. Shareef, T. J. Kedar, B. B. Tawakhley and G. V. Moharrir, for the Applicant.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Sir C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar and Sir Abdur Rahman, and Messrs. Hidayathulla, J. Sen and S. C. Dube, for the Non-Applicant.

Mr. V. Bose, for the Crown.

Order.—The facts necessary for the disposal of the present application for revision are shortly these. The applicant, Sardar Diwan Singh Maftoon, was, up to October 20, 1929, the printer and publisher of a weekly newspaper called the Riyasat printed in Urdu at Delhi under a declaration given by him to that effect on December 5, 1927, before the District Magistrate, Delhi, under s. 5 (2) of Act XXV of 1867. In this examination as an accused he also admitted that he was the printer, publisher and editor of the paper.

2. In the issue of the aforesaid paper dated August 17, 1929, there appeared two articles (Ex. P-8) of which the translations [Exs. P-8 (c) and P-8 (a)] are as under:—

[Exhibit P-8(c)] "Pandit Motilal Nehru and Bhopal."

"It had been commented upon before as to how the Princes try to suppress the public voice now-a-days in order to continue their oppressions, and the leaders are entertained for this purpose. Now our special correspondent communicates that in inviting Pandit Motilal Nehru to Bhopal, he was asked on behalf of the Nawab Sahib to come to give legal advice. Simultaneously with the invitation, Dr. Ansari also pressed the Pandit Sahib to pay this visit. So the Pandit Sahib went, and by way of fees for legal advice, he was paid Rs. 20,000 and a desire was expressed that if ever he feels tired of his tours in British India, he may come to Bhopal for pleasure (Tafrih).

The Nawab Sahib of Bhopal would know the complicated problem to solve which this fee for legal advice was paid, and the fact as to which 'privy purse' provided the money would be best known to the Publicity Officer, the Coatman of Bhopal. But we also would have done justice to this generosity and favouring of leaders, if the hidden motive had not been to fool (ullu banana) them, and the object of this munificence was not to suppress the voice of helpless subjects. Along with British India, the people in Indian States are also waking up, and if the present rate of progress is maintained, the Indian Princes will have to abandon their shameful despotism in another fifteen or twenty years. The Indian Princes are comparing this awakening to a dangerous flood, and an effort is being made to win over the leaders for purposes of muzzling the agitation. For this object the Indian Princes are entertaining the leaders. It is our duty to understand this new move in time, and whichever leader accepts the hospitality of the State Guest-house to give him a public warning. Surely the leaders' duty is better performed by frequenting the huts of the poor than by sitting at Royal Tables."

[Exhibit P-8 (a)] "Mahatma Ghandhi will go to Bhopal."

"Elsewhere in the present issue of our paper are given the details of Pandit Motilal's visit to Bhopal for some legal advice. Our correspondent has now informed us that after (the visit of the) Pandit Sahib, the Nawab of Bhopal is trying by all possible means, to call Mahatma Gandhi there and that Dr. Ansari has also lent his support to the invitation. Mahatma will not accept any "fees for legal advice". It has, therefore, been arranged to have a purse presented to him on behalf of the public of Bhopal on his arrival and in that public purse the Nawab himself will generously participate. Those who know the inner condition of Bhopal and are aware of the qualifications necessary for success in getting employment there as also of other luxuries of the Shikar House, can realise what personal regard the Nawab of Bhopal can have for the Mahatmaji and what motives are behind this 'Mahatma worship.' In point of outspokenness, integrity and truthfulness as also with regard to personal character Mahatma Gandhi is an outstanding personality among all the Indian leaders and we are not prepared to believe it for a moment that like Pandit Motilal Nehru and Malaviya he is capable of accepting fees for legal advice; we consider it our duty to express our view that to give encouragement to the Ruling Chiefs while their present high-handed policy continues, it is tantamount to using knife on the necks of their subjects and it is expected of Mahatmaji at least, that when he visits Bhopal, he should, instead of residing at the Royal Palaces go and live in the huts of the poor and indigent people and form an estimate of the extent of their calamities, and if possible, to make the Nawab of Bhopal alive to the (vast) difference between the condition of the people in British India and that of the subjects of the Indian States."

3. About a week after the publication of these articles Pandit Motilal Nehru got a notice [Ex. P-43 (a)] served upon the applicant, through Dr. Katju (P. W. No. 21), drawing his attention to the defamatory matter contained in the said publication and demanding an unconditional apology, both to himself and H. H. the Nawab of Bhopal, on the lines of a draft [Ex. P-43 (b)] which accompanied the notice. In response to the above notice, in the issue of the Riyasat, dated August 31, 1929, the applicant published a note, the translation of which [Ex. P-14 (a)] runs as under :—

"Doctor K. N. Katju, M. A., LL. D., writes to inform us that the allegation made in the Riyasat to the effect that Pandit Motilal Nehru was paid Rs. 20,000 as fee is incorrect and there is no truth in the news as far as Panditji is concerned. We are sorry that such allegation against Panditji got publication in the 'Riyasat' and it is our duty as an honest journalist to contradict it."

4. As this short note did not satisfy Pandit Motilal Nehru a fresh notice [Ex. P-43 (d)] was served on his behalf upon the applicant again demanding an unconditional apology as per draft which had accompanied the first notice. Thereupon the applicant tendered an unconditional apology to Pandit Motilal Nehru and published the same in the issue of the Riyasat dated October 5, 1929, Ex. P-15), with the exception of the scored out portion of the draft apology [Ex. P-43 (d)] of which the translation is as under :—

"We deeply regret that the articles published by us on page 6 of the issue No. 53 of the 'Riyasat' dated August 17, 1929, under the caption 'Mahatma Gandhi will visit Bhopal' and 'Pandit Motilal Nehru and Bhopal' contain statements and insinuations relating to Pandit Motilal Nehru which are totally baseless and are defamatory of him. In these articles we had in reference to the communication of special correspondent, written that during his recent visit to Bhopal, the Pandit Sahib was paid Rs. 20,000 cash as fees for legal consultation and we had tauntingly put a question as to what was the knotty question for the solution of which the fees were meant and we had said that the Nawab of Bhopal perhaps knew it and that the Publicity Officer of Bhopal who should be called the Coatman of Bhopal was perhaps aware from what private purse the amount came; and that we should ourselves have admired this generosity and the aggrandizement of the leaders if the motive behind it was not to befool the leaders and the object of the generosity was not to stifle the voice of the helpless subjects. In the same connection, after saying that an awakening was taking place among the subjects of the States we had alleged that the Rulers of the States regarded this life of the people as a perilous flood; that attempts were, therefore, being made by them to stop the peoples' voice by winning over the public Leaders and that for this object, the Ruling Chiefs were extending invitations to them; that it was our duty to be forewarned of this new subterfuge and to publicly warn such a leader as accepts the invitations of the States, since the leaders can do their duty by visiting the huts of the poor people rather than by sitting at the Royal Tables.

And in the second paragraph a note relating to the news, that the Nawab Sahib of Bhopal was trying to call Mahatma Gandhi to Bhopal we wrote that the Nawab Sahib realised that like the Panditji the Mahatmaji would not accept the legal consultation fees and we had expressed our opinion, that in point of outspokenness, integrity, and truthfulness as also with regard to personal character, Mahatma Gandhi was an outstanding personality among all the Indian leaders and that we were not prepared to believe it for a moment that the Mahatmaji was capable of accepting legal consultation fees like Pandit Motilal and Pandit Malviya, yet, as in duty bound, we must say that to give encouragement to the Ruling Chiefs in the existence of their present high-handedness was tantamount to using the knife on the necks of their subjects and that we could expect it at least of Mahatmaji that when he visits Bhopal he should not reside in the Royal Palaces but should live in the huts of the poor and indigent people and thus form an estimate of their calamities.

Pandit Motilal Nehru has informed us that he did not go to Bhopal to give any legal advice and that he was not paid a single pie by the Nawab Sahib of Bhopal on any pretext whatever and that to say that he was paid anything was totally baseless and false. We sincerely accept this statement of the Pandit Sahib as true and correct and after withdrawing all our previous statements and the insinuations and implications contained therein, we beg to tender our humble and unconditional apology to him and wish to convey our regret that such defamatory statements about him came to be published in the Riyasat."

5. In his letter (Ex. P-44) dated September 10, 1929, after informing H. H. the Nawab of Bhopal what action he had taken for himself against the applicant, Panditji wrote as follows :—

"Another point is that the man has evidently laid himself open to attack on at least two more sides, Ansari and yourself. There is no reason why he should be spared. In draft apology I have served on him I have inserted a sentence or two in the nature of an apology to you, but I cannot in law insist on these sentences as I cannot constitute myself a sort of general prosecutor for all persons who have been defamed. I should, therefore, like you to consider some action on your own part preferably under the Princes Protection Act."

6. In his second letter, dated October 1, 1929, (Ex. P-45) Panditji wrote to H. H. the Nawab, in connection with this matter as under.—

"On receipt of my second notice Diwan Singh approached me in Simla and Lucknow through a number of friends to tone down the terms of the draft apology so as to make it less humiliating to him. This I flatly refused to do and insisted on the whole thing going in without the alteration of a comma or a full-stop. I have, however, to yield on two points on which my legal position was not very strong. The first related to the omission of the last sentence which embodied an apology to you. It is obvious that I can only go to Court to defend my own character and cannot in law insist on an apology to others even though they may have been similarly maligned in the course of the same libel I could in no sense represent you in any legal proceedings and my insistence on retaining the last sentence would have considerably weakened the case. The Court would have told me to mind my own business and leave others to look after themselves. I justified the retention of that sentence in the interest of Diwan Singh himself but I was told that he did not mind any action which you might take against him. I was obliged to give in.

The deletion of the sentence referring to you makes it all the more necessary for you to take action under the Princes Protection Act and I hope you will put up with the inconvenience involved in the preliminaries."

7. It was probably on these suggestions that H. H. the Nawab of Bhopal moved the Governor-General in Council for an authority, as required by s. 5 of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922, to prosecute the applicant. As the correspondence which passed between the Ruler of Bhopal and the Governor-General, though demanded by the applicant, was not produced by the complainant, it is difficult to say in respect of which of the two aforesaid objectionable articles and with regard to what particular offences under the said Act the sanction was asked for. The sanction, however, was granted, in due course, and is contained in the order (Ex. P-42) which runs as under:—

"NEW DELHI,
November 6, 1929.

ORDER.

"Under the provisions of s. 5 of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922, Khwaja Mohammad Akram Khan, Chief of Bhopal State Police, is hereby authorised by the Governor-General-in-Council to make a complaint of an offence under s. 3 of the said Act against Diwan Singh Maftoon, Editor of the 'Riyasat' of Delhi, in respect of the publication in the Riyasat in its issue dated August 17, 1929, of an article (of which a copy and translation are hereto annexed) on the ground that it brings or is intended to bring H. H. the Nawab of Bhopal into hatred or contempt or excites or is intended to excite disaffection towards him."

C. WATSON,
Political Secretary to the Government of India."

8. On the strength of the above authority Khwaja Mohammad Akram Khan, on December 4, 1929, lodged a complaint, in the Court of the "Railway Magistrate" Hoshangabad (Mr. Nigam), against the applicant under s. 3 of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922, in respect of the first of the two articles published in the Riyasat issue of August 17, 1929, within the jurisdiction of that Court. As this allegation was rather vague, the complainant, on February 9, 1930, presented to Mr. Royzada, who had in the meantime succeeded Mr. Nigam, as the Railway Magistrate, what he styled as an "amplification application" para. 3 of which runs as under :—

"That to avoid any misunderstanding it seems necessary to your humble petitioner to amplify the allegation made by him in the complaint and to clearly state that this Court has jurisdiction to try the case since

(a) The offending article in the said issue of the Riyasat was published at Itarsi Railway Station, at Hoshangabad, and other places within the jurisdiction of this Court.

(b) The said article was also published at the Bhopal Railway Station."

Later on, in his statement as the first witness for the prosecution, the complainant, on March 2, 1932, made the following further clear statement showing how the offence complained of was committed within the jurisdiction of the trying Magistrate.—

"I have been authorised to file this complaint with respect to one offence. My complaint was with respect to publication of the offending article within the jurisdiction of this Court and I treat the publication at Itarsi and Hoshangabad Railway Stations as one offence."

As Mr. Royzada proceeded on leave before finishing the trial, Mr. Syed Ahmad Husain commenced the trial de novo as a First Class Magistrate, on October 5, 1931, and concluded it on June 20, 1933.

9. For the prosecution 21 witnesses were examined by the trying Magistrate himself and 2 were examined on commission. The complainant also filed a large number of documents relevant and irrelevant. Most of the important documents as I shall show later on, remained unproved. On the point of the actual publication of the offending article by the applicant within the jurisdiction of the trying Magistrate the prosecution tendered the following evidence:—

(i) J. M. Shukla (P. W. No. 2), the Agent of the Wheeler's Bookstall at Itarsi Railway Station, stated that he used to sell the Riyasat weekly from his stall and that he sold some copies of the paper which he received on August 18, 1929, presumably of the 17th idem. He did not state from whom he received the copies of the Riyasat.

(ii) Mukhtar Husain (P. W. No. 4) a resident of Harda stated that on August 19, 1929, he had purchased a copy of the issue of the Riyasat dated August 17, 1929, at the Itarsi Railway Bookstall.

(iii) Kunwar Liaqat Shah (P. W. No. 5) stated that a copy of the Riyasat containing the offending article was handed over to him at the Hoshangabad Railway Station by his brother who came from Bhopal and that between Hoshangabad and Itarsi Railway Stations he and Zillul Qadar (P. W. No. 7) read the offending article.

(iv) Zillul Qadar (P. W. No. 7) corroborated this witness.

(v) Abdul Majid (P. W. No. 9), who is a clerk in the Railway Institute at Itarsi which is outside their Railway Station, stated that the Riyasat was one of the papers received in the library from Delhi during the year 1929 and that an issue containing the offending article was received. He also stated that he had written a postcard to the manager of this paper at Delhi complaining of the non-receipt of an issue of the paper prior to October 12, 1929, and received a reply which is Ex. P-74. The witness admitted that he did not know the Urdu language and it is probable that on this account he did not state that he had read the offending article. He did not also state that to his knowledge any person read the offending article in the Railway Institute or elsewhere.

(vi) Wali Muhammad (P. W. No. 12), a resident of Harda, stated that he was the Joint Secretary of the Muslim Reading Room at Harda, that the Riyasat newspaper used to be received in the said Reading Room in the years 1929 and 1930 and that on a requisition from Abdul Ghafur of the Bhopal State Police Service he had handed to him a copy of the Riyasat dated August 17, 1929. The witness did not state that he himself read the offending article or that it was read by anybody to his knowledge or through what agency it reached the Reading Room.

(vii) The last witness on the point is Abde Ali (P. W. No. 19). He stated that he subscribed to the Riyasat paper from the year 1927 to the year 1930, that he used "to get the paper by post from Delhi" and that he had read "the offending article Ex. P-8". In his cross-examination the witness stated that his subscription used to be realised by V. P. P. but that he had not then in his possession anything to prove that he did receive the paper by post.

It is probable that on the strength of the aforesaid evidence six definite places are mentioned in the charge in respect of the offence or "publishing" the offending article. The charge framed against the applicant runs as under:—

"I, S. Ahmad Husain, Magistrate, 1st Class, hereby charge you, Sardar Diwan Singh Maftoon as follows:—

That you on or about August 17, 1929, edited and printed in the issue of that date of the Riyasat newspaper or were the author of the article headed 'Pandit Motilal Nehru and Bhopal' (Ex. P-8) contained in the issue of the paper above and published the same at Itarsi and Hoshangabad Railway Stations between Hoshangabad and Itarsi Railway Stations at Itarsi, Harda and Bankheri, which brings or is intended to bring H. H. the Nawab of Bhopal into hatred or contempt or excites or is intended to excite disaffection towards him and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 3 of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922, and within my cognizance.

And hereby direct that you be tried on the said charge."

It is clear that the applicant was charged with and put upon his trial for nine distinct offences.

11. In his examination as an accused the applicant denied that he was the author or publisher of the offending article or that he supplied the copies of the paper to the Wheeler's Bookstall at Itarsi and the Indian Railway Institute at Itarsi, and to the searching question as to who supplied these papers he significantly replied that the complainant should be questioned on the point. He was not questioned whether he used to supply the Riyasat paper to Abde Ali (P. W. No. 19) or to the Muslim Reading Room at Harda. He admitted that he had published the "Contradiction" Ex. P-14 and the "apology" Ex. P-15. Although considerable matter bearing on the question of the alleged guilt of the applicant was elicited from the several witnesses for the prosecution, no attempt was made by the trying Magistrate to question the applicant on these matters under s. 342 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. This is only one of the several grave irregularities which were unfortunately committed by the trying Magistrate in the trial of this case.

12. In a very elaborate, though diffused, judgment the trying Magistrate found the applicant guilty of the offence under s. 3 of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act and sentenced him to 3 years' rigorous imprisonment (as a Magistrate exercising powers under s. 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code, although the trial was held by him as an ordinary Magistrate of the First Class) without definitely giving any finding in respect of which of the several offences specified in the charge the applicant was guilty. On appeal by the applicant the learned Sessions Judge of Hoshangabad definitely found that the applicant was not only the editor, printer and publisher of the offending article but was also the author of it and was also the proprietor of the paper. The learned Judge overruled almost all the contentions of the applicant as to the illegality of the trial and the merits of his conviction and found him guilty of all the offences stated in the charge. He, therefore, maintained the conviction "under s. 3 of the Act" but reduced the sentence from 3 to one year's rigorous imprisonment. The applicant has now moved this Court in revision challenging the legality and the propriety of his conviction on various grounds.

13. The first ground of the application for revision, that s. 3 of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act was ultra vires of the enacting authority, was expressly abandoned and the other ground relating to the plea of justification was wisely not pressed.

14. The first point pressed by Mr. Kedar for the applicant was that the trying Magistrate had no jurisdiction to proceed to the trial of the present case as it was not proved that the Governor-General-in-Council had authorised the prosecution of the applicant in respect of the publication of the offending article, viz., "Pandit Motilal Nehru and Bhopal" of which Exs. P-8 (b) and P-8 (c) are alleged to be a copy and translation. Although in his earlier statement, as the first witness for the prosecution the complainant stated that both these documents were received along with Ex. P-42 from the Government of India he admitted at a later stage that he could not say whether these were originally forwarded to and received from the Government of India by the State. The witness subsequently made the following definite statement in connection with the documents in question:—

"As far as I remember, the cutting Ex. P-8 (b) was received by me along with the G. G.'s authority to initiate this case * * * *

I am unable to say who actually took this cutting Ex. P-8 (b). I received it with a forwarding endorsement giving a copy of the Political Secretary's letter from the office of the Member, Law and Justice, Bhopal. * * * * *

I am not able to say who made the translation Ex. P-8 (c). Exhibit P-8 (a) was made by me. The former came to me along with the Governor-General's authority."

15. It is on record that after the above statement was made, the applicant's Counsel desired

"the witness to produce in Court the copy of Political Secretary, Bhopal's letter endorsed to the witness by the Secretary, Law and Justice and received by the witness along with the Governor-General's authority."

As has already been noticed before, although the applicant's Counsel also pressed for the production of the correspondence which passed between the Bhopal authorities and the Government of India concerning the sanction for the prosecution of the applicant, the prosecuting Counsel objected to the production of this correspondence with the result that it was not produced in Court. If this correspondence was produced, it might possibly have proved that the sanction was given with respect to the offending article. The former documents were, however, produced by the complainant at the next hearing of the case and are marked as Exs. D-41 and D-41 (a).

16. Exhibit D-41 is merely an uncertified copy of the letter sent by the Secretary in the Political Department of the Government of Bhopal to the Secretary of the Department of Law and Justice, Bhopal. Exhibit D-41 (a) is, however, the original letter forwarding Ex. D-41 to "I. G., Police for favour of necessary action". There is a note appended to this document stating that the "Enclosures" have been handed over to K. M. Akram Sahib, personally". The enclosures, as appear from Ex. D-41, were "1. Order I. Cutting from Riyasat dated August 17, 1929, page 9. 2 pages of English Translation of a leaderette translation in the Weekly Riyasat, Delhi".

17. While the authenticity of the order (Ex. P-42) was not disputed for the applicant, it was vehemently contended that, on the materials on the record, it was not proved that Exs. P-8 (b) and P-8 (c) were the two documents referred to in the order and alleged to have been forwarded by the Governor-General with it. In my opinion this contention is well founded. The complainant has no personal knowledge that as a matter of fact these two documents were received by the Political Secretary to the Government of Bhopal from the Governor-General along with Ex. P-42. The two documents do not bear any seal or endorsement of the Government of India showing their identity with the two documents referred to in Ex. P-42. It was admitted, in the course of the arguments before me, that all correspondence between the State and the Government of India is carried on through the Political Agent, Bhopal, and the Agent to the Governor-General in Central India.

18. There is no proof adduced in the present case to show that the two documents in question were received with Ex. P-42 by the Agent to the Governor-General from the Government of India, that he forwarded them to the Political Agent, Bhopal, and that the latter passed them on to the Political Secretary to the Government of Bhopal. That being the position, even if Ex. D-41 be admitted in evidence, under the provisions of s. 163 of the Indian Evidence Act, it could not be held that the identity of these two documents with those referred to in Ex. P-42 is established under the law. I, however, doubt the applicability of s. 163 of the Indian Evidence Act to the present case. When the applicant demanded a copy of the Political Secretary's letter to the Legal Secretary, Bhopal, he must be deemed to have asked for such a copy as would legally be admissible in evidence according to s. 78 (6) of the Indian Evidence Act and not the one which, on the face of it, was inadmissible in law.

19. For the complainant it was contended by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru that under s. 114, illustration (e), of the Indian Evidence Act, the Court should presume that the two documents referred to in Ex. P-42 were Exs. P-8 (b) and P-8 (c) and were duly forwarded by the Governor-General and reached the complainant through the usual channel. Reliance was placed in this connection on Emperor v. Diwan Chand (1) where, on the presumption that all official acts are done in a regular manner, it was held that the sanction in question was not invalid for the reason that the name of the accused was shown on the back of the paper instead of in the body of the sanction because there was not sufficient space left on the front side. The contention of the learned Counsel would certainly have been well founded if there was any indication on the face of the questioned documents to show that they were the annexures to Ex. P-42. In the absence of such an indication it would be a violent presumption to raise that these were the two documents which were forwarded with Ex. P-42. The presumption could only be made that two documents mentioned in Ex. P-42 had accompanied the order: it had nevertheless to be proved that these two documents were Exs. P-8 (b) and P-8 (c).

20. It was also urged by the learned Advocate for the complainant that since, in the issue of the "Riyasat", dated December 14, 1929, [Ex. P-17, translation Ex. P-17 (a)] the applicant had published a note under the caption "On what offending article has the case been based" and the offending article was reproduced there, s. 58 of the Indian Evidence Act exempted the prosecution from proving that the sanction was given with respect to the publication of the offending article. Section 58 in question runs as under:—

> "No fact need be proved in any proceeding which the parties thereto or their agents agree to admit at the hearing, or which, before the hearing, they agree to admit by any writing under their hands, or which by any rule or pleading in force at the time they are deemed to have admitted by their pleadings.
> Provided that the Court may, in its discretion, require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admissions."

21. In the first place Ex. P-17 was not relied on or proved by the prosecution as an agreed admission by the applicant of the fact of the identity of Exs. P-8 (b) and P-8 (c) with the documents referred to in Ex. P-42. Secondly the article in question is not in the handwriting of the applicant. Thirdly, there is no admission in the article that the questioned documents formed part of Ex. P-42. Fourthly, no question was put to the applicant by the trying Magistrate with regard to the identity of the questioned documents. For all these reasons I overrule the contention that s. 58 of the Indian Evidence Act relieved the prosecution of the duty or proving the identity of the questioned documents with those referred to in Ex. P-42 in order to invest the trying Magistrate with jurisdiction to hold the trial.

22. It is now well established that where sanction is required for starting a prosecution, its terms must be construed liberally. It was, therefore, argued for the complainant that as the order (Ex- P-42) conveying the sanction in the present case indicates that the prosecution is to be for an offence under s. 3 (1) of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act of 1922 in respect of a libellous article published in the issue of the Riyasat, dated August 17, 1929, it was not necessary for the complainant to prove the identity of Exs. P-8 (b) and P-8 (c) with the documents referred to in Ex. P-42. For obvious reasons this contention is untenable.

23. It is in evidence that in the issue of the Riyasat dated August 17, 1929, two obviously defamatory articles, the translations of which are set out in para. 2 above, were printed simultaneously. It was apparently for this reason that the apology drafted by Pandit Motilal Nehru and accepted and published by the applicant, as set out in para. 4 above, also referred to and attempted to explain away the sting of the second article entitled "Mahatma Gandhi will visit Bhopal". The terms of the order (Ex. P-42) are very explicit. It authorises the prosecution of the applicant only in respect of the publication of an article (of which a copy and translation are hereto annexed). It, therefore, follows that the complainant had to establish that the one article referred to in the sanction was the one of which Ex. P-8 (b) was a copy and Ex. P-8 (c) the translation as alleged by him. My finding then is that the complainant has failed to prove that he was authorised by the Governor-General to lodge the present complaint in respect of the article specified in the charge.

24. It is convenient at this stage to dispose of another contention advanced by the learned Counsel for the complainant in connection with the question of sanction, viz., that the order (Ex. P-42) authorised the prosecution of the applicant for all the offences covered by s. 3 (1) of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922. The section in question runs as under:—

"Whoever edits, prints or publishes, or is the author of, any book, newspaper or other document which brings or is intended to bring into hatred or contempt, or excites or is intended to excite disaffection towards any Prince or Chief of a State in India or the Government or Administration established in any such State, shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to five years, or with fine, or with both."

25. As I read the section it is clear to me that it creates four distinct offences in respect of a written matter which brings or is intended to bring into hatred or contempt, or excites or is intended to excite disaffection towards any Prince or Chief or his administration. It hits any one or more of these four persons, viz., the author, the editor, the printer and the publisher of the libellous matter. As has already been stated the terms of the order (Ex. P-42) are absolutely unambiguous. It authorises the complainant "to make a complaint of an offence under s. 3 of the Act", and very clearly restricts the prosecution to one of the four offences under the section by specifying that it is to be "in respect of the publication" of an article. The words underlined (italicised) by me, therefore, leave not the slightest room for the contention that the prosecution was sanctioned in regard to all the four offences covered by s. 3 (1) of the Act. This conclusion is further strengthened by the fact that the complainant himself put such a construction upon the scope and the terms of the order when he made the unequivocal statements quoted in para. 7 above. Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (2), is a clear authority for the proposition that it is open to the authority sanctioning the prosecution in respect of an offence for which sanction is required under the law to make the order comprehensive or restrictive. On an objection that the sanction in that case was bad because it was not specific with regard to the objectionable articles and did not fulfil the requirements of s. 196 of the Criminal Procedure Code, Strachey, J., made the following weighty observations:—

"As to the first point, I am of opinion that the word 'articles' in the order covers and was intended to cover not only articles in the strict sense, but, generally, matter published in the paper which was considered objectionable. As to the second point, if any particular articles or any dates had been specified, the complaint would no doubt have been limited to them, but the effect of no such specification being made is to give him the widest latitude in selecting the matter to be complained of. It is only necessary to see whether the complaint relates to matters falling within the words 'certain articles appearing in the said newspaper,' and it is obvious that it does, and the order is, therefore, complied with. It may be desirable, and I think it is, that orders under s 156 should be expressed with greater particularity, but I cannot read into the section restrictions which are not there"

(2) 22 B 112 at p. 124.

It follows then that the trial of the applicant in respect of the three distinct offences of his being the editor, the printer and the author of the offending article was clearly illegal for want of sanction and vitiated the whole proceedings: Barendra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (3).

26. I now proceed to deal with the next question raised by Mr. Kedar that the trial had further been vitiated on account of the violation of the mandatory provisions of ss. 233 and 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Section 233 lays down that for every distinct offence there shall be a separate charge and a separate trial except in cases covered by ss. 234, 235, 236 and 239. Section 234 permits the consolidation at one trial of three offences of the same kind committed within the space of one year. Section 235 permits the joint trial of more offences than one provided they are committed "in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction". I am not discussing the last two sections referred to in s. 233 as they have no bearing upon the question under consideration.

27. Even on the assumption that there was the requisite authority for the prosecution of the applicant in respect of the offences of his being the author, the editor, the printer and the publisher of the offending article, it is clear that since these are distinct offences under s. 3 (1) of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922, they could not obviously be consolidated for the purpose of holding the joint trial without violation of the mandatory provisions of ss. 233 and 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Reliance was therefore placed, for the complainant, upon s. 235 ibid by urging that as the several acts of writing the offending article, editing printing and publishing it were so connected together as to form the same transaction, the joint trial of the applicant for every such offence was legal.

28. It is indeed very difficult to accept this contention in the absence of the citation of any precedent in its support. None of the illustrations appended to s. 235 lends any support, on the contrary, each one of them seems to repel the contention. It is, therefore, not possible to hold that the several acts of the applicant in composing the offending article, editing and printing it at Delhi and publishing the same at six different places in the Hoshangabad District on different occasions could be regarded as "one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction" within the meaning of s. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code. So far I have only discussed the effect of the joint trial of the first three offences with the others relating to the publication of the offending article.

29. I will now deal with the question if the trial could be held valid by the exclusion of the first three offences from the charge on the ground that they could not form the subject of the trial for want of sanction. Even if such a course were adopted, the invalidity of the proceedings, arising out of the holding of the joint trial in respect of the six remaining offences relating to the publication, would still remain. It is not disputed that every publication or circulation of a libel constitutes a fresh and distinct act and therefore a separate offence: Ratanlal's Law of Crimes, 13th Edition, page 1229, Odgers on Libel and Slander, 6th Edition, pages 132, 139 and 380. It follows then that the applicant having been put on his trial for publishing or circulating the offending article at six different places on six different occasions, the proceedings are entirely void and not merely irregular on the principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Subrahmania Ayyar v. Emperor (4). I, therefore, hold that the trial in the present case is entirely vitiated for the several reasons set forth above.

30. In view of the aforesaid finding as to the illegality of the whole trial, the question whether the trying Magistrate had jurisdiction to hold it assumes secondary importance. Mr. Kedar, however, very candidly admitted in his reply that the objection relating to jurisdiction was raised in the lower Courts and in the opening address here on the erroneous assumption that the authority for prosecuting the applicant was also given with respect to the effence of his having edited the offending article because the word "editor" appears after the name of the applicant in the order (Ex. P-42). On the finding then that the authority did not comprise within its scope the prosecution of the applicant for the first three offences mentioned in the charge it follows that the trying Magistrate had jurisdiction to hold the trial of the offences relating to the publication of the offending article which was said to have taken place within his jurisdiction, because the venue of the offence relating to libel is also laid where it is published or circulated. The trial to this limited extent was, therefore, not in any way irregular and no question of the applicability of s. 531 or ss. 179 or 182 of the Criminal Procedure Code, relied on by the prosecution, arises on this view of the case.

31. I now proceed to consider the soundness or otherwise of the contention of Mr. Kedar that since the offence of "publishing" a libel created by s. 3 (1) of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922, is confined to the place of local or initial publication of it as contemplated by the declaration of the printer and publisher given under s. 5 (2) of Act XXV of 1867, the applicant could not be held criminally responsible for the publication of the offending article at any place other than Delhi which was declared by him "as the place of publication" of the paper Riyasat in Ex. P-20. In my opinion Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and the learned Government Advocate rightly characterised this ingenious contention as untenable. They urged that the word "publisher" appearing in s. 3 (1) of the Act could not possibly be construed in the narrow sense of the local publisher in which it is apparently used in Act XXV of 1867 but must be given its ordinary meaning. The contention appears to proceed wholly on the erroneous assumption that the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, 1922, is a measure directed only against printing presses and persons connected with it, which on the face of it, it does not purport to be. As its preamble shows it is a measure to prevent dissemination of libels against Princes by means of books, newspapers and other documents.

32. Section 2 (c) of the said Act says that 'document' includes any painting, drawing, photograph or other visible representation". Under the last category would clearly fall manuscripts. "Publishing" in s. 3 (1) ibid cannot, therefore, be restricted to publishing libellous matters merely turned out of a printing press or be confined to "publishing" by an editor or printer thereof. As already stated by me in para. 25 above, the section fastens criminal responsibility upon any one or more of these four persons, viz., the editor, the printer, the publisher and the author of any handwritten or printed libellous matter against a Prince. The word "publishing" must then be understood in its ordinary significance of "making known, announcing publicly, or bringing to notice" which are the meanings assigned to that word in the New Standard Dictionary of the English language.

33. I will give an illustration to further explain the scope of s. 3 (1) of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act, as I interpret it. If A is the author and B the editor of a libel which C either prints or reproduces on a typewriter or with the hand and D publishes it in the sense of making, its contents known to any member of the public, all the four would come within the purview of the section. As the publication of the objectionable matter is the gist of the offence of libel, it is clear that criminal liability would not arise against the first three persons until the libel is published. It is possible that the same person may occupy all the four positions of the author, editor, printer or writer and publisher in connection with a libel, as is alleged to have been the case with the applicant in connection with the offending article in the present proceedings. I have, therefore, no hesitation in overruling the contention.

34. Equally untenable and in a way inconsistent stand was taken up by the learned Counsel for the complainant and the learned Government Advocate by urging that in the case of the prosecution of a person like the applicant for publishing a libel contained in a newspaper, the declaration given by him under s. 5 (2) of Act XXV of 1867 is prima facie proof, under s. 7 of that Act, of his having been the publisher at any place other than the declared place of publication wherever the offending article, subsequent to the initial publication, might be published and that no further proof is legally required to connect the accused with the subsequent publication. In other words the contention was that the declaration with regard to the particular place of initial publication holds good in respect of the subsequent publication at other places. The only case cited by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru as a direct authority for this proposition, was Queen Emperor v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (2), and emphasis was laid on certain observations of Strachey, J., appearing at pages 129 and 130* of the report, which will be set out later. The learned Government Advocate cited Gathercole v. Miall (5), in support of the same proposition.

35. I may note that this contention was raised only in connection with the question of the responsibility of the applicant for the publication of the offending article at different places in the Hoshangabad District in case the evidence or record was held legally inadequate to connect him with that publication. I further note that Mr. Kedar also relied on the aforesaid observations in refutation of this contention. Before dealing with the merits of the contention it is necessary, in the first instance, to examine and appreciate the provisions of Act XXV of 1867, relating to declarations. As its preamble shows the measure was enacted to provide for the regulation of printing presses and of periodicals containing news, etc. Section 3 lays down that on every book or paper printed within British India "the name of the printer and the place of printing and if the book or paper be published, the name of the publisher and the place of publication" shall be printed legibly on it. Section 5 (2) provides that the printer and the publisher of every such newspaper shall appear before a Magistrate having local jurisdiction and make the following declaration:—

"I, A. B., declare that I am the printer or publisher, or printer and publisher of the newspaper entitled... ...and printed or published, or printed and published, as the case may be at ... ".

The same sub-section further requires that "the last blank in this form of declaration shall be filled up with a true and precise account of the premises where the printing or publication is conducted". Sub-section (3) requires that if "the place of printing or publication is changed, a new declaration shall be necessary".

36. Omitting such words as are not necessary for the determination of the question under consideration, I will reproduce s. 7 of Act XXV of 1867.

"In any legal proceeding whatever, as well civil as criminal, the production of a copy of such declaration as is aforesaid shall be held (unless the contrary be proved) to be sufficient evidence, as against the person whose name shall be subscribed to such declaration; that the said person was publisher of every portion of every newspaper whereof the title shall correspond with the title of the newspaper mentioned in the declaration."

It is to be noted that the provisions of the Act lay special emphasis on the place of the original publication and do not at all refer to places of subsequent publications. The form of the declaration not merely requires the mention of the original place of publication but also the description of the premises where the printing and publishing is to be carried on. That being the position, the presumptive proof of publication raised by s. 7 of the Act must be understood as referring only to the place specified in the declaration and not to places of subsequent publications elsewhere which the declarant could not possibly dream of at the time of making the declaration. It is significant to note that in refuting Mr. Kedar's contention on the point dealt with in paras. 31 to 33 above, it was admitted by the learned Counsel for the complainant that the word "publisher" was used in Act XXV of 1867 only in the limited or narrow sense of the local publisher. It is not permissible, by the rules of interpretation of statutes, to read into the plain words of s. 7 a meaning, which is sought to be placed on them by the learned Counsel but which they do not apparently bear.

37. Gathercole v. Miall (5), relied on by the learned Government Advocate was decided in 1846. It was an action to recover damages from the defendant who was the printer and publisher of a paper in London. A copy of the said paper containing matter defamatory of the plaintiff reached Chatteris in the Isle of Man where the plaintiff resided and was found placed on the table of the public reading room there. For claiming special damages the plaintiff had to prove that the subsequent publication of the defamatory matter at Chatteris was by or at the instance of the defendant who was the declared publisher of the paper in London. It seems to have been held that because the defendant was the statutory publisher, it was enough to connect him with the publication of the libel at Chatteris and render him liable for enhanced damages. It was admitted by the learned Government Advocate that the Act in force in 1846, when this case was decided was an Act of 1799, viz., 39 George III, C.79 as amended by an Act of 1839, viz., 2 Victoria C. 12. Sections 15 to 33 of the Act of 1839 (39 George III C:79) were admittedly repealed in 1869. In spite of the diligent search by the learned Government Advocate in Law Libraries of Nagpur a copy of the Act which was in force in 1846, and on the basis of which the liability for the subsequent publication at Chatteris was fastened upon the defendant in the case cited was not found available for reference. It is, therefore, impossible to say if the provision of the aforesaid English Statute corresponded in any measure with those of s. 7 of the Indian Act XXV of 1867.

38. Moreover, it is now well settled that in interpreting the statutory provisions of an Indian Act the Courts should examine the language of the Indian Statute itself uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the English Law on which it might have been based. In Abdul Rahim v. Muhammad Barkat Ali (6), their Lordships of the Privy Council made the following observations on the point:—

"It is a sound rule of interpretation to take the words of a Statute as they stand and to interpret them ordinarily without any reference to the previous state of the law on the subject or the English Law upon which it may be founded but when it is contended that the Legislature intended by any particular amendment to make substantial changes in the pre-existing law, it is impossible to arrive at a conclusion without considering what the law was previously to the particular enactment and to see whether the words used in the Statute can be taken to effect the change that is suggested as intended."

In a case decided about a month earlier Ramanandi Kuer v. Kalawati Kuer (7), their Lordships had said:—

"It has often been pointed out by this Board that where there is a positive enactment of the Indian Legislature the proper course is to examine the language of that Statute and to ascertain its proper meaning uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the previous state or the law or of the English Law upon which it may be founded."

In India General Navigation and Railway Co., Ltd. v. Dekhari Tea Company, Ltd. (8) it was observed that when the point to be decided arises under the law of India reference to English Law is unncessary. In Bijoy Singh Dudhuria v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Calcutta (9), it was observed: "that the invocation of the Imperial Income-tax Code and of decisions pronounced upon it is apt to be very misleading in the interpretation of Indian Income-tax legislation which is framed on other and fortunately much simpler lines."

In Brojo Lal Banerjee v. Sharajubala Debi (10), Ghose, J. observed:

"It is fruitless to endeavour to interpret the rules relating to procedure under the Indian Act by reference to what has been decided with regard to another statute in English on different considerations even if the language of the two statutes had been the same."

I must, therefore, hold that the English case cited, even if the Act under which it was decided was available for reference, could afford no precedent for the decision of the point under discussion.

39. The observation in the case of Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (2) relied on by the Counsel on both sides, for their respective contentions, are these:

"As to the preliminary question of the connection of the accused with these articles, I will take the case of the prisoner Tilak, first. The Kesari is a weekly paper, published in Marathi every Tuesday at Poona. It has a considerable circulation, having six or seven thousand subscribers, not only in Poona, but in many other places, including Bombay. This particular issue of the 15th June contained these two articles, and it was sent by post from the office at Poona to the subscribers in Bombay and elsewhere. So the paper's publication extended to Bombay. I only mention this matter of publication in Bombay, because it gives this Court jurisdiction to try this case. Sending the newspaper by post from the office where it is published to other places constitutes in law the publication in Bombay or any other place to which it is so sent. It is not denied by the defence that there was this particular publication in Bombay. It is in evidence that a copy of the paper containing these articles was sent from the office, and posted at Poona on the 15th, and reached a particlular subscriber at Bombay on June 16. The prisoner Tilak is the propietor and editor of that paper and he is also the publisher. He has not attempted to dispute that, but has admitted it. He has also, in his statement before the Committing Magistrate, admitted that he was cognisant of the fact that the paper was despatched to various places, including Bombay. It is further in evidence that before any matter is published in the Kesari, proofs are submitted to him. Upon the evidence you would be justified in holding that he is the publisher of this paper, and also the publisher of these particular articles in the paper. He has signed a declaration under an Act which the Legislature passed in 1867, and that declaration is in evidence. The Act requires the publisher of every newspaper to make a certain declaration that he is the publisher of it. The declaration in regard to the Kesari was made by Tilak some time in 1887. The law says that that may be taken as sufficient prima facie evidence that the person signing the declaration is the publisher of every part of any paper bearing a name corresponding to that mentioned in the declaration. And, therefore, under that Act, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, you will be justified in holding that the prisoner Tilak was the publisher of every article and every word in the Kesari. He published it through his servants and it must be taken as a fact, until the contrary is proved, that he authorised them not only to print it, but to give it out to the world and to distribute it in Poona and various other places, among them being Bombay. You will be justified in holding, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that Tilak was the publisher, and that he published these particular articles at Bombay by causing the paper containing them to be sent to and distributed in Bombay through his agents on June 15. The prisoner has not disputed but on the other hand has boldly avowed his connection with the paper. He has not attempted to shirk any responsibility which attaches to him in respect of these articles."

40. For a proper appreciation of the aforesaid observations it is necessary, in the first instance, to remember that they were made by the learned Judge in the course of his charge to the Jury which probably accounts for the repetition of the same facts and directions more than once in the quotation. Secondly, it must not be forgotten that the responsibility for the publication or circulation of the seditious article in Bombay was not denied by the accused either in the committal proceedings or at the trial. The learned Judge was thus not called upon to give and, therefore, must not be understood to have given his considered decision on the question of the precise presumptive value of the declaration given by the accused under s. 5 (2) of Act XXV of 1867—a point which has been the subject of so acute a controversy before me.

41. As I analyse the observations cited, the following facts appear to have been proved by the prosecution and the accused did not controvert any of them:—

(a) that the accused was the proprietor, editor and publisher of the paper which contained the seditious article;

(b) that before any matter was printed in the paper, proofs used to be submitted to him;

(c) that he was cognisant of the fact that from the office of the original publication at Poona copies of the paper used to be sent by post to the subscribers at Bombay and other places;

(d) that he had made a declaration under Act XXV of 1867 that he was the publisher of the paper, and (e) that he published the paper through his servants.

42. After enumerating the facts in (a), (b) and (c) above, the learned Judge told the jury that they would be justified in holding that the accused "was the publisher of this paper and particular articles in the paper." After this the learned Judge drew the attention of the jury to the fact in (d) and explained to them what the law said in respect of the declaration and concluded that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary they would be justified in holding that he was "the publisher of every article and every word in the Kesari. The word "publisher" appears to have been used here in the sense of the publisher at the place specified in the declaration. This conclusion of mine derives considerable support from the following observations of the learned Judge appearing on page 132* of the report of the case:—

"But this does not apply to Tilak. He stands in a different position. Tilak was the proprietor and publisher of the paper, and he must be taken as authorising the publication of everything appearing in the paper. No evidence has been called on his part to refute or rebut that position. He must be presumed to have been cognisant of what was published in his paper."

The learned Judge then stated the last fact proved, viz., that the accused "published it through his servants" and evidently asked the jury to presume from this fact that the accused must have authorised his servants not only to publish or circulate the paper in Poona but at other places including Bombay and to return a finding that he had published the offending article in Bombay which invested the Bombay Court with jurisdiction to hold the trial.

43. This was then not a case in which there was no evidence, apart from the declaration, to connect the accused with the publication or circulation of the seditious matter in Bombay. The presumption that he published the article in Bombay appears to have been raised solely from the facts proved that he was the proprietor of the paper which was published by him through his servants at places outside the one mentioned in the declaration. The case is, therefore, no authority for the proposition contended for. I am fortified in this conclusion by the fact that Sir Hari Singh Gour also takes the same view of the case. In para. 1241 of his Penal Law of British India, (Volume, I, Fourth Edition), the learned author states as follows:—

"The venue of the offence is laid where the sedition was written or spoken or where it was published by the authority or with the assent of the accused" and cites Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (2) in support of the proposition. It also appears from paras. 10 and 11 of the learned Sessions Judge's judgment that for the complainant reliance was placed before him on the aforesaid case for the view that as the applicant was proved to have been the proprietor of the paper, in which the offending article was originally published, and copies of which were sent down to different places in the Hoshangabad District at his instance by his employees, he must be deemed to have published the same within the jurisdiction of the trying Magistrate.

44. That absurd results, which could not possibly have been contemplated by the Legislature in enacting s. 7 of Act XXV of 1867, would follow, if the present contention is accepted, can forcibly be illustrated by a simple example:—

Suppose that A, who was a passenger from Delhi to Bombay purchased, from the Railway Bookstall at the Delhi Station, a copy of the Riyasat paper of August 17, 1929, containing the defamatory article which is the subject-matter of the present prosecution. After reading the paper at his leisure in the train he threw down the copy, on the platform of the Itarsi Railway Station, as a waste-paper unnoticed by anybody. It was subsequently picked up by B, a member of the Bhopal State Police, who happened to be on the platform awaiting the train to take him to Bhopal. B read the offending article at Itarsi and after reaching his destination handed over the paper to the complainant just to bring to his notice the offending article. We will also assume that this copy was tendered in evidence in the present case and B when examined as a witness simply deposed that he found the paper lying on the platform of the Itarsi Railway Station but did not know how it came there. This evidence would undoubtedly prove the publication of the offending article within the jurisdiction of the trying Magistrate. It is obvious that neither the complainant nor the applicant could, under the circumstances, know that A was the person responsible for the publication of the libel at Itarsi Railway Station. It is clear that the Court would be doing a manifest injustice in presuming under s. 7 of Act XXV of 1867, merely on production of Ex. P-20, that this publication at Itarsi was by the applicant until the contrary was shown by him.

45. Although the learned Advocate for the complainant was unable to point to any evidence directly connecting the applicant with the sale of the Riyasat paper from the Wheeler's Bookstall at Itarsi, the learned Government Advocate asked to presume, that the applicant was responsible for the publication of the paper at Itarsi and five other places specified in the charge, simply from the fact that he was its editor 'because the editor of a newspaper intends that it should have a wide circulation". It appears to me that this proposition was too widely stated. It is common knowledge that in the majority of cases the editor of a newspaper is generally a paid servant of the proprietor drawing a definite sum of money as his remuneration and receives no commission on the sale proceeds of the paper. It is thus the proprietor of the paper and not its editor who may be presumed to intend a wide circulation of the paper and the consequent increase of his income. Neither can such a presumption be drawn against a printer and publisher who have given declarations under s. 5 (2) of Act XXV of 1867 unless it is proved that they have a direct pecuniary interest in the sale of the paper which they were paid only to print and initially publish.

46 (a). Neither can a salaried editor, printer or publisher of a newspaper be held constructively responsible for the circulation of the paper at places different from the place specified in the declaration given by him under s. 5 (2) of Act XXV of 1867 on the principle "that a person is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his act" as was also contended for by the learned Government Advocate. Circulation of a newspaper at places different from the place specified in the statutory declaration cannot be regarded in law as a natural consequence of the fact of editing, printing and publishing it at the place specified in the declaration. No case was cited before me, nor could I discover any, in which a paid statutory editor, printer or publisher was held criminally responsible for the circulation of the libel appearing in his paper at places different from the declared place of publication merely on the presumption that he must have intended to circulate it, or for the only reason that he must be presumed to have intended that the natural consequence of his accepting the service he was paid to discharge at a particular place would be the circulation of the libel at places different from that specified in his declaration. I must, therefore, overrule both these contentions as unsound.

46 (b). The difficulties and dangers of the application of the doctrine of constructive liability enunciated in Jhagru Gond v. Emperor (11) on which admittedly this branch of the argument was founded, to the provisions of s. 3 (1) of the Indian States (Protection against Dissaffection) Act, 1922, would better be illustrated by a simple example:

X is a newspaper printed and initially published in Bombay. A is the proprietor of X and employs in his service, on fixed salaries, B as editor, C as printer and D as the statutory publisher of the paper. E a correspondent of X, sends to B an article containing a libel against a Prince and the article is printed and published in X. X has a wide circulation and in the ordinary course reaches Delhi where it is sold by F, a newspaper agent, to his regular constituent G.

46 (c). The Prince, against whom the libel is published in X, after obtaining the requisite authority from the Governor-General-in-Council under s. 5 of the aforesaid Act, gets a complaint lodged against B, C, D and E through his Inspector-General of Police in the Court of the District Magistrate, Delhi, for "publishing" or circulating the libel in Delhi. At the trial no proof is tendered to connect any of the accused with the publication of X in Delhi though proof is given that E was the author, B the editor, C the printer and D the publisher of X in Bombay.

46 (d). Would the trying Magistrate be justified in holding the accused criminally liable for "publishing" the lible in Delhi on the presumption that each of them intended to publish it in Delhi or for the reason that the natural consequence of their several acts respectively of editing, printing and initially "publishing" and composing the lible in Bombay was the "publication" (circulation) of it in Delhi? It is obvious that the answer to the question must be in the negative.

47. For all these reasons I have no hesitation in holding that at the trial of a person for publishing a libel contained in a newspaper, the presumption permitted to be raised by s. 7 of Act XXV of 1867, as to his identity with the publisher of the offending matter, on production of the copy of his declaration given under s. 5 (2) ibid, is restricted to the prima facie proof that he was the publisher only at the place specified in the declaration and does not extend to the proof of the fact that he was also the publisher of the libel at places not specified in the declaration.

48. I now proceed to consider the contention of the learned Counsel for the applicant that the evidence on record is legally insufficient to sustain the finding reached by the two Courts below that the applicant was responsible for the publication of the offending article at several places within the jurisdiction of the Court. For the prosecution it was urged that since the matter of the applicant's connection with the publication of the offending article is a question of fact and was, upon evidence, found proved, this Court should not interfere with the finding of fact in revision. It is true that although the powers of this Court to interfere with findings of fact in revision are not in any way restricted by s. 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in practice, they are only exercised in exceptional cases and under exceptional circumstances. They are, however, invariably exercised in cases where it is established that the findings of fact reached by the two Courts below are based either on no evidence or on inadmissible evidence or on legally inadequate evidence or are perverse. As an instance I may cite the latest case of Krishna Murari v. Emperor, Criminal Revision No. 360 of 1933 where the learned Judicial Commissioner interfered with a concurrent finding of fact on the sole ground that the residue of the evidence which was not disbelieved by the two Courts below was legally insufficient to sustain it and the conviction was set aside. I am entirly in agreement with the two Courts below—and the fact was not disputed for the applicant before me—that the evidence set out in para. 9 above is sufficient to prove the publication of the offending article at several places within the jurisdiction of the trying Magistrate. But in my opinion it entirely fails to connect the applicant with that publication as required by law.

49. The learned Sessions Judge has based his finding on the matter of the applicant's connection with the publication solely on the fact, which he held established, that the applicant was the proprietor of the paper and the implications arising out of it. But if the very foundation on which the finding was based is held to be slippery, it follows that the conclusion reached must fall down. The complainant as P. W. No. 1 stated in his examination-in-chief that the applicant was the proprietor of the paper in which the offending article was published. When the Counsel for the applicant desired to cross-examine him by putting the question "Now give details of your information concerning the accused being a proprietor of the paper?" the trying Magistrate ruled it out as irrelevant. The order is worded as follows:—"The question is disallowed as the accused is not being prosecuted as proprietor of the paper and his being a proprietor is not a fact in issue or a relevant fact".

50. It was conceded by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru that this order was absolutely incorrect and therefore indefencible. Having passed the aforesaid order the trying Magistrate further erred in permitting the Counsel for the complainant to elicit the information, that the applicant was the proprietor of the paper, in the long cross-examination of Gajjan Singh (D. W. No. 4) and Sardar Ali Sabri (D. W. No. 7). The applicant was neither questioned on this point in his examination as an accused nor could he possibly cross-examine his own witnesses, on it. It was evidently upon the evidence of these two witnesses for the defence that the learned Sessions Judge held that the applicant was the proprietor of the paper and based his further finding, on the point of the applicant's connection with the publication at several places in the Hoshangabad District, on the fact that the applicant was the proprietor and had employed managers.

51. This is what the learned Sessions Judge states in paras. 10 and 11 of his judgment:—

"There is also evidence of the witnesses of the accused that Diwan Singh is the proprietor of this paper. He is the owner of the Riyasat Press and used to manage everything regarding the publication (see the evidence of D. W. No. 7 Sardar Ali Sabri, the last sentence of his cross-examination).

* * * * *

My finding is that the appellant is the proprietor of Riyasat paper and Press and that he employs managers who send his paper to different places as per his instructions."

"Presumption is in favour of the fact on the evidence on record that papers at Indian Railway Institute and Wheeler's Stall are received through the appellant who is the proprietor of the press and this presumption is not rebutted by any cogent and reliable evidence by the accused.

I find that the Riyasat issue was sent to Itarsi Railway Institute and Wheeler's Book-stall as per instructions of appellant (proprietor) and that he is responsible for its publication at Itarsi."

52 (a). It need hardly be said that the procedure adopted by the learned Judge of basing his finding upon this inadmissible evidence was wholly erroneous, the more so when he notes that the cross-examination of the complainant on this point was wrongly disallowed by the trying Magistrate. It follows then that there is no legal evidence on the record to support the finding of the Sessions Judge that the applicant was the proprietor of the Riyasat paper at the time of the publication of the article which is the subject-matter of the charge.

52 (b). Having held that the applicant was the proprietor, it was apparently an easy step for the learned Judge to hold that:

"Exhibits P 39 and P 40—a notice in the issue of July 20, 1929, and September 7, 1929—clearly prove that the accused kept the paper for sale at Wheeler's Railway Bookstall at Itarsi and the explanation given to the contrary as given by Gajjan Singh (D. W. No. 4) does not appear convincing to me and I, therefore, discard it."

Gajjan Singh (D. W. No. 4) stated that he was the manager of the Riyasat paper, and as such, it was his duty to make arrangements for the sale of the paper directly, through the Railway bookstalls and other agencies. The learned Sessions Judge brushed aside this sworn testimony evidently for no other reason than that the applicant was proved to have been the proprietor. No evidence was pointed out to me by the learned Counsel for the complainant which definitely proved that the applicant kept the paper for sale at the Wheeler's Bookstall or supplied it to the Institute at Itarsi. On the contrary there is the unrebutted testimony of Gajjan Singh that the firm of Wheelers at Allahabad were the agents and that copies of the paper used to be supplied to the representative of that firm at Delhi. Gajjan Singh (D. W. No. 4) further stated that the postcard (Ex. P-74) produced by Abdul Majid (P. W. No. 9) "was not issued from my office because it bears no number nor my signature". For circulating the paper by post in outlying places Gajjan Singh assumed the sole responsibility upon himself. I may note here that there is admittedly no finding given by the learned Judge on the point of the publication of the offending article by the applicant at Hoshangabad Railway Station, between Hoshangabad and Itarsi Railway Stations, at Harda and at Bankheri (items Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6 of the charge relating to publication).

53. Although the evidence of Nazir Husain (P. W. No. 15), Ziauddin (P. W. No. 17) and Mubarik Husain (P. W. No. 20), taken together, covers 29 sheets of typewritten matter the learned Sessions Judge has lumped and compressed it in one sentence in para. 10 of his judgment in these words "Notwithstanding this"—alluding to the fact that the cross-examination of the complainant on the point of the proprietorship of the paper was wrongly disallowed by the trying Magistrate—

"there is evidence of witnesses P. W. No 15 Nazir Husain P. W. No. 17 Ziauddin and P. W. No. 20 Mubarik Husain who depose that Diwan Singh was the lessee of Allah or Ittihad Press where the Urdu portion of Riyasat used to be published during 1929, that he used to give instructions to manager to send the papers to different places and the paper was being published under his direct instructions and supervision."

54. It is unfortunate that in a case of this magnitude the learned Sessions Judge did not feel the necessity to scrutinise the evidence of these witnesses in any way and contrast it with that of Gajjan Singh (D. W. No. 4) and Sardar Ali Sabri (D. W. No. 7) in order judicially to determine the question of the responsibility of the applicant for the publication of the offending article within the Hoshangabad District. I have read the whole of this evidence very carefully and am definitely of opinion that the testimony of the aforesaid three witnesses for the complainant is too general and indefinite as compared to that of the two defence witnesses on the point under consideration.

55. Nazir Husain (P. W. No. 15) who did the job work of a caligraphist deposed that he had caligraphed the offending article from a manuscript given by the applicant but Azfar Husain (D. W. No. 5) said that he did this work from the manuscript of Sardar Ali Sabri (D. W. No. 7). Nazir Husain (P. W. No. 15) did, however, nowhere state in his evidence, what the learned Sessions Judge says he did, viz., that the applicant used to give instructions to the manager "to send the papers to different places". The evidence of Ziauddin (P. W. No. 17) was either badly given or imperfectly recorded and it is therefore difficult to determine if he was really an employee on the staff of the Riyasat paper in August 1929 when the offending article was printed. The evidence of this witness on the point of the applicant's connection with the circulation of the paper at places other than Delhi, as quoted below, will speak for itself:—

"During my service as Manager of the Press (Ittihad) I would see the accused on my going to the Riyasat office and the accused would occasionally (Ittifaqia) come to the Press." (I note that Ittifaqia only means casually.) "I do not exactly remember what he used to do in coming to the Press, but he would enquire as to whether work was going on alright and whether work was being received. * * * * The printing of portions of the Riyasat Paper at Ittihad Press was done under the instructions of the accused. The Riyasat paper used to be published and posted from the office under the accused's instructions. This I saw when I happened to go to the Riyasat Office."

The witness was subsequently appointed as the circulation clerk in the Riyasat Office under the Manager, Gajjan Singh (D. W. No. 4), and described his duties in these words:—

"My duty as circulation clerk in the office of the paper was to receive copies and to make entries accordingly in the register and also to have printed chits of addresses posted on the wrappers and to write in manuscript when necessary."

He was not questioned if he posted the copies of the Riyasat to the prosecution witnesses Nos. 1, 9, 12 and 19 or if these persons subscribed to the paper which were the two essential points to be proved in the case. It is indeed a pity that no better evidence than that of Mubarik Husain (P. W. No. 20), a dismissed peon of the Riyasat Office, should have been available to the complainant to prove the several important facts in the case which were sought to be proved by the testimony of this witness. I would say no more about this witness than that his evidence impressed me most unfavourably and left upon me the impression that he was a badly coached up witness. I have, therefore, not the slightest hesitation in holding that the evidence for the prosecution has failed to establish the connection of the applicant with the publication or circulation of the offending article at any of the six places mentioned in the charge.

56. I must not fail to note here that as the applicant was not questioned on the several points relating to the circulation of the paper deposed to by the prosecution witnesses, Nazir Husain (P. W. No. 15), Zia-uddin (P. W. No. 17) and Mubarik Husain (P. W. No. 20), they should not have been pressed aginst him by the two Courts below in recording his conviction. In Tani v. Emperor (12), a Bench of this Court accepted the soundness of the view propounded in Emperor v. Katay Kisan (13), on the scope of the mandatory provisions of s. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code and ordered a re-trial, on the ground that the accused was not questioned and her explanation obtained on certain points brought out in the prosecution evidence which apparently went against her. In the opinion of the Bench such a defect of procedure had vitiated the whole trial.

57. On the strength of Abbas Peada v. Queen-Empress (14) it was contended by Mr. Kedar that since the settlement between the applicant and Pandit Motilal Nehru in respect of the offending article was in the nature of a compromise of an offence under s. 500, Indian Penal Code, all the evidence relating to it tendered by the complainant at the present trial was irrelevant and should not have been admitted by the trying Magistrate. In my opinion this contention is unsound. There was no compromise by the applicant with Pandit Motilal Nehru as contemplated by s. 345 of the Criminal Procedure Code because it is admitted that before the matter went to Court the applicant tendered an unqualified apology which purged him of the charge of defamation against Panditji. Inasmuch as Panditji and H. H. the Nawab were both affected by the offending article with regard to the same matter, it follows that the evidence objected to formed part of the res gestae or the main fact and was relevant particularly to prove not only the animus on the part of the applicant in not withdrawing the defamatory allegations against His Highness but also to rebut the plea of justification set up by him.

58. The last point pressed by Mr. Kedar was that other articles appearing in the Riyasat, viz. Exs. P-2 to P-16, were wrongly used by the two Courts below to prove the intention of the applicant in connection with the offending article when they were not formally proved to have been written by the applicant and Manomohan Ghose v. Emperor (15) was cited in support of this contention. The learned Counsel did not dispute the proposition that these documents were relevant if it was established that they were in fact written by the applicant. It was conceded by the learned Counsel for the complainant that there is no finding by either of the two lower Courts that these articles were written by the applicant. That being the position it is obvious that the Courts below were wrong in relying upon Exs. P-2 to P-16 to prove the guilty intention of the applicant in respect of the offending article on the assumption that they were proved to have been witten by the applicant.

59. It is estonishing that although the complainant and is the Chief of the Bhopal State Police and had the best experienced lawyers, both local and from outside these provinces, for advice and guidance, the trial of the case was conducted with such laxity as to result in its being declared invalid on more grounds than one. As has already been noticed many of the important documents filed in the case were not proved and documents which would certainly have thrown a good deal of light upon the most vital question in issue, were withheld by the complainant. He indeed started well by declaring that he was authorised to file the complaint "with respect to one offence only" and that his complaint was "with respect to publication of the offending article within the jurisdiction of the Court". But he lapsed later into unnecessarily enlarging the scope of the trial by including in it several offences, for some of which he had apparently no authority to complain, and some of which could not be consolidated at one trial under s. 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It was evidently for this reason that what would otherwise have been a simple case was turned into a complicated and cumbrous trial resulting in the introduction—and the consequent waste both of time and money—of a large body of evidence which was irrelevant to the original complaint of the offence of "publication" of the offending article. I, however, attach more blame for this debacle to the trying Magistrate whose was the primary duty to see that the trial was conducted on proper lines.

60. The applicant is not altogether free from blame because, in my opinion, he contributed, in no small measure, to the confusion by his failure to raise proper objections in time. He put forward only such pleas as were apparently untenable and thus suffered the trial to run on wrong lines. But under the law he is not estopped from challenging the validity of the trial. The combined result of these acts of commission and omission has indeed been deplorable but is unvoidable. It is to be noted that as the authority to prosecute the applicant was not limited to any particular place of publication of the offending article the complainant could well have laid the complaint at Delhi which was specified by the applicant as the place of original publication of the paper in his declaration (Ex. P-20). I cannot help remarking that in selecting the venue of the trial at Hoshangabad the complainant unnecessarily took upon himself a grave responsibility and a very heavy burden of proving, by unimpeachable evidence, the publication (circulation) of the offending article by the applicant within the Hoshangabad District.

61. My final conclusion then is that the trial in the present case has been invalid in law for the several reasons set forth above. The next point which arises for consideration is the course to be adopted. For the complainant it was pressed that if the case fell under s. 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code, I should adopt the same procedure as was followed in Radha Nath Karmakar v. Emperor (16), of maintaining the conviction in respect of such charges as to which the trial was not defective and quash the convictions on other charges. But in view of my finding that the present case does not come within the purview of s. 235 ibid, the suggestion of the learned Counsel for the complainant cannot obviously be given effect to. On the other hand, on the basis of Subrahmania Ayyar v. Emperor (4), it was urged by Mr. Kedar that I should simply set aside the conviction if I held that the mode of the trial was illegal. But simply because their Lordships of the Privy Council, in the case cited, did not refer to the question of re-trial, it does not follow that they intended to hold that no re-trial should follow when the first trial breaks down on account of any illegality in conducting it. In such a case the normal course is a re-trial. Manavala Chetty v. Emperor (17), Chetto Kalwar v. Emperor (18) and Gunno v. Emperor (19).

62. I am aware that in Emperor v. Balwantsingh (20), Stanyon, A. J. C., after holding that the trial was invalid on account of the misjoinder of several offenders in a case not covered by s. 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code, did not order a re-trial but left it open to the Crown to repeat the prosecution. He however accepted the principle laid down in Liakat Hossein v. Emperor (21), that s. 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code, would not be an obstacle to the fresh prosecution. It would therefore be apparent that the same result follows upon the adoption of the normal course or the one adopted in Emperor v. Balwantsingh (20), viz., that the applicant must face a fresh trial. The Counsel for the complainant assured me that if a retrial was to be the result the complainant was prepared to conduct it on proper lines.

63. For the reasons set forth above, I accept the application for revision, set aside the conviction of the applicant and order his retrial which would be conducted before such Magistrate of the First Class at Hoshangabad, other than Mr. Syed Ahmad Husain, as the District Magistrate of that place may select. The fresh trial shall, however, be restricted to any three of the six offences of publication which were the subject-matter of the present trial. I have advisedly refrained from expressing an opinion on the merits of the offending article and would enjoin upon the Magistrate who holds the new trial not to be in any way influenced by the opinions expressed by the trying Magistrate or the Sessions Judge on the same point in the present trial. During the course of the new trial, the applicant shall remain on the same bail as before. On fresh bonds being executed the bail bonds given by him and his sureties in this Court shall stand cancelled.

64. I cannot conclude this order without placing on record my high appreciation of the very lucid manner in which the learned Counsel for the applicant and the complainant and the learned Government

LAHORE HIGH COURT

First Civil Appeal No. 2200 of 1929
July 2, 1934
ADDISON AND BECKETT, JJ.

HASSAN MUHAMMAD AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
versus
HUKAM CHAND AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Partition—Suit for—Shares of all parties will be decided usually—Preliminary decree by consent, without rights of defendants—Decree not appealed against—Effect.

It is usual in partition suits to decide the shares of all the parties and not merely of the plaintiffs. But where the defendants agree to passing of a preliminary decree in favour of the plaintiff and partition of his share without their rights being decided and the decree so passed is not appealed against, it cannot be contended that their rights inter se ought to have been decided.

F. C. A. from an order of the Senior Sub Judge, Ludhiana, dated May 4, 1929.

Mr. Abdul Haye, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Dina Nath Bhasin, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff Hukam Chand sued Hassan Muhammad and Musammat Sahibulnisa defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and other defendants for possession by partition of two-thirds share in certain shops. The plaintiff had been collecting the rent of these shops and paying one-third to defendants Nos. 1 and 2. He wanted the property partitioned, however, on account of disputes as to rent and other matters. Defendants Nos. 3 to 6 were impleaded as it was alleged that they had certain rights in the remaining one-third share along with defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 pleaded that defendants Nos. 3 to 6 had no right in the shops but the latter alleged that they had a share in the one-third along with defendants Nos. 1 and 2. On June 7, 1928, defendants Nos. 3 to 6 admitted the plaintiff's claim. Counsel for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 also made a statement admitting the plaintiff's claim but he contended that the property was not capable of partition. He asked that a preliminary decree might be passed. Accordingly on that date a preliminary decree was passed for the partition of the two-thirds share of the plaintiff and a Commissioner was appointed to report whether the property was capable of partition or not. This decree was not appealed against and is final. It did not ascertain the rights of the defendants inter se and this was done with the consent of the defendants as is clear from their statements.

The Commissioner reported that by pulling down walls and building other walls the property might be partitioned. Certain objections were put in as regards his report and the Court itself went to the spot. It recorded a note to the effect that the property could not be partitioned as this would entail demolition of one of the shops endangering the rest of the building as well. It may be mentioned at this stage that defendant No. 1 made a statement before the Commissioner to the effect that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were ready to take the shops on payment of the amount due by them on account of the plaintiff's share and the value of the shops was then stated to be Rs. 16,000. On July 16, 1928, the plaintiff and all the other defendants, except defendants Nos. 1 and 2 asked that the property should be sold as it was incapable of being partitioned. This was, however, objected to by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, though their Counsel was the first to state on June 7, 1928, on the date when the preliminary decree was passed that the property was not capable of partition and though defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had offered before the Commissioner to pay the plaintiff two-thirds of Rs. 16,000, the alleged value of the shops.

On July 16, 1928, the Court ordered that the property be sold by public auction as it was not capable of being partitioned, and a Pleader was appointed to conduct the sale. This order was appealed against by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and the appeal was dismissed after this Court had sent for the records and gone into the matter. Thereafter the property was auctioned over a period of three days, bids starting with the reserved bid of Rs. 25,000. The final bid of Rs. 31,000 was given on the last day by the plaintiff who paid one-third of this amount, namely Rs. 10,533-5-4, into Court for the defendants. When this was done the plaintiff was declared owner by the Court on May 4, 1929. The Court also ordered that the sum of Rs. 10,533-5-4 should remain in deposite until the rights of the defendants inter se had been settled by a separate suit. Against this order defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have appealed.

The first ground argued was that the rights of the defendants inter se should have been decided. It is usual in partition suits to decide the shares of all the parties but in this case, as already shown the defendants agreed to a preliminary decree being passed in favour of the plaintiffs for partition of his two-third share without their rights being decided. There was no dispute as to the share of the plaintiff. This was embodied in the preliminary decree which was not appealed against and which cannot now be challenged. This disposes of the first contention.

It was next argued that the property was worth more than Rs. 31,000 and that the plaintiff should not have been allowed to get it at this small price especially as he had at one time valued the property in suit at Rs. 36,000. It must, however, be remembered that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 at one stage seemed to be of opinion that the property was only worth Rs. 16,000 or Rs. 17,000. The sale was held for three days. The reserve price was Rs. 25,000 and ultimately the decree-holder gave the final bid of Rs. 31,000 which after all is not much short of the highest figure ever estimated. There is thus no force in this contention.

It was also contended that the property should have been partitioned and not sold under the Partition Act IV of 1893. This matter, however, has already been before this Court at the instance of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the present appellants, and cannot be re-opened. As already pointed out it was the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who first raised this contention. For the reasons given, there is no force in this appeal which is dismissed with costs.

Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 992 of 1930

WORT, MOHAMMAD NOOR AND AGARWALA, JJ.

SONEY LALL JHA AND ANOTHER —DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

DARBDEO NARAIN SINGH AND OTHERS —PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 32, 11, 13, 167—Statement of boundaries in documents of title between third parties—Admissibility in evidence—Improper admission of evidence—Whether ground of itself for reversing decision—Boundaries stated in deed between third parties—Whether necessarily against proprietary interest of person making it.

A statement of boundaries in a document of title between third persons who are dead at the time the statement is sought to be put in evidence is admissible in evidence under s. 32 (3) of the Evidence Act only when it is shown first, that at the time the statement was made, it was contrary to the interests of the maker, and, secondly, that at the time it is sought to be used it is a statement of a relevant fact. Lalu Singh v. Sahdeo Singh (1), overruled. [p. 477, col. 2.]

[Case-law discussed.]

Under s. 167 of the Evidence Act, the improper admission of evidence is not a ground of itself for reversing any decision if it appears to the Court before which the objection is raised that, independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision. [ibid.]

Per Wort, J.—As a general question, it cannot be said that boundaries stated in a deed between third parties are necessarily and prima facie against the proprietary interest of the person making it. [p. 474, col. 1.]

Per Mohammad Noor, J.—If the High Court finds in second appeal that the lower Appellate Court has based its judgment partially upon a piece of evidence which was not admissible, it cannot by that reason alone, reverse that finding or remand the case if it can come to the conclusion that there was sufficient evidence on the record to justify the finding. How the High Court is to satisfy itself about the sufficiency of evidence is a matter which must depend upon the facts of each case. [p 476, cols 1 & 2.]

A. from a decision of the District Judge of Darbhanga, dated April 16, 1930, confirming that of the Munsif of Darbhanga, dated August 23, 1928.

Mr. Murari Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. M. Ghosh, K. Sahai and R. Misra, for the Respondents.

Wort, J.—This appeal has been referred to this Bench and its decision depends upon the answers to two questions of law which form part of the reference. These questions are:—

1. Whether statements of boundaries in documents of title between third parties are admissible in evidence under s. 32 (3) of the Evidence Act. Are they admissible under any other provision of the Act if the third parties are dead, or outside the jurisdiction of the Court?, and

2. Was the case of Lalu Singh v. Sahdeo Singh 36 Ind. Cas. 610 (1), correctly decided?

There is another subsidiary question which arises in the appeal. That comes under s. 167 of the Evidence Act and with that I propose to deal in a moment.

The action out of which this appeal arises was for price of timber; and the substantial question in both the Courts below, and the only question in this

(1) 36 Ind. Cas. 610.

Court, was whether the action was barred by limitation. The defendants contended that if the timber had been cut it was cut in the year 1316 Fasli about the year 1909, whereas the plaintiffs' case was that it was cut in the year 1331 Fasli, about the year 1924. The learned Judges in the Courts below decided this issue as all other issues in favour of the plaintiffs. In coming to their decision they not only placed reliance upon the oral evidence in the case, but also on certain documents amongst which was a sale deed between persons who were not parties to the action relating to a plot which was numbered 159. In the sale deed there was, as usual, description of the boundaries, and the eastern boundary was described as the orchard of Soney Lal Jha who was a defendant in this action.

It was contended, when the case came before Mohammad Noor, J. and Luby, J. that that document was not admissible in evidence, and on that point the matter was referred to this Bench as I have said.

The question of whether recitals in deeds between third parties are admissible under the Evidence Act has been discussed in a number of authorities, and they are conflicting. There have been attempts from time to time to admit such documents under s. 11, s. 13 and s. 32 of the Evidence Act; but in this case the argument is limited to ss. 11 and 32. I think the argument as regards s. 11 can be disposed of in a sentence. Section 11 deals with relevant facts to quote the first part of the section, "facts not otherwise relevant are relevant, if they are inconsistent with any fact in issue or relevant fact." We are not in this case concerned with whether a fact is relevant but whether the method of proof is admissible under any provisions of the Evidence Act. It seems, therefore, in my judgment quite clear that s. 11 of the Evidence Act can have nothing to do with this matter. A greater part of the argument of Mr. Ghosh, who appears on behalf of the plaintiff-respondents, has been with regard to s. 32 (3). As a part of his argument he contended that the recital as regards the boundaries were admissible under s. 32 (3) as being a statement made by a person in the ordinary course of business. That question has been dealt with in the Bombay High Court in the case of Ningawa v. Bharmappa (2), the decision being against the argument that a recital of the description with which we have to deal, was a statement made in the ordinary course of business. In my judgment there seems to be no answer to the decision of the Judges of the Bombay High Court in this respect; and it is difficult to see how a statement in a deed of sale, which may be an isolated transaction in the course of a person's lifetime, can be described as made by such a person in the ordinary course of business. The latter part of the sub-section in my judgment, although perhaps not governing the earlier part, gives some indication of what the legislature intended by the words used in the earlier part, the latter part of the section being, "and in particular when it consists of any entry or memorandum made by him in books kept in the ordinary course of business". It seems to me quite clear that what was intended by the legislature was a statement by a person whose duty it was to make such a statement or whose business was such that statement of the kind were to be expected in the ordinary course of things. The law in India in this respect is rather wider in this connection than the Common Law in England but with that we have nothing to do.

The most serious part of the argument is, however, as I have indicated, with regard to sub-s. (3) of s. 32 of the Evidence Act. It is contended that the statement of the boundaries of this holding was a statement made against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the person making it. It seems to me there is a short answer to the argument with regard to the admissibility of the document in this case, an argument which, as far as I can see has been referred to in only one case and that is the case of Brojo Mohan Das Adhikari v. Gaya Prasad Karan (3). It is to be noticed that s. 32 makes admissible or relevant a statement of relevant facts made by such person and then, to quote the sub-section "which are made against the proprietary interest of the person." Therefore the statement in order to be admissible must be a statement of a relevant fact and must be against the proprietary interest of the person making it. The answer to the admissibility of the document in this particular case seems to me to be that the mention of the nature of the boundaries as being Soney Lal's orchard is not a statement of a relevant fact, and indeed if it is a statement of relevant fact it is not a statement against the proprietary interest of the person making it. It will be seen from the authorities that those cases which have held that recitals of this kind are admissible, have held that they are admissible on the ground that the transaction itself was against the proprietary interest of the persons entering into it and, therefore, the connected statement in which the recital of boundaries was, would also be admissible. To repeat myself I would say that apart from the other considerations to which I shall presently refer, it seems to me that in this case at any rate the document would not be admissible for the reason that the statement which is sought to be proved is not, in the first instance, a statement of relevant facts.

I propose, however, to deal with the general proposition contended in connection with the question put before the Court; "Whether statement of boundaries in documents between third parties are admissible under s. 32 (3)." One of the earlier cases by no means the earliest which dealt with this question, is that of Abdullah v. Kunja Behari Lal (4), a decision of Mookherjee, J. and Carnduff, J. After a discussion of the point as to whether recitals of this kind were admissible under s. 11 or s. 13 of the Evidence Act, Mookherjee, J., came to the discussion of the question of whether such recitals were admissible under s. 32 (3), having held against a former view held by him that they were admissible under s. 11 or s. 13. The statement of the learned Judge in the course of his judgment was:

"Now the statement in these deeds that the transferor was owner of the land conveyed or mortgaged and that he was either extinguishing his interest in the land by an absolute sale or placing a restriction on it by way of a mortgage, was undoubtedly one against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the person making it. Consequently the statement as a whole would be admissible in evidence."

"When a person in the position of the vendor, or the mortgagor in the deeds mentioned, transfers the property, and described that the property conveyed or mortgaged is limited by certain boundaries as he makes a statement as to the limited extent of that property."

The learned Judge admits the document on two grounds; one that the transaction itself which was against the proprietary interest of the person making it: and secondly, that the statement of the boundaries being also against the proprietary interest in the sense that it was limited to the property which was the subject-matter of the conveyance. The same learned Judge discussed the question in the case of Imrit Chamar v. Sridhar Panday (5), but although Mr. Ghosh on behalf of the respondents relied upon that decision in support of his contention, it will be seen by an analysis of the judgment that the real question which was there decided was whether a document in dispute came under s. 90 of the Evidence Act.

We then come to the decisions of the same Court which are against the admissibility of those recitals and against the decisions of Mookherjee, J. to which I have just referred. The first case is that of Pramatha Nath Chaudhary v. Krishna Chandra Bhattacharjee (6). In this case the decision in Abdullah v. Kunj Behari Lal (4), was referred to in these words by Greaves, J.:—

"It only remains to refer to a passage in Abdullah v. Kunj Behari Lal (4), where Mr. Justice Mookherjee seems to think that although such a document is not admissible under the provisions of ss. 11 and 13 of the Indian Evidence Act, it may be admissible under the provisions of s. 32 of that Act. But, with great respect to that learned Judge, the reasoning by which he arrives at this view does not seem to me at all conclusive and I find great difficulty in seeing how a mere description of boundaries in a document between third parties can be said to be a statement against the proprietary interest of the person making it It may well be that for some ulterior purpose boundaries may be correctly described in a document, and if this is so, how a statement of that nature can be said to be against the proprietary interest of the person making it, it is somewhat difficult to ascertain."

Then again in Brojo Mohan Das Adhikari's case (3), to which I have already made a passing reference, the learned Judge discussed the matter in some greater detail and the importance of that judgment is, in my opinion, in connection with the point to which I have just made reference, namely, that in order to be admissible a statement must be one of relevant facts. The learned Judge in the course of his judgment has relied upon a judgment of Sir Richard Garth in Brajeshwar Peshakar v. Budhanuddin (7) where the learned Chief Justice said:

"A recital in a deed or other instrument is no doubt in some cases conclusive, and in all cases evidence, as against the parties who make it; and it is of more or less weight, or more or less conclusive against them according to circumstances. It is a statement deliberately made by those parties, which, like any other statement, is always evidence against the persons who make it. But it is no more evidence as against third persons, than any other statement would be."

The learned Judge also goes on to state that although there had been difference of opinion in the Calcutta High Court as regards the matter, the trend of recent cases was to dissent from the view expressed by Mookherji, J. in the first case which I have quoted. It is unprofitable to mention every case that has dealt with this matter for the reason that some have not discussed in detail the question which arose or that they followed the other decisions in the Court in which they were sitting. However, the Bombay High Court specifically dealt with this question in the case which I have already quoted when referring to s. 32 (2). Although dissenting from the view that such recitals were admissible as statements made in the ordinary course of business under s. 32 (2), they have come to a definite conclusion that they were admissible under s. 32 (3) in Ningawa's case (2). The Madras High Court have expressed a view on this matter in the case to which I have made reference on a former occasion when dealing with the point and to which I again wish to make reference, the case of Karuppanna Konar v. Rangaswami Konar (8) an unofficial report, in which Jackson, J. in dealing with the question of whether the statement of boundaries limited to the property, the subject-matter of the deed, was against the proprietary interest of the person making it, made this observation:

"It is now argued that the documents come under sub-cl. (3) of s. 32.....It cannot be said that a statement of boundaries is against the proprietary interest of the person making it except on the assumption that every person must be presumed to own the universe until he makes a statement circumscribing his title. On the contrary a person may be presumed to own nothing until he brings into existence an effective deed evidencing his title to property and such a deed with the boundaries stated therein, is a document not against but in his proprietary interest".

To revert to the decision of the Calcutta High Court in a later case, the case of Srimati Kumuda Kumari Dasi v. Dilsook Roy (9) a decision in which Duval and Mitter, JJ. came to the conclusion that such recitals were not admissible under s. 32 (3).

In the case of Taylor v. Witham (10) the Master of the Rolls deciding that certain entries in the books relating to interest were admissible made this statement:

"I adopt the view of Mr. Bardon Parke in the case of Reg. v. Inhabitants of Lower Hayford (11) that it must be prima facie against his interest, that is to say, the natural meaning of the entry standing alone must be against the interest of the man who made it".

I quote that decision not as a decision on the proper interpretation of an Indian Act, but as stating the principle of interpretation which in my judgment must be applied in construing the Evidence Act. A fact to be relevant, or the method of proof to come within any particular section in my judgment must be or do so prima facie. Its relevancy must not and cannot depend upon the proof of other facts, and it cannot be such a matter capable of more than one interpretation on the face of it. In this case it may be said that a person may be enlarging his proprietary interest or he may be restricting it, and applying the principle to which I have referred, it does not pass the test. In coming to the decision on the question, apart from the authorities to which I have referred, I think I can do no better than to repeat the language of Jackson, J. of the Madras High Court when he says that such a statement can be construed as against the proprietary interest only on the assumption that there are no boundaries to the property of the person who is the maker of the deed and he is the owner of the universe. There must of necessity be some boundary to a man's land: and the statement that there is a certain boundary of the land which is the subject-matter of the deed, merely circumscribes the interest which he is selling and therefore circumscribes the interest which the purchaser obtains in a sense that the vendor says: 'I sold you this much and no more' and that if that is a true statement of the boundaries, it seems to me it is rather in favour of the person who makes it than against his proprietary interest.

After a careful consideration of the authorities, although as I have already said, I have by no means quoted them all, I have come to the conclusion that the statement of boundaries such as this, is not admissible under s. 32 (3) of the Evidence Act. I do not wish to be understood as stating that in no circumstance can recitals relating to boundaries be inadmissible. Statements as regards boundaries may be couched in such language and relating to such matters as to comply with both the parts of the section to which I have referred—statement of relevant fact, and statement made in such a manner as to be statement against the proprietary interest of the person making it. But in my judgment, as a general question, it cannot be said that boundaries stated in a deed between third parties are necessarily and prima facie against the proprietary interest of the person making it; and for the reasons which I have already stated and do not propose to repeat, in this particular case in any event the statement does not comply with the provisions of s. 32. In those circumstances I would answer the first question which is submitted to this Bench in the negative and the second question also.

There remains, however, for the purposes of the disposal of the appeal the other matter which arises under s. 167 of the Evidence Act, that is to say, whether apart from this inadmissible evidence there was sufficient evidence to justify the finding. On an analysis of the judgment of the learned District Judge in my opinion there was such evidence. The learned Judge in the first instance in addressing himself to the question of limitation sets out the oral and the documentary evidence of both parties; it must be remembered in this connection that the onus was on the defendants to show that the action was barred by limitation. The learned Judge having stated the evidence of the plaintiff then deals with the evidence of the defendants and after dealing with this oral evidence makes this statement "The defendants' case of the trees having been cut in 1316 Fasli. has not at all been proved. They have examined three witnesses including defendant No. 2 and they have made most contradictory and inconsistent statements in their evidence." Then the kebala, the subject-matter of discussion in this case, was referred to. Then later reference was made again to the plaintiffs' evidence. The learned Judge says:

"The plaintiffs have also examined other witnesses to prove that the defendants sold the trees to Sujaet Ali and others and that they were cut in Baisakh 1331 Fasli."

Then he refers to another document which went to prove that these trees were actually sold to Sujaet Ali. It seems to me therefore quite clear that these considerations, that there was evidence which quite clearly appears on the face of the judgment of the learned Judge himself, in law justified the conclusion come to, that the plaintiffs' case was a true one that the trees had been cut in the year 1331 Fasli.

For these reasons I would hold that the appeal fails and it must be dismissed with costs.

Muhammad Noor, J.—I agree. As a member of the Bench which referred this case to a Full Bench I would like to add a few remarks of my own.

The two questions referred for the decision of this Bench are:

1. Whether statements of boundaries in documents of title between third parties are admissible in evidence under s. 32 (3) of the Evidence Act. Are they admissible under any other provision of the Act if the third parties are dead, or outside the jurisdiction of the Court?

2. Was the case of Lalu Singh v. Sahdeo Singh 36 Ind. Ca. 610(1) correctly decided?

Evidence Act deals with various topics. Among others it describes what facts are relevant and also how a relevant fact can be proved.

Section 32 of the Act in my opinion describes what class of statements of relevant facts made by persons who cannot be called as witnesses, can be proved. The section says that if a statement of a relevant fact has been made by a man who is dead, or whose evidence cannot be procured under the circumstances of the case, the statement can be used in evidence if it comes under a certain head specified. All the eight clauses of the section are in my opinion based upon the principle that the statements are of such a nature or were made under such circumstance as to guarantee their being true. The section is an exception to the general rule of evidence that statement of a third person is not admissible unless the man is called to give evidence in the case.

Coming now to the question before us, I adhere to the view which I expressed while sending the case to the Full Bench that the statement about the boundaries is not admissible as such under s. 32 (3).

One of the earliest cases in this connection, as my Lord has said is that of Abdullah v. Kunj Behari Lal (4). I shall confine myself to this case, because the other cases in which it has been held that the statement of boundaries is admissible in evidence are either based upon this case or adopts the same reasoning as was adopted in this case. The learned Judges of the Court there observed:

"Now the statement in these deeds that the transferor was owner of the land conveyed or mortgaged, and that he was either extinguishing his interest in the land by an absolute sale or placing a restriction on it by way of a mortgage, was undoubtedly one against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the person making it."

Later on they observed:

"When a person in the position of the vendor or the mortgagor in the deeds mentioned transfers the property, and describes that the property conveyed or mortgaged is limited by certain boundaries he makes a statement as to the limited extent of that property".

It seems, therefore, that the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court held that the description of the boundaries was admissible under s. 32 (3) of the Evidence Act on two grounds, first, that the sale itself of the property is against the proprietary interest of the maker of the statement; and, secondly, on the ground that when he says that the property which he was selling or mortgaging is circumscribed by certain boundaries, the statement is against his proprietary interest. With my profoundest respect to the learned Judges, I think that neither of these grounds are good.

The statement by a man that he was selling his own property, assuming that it was a statement against his proprietary interest, was not a statement of a relevant fact, and therefore, though complying with one of the conditions of the section, it does not comply with the other, namely, that the statement must be of a relevant fact.

Regarding the second ground, I cannot do better than to quote, as my Lord has done, the observation of Jackson, J., of the Madras High Court that a statement by a man that his land is circumscribed by certain boundaries can only be said to be against his proprietary interest if it can be assumed that he is the master of the whole universe. Every man's land is circumscribed by some boundaries. Everyman has a limit to his land. When he says that a certain person has got land north or south or east or west of his land, he does no more than describe his own land. How it can be said that he is making a statement against his proprietary interest, I cannot comprehend. I do not wish to dilate on this topic any longer as I entirely agree with the view which was taken in the two later cases of the Calcutta High Court itself, namely, those of Pramatha Nath Chaudhary v. Krishna Chandra Bhattacharji (6), and Brojo Mohan Das Adhikari v. Gaya Prasad Karan (3). The statement is not admissible under any section. I would therefore answer both the questions in the negative.

Coming to the facts of the present case, the statement about the boundary is made up of two parts. It is said that on the east of the land which was being sold by Musammat Makia there was the orchard of Soney Lal Jha. That the land east of the land being sold was that of Soney Lal Jha was not disputed. The only thing in dispute was whether at that time there was an orchard in it. Therefore, assuming for the sake of argument, that the statement in Makia's deed that east of her land was the land of Soney Lal Jha can by any stretch of imagination be treated as one against her proprietary interest, the fact that there was an orchard can in no sense be said to be so. Once she described her land by stating that east of it was the land of Soney Lal Jha it was not against her interest to state whether it was an orchard or uncultivated land or any other kind of land. This did not in any way affect her proprietary interest. The learned Advocate for the appellants referred us to a very old English decision in Higham v. Ridgway (12), as an authority for the proposition that when portion of a statement is admissible in evidence, the whole of it is admissible; and he has referred us to a decision of this Court in Sitaram Singh v. Khublal Singh (13), where a statement by a widow to the effect that she had borrowed money from certain persons for legal purposes was held to be admissible though only one part was against the interest of the widow, namely that she owed money to certain persons. In my opinion the English Law in this respect goes much beyond what the Indian law is. Under s. 32 of the Evidence Act a statement, in order to be admissible under any of the sub-clauses of that section, must fulfil two conditions; first that the statement itself should be of a relevant fact; and, secondly, that the statement must come within any one of the eight sub-clauses. In the decision of this Court to which I have just referred, the entire statement was taken in evidence as the question of the taking of the money also was a matter in issue in that suit. I doubt, if a case similar to Higham v. Ridgway (12), had come before a Court in India, the statement of date of birth would have been held to be admissible under s. 32 (3) of the Evidence Act. Perhaps it may be held to be admissible under s. 32 (3) as a statement made in ordinary course of business in books of account. Therefore

(12) (1808) 10 East 109; 10 R R 235.

(13) 94 Ind. Cas. 13; 5 Pat. 168; A I R 1926 Pat. 255; 7 P L T 573.

I am clearly of the opinion that the statement as to the boundaries in the document in question was not admissible in evidence. I am, however, of opinion that the admission of this document has not vitiated the finding of fact.

The learned Advocate for the appellants has drawn our attention to the case of Sumitra Kuer v. Ram Koir Chowbey (14), where having held that a certain piece of evidence was not admissible, the learned Judges observed as follows:—

"The second point urged before us was that apart altogether from this document there was sufficient evidence in the case to justify the findings of the lower Appellate Court, and has the document been rejected altogether it would in fact have made no difference to the decision, and that therefore under s. 167 of the Evidence Act we ought not to remand the case for a fresh decision merely on the ground of the improper admission of the evidence. Were we a Court of appeal with a power to go into the evidence and arrive at an independent judgment upon the evidence itself, we would then be in a position to say whether or not the evidence justified the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge, but in second appeal the Court is not in possession of all the evidence or in a position to be able to weigh it and see whether in fact, apart from the objectionable evidence, the lower Court has rightly come to its decision. It is impossible for us here to say exactly how far the mind of the Subordinate Judge was influenced by this document".

It is obvious that it was a piece of evidence which was very largely relied upon by the defendant. The learned Judges say

"We find in the judgment of the Munsif that he states that the defendant relies principally upon the heba deed executed by Musammat Morha..... "

Now this decision was given in the year 1920. Since then the Code of Civil Procedure has been amended and the powers of the High Court in dealing with second appeals have been enlarged and this Court can now itself determine an issue of fact if it finds that it was wrongly determined on account of any error of law and a remand is not always necessary.

In my opinion s. 167 of the Evidence Act provides that if a Court finds that a certain piece of evidence has been wrongly admitted, the decision need not be reversed on that ground provided that the Court holds that there is sufficient evidence on the record to justify the finding. Therefore in second appeal if this Court finds that the lower Appellate Court has based its judgment partially upon a piece of evidence which was not admissible, it cannot by that reason alone, reverse that finding or remand the case if it can come to the conclusion that there was sufficient evidence on the record to justify the finding. How this Court is to satisfy itself about the sufficiency of evidence is a matter which must depend upon the facts of each case. There may be cases in which this conclusion cannot be arrived at unless the whole of the evidence be gone into, and in that case it will be for the Court to decide whether that evidence should be gone into in this Court or the case should be remanded for a fresh hearing of the appeal to the lower Appellate Court. In this particular case I am satisfied that there was plenty of evidence on the record on which the Court could have come to the same conclusion, namely that the defendants had failed to prove that the orchard was cut by them in the year 1316.

Therefore I agree that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Agarwala, J.—The landlords, who are the plaintiffs, sued to recover the price of trees alleged to have been cut by their tenants, the defendants, from plot No. 159 in 1331 Fasli. The defence was that the trees were not cut in 1331 but in 1316 Fasli and that therefore the suit, which was instituted on April 9, 1927, was time-barred.

On the question at issue between the parties the plaintiffs relied inter alia on a kebala by which a plot adjacent to No. 159 was sold in 1321. In this kebala the eastern boundary of the plot sold was described as "The orchard of Soney Lal Jha." Soney Lal Jha is defendant No. 1. This description of the eastern boundary, it was contended by the plaintiffs, proved that in 1321 there were trees standing on the defendants' land, and, therefore, that the defence that the trees had been cut in 1316 was necessarily false.

On this contention two questions arose first, whether the description of the eastern boundary in the kebala of 1321 was admissible; and, secondly, if it was admissible, what weight should be attached to it. The lower Appellate Court which was the final Court of fact, held that the description of the boundary was admissible. For my own part, I may say that, even if it were admissible, it was evidence to which very little weight could be attached, for, the mere description of plot No. 159, which is the plot on the eastern boundary of the plot sold in 1914 as the orchard of Soney Lal Jha, is no guarantee that trees were standing on it in 1914. A piece of land is often known by a name which, however, apt it may have been at the time when it first acquired that name, may have long since lost the character indicated by the name. This, however, was a matter for the Court of fact.

The appellants' grievance in the present appeal is that the statement in the kebala was altogether inadmissible in evidence. The plaintiff-respondent contends that it was admissible by reason of the provisions of the third clause of s. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act as a statement contrary to the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the person who made it. The cases on the point only serve to show the divergence of opinion which exists. Speaking for myself, I am reluctant to adopt a view of law which results in shutting out evidence which might assist a Court of fact in coming to a correct conclusion, except in these instances in which the Legislature has clearly made a particular matter inadmissible. I therefore propose to examine the contention in the present case strictly in reference to the issue in respect of which the statement was sought to be used.

The issue was, whether the trees were on the defendants' land in 1321 ? If the answer was in affirmative, the defence to the plaintiffs' claim failed. The statement in the sale deed of 1914 which the plaintiffs rely on to refute the defence, is the description given of the eastern boundary, namely, "The orchard of Soney Lal." This description contains two declarations : first, that the eastern boundary was an orchard and second, that the orchard belonged to Soney Lal. Section 32 of the Evidence Act, so far as it is relevant to the present discussion is as follows :

"Statements of relevant facts made by a person who is dead are themselves relevant facts when those statements are against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the person making it."

It will be observed that the statement relied on must in order to come within the third clause of s. 32, not only be against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of the person making it, but it must also be a statement of relevant facts. In so far as the description of the eastern boundary in the kebala of 1914 relates to the proprietorship of Soney Lal, it is irrelevant in the present case, as the ownership of plot No. 159 has no bearing on the matter in dispute and nothing turns on that ownership. The other part of the description, that what was on the eastern boundary was an orchard, is the only part of the description relevant to the present case, and I am unable to appreciate how that statement is against the interest pecuniary, proprietary or otherwise of the person who made it.

I would, therefore, answer the first question referred to us by saying that a statement of boundaries in a document of title between third persons who are dead at the time the statement it sought to be put in evidence is admissible in evidence under s. 32 (3) of the Evidence Act only when, in the particular case, it is shown first, that at the time the statement was made it was contrary to the interests of the maker, and, secondly, that at the time it is sought to be used it is a statement of a relevant fact.

With regard to the second question, the facts of the case of Lalu Singh v. Sahdeo Singh 36 Ind. Cas. 610 (1), do not appear, from the Report; but if it decides anything contrary to the opinion I have expressed with regard to the first question referred to us, I would say that that case was wrongly decided.

There remains the question : What course should be followed in view of the decision that the kebala of 1914 was inadmissible ? Under s. 167 of the Evidence Act the improper admission of evidence is not a ground of itself for reversing any decision if it appears to the Court before which the objection is raised that, independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision. Now, in the present case the lower Appellate Court has set out and discussed at length the evidence on the only material issue of fact which arose, namely, whether the defendants' allegation that the trees were cut in 1316, was true or false. The onus lay on the defendants. The Court was not impressed by the evidence for the defence and disbelieved it. It has referred to the fact that the defendants alleged that the trees were sold in 1316 to one Sujaet Ali. Sujaet Ali was examined as a witness by the plaintiffs and Sujaet Ali deposed that he and his son-in-law Kamluddin purchased the trees from the defendant in 1316, and not in 1331, and that they cut the trees in that year. The evidence of Sujaet Ali was corroborated by his son-in-law Kamluddin and this evidence the lower Appellate Court found itself unable to reject, remarking that defendant No. 1 who had sold the trees to Sujaet Ali, had not come into the witness box to deny the latter's assertion that the transaction had taken place in 1931. That evidence, if believed, was conclusive as to the falsity of the defence put forward in the case, and, quite apart from the evidence afforded by the statement in the kebala (Ex. 1), must have resulted in the decision arrived at in the Court below.

I therefore agree that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 318 of 1934
April 30, 1934
DIN MUHAMMAD, J.
SARDAR AHMAD—ACCUSED—APPELLANT
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal trial—Benefit of doubt—Legally insufficient evidence—Moral certainty, if justifies conviction—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 511—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 75—Previous conviction—Mere admission, if sufficient—Documentary evidence, necessity of.

There are no better established principles in the administration of Criminal Law in British and British Indian Courts than (1) that a man can be convicted only on legal evidence, and (2) that if there is a reasonable doubt of his guilt on the evidence, he should have the benefit of it. If the evidence is legally insufficient, the gravest suspicion, amounting even to moral certainty, is not enough to sustain a conviction. An accused person is, therefore, entitled to the benefit of these principles.

All previous convictions which are being relied on for the purposes of s. 75, Penal Code, must be proved in accordance with the law. A mere admission of the accused is not sufficient especially when there is nothing on the record to justify the questioning of the accused under s. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, on that point. Yasin v. Emperor (1), relied on.

Cr. A. from the order of the First Class Magistrate, Lahore, dated December 20, 1933.

Mr. Nazir Hussain, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—Sardar Ahmad of Amritsar has been convicted by Sardar Narindar Singh, Magistrate, First Class, Lahore, with s. 30 powers under ss. 369 and 379 read with s. 75, Penal Code. He has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 369 and to three years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 379 and further under s. 369 his movements have been restricted under s. 8 of Act V of 1918, for a period of three years after his release from jail. He has appealed through jail and the learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer has appeared for the Crown.

The facts of this case are these: Abdul Karim has two daughters by the name of Musammat Fahmeeda, aged about four or five years and Musammat Shedan, aged about two. It is alleged that on or about November 19 or 20, 1933, Sardar Ahmad kidnapped these two girls and removed the gold earrings which Musammat Shedan was wearing. No report was lodged as Abdul Karim thought that the matter was too trivial to be reported to the Police. Some days after this, the Police was investigating some other case, in the course of which the accused is said to have made certain disclosures relating to this occurrence. He pointed out the shop of Ram Rattan, P. W. No. 4, to whom the earrings had been sold and in consequence of the information thus supplied the earrings were recovered intact. Abdul Karim, P. W. No. 2, was also traced as a result of the information furnished by the accused and the earrings were identified by him as his property which Muhammad Shafi goldsmith, P. W. No. 3, had made for his daughter Musammat Shedan a few months before the occurrence.

The case for the prosecution is supported by Abdul Karim, P. W. No. 2, who has related the story as mentioned above, Muhammad Shafi, P. W. No. 3, Ram Rattan, P. W. No. 4 and Fakir Chand, P. W. No. 5 in whose presence the earrings were sold to Ram Rattan, P. W. No. 4, The accused denies his guilt and professes ignorance of all the circumstances that appear in evidence against him. The learned Magistrate on this evidence has remarked that he is satisfied that the accused kidnapped the children with intent to remove ornaments from the person of Musammat Shedan and actually committed theft of the earrings and has consequently found the accused guilty under both ss. 379 and 369. Now, so far as the removal of the earrings and their recovery from Ram Rattan is concerned, I have no doubt that the offence has been brought home to the accused. But I fail to understand how the learned Magistrate was in a position to remark that he has been satisfied that the offence of kidnapping has also been established against the accused. There is not an iota of evidence on the record to prove this part of the case. Musammat Fahmeeda was produced in Court, but her statement was not recorded as the learned Magistrate considered that she was prevented by tender years from understanding the questions put to her. The learned Magistrate appears to have been influenced by the fact that the stolen earrings were recovered at the instance of the accused and he thinks he whould be justified in presuming that the accused has committed the other offence also with which he was charged. In my opinion, this is not the right attitude which the Magistrate should assume in dealing with criminal cases. As long ago as 1908, Protul Chandra Chatterji, J., observed as follows:

"Now I think there can be no doubt that there are no better established principles in the administration of Criminal Law in British and British Indian Courts than (1) that a man can be convicted only on legal evidence, and (2) that if there is a reasonable doubt of his guilt on the evidence, he should have the benefit of it. If the evidence is legally insufficient, the gravest suspicion, amounting even to moral certainty, is not enough to sustain a conviction. An accused person is, therefore, entitled to the benefit of these principles."

The learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer has frankly admitted that he is unable to support the appellant's conviction under s. 369 and in view of the evidence led in the case I entirely agree with him. There is another matter also to which I wish to draw the attention of the learned Magistrate and that is the manner in which the previous convictions of the accused have been brought on the record. It is very unfortunate that even Magistrates of long experience do not care to refer to the Criminal Procedure Code to find out the correct procedure laid down by the law in this respect. Section 511, Criminal Procedure Code, is quite explicit on this point and several authorities of this Court as well as of the other High Courts in India have made it clear that all those previous convictions which are being relied on for the purposes of s. 75, Penal Code, must be proved in accordance with the law. A mere admission of the accused is not sufficient especially when there is nothing on the record to justify the questioning of the accused under s. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, on that point. It is laid down in Yasin v. Emperor (1) that "in order to support a charge of a previous conviction, there should be on the record a copy of some judgment or extract from a judgment or some other documentary evidence of the fact of such previous conviction, as is required by s. 91, Evidence Act, or s. 511, Criminal Procedure Code. Otherwise the examination by a Magistrate of the accused in respect of such previous conviction is without legal warrant or justification."

I do not however wish to interfere in appeal with the sentence passed upon the accused on this charge in spite of this defect as I am of opinion that even if the accused were not a previous convict his conduct was so reprehensible as to deserve a deterrent sentence in the interest of the protection of infants and also because no failure of justice has been caused by such omission. In view of the above, I quash his conviction under s. 369 and acquit him of that charge, but I confirm his conviction and sentence under s. 379 and reject his appeal to that extent. The order passed against him under Act V of 1918, would be ipso facto set aside.

Musammat BALQIS BEGAM—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
Shahzada MUHAMMAD HAMDAM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. III, r. 2—Appeal, if proceeding in suit—Power-of-attorney authorising agent to prosecute claim—Authority to file appeal, if implied.

An appeal is a proceeding in a suit and the prosecution of a suit includes the prosecution of all the proceedings till a final decree is passed. Where a power-of-attorney authorises the agent to prosecute the claim (pervi dawa), it confers an implied authority on him to file an appeal.

S. C. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated August 21, 1929.

Mr. Fayaz Hassan Shah, for the Appellant.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The only point for consideration in this second appeal is whether the special power-of-attorney granted by a pardahnashin lady to her brother-in-law included a power to file an appeal before the learned District Judge from the decision of the Subordinate Judge. The learned District Judge who heard the appeal came to the conclusion that the appeal was not competent because the power-of-attorney did not expressly authorise the agent to file an appeal. She has appealed to his Court.

The important words in the document with which we are concerned are those which authorise the agent to prosecute the claim (pervi dawa). There is ample authority for holding that an appeal is a proceeding in a suit and that the prosecution of a suit includes the prosecution of all the proceedings till a final decree is passed

It is true that the power-of-attorney enumerates certain powers conferred on the agent, but this enumeration is not exhaustive. In the document it is stated that whatever is done by the agent shall be acceptable to the executant thereof. It can hardly be contended that the agent was authorised to withdraw the suit or to compromise it but was not authorised to file an appeal against the decision of the trial Court. After a careful consideration of the terms of the power-of-attorney together with the surrounding circumstances, we are of opinion that it conferred an authority on the agent to file an appeal. This authority is clearly implied in the words "prosecute the claim."

We, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and direct it to hear the case on the merits. Appellant's costs to be paid by the respondents in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. Stamp on appeal to be refunded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 73—application for rateable distribution—Court, if can inquire as to whether decree is proper or bona fide one—Remedy of aggrieved judgment-creditor—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 44—If has application to proceedings under Civil Procedure Code, s. 73

The Execution Court is only concerned with those matters which are set out as being the conditions for participation, and so long as a decree is put forward by the holder of that decree, and the holder of the decree satisfies the Court that the money due under that decree has not been paid, then that decree-holder is entitled to come in and claim a proportionate share in the assets of the judgment-debtor. If any part of those assets is paid out to a decree-holder who has obtained a decree by fraud or collusion or by any other improper means, then a remedy is open to the judgment-creditor who has suffered from those circumstances, as provided for in sub-s. (2), s. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code. The dominating factor with regard to this point is this: that the Court concerned with the distribution of the assets is doing something in connection with execution proceedings. The distribution of assets is only one of the acts in the execution proceedings, and the Court is functioning in an administrative and not in a judicial capacity, and no procedure is provided under the provisions of s. 73 of the Act of 1908, and no machinery exists for the holding of an enquiry of the kind involved in the ascertainment as to whether or not the decree is not a bona fide or proper decree. In re, Sunder Das (1), Puran Chand Baid v. Surendra Narain Singh (5) and Peary Lal Das v. Peary Lal Dewan (6), overruled.

[Case-law discussed.]

Per Jack, J.—Section 44, Evidence Act, has no application to proceedings under s. 73, Civil Procedure Code. It is only decrees under ss. 40, 41 and 42, Evidence Act which are referred to in s. 44, Evidence Act and such decrees have no application in execution proceedings.

C. R. from the decision of the Munsif, North Raozan, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 85 of 1933.

Messrs. Narendra Kumar Das and Durgesh Prosad Das, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Opposite Parties.

Costello, J.—This matter has been referred to a Full Bench by Jack and Khundkar, JJ. on the short point whether a Court acting under the provisions of s. 73, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is entitled to inquire as to the validity of a decree put forward as the basis for claiming a share in the distribution of the assets of the judgment-debtor. The question we have to answer is whether that Court can go behind the decree and investigate the question whether that decree has been obtained by fraud or collusion. There are conflicting decisions upon this point. There are decisions of this Court which have laid it down that it is competent for a Court acting under the provisions of s. 73, Civil Procedure Code, to go behind the decree. There is a number of decisions of other High Courts in the contrary sense. In order satisfactorily to determine the question, it is necessary in the first place to examine the actual provisions of s. 73, Civil Procedure Code, 1908. That section in sub-s. (1) provides that:

"Where assets are held by a Court, and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decree for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons."

Then follow certain provisions as to the method by which distribution is to be effected. It appears therefore that the conditions for rateable distribution are these: (1) the decree-holder claiming to share in the rateable distribution should have applied for execution of his decree to the Court by which the assets are held; (2) such application should be made prior to the receipt of the assets by the Court, (3) the assets of which a rateable distribution is claimed must be assets held by the Court; (4) the attaching creditor as well as the decree-holder claiming to participate in the assets should be holders of decrees for the payment of money; and (5) such decrees should have been obtained against the same judgment-debtor.

The primary condition to be fulfilled, by a person claiming to participate in the assets of the judgment-debtor, is that he must have a decree for the payment of money, which has been obtained by him against the same judgment-debtor. There are no words of qualification in sub-s. (1) as to the nature or validity in law of the decree which is being put forward. It appears, therefore, that all that is required, in order that a decree-holder shall establish his right to participate, is that he should bring forward a decree which he has obtained against the same judgment-debtor. Thereupon it becomes the duty of the Court by which the assets are held, to allow that decree-holder to participate in the distribution equally with the decree-holder who obtained the decree against the judgment-debtor upon which the execution proceedings were instituted. It has been argued by Mr. Das that if that is the position, a door is open to a vast amount of fraudulent claims being put forward based on decrees obtained against the judgment-debtor by his benamidars, or friends, or other persons who have been found willing to lend themselves to a device for defrauding the bona fide judgment-creditor. It was upon the footing of some such argument or rather some such consideration, that the decision in the case in In re Sunder Das (1), was given by Sir Richard Garth who was then the Chief Justice of this Court. That decision was given in 1884, at a time when the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, was in force, and the matter fell to be decided under s. 295 of that Code. We find in the judgment of Sir Richard Garth this passage:

"We think that the words 'decree-holders' or 'persons holding decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor' in s. 295 must mean bona fide decree-holders against the judgment-debtor; and if in point of fact the decree which the present applicant holds is a sham decree, we think that the Court has a right to inquire into the question, and to exclude him from the distribution of assets. If this were not so, it is obvious that the section would give rise to a great deal of fraud, because any man, who is in difficulties, and likely to have executions issued against him by bona fide creditors, might always have a number of sham decrees in readiness against himself, to defeat the claim of any bona fide creditor who might put in an execution."

In my opinion with all possible respect to the learned Chief Justice, there was no justification at all for inserting the qualification "bona fide" in front of the word 'decree' or 'decree-holder.' It is to be observed, as Sir Richard Garth himself mentioned, that the Court had not the advantage of hearing both sides in that case; in other words, the matter was not fully argued before Sir Richard Garth and Beverly, J. It would, therefore, perhaps not be wrong to come to the conclusion that the judgment was given without due consideration of the precise nature of the then existing section. Unfortunately the judgment of Sir Richard Garth in In re Sunder Das (1) has been taken as the foundation for a number of subsequent decisions in this Court, all of them adopting, as far as one can see, the same point of view as that which influenced Sir Richard Garth. The next case in chronological order is one of Bombay, Chhagan Lal v. Fazar Ali (2). That was a decision of Sir Charles Sargent, the Chief Justice and Nanabhai Haridas, J. The head-note of the case runs thus:

"In distributing the proceeds of execution under s. 295, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), the Court has power to inquire into the bona fides of the several decree-holders that apply for rateable distribution, if the same has been called in question and to decide it in the same manner as all other questions that arise in execution. The party aggrieved by such a decision is entitled, under the last clause of the section, to bring a regular suit to compel the successful judgment-creditor in execution to refund."

Sir Charles Sargent in delivering judgment said:

"The question referred to us is not without difficulty, but we are disposed to adopt the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in In re Sunder Das (1)."

So even at that early stage doubt was cast upon the correctness of the decision of Sir Richard Garth, and in the year 1897 doubt was again expressed by Sir Francis Maclean when, sitting with Banerjee, J., he delivered judgment in Raghu Nath v. Chatraput Singh (3). Referring to the case In re Sunder Das (1) and to that of Chhagan Lal v. Fazar Ali (2) Sir Francis said:

'We are invited to say that these cases are not law. If they be law, there is an end of the present situation I must say for myself, that I entertain some doubt as to the soundness of these decisions."

In the year 1901 the matter was raised at any rate indirectly in a case before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (4), and the importance of that case is this: that the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee which was given by Lord Robertson makes it clear that when a Court concerns itself with the distribution of assets under the provisions of s. 295 (as the relevant section then was), the Judge is acting in an administrative rather than in a judicial capacity. Lord Robertson made it clear as appears from the observations at p. 323* of the report that an order for distribution was a step in an execution proceeding. On the previous page His Lordship is reported as saying:

"The scheme of s. 295 is rather to enable the Judge as a matter of administration to distribute the price according to what seems at the time to be the rights of parties without this distribution importing a conclusive adjudication on those rights, which may be subsequently readjusted by a suit such as the present."

If one takes the view that in distributing the assets under the provisions of s. 295 of the previous Code or rather s. 73 of the present Code, the Court is acting in an administrative capacity, it is very difficult to understand how it can be contended that there can be any proper machinery for holding any kind of inquiry into the bona fides of a decree which is put forward as the basis of claim.

Some 11 years after the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to which I have just referred, there came a case which is the first of the two cases which are responsible for the present proceedings before us. In the year 1912 the point which we are now considering, came before a Bench consisting of Mookerjee, J. (that is to say, Sir Asutosh Mookerjee) and Beachcroft J., in Puran Chand Baid v. Surendra Narain Singh, 16 Ind. Cas. 795 (5). By that time of course the present Code of Civil Procedure had been in operation for some years, and, therefore, the matter fell within the provisions of s. 73. The head note of the case says:

"under s. 73, Civil Procedure Code, (1908), it is competent to the Court to investigate whether any of the decree-holders who claim rateable distribution is a benamidar for the judgment-debtor or not."

Mookerjee, J., in course of his judgment considered the matter and effect of sub-s. (1), s. 73. He said:

"On behalf of the opposite party, it has been argued that it is incumbent on the Court to ensure that the process of the Court is not abused, and that the Court must, for that purpose, ascertain whether the decree on the basis whereof rateable distribution is claimed is a real decree"

It appears, therefore, that the same kind of argument was put forward before Mookerjee, J., and Beachcroft, J., as had been effective before Sir Richard Garth many years before, and we have had the same kind of argument put before us today. It is remarkable circumstance that Mookerjee, J., himself said:

"The question of the true construction of this section, that is s. 73, is not free from difficulty: but in view of the decision of this Court in In re Sunder Das (1) which was followed in Chhagan Lal v Fazar Ali (2), we must overrule the contention of the petitioner."

The petitioner had contended that the executing Court had no right to inquire into the validity of a decree. Mookerjee, J., really added little or nothing to the decision or to the reasons for the decision given by Sir Richard Garth, except in so far as appears from the concluding passage of his judgment where he said;

"We must bear in mind, however, that since the date of the decision in In re: Sunder Das (1) and Chhagan Lal v. Fazar Ali (2) the Code of Civil Procedure has been revised and re-enacted; if the legislature had been of the opinion, that the view taken by this Court and by the Bombay High Court was erroneous and did not represent the true intention of the framers of the Code, the language of the section might have been suitably altered; but although we find that the provisions of s. 295 have been reproduced with variations in s. 73, the phraseology has not been so modified as to justify an inference that the decision in In re Sunder Das (1) is no longer good law. We, therefore, accept the view adopted by Sir Richard Garth and Sir Charles Sargent."

With all possible respect to Mookerjee, J., that seems to me an entirely fallacious argument, because the provisions of s. 295 of the Act of 1882 and those of s. 73 of the present Code are entirely different, from the provisions of s. 272 of the Code of 1859. Under the latter section some sort of machinery was provided for the kind of inquiry which is now sought in the present proceedings. What is still more important is that under the provisions of s. 295 of the Code of 1859 there was no provision for the institution of the suit such as is now contained in sub-

s. (2), s. 73. That sub-section provides that:

"Where all or any of the assets liable to be rateably distributed under this section are paid to a person not entitled to receive the same, any person so entitled may sue such person to compel him to refund the assets."

That provision would seem to indicate that the intention of the legislature both under the Code of 1882 and under the present Code was to provide that when essential conditions for rateable distribution were fulfilled, there should be rateable distribution without any inquiry at that stage into the validity of any decree, and a right was given to any party aggrieved subsequently to bring a regular suit in order to secure his full share of the assets. If any part of the assets was distributed to a person who was not lawfully entitled to participate, then it was, under the previous Code, and is under the present Code, open to the judgment-creditor who is aggrieved by that distribution to bring a suit claiming a refund. It seems to me that Mookerjee, J., in Puran Chand Baid v. Surendra Narain Singh (5) did not give sufficient weight to the fact that there was the distinction to which I have just referred between the provisions of the Code in 1859 and those of the two subsequent Codes. Puran Chand Baid v. Surendra Narain Singh, 16 Ind. Cas. 795 (5) was decided in the year 1912, and in the following year the matter again came before the same Bench in Peary Lal Das v. Peary Lal Dawan, 22 Ind. Cas. 407 (6) and it is not surprising that Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., then adhered to the opinion which they had expressed in the case which had been before them in the previous year, and so once more they said that an Execution Court has jurisdiction under s. 73 of the Code, to hold a summary inquiry as to the fraudulent character of a decree obtained by one of the decree-holders claiming rateable distribution.

Now it is those two judgments of Mookerjee, J., which have given rise to all the difficulties in the present proceedings, because when the matter was before the Executing Court, the learned Munsif seems to have thought that those two decisions of this High Court were not correct, and he took the view that an Execution Court ought not to go into the question of the validity of a decree put before it for the purpose of claiming a share in the distribution of assets. The learned Munsif who had to deal with the matter apparently took that view, because he was aware of the fact that other High Courts have consistently adopted a view directly contrary to the view expressed by this Court.

We find that only three or four years after the decision given by Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., the Madras High Court came to the conclusion that an inquiry under s. 73, Civil Procedure Code is of a non-judicial character and a Court charged with the distribution of assets under that section has no power to inquire into the validity or the bona fides of a decree on the strength of which rateable distribution is claimed, and that the only conditions to be satisfied under s. 73 are that there must have been an application before the assets are realized, and that the decree should not have been satisfied. That was a decision of Ayling and Seshagiri Ayyar, JJ., in Saravana Pillai v. Arunachalam Chettiar (7). In the judgment delivered by Seshagiri Ayyar, J., we find a very illuminating passage at p. 843*. The learned Judge referring to the case of Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (4), that is to say, the case decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council says:

"The question before their Lordships related to limitation. It was argued that a suit brought to contest the validity of payments made to one of the decree-holders should have been instituted within a year of the decision under Art. 13, Limitation Act. Their Lordships pointed out that in making a rateable distribution under s. 295, Civil Procedure Code, 1882, the officer was acting departmentally and not as a Court, and that consequently the decision of such an officer was not one which should have been set aside within a year. A comparison of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to rateable distribution and to claim proceedings, fully bears out this view. Order XXI, which relates to execution, makes provisions in rr. 58 to 63 for investigating the claims of third parties. There are similar provisions beginning with r. 97 where there is resistance to delivery of possession to the decree-holder. An inquiry is provided for in these rules, and the unsuccessful party is directed to establish his right in a Court of Law, failing which it is declared that the orders passed under the rules shall be final."

Then in the final part of the judgment their Lordships said:

"No such provision is to be found with reference to s. 73. Clause (2) of that section says that a wrongful distribution may be questioned in a regular suit. No procedure is prescribed for ascertaining the legality or otherwise of the decree under which rateable distribution is sought. The absence of such a provision indicates that the inquiry under s. 73 is non-judicial. It follows from this that an officer distributing the assets can have no power to inquire into the bona fides or otherwise of a decree brought to his notice. Section 73 (c), cl. (4), does not contemplate any such inquiry."

Then the learned Judge emphasized again what are the fundamental conditions for obtaining a share in the distribution. He said :

"The only conditions to be satisfied are: there must have been an application before the assets are realized and the decree should not have been satisfied. Both these are matters of record which do not necessitate any lengthy investigation We are, therefore, on the construction of the provisions relating to the rateable distribution, of opinion that it is not competent to the District Munsif to inquire into the validity of a decree on the strength of which rateable distribution is claimed."

Then he proceeds to examine the earlier decisions which I have mentioned, and to show why he differs from them. That was a decision of the Madras High Court. There is also a very important and significant decision given by a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in Dattatraya Govind Seth v. Purshottam Narayan Seth (8). The decision of the Court was given by Sir Norman Macleod, the then Chief Justice, and at p. 639* we find a passage where the learned Chief Justice after saying that the attention of the Court was drawn to s. 272 in the Code of 1859, proceeded thus :

"Therefore under that Code the Court which was distributing the assets amongst the decree-holders had the power to deal with the question whether any of the decrees passed by itself had been obtained by fraud or other improper means. But this power was not given by s. 295, Act XIV of 1882, nor by s. 73 of the present Code. Section 73 directs that the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons as shall have made applications to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor. On general principles the Court, which would be merely a distributing agency would not have any power to deal with the question whether any of the decrees had been obtained by fraud or other improper means just as in an ordinary case of execution the Court which executes the decree cannot go behind the decree."

With great respect I adopt and entirely agree with what is said in that passage of the judgment of Sir Norman Macleod. In my opinion it concisely and correctly gives the proper view of the point which is now under consideration. The passage indicates that the true view of the law is that the Execution Court is only concerned with those matters which I have set out as being the conditions for participation, and so long as a decree is put forward by the holder of that decree, and the holder of the decree satisfies the Court that the money due under that decree has not been paid, then that decree-holder is entitled to come in and claim a proportionate share in the assets of the judgment-debtor. If any part of those assets is paid out to a decree-holder who has obtained a decree by fraud or collusion or by any other improper means, then a remedy is open to the judgment-creditor who has suffered from those circumstances, as provided for in sub-s. (2), s. 73 of the Act of 1908. To my mind the dominating factor with regard to this point is this: that the Court concerned with the distribution of the assets is doing something in connection with execution proceedings. The distribution of assets is only one of the acts in the execution proceedings, and the Court is functioning in an administrative and not in a judicial capacity, and no procedure is provided under the provisions of s. 73 of the Act of 1908, and no machinery exists for the holding of an enquiry of the kind involved in the ascertainment as to whether or not the decree is not a bona fide or proper decree.

It would not only be inconvenient but indeed impossible for a Court concerning itself with execution matters to decide in a summary procedure, whether or not a decree is a "bona fide," to use the expression of Mookerjee, J., or a "real" decree as said by the other learned Judge in the same case. The last case to which I would refer in order to complete the chronological survey of the authorities is Uma Habiba v. Rasoolan (9), in which Das and Foster, JJ., relying on Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (4), decided in definite terms that:

"an Executing Court making a rateable distribution under s. 73, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, has no power to make enquiries into the bona fides of the decrees of the rival claimants."

In my judgment the decisions in the Madras, Bombay and Patna High Courts represent the correct view of the law. It follows, therefore, that we must say that the cases of Puran Chand Baid v. Surendra Narain Singh 16 Ind. Cas. 795 (5), and Peary Lal Das v. Peary Lal Dawan, 22 Ind. Cas. 407 (6), were not correctly decided. We are unanimously of opinion that the Rule No. 1606 of 1933 which was issued on December 15, 1933, must be discharged Each party will bear its own costs in the Rule as well as in this Reference.

Lort-Williams, J.—Section 272, Act VIII of 1859 provided that:

"If it shall appear to the Court, upon the application of a decree-holder, that any other decree under which property has been attached was obtained by fraud or other improper means, the Court may order that the applicant shall be satisfied out of the proceeds of the property attached so far as the same may suffice for the purpose if such other decree be a decree of that Court, or, if it be a decree of another Court, may stay the proceedings to enable the applicant to obtain a similar order from the Court by which the decree was made".

There was no such provision in s. 295, Act XIV of 1882, nor is there any in s. 73, of the present Code of Civil Procedure. But s. 295 provided that "If all or any of such assets be paid to a person not entitled to receive the same, any person so entitled may sue such person, to compel him to refund the assets," and similar provision is made in s. 73 (2). Nevertheless, in In re Sunder Das (1), Sir Richard Garth, C. J., decided that

"a Court is bound, in cases falling within this section, to satisfy itself whether the claimants are bona fide decree-holders within the meaning of the section, and where it is unable to satisfy itself as to the bona fides of the claim, the Court should exclude such claimant from the distribution of assets".

This is the source and foundation of other decisions in the Calcutta High Court, especially in Puran Chand Baid v. Sundra Narain Singh, 16 Ind. Cas. 795 (5) and Peary Lal Das v. Peary Lal Dawan 22 Ind. Cas. 407 (6) and has given rise to the conflict between this and other High Courts on this point. Sir Richard Garth, at p. 44* of the report in the case of In re Sunder Das (1), said as follows :

"He contends that, so long as his client holds a decree against the judgment-debtor which is unsatisfied (let that decree be ever so fraudulent), still the Court is bound to give effect to it, and to allow the decree-holder to share in the assets. We cannot adopt that view. We think that the words 'decree-holders' or persons holding decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor in s. 295 must mean bona fide decree-holders against the judgment-debtor; and if in point of fact the decree which the present applicant holds is a sham decree, we think that the Court has a right to enquire into the question, and to exclude him from the distribution of assets."

I do not understand the expression a "sham decree". Clearly, the learned Chief Justice did not mean a decree made by a sham Judge or the decree of a sham Court. What he meant was a decree made in respect of a false or fraudulent claim. But that would not make the decree a sham decree. Such a decree would be a good decree and valid, unless and until it was set aside by some competent Court, and as a result of a proper trial. A decree of a competent Court ought not to be set aside as a result merely of some kind of enquiry especially when charges of fraud are involved. Section 73 (2) provides the appropriate remedy in such circumstances. Sir Richard Garth, and other Judges, and Mr. Narendra Kumar Dass, who has ably argued this case, have shown that the remedy given may often turn out to be of little or no value. But that is a result, and probably an inevitable result, of any attempt to make provision for rateable distribution in execution proceedings. Under ss. 270 and 271 of the Code of 1859, the creditor who first attached the property had statutory priority, and, in my opinion, that provision was preferable to the provision for rateable distribution made for the first time in the Code of 1877 and included in the present Code. The function of the Judge under s. 73 is administrative and not judicial. This was decided, with respect to the corresponding s. 295, by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (4), in which Lord Robertson said at p. 322*, of the report:

"The scheme of s. 295 is rather to enable the Judge as matter of administration to distribute the price according to what seem at the time to be the rights of parties without this distribution importing a conclusive adjudication on those rights, which may be subsequently re-adjusted by a suit such as the present."

Therefore, in my opinion, the decisions in Saravana Pillai v. Arunachalam Chettiar (7) and Dattatraya Govind Seth v. Purshottam Narayan Seth (8), are correct, and a Court charged with distribution of assets under s. 73, Civil Procedure Code, has no power to enquire into the validity or the bona fides of a decree on the strength of which rateable distribution is claimed. It follows that in my opinion, the cases of Puran Chand Baid v. Surendra Narain Singh, 16 Ind. Cas. 795 (5) and Peary Lal Das v. Peary Lal Dawan 22 Ind. Cas. 407 (6), on this point, were wrongly decided, as also was the case of In re Sunder Das (1).

Jack, J.—I would only add that s. 44, Evidence Act, to which a reference has been made in supporting the Rule obviously has no application to proceedings under s. 73, Civil Procedure Code. These proceedings are, as held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (4) a step-in-aid of execution. It is only decrees under ss. 40, 41 and 42, Evidence Act which are referred to in s. 44, Evidence Act and such decrees have no application in execution proceedings. It is well recognised that the Executing Court is not entitled to question the validity of the decree.

The strongest argument which has been advanced in support of the Rule is that it is the duty of the Court to go into the question of fraud or collusion in order to prevent abuse of the process of the Court, but, if that were the case, it must be held that in all execution proceedings the Court would be equally entitled to inquire into such questions. That is obviously not so. The remedy which is open to the parties is laid down by the section itself, and the fact that no procedure is provided in the section for such an inquiry shows that it was never intended that such questions should be inquired into. So long as there is an unsatisfied decree capable of execution and application for rateable distribution has duly been made, the applicant is entitled to a share under s. 73, Civil Procedure Code.

M. C. Ghose, J.—Upon a full consideration of the matter, I am of opinion that the Court making a rateable distribution under s. 73, Civil Procedure Code, is not competent to decide whether a decree is bona fide. To hold otherwise would be to introduce complications in the administration of law. A decree may be challenged by an appeal and a second appeal. To allow an Executing Court to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud or collusion would be to establish that Court as a revising Court of decrees and to delay the finality of litigation. The Court making a rateable distribution is not acting in its judicial capacity. The Executing Court cannot go behind the decree. It is complained that the petitioner may be defrauded by false decrees obtained by dishonest people. The answer is that s. 73 (2) provides the remedy. Whenever the petitioner finds that a fraudulent decree is put forward for the purpose of rateable distribution, it is open to him to challenge the decree by instituting a suit in the proper Court for a declaration and he may obtain an injuncution from the Court, staying the distribbution until the matter is decided.

Nasim Ali, J.—I agree. I would like to add a few words with reference to the two cases on which the learned Advocate for the petitioners placed much reliance. In In re Sunder Das (1) the main reason given by the learned Chief Justice is that if before the distribution of assets no inquiry in to the bona fides of the decree be held, the money may be paid to a creditor who may be a pauper from whom it would be very difficult to realize the money afterwards. But if a certain creditor finds that a person is about to participate in the sale proceeds on the basis of a fraudulent decree, his proper remedy is to institute at once a suit and to get an injunction from the Court restraining him from taking any money from the Court till the disposal of the suit. In Puran Chand Baid v. Surendra Narain Singh 16 Ind. Cas. 795 (5), Mookerjee, J., followed the decision in In re Sunder Das (1). But it appears from the judgment that the learned Judge also gave an additional reason in support of the view which was taken by the Chief Justice in the case reported in In re Sunder Das (1) viz :

"Since the date of the decisions in In re Sunder Das (1) and Chhagan Lal v. Fazar Ali (2), the Code of Civil Procedure has been revised and re enacted; if the Legislature had been of the opinion that the view taken by this Court and by the Bombay High Court was erroneous and did not represent the true intention of the framers of the Code, the language of the section might have been suitably altered; but although we find that the provisions of s 295 have been reproduced with variations in s. 73, the phraseology has not been so modified as to justify an inference that the decision in In re Sunder Das (1) is no longer good law."

But it would appear that in the year 1901 the Judicial Committee in Shankar Sarup v. Mejo Mal (4), definitely pointed out that the act of the Court under s. 295 of the Code of 1882 was a ministerial Act. Therefore when the Legislature amended the section in the Code in 1908, no change was considered to be necessary. The Legislature in 1908 accepted the view that the distribution of assets by the Court under s. 73 is a ministerial Act, and in case of dispute, the rights of the parties can be subsequently adjudicated by a regular suit.

Privy Council Appeal No. 18 of 1934
January 24, 1935

SULAIMAN, C. J., NIAMAT-ULLAH AND BENNET, JJ.

BENARES BANK LTD., AGRA—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110, O. XLI, r. 35—Two cross-appeals separately disposed of—One allowed but the other dismissed—Effect—Decision in latter, if not one of affirmance—Appeal to Privy Council—Leave, if can be granted — Two cross-appeals, whether like appeal and cross-objection—Distinction between them.

When two cross-appeals are separately disposed of, the matters in controversy in the two appeals are distinct and separate and, therefore, the adjudications of such matters are also distinct and separate. The dismissal of the plaintiff's appeal is, therefore, an affirmance of the adjudication made by the first Court so far as the matter in controversy in the plaintiff's appeal is concerned. Whereas the allowing of the defendants' appeal is a variation of the adjudication of the first Court so far as the matter in controversy in that appeal is concerned. From the mere fact that a cross-appeal has been allowed and the adjudication varied so far as the matter in controversy in that appeal is concerned, it does not follow that the decision in the other appeal which is dismissed is not one of affirmance. Consequently where there are cross-appeals filed in the High Court on behalf of the plaintiff and the defendant and the defendants' appeal is decreed and the decree of the Court below varied, but the plaintiff's appeal is dismissed, the plaintiff cannot be allowed to appeal against the judgment of the High Court reversing the first Court's decree. Chiranji Lal v. Behari Lal (1), followed and held not affected by Annapurnabai v. Rupriao (7) and Tassaduq Rasul Khan v. Kanshi Ram (8) not followed. [p. 489, col. 1]

[Case-law discussed.]

The case of two cross-appeals is not exactly identical with an appeal and a cross-objection. In the case of an appeal and a cross-objection, there is only one judgment delivered and only one decree is prepared by the Court which embodies the adjudication in both the appeal and the cross-objection. On the other hand, under O. XLI, r, 35, the decree of the Appellate Court has to contain the number of the appeal, the names and description of the appellant and the respondent and a clear specification of the relief granted or other adjudication made. If there are two cross-appeals pending in the High Court, two decrees have to be prepared giving all these particulars. [p. 488, col 2.]

Messrs. P. L. Banerji, B. Malik and Govind Das, for the Applicant.

Messrs. S. K. Dar and A. M. Khwaja, for the Opposite Parties.

Sulaiman, C. J.—This is an application by the plaintiff for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The suit was for recovery of a large sum of money alleged to be due on hundis and as money advanced against certain goods which were shipped. The Court of first instance decreed the claim so far as the amount due on the hundis was concerned, and as regards the other claim confined the decree to a sum of £579 and dismissed the rest of the claim amounting to about Rs. 20,000. Two separate cross-appeals were filed in the High Court. One on behalf of the plaintiff against the dismissal of his claim and the other by the defendants in respect of that part of the claim which was decreed. These two appeals were separately numbered, but were connected and heard together and disposed of by one judgment. Two separate decrees were prepared in the two cases. The value of the subject-matter in dispute in the defendants' appeal has been found to be in excess of Rs. 10,000 and leave has accordingly been granted. The value of the subject-matter in dispute in the plaintiff's appeal was also more than Rs. 10,000, but the appeal was dismissed.

It is conceded by Counsel for the Bank that no substantial question of law arises in this case and that no appeal would lie unless it can be considered that the decree of the High Court is not one of affirmance or that the appeal is otherwise a fit one to go up to His Majesty in Council. The learned Advocate for the plaintiff Bank contends before us that inasmuch as the decree of the Court below has not been affirmed but has been varied in consequence of the appeal having been allowed, the plaintiff has a right of appeal to His Majesty in Council even as regards the decree dismissing the plaintiff's appeal.

In the case of Chiranji Lal v. Behari Lal (1), Richards, C. J., and Tudball, J. laid down that where there are cross-appeals filed in the High Court on behalf of the plaintiff and the defendant and the defendants' appeal is decreed and the decree of the Court below varied, but the plaintiff's appeal is dismissed, the plaintiff cannot be allowed to appeal against the judgment of the High Court reversing the first Court's decree.

This case has been followed by the Lahore High Court in Asa Ram v. Kishen Chand (2). In one case the Madras High Court went a step further and held that even where there is an appeal and a cross-objection and the cross is allowed, the appellant is not entitled to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decree dismissing his appeal. See Ramanathan Chetty v. Subramanian Chetty; 97 Ind. Cas 592 (3).

But this view has not been, strictly speaking, followed in a later case of that Court in Shunmuga Sundara Madaliar v. Ratnavelu Mudaliar (4), where when an appeal and a cross-objection were disposed of together it was considered that there was only one decree which had varied the decree of the first Court.

So fas as the question of an appeal and a cross-objection is concerned, a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Nathu Lal v. Raghubir Singh (5), has recently laid down that where the cross-objection is allowed, the appellant has a right of appeal to His Majesty in Council because the decree of the Court below is varied and the decision is not one of affirmance. Two members of the Bench were inclined to think that cross-objections stand on a different footing from cross-appeals, and the other learned Judge pointed out that there would be a clear anomaly if such a distinction were recognised.

On the other hand, the Patna High Court in the case of Jamuna Prasad Singh v. Jagarnath Prasad Bhawat (6), has laid down that where there are two cross-appeals one of which is allowed, there is a right of appeal to His Majesty in Council even in the other cross-appeal. The learned Judges have based their decision principally on the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Annapurnabai v. Ruprao 86 Ind. Cas. 504 (7).

The question for our consideration is whether the last mentioned Privy Council case has by implication overruled the previous decision of this Court. In Annapurna Bai's case (7), the plaintiff, claiming to be the adopted son of the deceased owner, brought a suit for possession against the surviving widow and also another claimant who professed to have been adopted earlier. The defendants denied the plaintiff's adoption, set up the adoption of the defendant No. 2 and the defendant No. 1 further claimed a maintenance allowance with a charge on the estate. The trial Court holding that the plaintiff's adoption was proved and the alleged adoption of the defendant No. 2 not proved, decreed the claim; but allowed maintenance to the defendant No. 1 less than what she had claimed. Both the defendants appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and the decree of the trial Court was substantially affirmed, but was modified to the extent of increasing the maintenance allowance given to the widow. Both the defendants appealed to their Lordships of the Privy Council and raised the whole question in controversy in the suit. It was held by their Lordships that inasmuch as the decree of the Judicial Commissioner was not one of affirmance of the trial Court, they could appeal as of right. There was only one decree passed by the Judicial Commissioner and that decree had certainly varied the decree of the trial Court, though in favour of the appellants themselves.

The case of two cross-appeals is not exactly identical with an appeal and a cross-objection. In the case of an appeal and a cross-objection there is only one judgment delivered and only one decree is prepared by the Court which embodies the adjudication in both the appeals and the cross-objection. On the other hand, under O. XLVI, r. 35, the decree of the appellate Court has to contain the number of the appeal, the names and description of the appellant and the respondent and a clear specification of the relief granted or other adjudication made. If there are two cross-appeals pending in the High Court two decrees have to be prepared giving all these particulars.

In the leading case of Tassaduq Rasul Khan v. Kanshi Ram (8), their Lordships have made it clear that the word "decision" in s. 596 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, corresponding to s. 110 of the new Code, has not the same meaning as the word "judgment" as defined, but that it means the decision of the suit by the Court. Obviously, therefore, the word "decision" does not mean the reasoning or the basis of the judgment, but the operative portion of the judgment which is ultimately incorporated in the decree that is prepared. Under s. 2 (2) of the Code a decree is the formal expression of an adjudication which so far as regards the Court expressing it conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit. It follows that when two cross-appeals are separately disposed of, the matters in controversy in the two appeals are distinct and separate and, therefore. the adjudications of such matters are also distinct and separate. The dismissal of the plaintiff's appeal was, therefore, an affirmance of the adjudication made by the first Court so far as the matter in controversy in the plaintiff's appeal was concerned. Whereas the allowing of the defendants' appeal was a variation of the adjudication of the first Court so far as the matter in controversy in that appeal was concerned. It is also possible that some times the array of parties in two cross-appeals may not be absolutely identical and the two appeals have, therefore, to be treated as two separate cases. It, therefore, seems to me that from the mere fact that a cross-appeal has been allowed and the adjudication varied so far as the matter in controversy in that appeal is concerned, it does not follow that the decision in the other appeal which is dismissed is not one of affirmance. I am of the opinion that the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Annapurnabai v. Ruprao (7), does not, even by implication, overrrule the decision in Chiranji Lal's case (1).

It is unnecessary to point out that in some later cases the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts have even expressed the view that in spite the ruling the Annapurnabai's case (7), if the variation is not substantial, there is no right of appeal. That view is doubtful, and it is not necessary to express any opinion on it. I would accordingly hold that the applicant is not entitled to appeal to His Majesty in Council as of right. The case is not otherwise a fit one for appeal.

Bennet, J.—I concur with the opinion expressed by the learned Chief Justice.

Niamat-Ullah, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question is whether the decree passed by this Court dismissing the plaintiff's appeal affirmed the "decision" of the trial Court. The 3rd paragraph of s. 110, Civil Procedure Code, in which the word "decision" occurs, also contains the word "decree" in the first line. It is difficult to hold that the Legislature used two different words to convey precisely the same idea. In my opinion the word "decision" on the one hand means something which differs from "judgment" and on the other hand, it does not mean "decree." In Tassaduq Rasul Khan v. Kanshi Ram (8), their Lordships did not hold that the word "decision" should be taken to be equivalent to "decree". They merely held that 'decision' is not judgment. It seems to have been the view of their Lordships that the word "decision" occurring in the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 means "decision of the suit". There is nothing in Annapurnabai v. Ruprao (7), to indicate that in that case their Lordships held otherwise. It is true, the contention put forward on behalf of the appellant was that the decree as distinguished from the judgment of the trial Court, was interfered with on appeal by the High Court. The judgment of their Lordships is brief, and in upholding the appellant's contention their Lordships have not made any observation which might show that the word "decision" should be taken in the same sense in which the word "decree" is defined in the Civil Procedure Code. The view taken by this Court in Chiranji Lal v. Behari Lal (1), does not appear to me to have been in any way affected by the two Privy Council cases referred to above. They did not hold that the word "decision" in s. 110, is equivalent to "judgment". Apparently they took the word in the same sense in which their Lordships used it in the case of Tassaduq Rasul Khan v. Kanshi Ram (8), In my opinion the decision of the suit, so far as it is the subject-matter of the proposed appeal to the Privy Council, is meant by the word "decision" in s. 110, and not the decision of the whole suit.

It seems to me that, even if the word "decision" be taken to mean "decree", as defined in the Civil Procedure Code, the position is not materially different. A "decree" does not mean the document described as such. It means the "formal expression of an adjudication which conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit." If there are several distinct controversies in the suit and the decision of the Court is embodied in one document, described as a decree, the adjudication with regard to each matter in controversy is a decree in itself. In that sense one document, described as a decree, may contain several adjudications on several distinct matters and may amount to several "decrees". In this view, if the decree of this Court in the plaintiff's appeal affirmed, the trial Court's adjudication in respect of the controversy relating to certain advances of money against goods shipped to England by Patni should be taken to be a decree, which is distinct from the decree passed by the trial Court as regards the controversy relating to another distinct matter. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the decree against which the applicant proposes to appeal to the Privy Council affirms the decision of the Court below and the applicant is, therefore, not entitled to leave as of right.

By the Court.—In our opinion the applicant is not entitled to appeal to His Majesty in Council as of right.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Order after enquiry that complaint should be made against applicant—Court not expressing in so many words that a prosecution should follow—Order, if rendered illegal—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193.

Where after making an enquiry the Court ordered under s. 476, Criminal Procedure Code, that a complaint should be made against the applicant under s. 193, Penal Code:

Held, that although the Court did not express in so many words that it was expedient that a prosecution should follow, the order was not thereby rendered illegal and that the prosecution for perjury that followed was a perfectly proper proceeding.

Cr. R. App. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Moradabad, dated October 29, 1934.

Mr. A. M. Khwaja, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application for the revision of an order of the learned Sessions Judge of Moradabad dismissing an appeal against an order passed by the Magistrate under s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by which it was ordered that a complaint should be made against the applicant under s. 193, Indian Penal Code.

The facts are perfectly simple. The applicant is the editor of a paper in Moradabad, and he prosecuted the editor of another paper for defamation. His case was dismissed. The other editor was accused by him of defaming him by saying that the applicant had persuaded the other editor to write against the Nawab of Rampur and the administration of that State, and the applicant in his evidence stated on oath that he had never persuaded the accused to write against the Rampur State. The accused, however, was able to bring a number of witnesses to testify to hearing the applicant giving instructions to the other editor to write articles against the Rampur State. The witnesses were believed by the Court, which dismissed the applicant's case, and in the present proceedings the Magistrate and, after him, the Sessions Judge have found that this evidence, if it is believed, will be sufficient to convict the applicant of perjury, and for this reason his prosecution has been ordered.

Mr. Khwaja has drawn my attention to the provisions of s. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code and has asked me to hold that the Courts have not really formed an opinion that "it is expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made." An enquiry has already been made, and although the Courts have not in so many words expressed the opinion that it is expedient that a prosecution should follow, there can be no doubt that this was the meaning of both, Magistrate and Judge, and in fact the circumstances show clearly that on the face of it the evidence proved that the applicant had told a lie with the object of misleading the Court for purposes of the case that he was prosecuting, so that there can be no question but that the prosecution for perjury is a perfectly proper proceeding. I do not wish to express any opinion as to the value of the evidence on either side, as that is a matter for the Criminal Court to decide. But I cannot hold that the Courts below have acted in a manner that is illegal or improper or incorrect, and that there is any justification for interfering in revision. It has been pointed out that the applicant is an old man of over 50 years and that he has been editing his paper in Moradabad for some 50 years. There are circumstances that may justify lenient treatment of the applicant, if he has erred, but they could not justify the Magistrate in staying his hand on the ground that a prosecution is not expedient in the interests of justice. The application for revision, therefore, fails and is dismissed.

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), ss. 189, 172—Local body, if can give sanction in contravention of bye-laws—Sanction given on penalty—Penalty paid—Committee, if estopped from withdrawing sanction—Order to demolish structure—Legality of—Sanction once given, if can be revoked on ground of mistake

A local body has no power to grant sanction for a building in contravention of its own bye-laws. But where a Municipality has granted the sanction and accepted the required penalty from the applicant, it is estopped from withdrawing it and requiring the applicant to demolish the structure. Yabbicon v. King (1), followed.

Section 172, Punjab Municipal Act, authorises the Committee to prosecute an offender or demolish a structure only when it is erected without its permission in writing. Where, however, a person applies for permission to construct an overhanging balcony in anticipation of sanction and the Committee grants permission inflicting a penalty and the penalty is paid, s. 172 does not apply even if the sanction be in contravention of the bye-laws of the Committee.

There is no provision in the Punjab Municipal Act enabling the Committee to revoke a sanction once given A sanction to build given by a Committee cannot be revoked on the ground that there had been a mistake Shahab-ud-din v. Fazal Din (2), Tullaram v. The Corporation of Calcutta (3) and Vithal Dhonddev Raikar v. Alibag Municipality (4), relied on.

S. C. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated August 29, 1933.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nazir Hussain, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff in this case applied to the Municipal Committee of Ludhiana to construct an overhanging balcony in front of his house and proceeded to construct the same in anticipation of sanction. The Committee was at first inclined to disallow the structure but eventually agreed to let it stand and issued the necessary permission to the plaintiff, imposing on him a penalty of Rs. 35 at the same time.

The Deputy Commissioner pointed out to the Committee that the resolution allowing the plaintiff to construct the above structure in front of his house contravened the bye-laws as it projected into the street further than what was permissible under the bye-laws. The Committee found this to be correct and rescinding its sanction issued a notice to the plaintiff under s. 172, Punjab Municipal Act, for demolishing the structure. The plaintiff thereupon instituted the present suit for an injunction to restrain the Committee from taking such action. The trial Court decreed the suit but the learned District Judge has disallowed it on appeal and from this decision a second appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff.

The sole point for decision in appeal is whether the Committee having once granted permission for the overhanging structure could withdraw it on the ground that the structure contravened a bye-law. The learned District Judge was of the opinion that a Corporation being a creature of the law, cannot exceed its statutory powers and the sanction originally given by the Committee was of no effect. The learned Counsel for the appellant has urged that the bye-laws have not the same force as statutory limitations on the Committee's powers contained in the Punjab Municipal Act, and hence the Committee could grant sanction for the overhanging structure even in contravention of a bye-law as the bye-law is made by itself. No authority has been cited in support of this contention and it does not seem to be sound in view of Yabbicon v. King (1), in which it was held that a local body has no power to grant sanction for a building in contravention of its own bye-laws. But it seems to me that although the Committee had no power to grant the sanction, it would now be estopped from withdrawing it and requiring the plaintiff to demolish the structure. As stated above, the Committee accepted a penalty of Rs. 35 and granted the necessary permission in writing for the structure erected by the plaintiff. This being the case, the Committee had thereafter no power to take action again under s. 172, Punjab Municipal Act; for that section authorises the Committee to prosecute an offender or demolish a structure only when it is erected without its permission in writing. In the present instance such permission having been once granted and a penalty also having been accepted, I do not think the Committee had any power to proceed again under s. 172 and require demolition of the structure. Section 229 empowers the Committee to compound offences on payment of a sum of money and sub-s. (2) of that section lays down that on payment of the money no future proceedings shall be taken in regard to the offence compounded for. There seems to be no provision in the Punjab Municipal Act enabling the Committee to revoke a sanction once given. In Shahab-ud-Din v. Fazal Din (2), it was held that a sanction to build given by a Committee could not be revoked on the ground that there had been a mistake. A similar view was taken in Tullaram v. The Corporation of Calcutta (3) and Vithal Dhonddev Raikar v. Alibag Municipality (4). The same principle would, in my opinion, apply to the present case.

I accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the learned District Judge restore that of the trial Court with costs throughout.

U. P. Excise Act (IV of 1910), s. 60 (a)—Charge for being in possession of liquor in excess of quantity allowed by law—Conviction under s. 60 (a)—Conviction for possession of liquor not lawfully obtained—Whether can be made.

Where the accused was charged for being in possession of country liquor in excess of the quantity than he was allowed by law and was convicted under s. 60 (a), U P. Excise Act of 1910, and it was found on revision that the evidence did not prove that the total quantity in his possession was more than that allowed by law and then the prosecution urged that the conviction was right inasmuch as he was in possession of a bottle of country liquor which was not proved by the accused to have been lawfully obtained :

Held, that the accused could not be convicted for an offence with which he was not charged and hence the conviction was bad and should be set aside.

Cr. R. App. from an oder of the Additional Sessions Judge, Ghazipur, dated November 23, 1934.

Messrs. K. D. Malaviya and K. N. Gupta, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This application is made against a conviction under s. 60 (a) of the U. P. Excise Act of 1910. The circumstances of the case are somewhat peculiar. A raiding party went to the house of the applicant and searched it and found that he had in his possession one bottle of liquor. There was also a small quantity of liquor in a tin and it is said that the applicant himself smelt of liquor. He was, therefore, prosecuted under the Act, and was charged by the Magistrate in the following words:

"That you on or about August 11, 1934... in your house were found in possession of country liquor seven bottles (1 gallon plus one bottle) in contravention of r. 39 (a) of the Excise Act."

Evidence was brought by the prosecution to prove that the applicant had purchased from Namdeo that day liquor amounting to one gallon in a tin, and it was also in evidence that a tin was found in his house which appeared to contain the remains of some liquor. The case for the prosecution, as it appears from the judgment of the Magistrate as well as from the charge, was that the applicant, although at the time of the raid he was only actually in possession of one bottle of liquor, had recently been in possession of a much larger quantity. The Courts found him guilty on the ground that he was in possession of a quantity larger than he was allowed by law. Rule 39 of the rules framed by the excise authorities and contained in the Excise Manual prescribed the limits of the amounts allowed to be kept for retail sale of various kinds of excisable commodities, and as regards country liquor, prescribes the limit of two bottles or one seer or 4 seers or 1 gallon according to circumstances. Ordinarily plain country spirit can only be sold by retail up to a quantity of one seer, and country fermented liquor up to a quantity of four seers. There is nothing to show what the liquor was of which the applicant was in possession when the raid took place, and which he was suspected of having thrown away. So far as the evidence in this case goes, it may have been country spirit or it may have been country fermented liquor, and in that case it would have been necessary for the prosecution to prove that he had been in possession of more than four seers. But even if it can be said that circumstances point very strongly to the conclusion that the applicant had swallowed or had thrown away a certain amount of liquor, there is nothing to show what amount was so disposed of and if it was country fermented liquor, there is nothing to show that the total quantity in his possession had amounted to more than four seers.

It has been pointed out by Dr. Wali Ullah on behalf of the Crown that under r. 436 it is not only the possession of country liquor in excess of the quantity prescribed in r. 39 that is punishable, but also the possession of country liquor which has not been lawfully obtained, and it is, therefore, argued that the applicant has been rightly convicted because he was in possession of a bottle of country liquor which he has not proved that he obtained lawfully. The fact is that the applicant was never asked any questions about that particular bottle. His defence was that he only had one bottle in his possession, and he said that he had not purchased it from Namdeo. If he had purchased it from Namdeo in the manner suggested on behalf of the prosecution, his possession would have been unlawful, because Namdeo had no licence to sell liquor on the Ghazipur side of the Ganges. The prosecution witnesses, however, did not prove that the applicant had purchased liquor from Namdeo in the manner that has been set up. They were suspected of having been won over; but the Courts did not find this part of the case proved, nor would they have convicted the applicant, unless they had believed that he had been in possession of more liquor than he was allowed to possess under the provisions of r. 436 read with r. 39 (a). I am of opinion, therefore, that the application must be allowed on the ground that the applicant cannot be convicted of an offence with which he has not been charged and which is clearly of a different nature from the one with which he has been charged. I, therefore, set aside the order of conviction and direct that the applicant be acquitted and the fine, if paid, be refunded.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal from the Bombay High Court

March 11, 1935

LORD THANKERTON, LORD ALNESS AND SIR SHADI LAL

Thakor VIJAYSINGJI CHHATRASINGJI —APPELLANT

Thakor SHIVSANGJI BHIMSANGJI— RESPONDENT

Hindu Law—Adoption—Widow's power to adopt —Whether depends on the question of vesting or divesting the estate—Natural son adopted in another family—Mother's right to adopt another son to continue the line—Bombay School—Widow having no authority to adopt from her deceased husband—Consent of his kinsmen, if should be obtained.

The power of a Hindu widow to adopt does not depend upon the question of vesting or divesting of the estate. The purpose of an adoption is to secure the continuance of the line, and when the natural son has left no son to continue the line, nor a widow to provide for its continuance by adoption, his mother can make a valid adoption to her deceased husband, although the estate is not vested in her. It is not correct to say that a widow cannot adopt a son to her deceased husband, if by so doing she would defeat an estate other than her own. Amarendra Man Singh v. Sanatan Singh (1), applied.

Where the natural son with his wife cease, to exist for the purpose of continuing the line in the natural family, as a result of their adoption into another family, his mother is entitled to make an adoption to secure that object. When the adoption so made has served the purpose, it cannot be impeached simply because it would defeat the estate which had vested in some other person.

In the Bombay Presidency a widow, who has no authority from her deceased husband, may adopt a son to him, and it is not necessary for her to obtain the consent of his kinsmen. It depends entirely upon her discretion whether she should or should not make an adoption, and her choice in the matter cannot be restricted[1]

Messrs. W. H. Upjohn, K. C. and J. M. Parikh, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. V. Subba Row, for the Respondent.

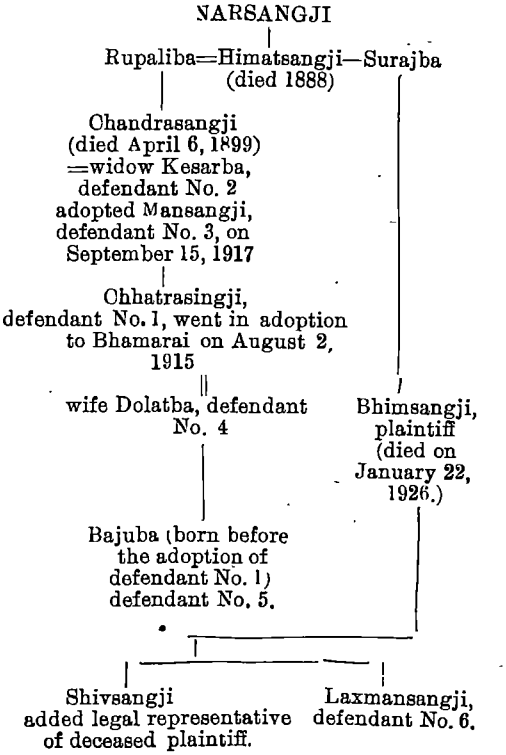
Sir Shadi Lal.—The property, which is the subject matter of the dispute in this appeal, is an impartible taluqdari estate called Ahima estate. It is situated in the Kaira District of the Bombay Presidency, and the parties are agreed that the succession to the estate is governed by the rule of lineal primogeniture, and that females are excluded from inheritance.

The relationship of the persons concerned in the dispute is shown in the following pedigree table :—



Himatsangji died in 1888, leaving him surviving two sons, Chandrasangji and Bhimsangji. The elder son, Chandrasangji, inherited the entire impartible estate, while the younger son, Bhimsangji, received only maintenance. In April, 1899, Chandrasangji died, and was succeeded by his son, Chhatrasingji.

On August 2, 1915, Chhatrasingji was adopted by the widow of one Kunwarsahib Bapusahib, the proprietor of the impartible estate of Bhamaria, which is a larger estate than the Ahima estate. Though Chhatrasingji was at that time, a married man of about 33 years of age, his adoption was in accordance with the Hindu Law as recognised in the Bombay Presidency. He consequently became a member of the adoptive family.

Thereupon, Kesarba, the widow of Chandrasangji, adopted Mansangji as a son to her deceased husband; and the factum of this adoption, which was made on September 15, 1917, is no longer a matter in controversy between the parties. Its validity, however, raises an important issue which their Lordships have to determine.

The suit, which has led to the present appeal, was commenced on February 9, 1918, by Chhatrasingji's paternal uncle, Bhimsangji, who claimed the Ahima estate on the ground that Chhatrasingji, by reason of his adoption in the Bhamaria family, had forfeited his right in the Ahima estate, which then devolved upon the plaintiff in accordance with the rule of lineal primogeniture. The defence to his claim was two-fold. It was urged that Chhatrasingji, in whom the estate had vested on the death of his natural father, was not divested of that estate when he was adopted in the other family; and that, at any rate, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed to it in the presence of Mansangji, who, as the adopted son of Chandrasangji, had a prior right of succession.

The High Court, concurring with the Trial Court, have pronounced against the validity of the adoption of Mansangji, and also held that Chhatrasingji, owing to his adoption in the Bhamaria family, ceased to be a member of the Ahima family, and lost his right in the estate of his natural family. They have accordingly decreed the claim in respect of the properties which constitute the impartible estate of Ahima.

Both these questions are again raised on this appeal, but it is argued that, in view of the recent judgment of this Board in Amarendra Mansingh v. Sanatan Singh (1), the adoption of Mansangji should be held to be valid; and that, as he must take precedence over the plaintiff in the matter of succession, the suit brought by the latter must be dismissed. The High Court declared the adoption to be invalid upon the ground that, though Chhatrasingji with his wife went over to the adoptive family and severed all connection with the natural family, including the heritage and the gotra of the latter family, Kesarba could not make an adoption which would have the effect of divesting the estate which had vested in the plaintiff. The learned Judges proceeded upon the principle that a widow cannot adopt a son to her deceased husband, if by so doing she would defeat an estate other than her own. This view cannot now be regarded as a correct exposition of the law. As observed by this Board in Amarendra Mansingh's case (1) (supra), the power of a widow to adopt does not depend upon the question of vesting or divesting of the estate. The purpose of an adoption is to secure the continuance of the line, and when the natural son has left no son to continue the line, nor a widow to provide for its continuance by adoption, his mother can make a valid adoption to her deceased husband, although the estate is not vested in her. It was on this ground that the adoption in that case which was made by a widow after the death of her natural son without leaving a son or a widow, was found to be valid, though the estate had vested in a collateral of the son. In the present case the natural son with his wife having ceased to exist for the purpose of continuing the line in the Ahima family, his mother was entitled to make an adoption to secure that object. The adoption of Mansangji undoubtedly served the purpose in question, and it cannot be impeached simply because it would defeat the estate which had vested in some other person.

It is, however, contended that the adoption was made by Kesarba not for the spiritual benefit of her husband, but in order to deprive the plaintiff of his inheritance. But there is no evidence to prove any improper motive, and if the adoption causes harm to the plaintiff, it nevertheless confers spiritual benefit upon the husband. Moreover, the rule is firmly established that in the Bombay Presidency a widow, who was no authority from her deceased husband, may adopt a son to him, and that it is not necessary for her to obtain the consent of his kinsmen. It depends entirely upon her discretion whether she should or should not make an adoption, and her choice in the matter cannot be restricted.

The result is that Mansangji is the adopted son of Chandrasangji, and that his adoption is not open to any valid objection. It is clear that in his presence the plaintiff cannot inherit the estate. In view of the insurmountable obstacle created by this adoption in the way of the plaintiff, it is unnecessary to adjudicate upon the right of Chhatrasingji to retain after his adoption in the Bhamaria family, the estate which he had inherited in the Ahima family.

Accordingly their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Ex. S. C. A. from a decision of the District Judge, Meerut, dated March 1, 1933.

Mr. B. Mukerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. P. Sen for Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a judgment-debtor's appeal from an order passed by the learned District Judge, Meerut, disallowing his objection to an application for execution made by the respondent decree-holder. The only plea on which the application was resisted by the appellant was that it was barred by limitation. The learned District Judge over-ruled the plea. Hence this appeal.

The respondent obtained a preliminary decree on foot of a mortgage on September 12, 1923. The appellant preferred an appeal to the Additional Judge, Meerut, who dismissed it on January 7, 1924. A final decree was prepared on November 4, 1924 on the basis of the decree passed by the Court of Appeal. The appellant preferred a second appeal to this Court, which was dismissed on July 7, 1926. After the decree passed by the High Court in appeal from the preliminary decree an application was made by the respondent that the final decree previously prepared be amended, as after the preparation thereof the High Court had upheld the preliminary decree and further costs had been incurred by the respondent and allowed to her by the decree of the High Court. The trial Court, allowed it and directed the amendment of the final decree as prayed. The final decree was amended so as to be in conformity with the decree of the High Court as regards costs. It is not suggested that the so-called amendment of the decree proceedings were taken behind the back of the appellant or that he had no opportunity of resisting the application for amendment. We must take it that those proceedings were taken between the parties and the order of the Court, if otherwise valid and binding, is conclusive between the parties. The order allowing the amendment was passed on January 14, 1929.

The respondent applied on December 23, 1929, for execution of the final decree, computing the period of limitation from the order directing the amendment of the final decree. The judgment-debtor pleaded that the application for execution was barred by limitation, as it had been made more than three years after the date of the final decree as originally prepared, i.e., November 4, 1924. It is conceded that, unless the limitation is taken to run from the order of amendment of the final decree, the application is barred. The learned District Judge, who over-ruled the plea of limitation, held that

"After a preliminary decree passed under O. XXXIV, r. 4, has been confirmed in appeal, the decree-holder again has a right to obtain a final decree in the terms of the preliminary decree on appeal. This is what really happened, though instead of saying that a final decree in the terms of the preliminary decree on appeal be prepared it was said that the final decree already passed be amended by addition of the costs awarded by the Appellate Court."

The learned Advocate for the appellant has strenuously contended that the final decree, dated November 4, 1924, had already become barred by limitation when the respondent applied for amendment thereof and when the Court ordered its amendment, and that consequently the decree could not be revived by amendment. He has quoted a number of decided cases which, he claims, support his contention. It is not necessary for us to examine the authorities on which the learned Advocate relies, because in our opinion the view taken by the lower Court, if correct, proceeds on a totally different ground, which is not affected by the contention put forward before us. The learned District Judge construed the action of the Court ordering amendment of the final decree of November 4, 1924, as one tantamount to passing a fresh final decree, taking the High Court's decree as the only subsisting preliminary decree in a mortgage suit. It is clear to us that the final decree of November 4, 1924, could not have been "amended" under any rule of law. The application was not one under ss. 151, 152 or O. XLVII, Civil Procedure Code. Nor can the so-called order of amendment be considered to be one under any of those provisions. To take the order literally would imply that the Court passed an order which it had had no power to pass. If it is possible to construe the action of the Court as legal, such construction should be adopted. In our opinion the learned District Judge has taken a correct view of the order amending the decree. It was, in substance, an order directing the preparation of a fresh final decree on the supposition that the final decree previously prepared on foot a preliminary decree passed by the trial Court had become vacated by the subsequent preliminary decree passed by the High Court, in which the decrees of Subordinate Courts had merged. The Court should be deemed to have proceeded on the view that the only subsisting preliminary decree was the decree of the High Court and that a fresh final decree based on that decree should be prepared. The mortgagee's application asking for amendment and the order of the Court making use of the same word amount, in substance, respectively to an application and an order for preparation of a fresh final decree. The order which is inter partes is conclusive and the final decree prepared in pursuance of it is equally so. In this view, the only decree which was capable of execution on the date on which the present application for execution was made was the decree prepared in January 1929, which was less than three years before the application for execution. The order appealed from is right in every respect. This appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 286 of 1934

Madras Gaming Act (III of 1930), ss 5, 6—Warrant issued under s. 96, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898)—Presumption of common gaming house, whether arises—Defects in warrant—Remarks in judgment supplying defects, value of.

The presumption referred to in s. 6 of the Madras Gaming Act can only apply to searches conducted in pursuance of a warrant issued under s. 5 of that Act. It does not apply where the warrant is issued under s. 96, Criminal Procedure Code.

The mere fact that reference was made to s 5 of the Gaming Act in the application for a warrant does not show that the Magistrate actually issued the warrant under that section.

The remarks of a Magistrate which are intended to supply the omissions or defects found in a warrant and to vary its terms are not admissible as evidence. The warrant is to be in writing and must contain all the matters that the law requires to be stated therein.

The mere fact that occasionally people used to play cards at a particular place and perhaps for money, does not necessarily make it a common gaming house.

Cr. A. under s. 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, against the acquittal of the aforesaid respondents (accused) by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Gobichettipalayam in Criminal Appeal No. 1 of 1934 on his file (C. C. No. 401 of 1933 Stationary "Sub-Magistrate" of Gobichettipalayam).

Messrs. K. S. Jayama Ayyar and M. Doraiswami Iyer, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the Public Prosecutor from the order of acquittal passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Gobichettipalayam in a case in which 20 persons were charged by the Police with an offence punishable under s. 9 of the Madras Gaming Act, III of 1930. The Sub-Magistrate convicted all the accused, and on appeal all of them were acquitted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

The two questions that arise in this appeal are: (1) whether the presumption referred to in s. 6 of the Gaming Act is available to the prosecution in this case and (2) whether the evidence of P. W. No. 2 which alone refers to the alleged common gaming house, was wrongly disbelieved or discredited by the Appellate Court. As regards the first point, the Appellate Magistrate has relied on the ruling in Gangadas Banerjee v. Emperor (1) and my attention has not been drawn to any decision pointing the other way. Even apart from the decision relied upon by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, I am of opinion that the presumption referred to in s. 6 can only apply to searches conducted in pursuance of a warrant issued under s. 5 of the Act. In this particular case the warrant does not purport to have been issued under this section of the Act, but on the contrary purports to have been issued under s. 96 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There is, moreover, no mention whatever in the warrant itself of the Magistrate who issued it having been satisfied that there was a common gaming house which required to be searched; in fact it is extremely doubtful whether his mind ever dwelt on this question when he signed the warrant. The fact that reference was made to s. 5 in the application for a warrant does not, in my opinion, show that the Magistrate actually issued the warrant under that section. His remarks on this point in his judgment are irrelevant; if as a matter of fact he had satisfied himself that he was issuing the warrant under s. 5 of the Act, he ought not to have tried the case himself but offered to give evidence as a witness in the case. His remarks in the judgment are not entitled to rank as evidence, especially in view of the fact that they attempt to supply the omissions or defects found in the warrant itself, and to vary its terms. The warrant is to be in writing and must contain all the matters that the law requires to be stated therein. Oral statements intended to vary the terms of a warrant required by law to be in writing are not admissible.

As regards the second point, after going through the evidence of P. W. No. 2 I see no reason to differ from the observations of the Appellate Magistrate regarding his evidence, namely, that it is entitled prima facie to no weight and that no credit could be given to his uncorroborated testimony. It cannot in my opinion be said with any reason that the Appellate Magistrate was wrong in discrediting him. No doubt the trial Magistrate has expressed the opinion that the witness was a straightforward and honest man, but this is a matter of opinion not connected with the demeanour of the witness, and his evidence does not show that he is particularly honest or particularly straightforward. On the other hand, some portions of his evidence are incredible, especially his statement that every player used to pay one rupee to the gardener on every day the play went on in the salai or bungalow. There can be no doubt that once the presumption under s. 6 is found to be not available in this case and the evidence of P. W. No. 2 cannot be relied upon, the correctness of the acquittal of the accused cannot be seriously questioned. Apart from the presumption and the evidence of P. W. No. 2, there is really no evidence to show that the bungalow in question was ever used as a common gaming house. The mere fact that occasionally people used to play cards there, and perhaps, for money, does not necessarily make it a common gaming house. I therefore see no reason to interfere in appeal with the order of acquittal passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed under s. 423 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Mortgage—Foreclosure—Mortgagee obtaining possession under sale in execution and mortgagee obtaining possession by foreclosure—Difference, if exists—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 101—"Or otherwise than subject thereto", meaning and effect of—Subsequent mortgagee seeking foreclosure—Whether can foreclose and obtain possession subject to charge of prior mortgagee in possession.

There is no difference in principle between a mortgagee who has obtained possession under a sale made in execution of the mortgage decree and one who has obtained possession by foreclosure of his mortgage.

The words 'or otherwise than subject thereto' in s. 101, Transfer of Property Act, refer to the second eventuality mentioned in the section, namely, that of the subsequent mortgagee trying to sell the property and not to that of his seeking foreclosure. No doubt, a subsequent mortgagee who has obtained a decree for sale can avail himself of either of the two alternatives provided for in the section, namely, he can either redeem the prior mortgage or sell the property subject to that mortgage but a subsequent mortgagee seeking foreclosure of the property cannot foreclose and obtain possession of the property subject to the charge of the prior mortgagee who is already in possession on the basis of a prior foreclosure decree. In the latter case the subsequent mortgagee has no alternative but to redeem the prior mortgage.

F. C. A. against an order of the Sub-Judge of Barabanki, dated September 16, 1932.

Messrs. Radha Krishna and S. N. Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hardhian Chandar and R. N. Shukla, for the Respondents.

Zia-ul-Hasan, J.—(March 23, 1935)—This is a plaintiff's appeal in a suit for foreclosure. The suit was brought on the basis of three mortgage deeds, Exs. 1, 2 and 3, dated May 28, 1925, September 5, 1925 and November 22, 1927, respectively, executed by Jangjit Bahadur Singh, defendant No. 1, in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. All the other defendants Nos. 2 to 11 were impleaded as subsequent transferees of the mortgaged properties. Interest on all the three mortgages was stipulated at the rate of two per cent. per mensem compound with six monthly rests.

The Court below, the learned Subordinate Judge of Barabanki, decreed the plaintiff's suit but reduced the rate of interest under the Usurious Loans Act to one per cent. per mensem with six monthly rests. The lower Court also held that as defendant No. 10, Ram Phal Singh, had foreclosed part of the mortgaged property in pursuance of a prior mortgage in his favour and had obtained possession of that property, the plaintiff would not be entitled to obtain actual possession over that property unless and until he pays money due to defendant No. 10 under the mortgage deed Ex. F5.

It is on these two points that arguments were addressed to us on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant. One of the grounds of appeal, namely, ground No. 4 was against defendant No. 1 but it was not pressed before us.

The first question for determination, therefore, is whether or not the Court below was justified in reducing the stipulated rate of interest. Reliance was placed on three deeds of mortgage executed by the defendant No. 1 in 1924 in all of which the stipulated rate of interest was two per cent. per mensem compound or even more with six monthly rests. The first is Ex. F2 dated January 4, 1924. This deed provides for interest at 25 per cent. per annum compoundable six monthly. The second is referred to in Ex. 13, copy of a plaint in a suit brought by the mortgagee, Ram Lakhan Lal on the basis of that mortgage. This deed was executed by defendant No. 1 on September 1, 1924, and it provided for interest at 24 per cent per annum with six monthly rests. The third is Ex. F5 dated July 18, 1924. It was executed not only by the defendant No. 1 but also by his brothers and the rate of interest stipulated was 24 per cent. per annum compoundable six monthly. Reference was also made to Ex. 9, judgment in the suit brought by defendant No. 10 on the basis of this mortgage in order to show that the rate of interest was not reduced by the Court in spite of contest by the defendants. It will thus be seen that all the mortgage deeds stipulating a high rate of interest were executed in 1924. On the other hand we find that in a mortgage deed (Ex. F1) executed by defendant No. 1 on July 23, 1921 in favour of defendant No. 10, the rate of interest was twelve annas per cent per mensem simple. Similarly in Ex. G12 which is a copy of a preliminary decree for foreclosure passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad in a suit brought by a certain Thakur Jagdish Singh against Jangjit Bahadur Singh on the basis of a mortgage deed dated October 7, 1927, simple interest was allowed at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. Ex. 12 is another decree in favour of one Har Kishore Lal on a mortgage executed by defendant No. 1 on September 27, 1928, and in this case also simple interest was allowed at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. With regard to the mortgage-deed Ex. F1 it was said that the rate of interest was low as the deed mortgaged properties of great value but there is nothing on the record to show what was the value of those properties. In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge was right in considering the rate of interest stipulated for in the three mortgages of the plaintiff-appellant as excessive. It is excessive not only on the face of it but also with regard to other mortgage deeds executed by defendant No. 1. It may also be mentioned that according to the heading of the plaint in this case defendant No. 1 was twenty-five years of age in 1932 so that he must have been a lad of seventeen or eighteen only in 1925 when he executed two of the mortgage deeds in question in favour of the appellant. Further the plaint also shows that he was in jail at the time when the suit was brought and Ex. 3 shows that he borrowed the money by that deed for defending himself in a criminal case. In view of all these circumstances I am of opinion that the Court below was perfectly justified in reducing the rate of interest of 12 per cent. per annum compoundable six monthly. It may be observed that the learned Counsel for the appellant challenged the lower Court's finding about interest in respect to Ex. 3 only and not about Exs. 2 and 3.

The second question in the appeal relates to rights of the plaintiff-appellant and Ram Phal Singh defendant No. 10 between themselves. Ram Phal Singh also held in his favour three mortgages Exs. F1, F2 and F5 dated July 23, 1921, January 4, 1924 and July 18, 1924 respectively. On the basis of the deed Ex. F5, he foreclosed the property in 1928 and obtained possession of it. The learned Subordinate Judge held that as the deed Ex. F5 was prior to the plaintiff's mortgages, the plaintiff should redeem that mortgage before he could take possession of the property which he was seeking to foreclose. This was to my mind a perfectly correct view of the law. As against defendant No. 10, two points were urged on behalf of the appellant. The first was that as defendant No. 10 had not impleaded the present plaintiff in his suit for foreclosure, the decree obtained by him is not binding on the plaintiff-appellant. The second was that the mortgage under which Ram Phal Singh obtained his foreclosure decree being only a non-possessory mortgage, Ram Phal Singh was not entitled to remain in possession of the property against the appellant. Neither of these two contentions appears to me to have any force. In the Full Bench case of Ram Sanehi Lal v. Sital Prasad (1), it was held that the doctrine of allowing a prior mortgagee who has entered into possession of the mortgaged property as auction-purchaser to set up his prior mortgage as a shield is a doctrine of equity available as a means of defence and on page 1045* of the report, the learned Acting Chief Justice referring to the Privy Council case of Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (2) remarked:

"The question of allowing a prior mortgagee whose mortgage had long since become barred by time but who was in possession of the property under a decree obtained without impleading the subsequent mortgagee, to set up his prior mortgage as a shield, even though the limitation for the mortgage had run out, was prominently before their Lordships; and their Lordships allowed Ghulam Safdar to recover the amount due on his mortgage of 1883. This, to my mind, is a clear authority for the proposition that a prior mortgagee, if he is in possession, can set up in defence a prior mortgage as a shield, although in his suit he had not impleaded the subsequent mortgagee and even though a fresh suit to enforce it would now be barred by time."

In the case of Mathura Prasad v. Ghanshiyam Das (3) Bisheshwar Nath and Pullan JJ. also held that even though the puisne mortgagee was not a party to the decree obtained by the prior mortgagee, yet it was open to the prior mortgagee when he has obtained possession under a sale made in execution of the decree to set up his rights under the prior mortgage as a shield against the puisne mortgagee. There seems to me no difference in principle between a mortgagee who has obtained possession under a sale made in execution of the mortgage decree and one who has obtained possession by foreclosure of his mortgage.

"Any mortgagee of, or person having a charge upon, immovable property, or any transferee from such mortgagee or charge-holder, may purchase or otherwise acquire the rights in the property of the mortgagor or owner, as the case may be, without thereby causing the mortgage or charge to be merged as between himself and any subsequent mortgagee of, or person having a subsequent charge upon, the same property ; and no such subsequent mortgagee or charge-holder shall be entitled to foreclose or sell such property without redeeming the prior mortgage or charge, or otherwise than subject thereto."

It was said that this section allowed two alternative courses to the subsequent mortgagee, namely, either to redeem the prior mortgage or to take the property subject to that mortgage. It seems to me that the words "or otherwise than subject thereto" refer to the second eventuality mentioned in the section, namely, that of the subsequent mortgagee trying to sell the property and not to that of his seeking foreclosure. No doubt, a subsequent mortgagee who has obtained a decree for sale can avail himself of either of the two alternatives provided for in the section, namely, he can either redeem the prior mortgage or sell the property subject to that mortgage but I do not see how a subsequent mortgagee seeking foreclosure of the property can foreclose and obtain possession of the property subject to the charge of the prior mortgagee who is already in possession on the basis of a prior foreclosure decree. It is, therefore, clear to my mind that in the latter case the subsequent mortgagee has no alternative but to redeem the prior mortgage and this is what the learned lower Court has held.

The appeal has, in my opinion, no force and I would dismiss it with costs.

Srivastava, J.—I agree.

The power of the Executing Court to grant restitution is not confined to the cases governed by s. 144. A Court has inherent power to grant restitution apart from the power bestowed by that section. Gnanda Sundari Mojumdar v. Chandra Kumar De (2), Amba Lal v. Ramgopal Madho Prasad (3), Beni Parshad v. Kundan Lal (4) and Sohnun v. Mast Ram (5), relied on.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

Order.—The facts of the case which has given rise to this appeal have been stated in great detail in the judgment of Abdul Qadir, J., reported as Mam Chand v. Roshan Lal (1) and it is unnecessary to repeat them at length. Briefly stated the case is that Mam Chand obtained a mortgage decree for Rs. 1,000 against Ali Muhammad on February 6, 1931. Roshan Lal another creditor of Ali Muhammad obtained another decree against him for Rs. 3,800 and applied for its execution on May 4, 1931. The execution of the decree of Mam Chand was proceeding in the Court of the Junior Subordinate Judge while that of Roshan Lal proceeded in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge. At the instance of Mam Chand the mortgaged house was sold to Mahabir Parshad for Rs. 1,450 on October 29, 1931. On November 2, 1931, Mam Chand put in an application praying that his decree for Rs. 1,000 should be first satisfied out of the proceeds of the sale in favour of Mahabir Parshad and that the balance should be distributed rateably between him and other creditors. Mam Chand had also another decree for Rs. 400 against Ali Muhammad and claimed a rateable share out of the remaining assets of the judgment-debtor on account of that decree. The Executing Court held that Mam Chand was not entitled to any priority and that the entire proceeds of the house in dispute could be rateably distributed between Roshan Lal and Mam Chand. Against this order a revision was preferred by Mam Chand to this Court and it was held that Mam Chand was entitled to priority and that the Rs. 1,000 due to him on the mortgage decree should be first paid out of the sum realised by the sale of the mortgaged house, and that the balance should be rateably distributed between Mam Chand and Roshan Lal in satisfaction of their respective decrees.

While proceedings were pending in this Court Roshan Lal appears to have obtained rateable distribution of the money realised by the sale of the mortgaged property. In order to obtain priority in accordance with the order of Abdul Qadir, J. Mam Chand decree-holder applied to the Executing Court for restitution under ss. 144 and 151, Civil Procedure Code. The Execution Court held that s. 144 was not applicable to the facts of the present case, as it only applied to cases in which a decree was varied or reversed and that an order regarding priority could not be regarded as a decree. It further held that s. 151 could not be resorted to in the circumstances of the present case as Mam Chand could institute a regular suit for refund of the money that had been wrongly paid to Roshan Lal. On these findings the application for restitution made by Mam Chand was dismissed. Mam Chand, decree-holder, appealed to the learned District Judge, who held that the order of the Executing Court dismissing the application of Mam Chand was not appealable. Against this order Mam Chand has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The learned Counsel for the appellant contended that a second appeal was competent and relied on Gnanda Sundari Mojumdar v. Chandra Kumar De (2), which lays down that where an order is made under the provisions of s. 151, but in fact in exercise, by analogy of the jurisdiction under s. 144, Civil Procedure Code, an appeal does lie from the order. It was next urged that if no appeal lay the present appeal may be treated as a petition for revision. I will deal with this case as if the memorandum of appeal were a petition for revision as it is doubtful whether a second appeal is competent.

It was conceded by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the present case did not fall within the purview of s. 144, Civil Procedure Code. It was, however, strenuously urged that the Court has inherent power under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, to order restitution in the interests of justice. Reliance was placed in this connection on Amba Lal v. Ramgopal Madho Prasad (3), where it was held that s. 144 does not exhaustively deal with the powers of Courts to grant restitution, and the jurisdiction of a Court to grant restitution in appropriate cases is not confined only to cases coming within the purview of that section, but is inherent in the general jurisdiction of the Court to pass an order for restitution, independently of the provisions of that section, with a view to secure complete justice between the parties concerned. The provisions of s. 151 were invoked for the purposes of restitution. It was further laid down in Beni Parshad v. Kundan Lal (4) that the power of the Executing Court to grant restitution is not confined to the cases governed by s. 144. A Court has inherent power to grant restitution apart from the power bestowed by that section. To the same effect are Sohnun v. Mast Ram (5) and Moti Singh v. Harbhajan Singh (6). I am, therefore, of the opinion, that apart from the provisions of s. 144, Civil Procedure Code, the Court had ample power under s. 151 to order restitution, in the peculiar circumstances of the present case.

The net result of the judgments of the lower Courts is that the directions given by Abdul Qadir, J., in Mam Chand v. Roshan Lal (1), whereby he ordered that the decree of Mam Chand for Rs. 1,000 should be first satisfied out of the sum realised by the sale of the mortgaged house have not been carried into effect. I, therefore, accept this petition for revision, set aside the orders of the Courts below and remand the case to the Executing Court with a direction that it should exercise its inherent powers under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, and secure priority for Mam Chand's mortgage decree of Rs. 1,000 by ordering Roshan Lal to restore whatever amount may be found due from him in the light of the observations made above. The parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Oudh Courts Act (IV of 1925), s. 31 (1)—Application for grant of probate transferred to Subordinate Judge—Jurisdiction of Subordinate Judge, if confined to non-contentious cases—Probate.

Where an application for grant of probate is transferred to a Subordinate Judge by an order of the District Judge, the test is whether the Subordinate Judge was acting in his capacity as a district delegate or in the capacity of a Subordinate Judge to whom a case has been transferred by an order of the District Judge. If he is seised of the case in the capacity of a district delegate, his jurisdiction ceases, as soon as the proceedings become contentious. If, on the other hand, he is trying the case as a Subordinate Judge, to whom the case has been transferred by the District Judge, there is no provision either in the Succession Act or in the Oudh Civil Rules confining his jurisdiction to non-contentious cases. It makes no difference in principle whether the proceedings at the time of the transfer had already become contentious or whether they become contentious afterwards. In the absence of any provision taking away the case from the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge, when the proceedings before him become contentious, it must be held that the Subordinate Judge is entitled to deal with the case, whether contentious or non-contentious. Kalloo v Noor Jehan (1), followed. Ram Kishore v. Nand Kumar (2), distinguished.

C. R. App. against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Malihabad, Lucknow, dated January 9, 1935.

Mr. Mohammad Ayub, for the Applicants.

Messrs. Naziruddin Siddiqi and S. D. Singh, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The facts of the case which have given rise to this application for revision are that the learned District Judge of Lucknow transferred an application for grant of probate to the Subordinate Judge of Malihabad for disposal. In the Court of the Subordinate Judge a caveat was lodged whereupon the applicant raised the objection that the proceedings having become contentious the Subordinate Judge had ceased to have jurisdiction to proceed with the case. The learned Subordinate Judge relying upon the decision of a Bench of this Court, to which one of us was a party, in Kalloo v. Noor Jehan (1), disallowed the contention. It is this order of the learned Subordinate Judge which is sought to be revised by the present application.

We are of opinion that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct and ought to be upheld. In Kaloo v. Noor Jehan (1) the distinction between proceedings before a District delegate and before the Subordinate Judge to whom the proceeding has been transferred by an order of the District Judge has been clearly pointed out. The test in each case must be whether the Subordinate Judge was acting in his capacity as a district delegate or in the capacity of a Subordinate Judge to whom a case has been transferred by an order of the District Judge. If he is seised of the case in the capacity of a district delegate, his jurisdiction ceases, as soon as the proceedings become contentious. If, on the other hand, he is trying the case as a Subordinate Judge to whom the case has been transferred by the District Judge, there is no provision either in the Indian Succession Act or in the Oudh Civil Rules confining his jurisdiction to non-contentious cases. It has been argued that in Kalloo v Noor Jehan (1) the proceedings had already become contentious before the order of transfer was made by the learned District Judge, whereas in the present case no contention had arisen before the order of transfer was passed by the District Judge. We do not think that this difference in the facts of the two cases in any way affects the position. Whereas in the case of a district delegate s. 265 of the Indian Succession Act and r. 239 of the Oudh Civil Rules clearly show that their powers are confined to non-contentious cases, there is no corresponding provision either in the Indian Succession Act or in the Oudh Civil Rules so limiting the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge to whom as such proceedings have been transferred by the District Judge. On the contrary, s. 31 cl. (i) of the Oudh Courts Act clearly authorises a District Judge to transfer to any Subordinate Judge proceedings under the Indian Succession Act and the Probate and Administration Act, which cannot be disposed of by the district delegates. In our opinion it makes no difference in principle, whether the proceedings at the time of the transfer had already become contentious or whether they become contentious afterwards. In the absence of any provision taking away the case from the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge, when the proceedings before him become contentious, it must be held that the Subordinate Judge is entitled to deal with the case, whether contentious or non-contentious. Reliance has also been placed by the applicants on an earlier decision of another Bench to which also one of us was a party in Ram Kishore v. Nand Kumar (2). This case was decided on the footing which was rightly or wrongly accepted by Counsel for both the parties that the Subordinate Judge was dealing with the case in his capacity as a district delegate. The decision in that case proceeded upon the basis of the provisions contained in s. 265 of the Indian Succession Act and r 239 of the Oudh Civil Rules. No reference was made to the provisions of s. 31 of the Oudh Courts Act, because as we have just stated the Subordinate Judge was treated as having been dealing with the case in his capacity of a district delegate. We are, therefore, of opinion that the order of the Subordinate Judge is correct. The application fails and is dismissed with costs.

The ad interim order of stay passed on Civil Miscellaneous Application No. 28 of 1935 will be discharged.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 151, 145—Execution application dismissed for default—Restoration application also dismissed—Revision from former order, if lies—Order under s. 151, if appealable—Surety for appearance of judgment-debtor—Execution application dismissed for default of decree-holder and surety discharged—Restoration of execution petition—Liability of surety, if revived—On dismissal of restoration application, appeal from order discharging surety—Extension of time spent in application for restoration, if to be allowed—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s 5.

Where an execution petition is dismissed in default of a decree-holder and an application to restore it is also dismissed, revision from the order of dismissal of execution petition does not lie.

No appeal from the order passed in the exercise of inherent jurisdiction under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code is competent.

Where a judgment-debtor who has been arrested in execution of a decree is released on a surety furnishing security for his appearance but due to the default of the decree-holder to appear on the due date the execution petition is dismissed and the surety is also discharged, the liability of the surety does not automatically revive by the mere restoration of the execution petition. Kali Ram v. Umrao Singh (3), relied on.

Upon the dismissal of the application to restore the execution petition, the decree-holder is not entitled to extension of time for an appeal from the order discharging the surety, in respect of the time spent in the application for restoration. Such a application cannot be considered to be proper alternative remedy for getting the order of discharge of surety set aside, as the liability of the surety is not automatically revived on the restoration of the application. Brij Inder Singh v. Kanshi Ram (1) and Rajendra Nath v. Kamal Krishna (2), referred to.

Messrs. Badri Das, J. L. Kapur and Achhru Ram, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—Civil Appeal No. 1466 and Civil Revision No. 582 of 1932, are connected and will be disposed of together. These arise out of execution proceedings in respect of a decree. The judgment-debtor had been arrested in execution and had been released on furnishing security for his appearance during the execution proceedings. The judgment-debtor thereafter absented himself and the surety was asked to produce him on April 30, 1931. On the latter date the decree-holder was absent. The Court, therefore, dismissed the execution petition in default and the surety who was present on that date was also discharged from his bond.

An application for restoration of the execution petition in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction was made to the Court the same day, but it was dismissed on February 15, 1932, the Court holding that no sufficient ground had been made out for restoration of the petition. The decree-holder then presented two appeals to the District Judge on March 4, 1932, one from the order refusing to restore the execution petition and the other from the order discharging the surety. The former appeal was held to be incompetent and the latter was held to be time-barred. Both the appeals were accordingly dismissed. The plaintiff has now preferred a second appeal in connection with the order discharging the surety and has also filed a petition for revision of the order of the Subordinate Judge dated April 30, 1931, dismissing the execution petition.

So far as the revision petition is concerned, it seems clear that the petition must fail. The petition purports to be for revision of the order of the learned Subordinate Judge, dated April 30, 1931. On that day the execution petition was dismissed in default as the decree-holder was absent and it cannot be said that the Court has acted illegally or with any material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction. The petitioner should have challenged and perhaps meant to challenge the subsequent order dated February 15 1932 refusing to restore the execution petition to the pending file. But the petition as it stands is for revision of the order dated April 30, 1931. This is reiterated in a note below the grounds of revision and only a copy of the order dated April 30, 1931, has been produced with the petition for revision. In the circumstances, this petition must be dismissed.

Coming now to Civil Appeal No. 1466 of 1932, as has been already stated, there were two appeals before the learned District Judge, viz. : (1) from the order of the Executing Court refusing to set aside the dismissal of the execution petition, and (2) from the order discharging the surety from his bond. The first order had been passed in the exercise of inherent jurisdiction under s. 151, Civil Procedure Code, and consequently the learned District Judge rightly held that no appeal was competent. This decision is not being challenged. As regards the other appeal in connection with the discharge of the surety the learned District Judge has held it to be time-barred. The appellant prayed that the time spent in prosecuting the application for restoration of the execution petition should be deducted, but the learned District Judge rejected this prayer and dismissed the appeal as time-barred as stated above. It is from this decision that a second appeal has been preferred.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has urged that the learned District Judge has erred in law in holding that the appellant could not be allowed any extension of time in respect of the period during which he was prosecuting his application for restoration of the execution petition and in support of this contention has relied mainly on Brij Inder Singh v. Kanshi Ram (1). The learned Counsel for the respondent has questioned the applicability of that ruling to the circumstances of the present case and has cited Rajendra Nath v. Kamal Krishna (2), but assuming that extension of time is permissible under s. 5, Limitation Act, in respect of time spent bona fide in pursuing an alternative remedy on the principles laid down in Brij Inder Singh v. Kanshi Ram (1), the question still remains whether an application for restoration of the execution petition was such a remedy. It is of course true, that the surety was discharged as a result of the dismissal of the execution petition : but the question is whether even if the execution petition had been restored to file, the liability of the surety would have been thereby necessarily revived. The appellant himself realized that the dismissal of the execution petition and the discharge of the surety were really separate orders (although these were incorporated in one and the same order dated April 30, 1931), and had preferred separate appeals to the District Judge in respect of the same. I am of opinion that the surety having been once discharged his liability could not be automatically revived by the mere restoration of the execution petition. The bond, it may be noted, was merely for the appearance of the judgment-debtor during the execution proceedings which were pending at the time and his liability consequently came to an end when those proceedings terminated and he was discharged. I do not see how his liability could be revived in the circumstances without his consent merely by the execution petition being restored. I had occasion to consider this very question in Kali Ram v. Umrao Singh (3), and have held for reasons given in my judgment therein that the liability of a surety is not automatically revived in such circumstances.

It follows from the above that the application for restoration of the execution petition could not in itself be considered to be a proper remedy for the purpose of getting the order as to the discharge of the surety set aside. The appellant did not admittedly make any application for review etc., praying for the setting aside of the order of discharge of the surety and I am therefore of opinion that it cannot be said that any time was spent bona fide in pursuing an alternative remedy. There is another aspect of the question also. The dismissal of the execution petition has now become final, as the application for restoration was dismissed, and the appeal therefrom and the petition for revision have also failed. If the dismissal of the execution petition must stand, no question of the setting aside of the order of the discharge of the surety can now arise as the proceedings in which the bond was taken have finally terminated.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. Where a decree is obtained in a Small Cause Court and subsequently a plaint is filed in a Munsif's Court for a declaration that certain property of the judgment-debtor is attachable in execution of the above decree, although the plaint can be treated as a step-in-aid, yet when the decree has not been transferred to the Munsif's Court for execution before the plaint is filed, that Court cannot be held to be the 'proper Court' within the meaning of Art. 182, Limitation Act and cl. C. R. App. against the order of the Sub-Judge, as Judge of Small Cause Court, Partabgarh, dated November 1, 1933.

Mr. Ramapat Ram, for the Applicant.

Mr. Radha Krishna, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a judgment-debtor's appeal arising out of an order passed in execution proceedings. The decree-holder obtained his decree in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh sitting as a Judge of a Court of Small Causes. The decree-holder's last application for execution was consigned to record on February 25, 1930, after a certain sum had been received. On April 9, 1932, the decree-holder instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Kunda for a declaration that a deed executed by the judgment-debtor in favour of his grandson in respect of certain immoveable property was fictitious and that the decree-holder was entitled to attach and sell the property in execution of his decree. On September 23, 1932, the declaratory suit was decreed. On June 1, 1933, the decree-holder applied for execution of his decree and was met with the objection that the application was barred by limitation as more than three years had elapsed since the last application was consigned to the records on February 25, 1930. The question was whether the plaint filed by the decree-holder on April 9, 1932, in the suit for the declaration mentioned above can be treated as "an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree" within the meaning of Art. 182, cl. (5) of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act. If this question be answered in the affirmative then the application for execution made on June 1, 1933, will be within time as it was made within three years from the date when the plaint was filed.

The executing Court held that limitation was saved by the filing of the plaint. The Court further held that the decree-holder could rely upon s. 14, sub-s. (2) of the Limitation Act for the purpose of saving limitation.

The judgment-debtor contends that even though the plaint filed in the Munsif's Court may be held to be an application made in accordance with law to take some step-in-aid of execution nevertheless limitation will not be saved by cl. (5) of Art. 182 because the application was not made to the proper Court.

The case of Sheo Ram v. Ram Bharosey (1) is an authority for holding that the plaint filed in the Munsif's Court for a declaration that the property was attachable in execution of the decree can be treated as an application to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of cl. (5) of Art. 182. To that extent the ruling is clearly in the respondent's favour and that point is not contested. The question before me is whether the plaint can be treated as an application made to the proper Court within the meaning of Art. 182. The Court below has held that the application should be treated as having been made "to the proper Court" as the suit was within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif of Kunda and, therefore, the suit could not have been entertained by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh. In that sense no doubt the plaint was filed in the "proper Court" but the expression "proper Court" has been defined in Art. 182 as meaning "the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree." At the time when the plaint was filed in the Court of the Munsif of Kunda the decree had not been transferred for execution to that Court and was still pending for execution purposes in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh in the capacity of a Judge of a Court of Small Causes. It is argued that a Court of Small Causes cannot execute a decree against immovable property and therefor if the execution is sought against immovable property the decree has to be transferred for execution to some Court on the regular side. If the decree in question had been transferred to the Court of the Munsif of Kunda for execution against the immovable property in dispute before the plaint was filed in the Court of the Munsif of Kunda then there would have been no difficulty and the ruling in Sheo Ram v. Ram Bharosey (1) would have been fully applicable. The difficulty is that at the time when the plaint was filed in the Munsif's Court the decree had not been transferred to that Court for execution and it is difficult to hold that in such circumstances the Munsif's Court was the Court whose duty it was to execute the decree. It has been argued that (as a decree can?) only be executed by a regular Court, the duty of executing the decree in that respect is cast upon the regular Courts even before the decree has been transferred to them for execution. It is difficult to accept this view. A judgment-debtor may have immovable property in six different districts. It seems impossible to hold that the Civil Courts of each of these six districts are under a duty to execute the decree even before it has been transferred to them for execution. In my opinion the Court of the Munsif of Kunda cannot be held to be the Court whose duty it was to execute the decree unless and until the decree had been transferred to that Court for execution. On this view the Court of the Munsif of Kunda cannot be held to be the "proper Court" within the meaning of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act and cl. (5) of that article will not apply for the purpose of saving limitation.

The Court below has also relied upon s. 14 sub-s. (2) of the Limitation Act for the purpose of saving limitation but this provision does not seem to be applicable to the facts of this case and the learned Advocate for the respondent does not put any reliance upon it.

I, therefore, allow the appeal and set aside the order of the Court below with costs in both Courts.

Although the provisions of O. O. A. from an appellate order of the Sub-Judge, Bogra, dated May 30, 1932.

Messrs. Radhabenode Pal, Shamapada Mazumdar and Holiram Deka, for the Appellant.

Mr. Syed Farhat Ali, for the Respondents.

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bogra dated May 30, 1932, reversing the decision of the Munsiff of Bogra dated March 31, 1931. The suit in which this appeal has arisen is a suit brought by the plaintiffs now respondents for recovery of arrears of rent for the years 1333 to 1336 for two jamas one of Rs. 39-14-2 and the other of Rs. 3-12-0. The defence to the suit was that the landlord had dispossessed the defendant of a portion of the holding and that the rent should be suspended. The tenancy being one indivisible with a lump rental of Rs. 45 both the Courts below have come to a concurrent conclusion that the land now in possession of one Jahiruddin was at one time a part of the defendant's tenancy and further that it was abundantly clear from the evidence that the dispossession was by the landlord and that the dispossession was a forcible dispossession seeing that there was a regular fight at the time of the dispossession and the gomastha of the landlord was wounded. The Subordinate Judge says that he agrees with the learned Munsif that the defendant was dispossessed in the year 1324 B. S. of a portion of the tenancy. The tenancy was originally admittedly of Rs. 45. A portion of the land was found to be a diara land and for this portion a separate khatian was made and the rent of Rs. 3-12-0 was settled for this khatian under s. 104, Bengal Tenancy Act. In respect of the other land there has been one khatian with a rent of Rs. 39-14-2. Both the Courts proceeded on the footing that the rent is a lump rent and not at so much per bigha. The Munsif gave effect to the defence of the defendant and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The Subordinate Judge on appeal was of opinion that no case had been made for suspension of the entire rent but that there should be a proportionate abatement; and for that purpose he remanded the suit to the trial Court for re-admitting it under its original number and for determining what rent should be abated for the land from which the defendant had been dispossessed and then passing a decree in accordance with the observations made in the judgment.

Against this order of remand the present appeal has been brought by the tenant-defendant. A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that the order could not have been passed properly under the provisions of O. XLI r. 23, Civil Procedure Code, as the trial Court did not decide the suit on a preliminary point. Consequently no appeal from the order of remand lies to this Court. One decision has been cited which lays down that cases of this kind must be treated as cases in which a remand is made under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 25, Civil Procedure Code, as if the appeal was being kept in the file of an Appellate Court and the Appellate Court was merely setting aside the finding of the first Court on a particular issue which had been sent down. There is no doubt a decision of Page and Graham, JJ., to that effect in Jagat Hari Saha v. Medun Bardhan (1). We have examined that decision and we find that on a review of all other authorities, viz., Basumati v. Taritbasini (2), Prasanna v. Baidyanath (3) and Kayem v. Bahadur Khan (4), that that decision is one of the two cases which takes a view different from the view taken consistently by the several Benches of this Court which have held that although the provisions of O. XLI, r. 23, might not strictly apply where the Court of appeal has remanded the suit to the first Court which has been asked to determine finally the suit by the order of remand, an appeal to this Court is permissible under the provisions of O. XLIII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code. We, therefore, do not think that there is any substance in the preliminary objection which must be overruled.

The real question in controversy before us is as to whether, when the rental is a lump rental as in the present case and the tenants have been dispossessed and forcibly dispossessed from a part of the demised premises—in this case about one-tenth of the demised area—there should be a total suspension of rent or a proportionate abatement. The appellant contends upon the authorities that there should be a total suspension. On the contrary the learned Advocate for the respondents, supporting the judgment of the Subordinate Judge contend that there should be a proportionate abatement and not total suspension. The question as to whether in the case of a lump rental where there has been dispossession from a part of the demised premises, there should be a total suspension of rent did come before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Katyayani Debi v. Udoy Kumar Das (5). Their Lordships observed thus:—

"The doctrine of suspension of payment of rent where the tenant has not been put in possession of part of the subject leased, has been applied where the rent was a lump rent for the whole land leased treated as an indivisible subject. It has no application to a case when the stipulated rent is so much per acre or bigha."

Reliance has been placed on behalf of the appellant in support of the contention th a there should be a total suspension of re n not only on this decision, but onseveral decisions of this Court which have interpreted the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee to mean that in the case of lump rental where there is a dispossession of a part of the demised premises, there should be a total suspension of rent until the tenant is restored to possession. To some of these decisions I was a party. Reference may be made to the case of Mahim Chandra v. Karamali (6), which is a decision of mine sitting singly. In that decision the view contended for by the appellant was taken. There was an appeal in this case under s. 15, Letters Patent, from my decision and that appeal was dismissed by C. C. Ghose and Mallik, JJ. summarily. The next decision is that of Jack, J., and I was also a party to that decision. This is the decision in Abhoya Charan v. Hem Chandra (7), where cases both of the English and Indian Courts from the very earliest times were reviewed and it was pointed out that all the earlier cases with the exception of a single case to which reference has been made in the judgment of the Appellate Court in the present case took the view that in the case of a tenancy with lump rental where there has been dispossession by a landlord of tenant from a part of a demised premises there should not be a proportionate abatement of rent but the entire rent should be suspended. The reasons for this view are given with great fullness in my decision in Abhoya Charan v. Hem Chandra (7), and it is not necessary to reproduce these reasons here again. It is to be noticed that in Susil Kumar v. Rajani Kanta (8), B. B. Ghose and Roy, JJ. expressed the opinion that the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Katyayani Debi v. Udoy Kumar Das (5), were no authority for the proposition that there should be any apportionment in every case of dispossession by the landlord of the tenant from a part of the demised premises where the rent was a lump rental. It was further pointed out in Abhoya Charan v. Hem Chandra (7), that it is difficult to read the decision of the Judicial Committee in the same way as the learned Judges in Susil Kumar v. Rajani Kanta (8), seem to have read it. The true rule is that which was laid down by the Sir George Claus Rankin, C. J., in Sajjad Ahmad v. Trailokhya Nath (9), referred to in Abhoya Charan v. Hem Chandra (7),

"that the doctrine of suspension of rent depends solely on this that the rent due is an entire sum in respect of the land demised. If, therefore, the tenant is not given occupation of the whole of the land demised, the landlord has no right to the entire rent, and unless he has a right or some equity to an apportionment, he can recover nothing on the contract. But the whole basis of the doctrine is that the rent due is one entire sum."

That there is no difference between the English and the Indian law on the subject was pointed out in the earlier decisions of this Court to which reference has been made in my decision in Abhoya Charan v. Hem Chandra (7). B. B. Ghose, J., took a different view. But the observations of the learned Judges in that case were of the nature of obiter dictum. Apparently the view taken in Abaya Charan v. Hem Chandra (7) is the view contended by the appellant. The decision in Abhoya Charan v. Hem Chandra (7) has been followed by Suhrawardy and Graham, JJ., in Krishna Chandra v. Surendra Nath (10). The learned Judges agreeing with the view taken in Abhoya Charan v. Hem Chandra (7) already referred to and dissenting from the view taken by B. B. Ghose, J., in Susil Kumar v. Rajani Kanta (8) observed "that it is not profitable to discuss the question whether in some cases total suspension should not be allowed and effort should be made to apportion rent, for the consensus of authorities commencing almost from Gopanund Jha v. Govinda Persad (11) is that where the lessor enters forcibly into part of the land, the lessee is discharged from payment of the whole rent till he is restored to possession of the whole, because it is the duty of the lessor to protect and defend the lessee and not to disturb him in his possession. It may be that where the lessor commits an honest mistake about the extent of the property leased, including in it some portion over which he had no disposing power, or was the innocent cause of the dispossession of the lease by a third party from a portion of the lease-hold or otherwise acts bona fide, he is entitled to some relief."

The case before us being a case of deliberate and forcible expulsion of a tenant from a part of the demised premises no question of equity to an apportionment can possibly arise, and the tenant is entitled to entire suspension of rent till he is restored to possession of the dispossessed portion.

The Subordinate Judge, however, inclines to the view that a later decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Jogesh Chandra v. Emdad Meah (12) has modified considerably the doctrine of total suspension of rent in case of dispossession by landlord from a part of the tenancy with a lump rent.

It becomes necessary therefore to examine closely and critically the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in this recent case. The facts, when examined, show that it was not a case of dispossession of the tenant by the landlord at all but it was a case of landlord not being able to put the tenant in possession of a part of the tenancy by reason of title paramount in a third person. Briefly stated the position was this: There was a tenancy of one Homer Ali under the appellant Jogesh Chandra Roy. In 1910 the appellant before their Lordships instituted a suit for possession of Jote No. 83 against Homer Ali's widow and the respondent before their Lordships Emdad Ali obtained a decree in his favour in 1912. He executed the decree in 1913. In 1916 the appellant brought a similar suit for possession of Jote No. 98 against not only the widow and the respondent before their Lordships, Emdad, but also against Homer Ali's four daughters as well. In October 1917, this suit was compromised as between the appellant before their Lordships and Hamer Ali's widow and the respondent, the daughters being first excluded from the category of defendants on the petition of the appellant before their Lordships Jogesh Chandra Roy; a solenama was then executed by the appellant, the widow and the respondent under which out of the 20 drones odd of which the holding consisted, the widow and the respondent Emdad were to hold 11 drones odd under the appellant at a rent thereby fixed and the appellant Jogesh Chandra Roy was to get khas possession of the balance of 8 drones odd. The respondent Emdad further agreed to pay a sum of Rs. 1,400 in respect of the appellant's costs and mesne profits by instalments and executed a mortgage therefor. It was a part of the settlement of that suit, which related to Suit No. 98, that the respondent Emdad should execute the kabuliyat relative to Jote No. 83, dated October 11, 1917, which formed the basis of the suit in which the appeal before their Lordships had arisen. By that kabuliyat the respondent Emdad took a bekaemi or non-permanent settlement as a yearly tenant of 10 drones odd land out of 14 drones odd at a certain yearly rental. In January 1920, the respondent's sisters, that is the daughters of Homer Ali, brought a suit against Jogesh, the landlord, and Emdad for a declaration of their right and confirmation of their possession to the extent of their share as co-heirs of Homer Ali in Jote No. 83. That suit was ultimately decreed and it was held that the sisters' share which amounted to 9 as 4 gandas in Jote No. 83 was not affected by the previous decrees and sales.

The result was that Jogesh the landlord had failed to put the respondent Emdad in possession of the entire subject which was the land covered by the kabuliyat of October 11, 1917. The Courts in India dismissed the suit of Jogesh Chandra Roy, but before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee a plea was taken for the first time that the suit should not have been dismissed in its entirety, but a decree for a proportionately abated rent should have been given it being taken into account that the respondent Emdad's sisters are entitled to 9 as. 4 p. share under the decree of 1928. This is not a case like the case before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee as the latter case was not a case of forcible dispossession by the landlord from a portion of the tenancy in which the tenant had already been put into possession. This case before their Lordships was a case where the landlord could not put the lessee in possession of a portion of the demised premises because the possession was not available to him by reason of the title to a certain share of the tenancy being not in the plaintiff landlord, but in some of the heirs of the original tenant, whose rights had not been extinguished by the sale by the landlord. The case we are considering is a very different case. The title of the landlord and his power to give possession to the tenant in the present case was undoubted. After granting a lease to the defendant in the present case the plaintiff put the defendant in possession and included a portion of the tenancy in a subsequent lease to one Jahiruddin and on the strength of that subsequent lease and with the assistance of the landlord Jahiruddin dispossessed the present defendant from a portion of the demised premises.

The case before the Privy Council was a case when the landlord by reason of a paramount title to a portion of the demised premises in the original tenancy could not get possession of a certain share of the said premises and could not put the tenant with whom he had leased the Jote No. 83 in October 11, 1917, in possession of that share. This decision in our view does not affect the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Katyayani Debi v. Udoy Kumar (5), referred to above. A careful examination of the facts to which we have referred shows that the case of Jogesh Chandra v. Emdad Meah (12), relates to a very different state of facts and circumstances which cannot affect the previous decision in Katyayani's case (5). And we are strengthened in our conclusion by the following further examination of the case. In support of the contention that the landlord Jogesh Chandra Roy should have been given a decree for proportionate part of rent, Mr. Pringle who was appearing for the landlord appellant before the Privy Council referred to Imambundi v. Kamaleswar (13) which was a case of the landlord not putting the lessee in possession by reason of eviction by title paramount and Mr. Pringle's contention succeeded. In Imambundi v. Kamaleswar (13), their Lordships make the following observations which will make it clear that they were not dealing with a case of dispossession by the landlord after the tenant was put into possession, but was dealing with a case where the tenant could not obtain possession by reason of the landlord being evicted by title paramount. Their Lordships say: "As Imambundi did not prove that she entered into possession under the leases and was then dispossessed there was not an eviction in the proper sense of the word. But when Imambundi was alleged to bring a suit to obtain possession and succeeded in obtaining a part of what was granted in mokarrari and was precluded by the result of the suit from having possession of a substantial and a longer part, she was in a similar position to having been evicted from that part and there is same equity to an apportionment as in the case of eviction". Here the eviction was not by landlord, but by title paramount. In such a case there must be proportionate abatement. For as Foa points out in his Law of Landlord and Tenant, Edn. 6, p. 195, where the eviction by title paramount is only from a part of the demised premises, the effect (unlike that in the case of eviction by lessor himself) is not to suspend the whole rent, but to render the tenant liable to have it apportioned. Jogesh Chandra v. Emdad Meah (12), cannot govern the case of forcible dispossession by the landlord where the tenant having been put into possession has been forcibly dispossessed from a part of demised premises after this. This Court almost unanimously with the single exception of the decision of B. B. Ghose, J., held in favour of the contention raised by the appellant.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal must be allowed. The judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside and those of the Munsif restored with costs in all Courts. It remains to notice the case which has been cited on behalf of the respondents. This is a decision of my learned brother Mukerji, J., in Sakhisona Dasi v. Pran Krishna Das (14) and requires serious consideration. The learned Judge observed this:

"My view is that the mere fact that the tenancy is governed by one lease and so in law may be regarded as one tenure is not enough, what has to be seen is whether in fact, the parcels are such that deprivation from one necessarily interferes with the due enjoyment of the others."

Previous to this remark the learned Judge referred to the decision of Page, J., in Dhirendra Nath Roy v. Bhabatarini Debi (15,) which took the view that there should be total suspension in case of dispossession from part. Mookerji, J., refers to the following observation of Page, J.:

"Was it one indivisible tenancy and was there interference by the landlord with the due enjoyment of the previous or any part of them ?"

I do not think, however, in order to decide the present case one need consider whether the tenancy consists of separate mouzas, that is properties rented separately or whether the tenancy in effect in law is indivisible or divisible. Towards the end of the judgment Mukerji J., refers with approval to the following observation of Page, J., as he then was:

"It is not possible for the landlords to assert that any portion of the rent is payable in respect of any portion of the premises for in law every pice of rent is payable out of every portion of the premises demised."

Applying this principle to the present case there is no question of the tenancy consisting of several parcels of land separately assessed to rent and consequently

A person who is liable as a surety for the performance of the decree shall, under s. 145, Civil Procedure Code, be deemed to be a party within the meaning of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code. It is dangerous for an Appellate Court to differ from an original Court on the question of the credibility of witnesses and basing its opposite decision on mere inferences from the statements which the witnesses are recorded to have made which an Appellate Court cannot make with such certitude as can the Court which originally heard the witnesses.

S. C. A. against the decree of the District Judge, Hanthawaddy, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 18 of 1934.

Mr. P. B. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Chari, for the Respondents.

Judgment.— In Execution Case No. 9 of 1931 of the Sub-Divisional Court of Kyauktan the appellant, Daw Min Baw, is alleged to have given security together with her daughter Ma Ein Myaung on the order of the Court, for the payment by a certain date of the amount due by Ma Ein Myaung, her husband Mg. Hla Maung and other judgment-debtors under a decree of the Sub-Divisional Court in Civil Regular No. 128 of 1930 in favour of the respondent A. V. P. L. N. Firm. Under the bond she would appear to have mortgaged certain property as security which, it is alleged, she jointly holds with her daughter Ma Ein Myaung. The decretal amount was not paid on the date fixed and the A. V. P. L. N. Firm proceeded to apply to the Court to enforce the security bond. This was on April 18, 1931. Ultimately the property was sold by the order of the Court. The second respondent the A. M. P. A. L. A. Firm is the auction-purchaser. Thereafter much litigation ensued. I do not propose here to repeat in detail the events of that litigation. They are set out in the judgment in Daw Min Baw v. A. V. P. L. N. Chettyar Firm (1) of this Court and again in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. By the order of this Court in Civil Revision No. 171 of 1932 the trial Court was directed to issue the notices which should have been issued in April 1931, under s. 145 to Daw Min Baw, which were not issued, and give her opportunity of showing cause why her interest in the land should not be sold. This has now been done.

Daw Min Baw claims that she neither offered to give security nor did she execute the security bond nor authorize anybody to do so for her. Daw Min Baw is an aged lady of 67 years. For many years her daughter Ma Ein Myaung and the latter's husband Maung Hla Maung lived with her and looked after her affairs, in which she appears to have taken little interest. She had at one time given Maung Hla Maung a power of attorney to enable him to conduct the management of her affairs, but this power did not confer on him authority to appear before the Court and offer security on behalf of others. When the Court allowed Ma Ein Myaung and Maung Hla Maung to furnish security for the payment of the decretal amount in Civil Regular Suit No. 128 of 1930, Maung Hla Maung at first offered as security the land which was ultimately accepted as security under the bond now in question. He stated that the land was standing in the name of Ma Ein Myaung. On inquiry it was found that the land stood in the joint names of Ma Ein Myaung and her mother Daw Min Baw. The Court required affidavits to be filed that the land was free from encumbrances. Maung Hla Maung then filed affidavits purporting to be signed one by Ma Ein Myaung and the other by Daw Min Baw. They are worded similarly and each states that :

"Maung Hla Maung is my agent and I authorized him to execute also the security bonds in connection with the above case".

Daw Min Baw's affidavit is signed with a cross-mark and Maung Hla Maung himself identified the person swearing the affidavit before Maung Pu, the Commissioner for Oaths. Daw Min Baw herself did not appear. It is admitted that the place in which she lived was not far away from Court and it is clear that she is not so old and feeble that she could not have attended the Court herself. The Court accepted the security and a bond was filed which purported to be signed by Ma Ein Myaung on February 11, 1931, and was signed by Maung Hla Maung describing himself as agent of Daw Min Baw. The bond was attested by two witnesses, but these persons apparently are not now available. The document was not registered as it should have been, but on May 8, 1931, the Court directed that it should be registered. The document was ultimately registered on the order of the Registrar on presentation by the A. V. P. L. N. Firm. There is an endorsement by the Sub-Registrar that the Registrar had satisfied himself that "Maung Hla Maung" and Ma Ein Myaung had executed the document.

The point was raised for the first time in this appeal that the document had not been registered in accordance with law because it was not presented for registration by a properly authorized person. This contention is, in my opinion, correct. In Ma Shwe Mya v. Maung Ho Hnaung (2), their Lordships of the Privy Council in connection with a similar security bond, where no person was named as the obligee, seem to have considered that the bond was given to the Judge of the Court and therefore, if not presented by the obligors, ought to have been presented by the Judge or by a person holding a duly authenticated power of attorney from him. In view however of the finding to which I find it necessary to come to in this case, this point will not be of importance.

On inquiry the Sub-Divisional Court found that Daw Min Baw did not sign the affidavit and did not offer to give security, that Maung Hla Maung was not authorized to execute the sercurity bond on her behalf and that she was not bound thereby. On appeal to the District Court the learned District Judge after further examining the Commissioner for Oaths, came to the finding that although there was no direct evidence to show that Daw Min Baw had signed the affidavit yet the circumstances indicated that she had done so. He, therefore, allowed the appeal and set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Court. Daw Min Baw has now appealed to this Court under s. 11, Burma Courts Act. As she is a person liable as a surety for the performance of the decree she shall, under s. 145, Civil Procedure Code, be deemed to be a party within the meaning of s. 47, Civil Procedure Code. An appeal would lie from an order against her in regard to the execution of the decree by the sale of her property. A point has been taken that the learned District Judge had not the authority under O. XLI, r. 27, Civil Procedure Code, to call up Maung Pu, the Commissioner for Oaths before him and cross-examine him. The learned Judge recorded an order that:

"the circumstances of the swearing of the affidavit have not been sufficiently inquired into. The bailiff (i. e., Commissioner of Oaths) is now assistant bailiff of this Court and I will take his evidence myself."

It seems to me that it would be difficult for this Court to hold that the learned District Judge had no (?) authority to do this. It seems to me that if he felt that there was a gap in the evidence and that additional evidence was required, he was entitled to make an order to that effect. Nevertheless a perusal of the evidence given by Maung Pu before the District Court seems to show that he was merely subject to cross-examination on his previous statements and that the real object of recalling him was to test his evidence and not to obtain additional evidence. I do not think that this is a desirable procedure or one that was intended by r. 27, O. XLI.

It may be said at once that in face of her denial it was incumbent upon the respondents to prove that Daw Min Baw had actually consented to give security and authorized the execution of the security bond. The affidavit and the security bond do not by themselves prove that. It may be further said that there is not a shred of evidence that Daw Min Baw did sign the affidavit or authorize Maung Hla Maung to sign the security bond. As I have already remarked, the circumstances in which this affidavit was produced and the bond signed were most suspicious considering that Daw Min Baw was perfectly capable of appearing in Court herself, and that it was Maung Hla Maung one of the judgment-debtors who was to benefit by Daw Min Baw's giving security who identified her before the Commissioner for Oaths. The latter states that he does not think that the woman who appeared before him and was identified as Daw Min Baw was Daw Min Baw. Of course it must be difficult for Maung Pu to be certain after this period of time, but at any rate his evidence is of no help to the respondents. Notices in regard to the sale of the property were issued during May and sale took place on July 4, 1931. It seems very probable that Daw Min Baw was aware that this property was being sold yet it was not until August 3, 1931, that she applied to have the sale set aside. It has to be remembered that Maung Hla Maung and Ma Ein Myaung her only daughter, were living with Daw Min Baw and were in difficulties. We do not know what passed between them but it is at least conceivable that they may have thrown themselves on her mercy and induced her to put off the day of reckoning. The one theory is at least as probable as the other, namely, that she did not earlier raise any objection because she had in fact consented to the giving of security. It is to be noted that in Execution Case No. 54 of 1931, of the Sub-Divisional Court of Kyauktan when the A. L. S. P. P. L. Firm, another decree-holder, attached this property in execution of a decree against Daw Min Baw, her daughter and son-in-law, the A. V. P. L. N. Firm drew the attention of the Court to the fact that the property was secured towards payment of their decree. The A. L. S. P. P. L. Firm on July 20, 1931 stated that they were informed and verily believed that the mortgage bond was not executed by Daw Min Baw or by her duly constituted agent and attorney and was fraudulently executed by Maung Hla Maung and was not enforceable so that it is clear that it must have been rumoured some time before that the bond was not a genuine one.

Some reliance has been placed on the evidence of headmen Maung Po Myit and Maung Gaw Ya. Maung Po Myit is admittedly not on good terms with Daw Min Baw and Maung Gaw Ya is his father. Nevertheless even at the best their statements amount to no more than this that sometime between April and July when they went to demand revenue due on the land Daw Min Baw stated that the land was in dispute with the Chettyar and had been offered as security in Court and that she could not pay the land revenue. I cannot see that this is not precisely what she would have stated if her present case were true. Such remark in no wise amounts to an admission that she had offered her land as security. In fact Maung Gaw Ya puts it more definitely. He stated that that Daw Min Baw told him: "my daughter and my son-in-law have mortgaged lands with the Chettyar; ask the revenue from the Chettyar."

She told him that the land was offered as security on account of a case. Maung Hla Maung and Ma Ein Myaung have now vanished although they have left their child with Daw Min Baw and Daw Min Baw professes not to know where they are. It seems that up to quite recently they were living with her. Nevertheless I do not see how even that would show that Daw Min Baw did in fact execute the security bond. Allowance must be made for natural love and affection even in a person so deeply wronged as Daw Min Baw.

Great stress has been laid both by the learned District Judge and by the learned Advocate for the respondents on the fact that Daw Min Baw appears to have been most reluctant to say outright that the affidavit is a forgery. She has all along maintained that she did not sign the affidavit. What inference is to be drawn from the fact that she is so reluctant to accuse her son-in-law definitely of forgery? I think the obvious inference is that although she maintains that she did not sign the affidavit she does not wish to condemn Maung Hla Maung. She is content if the effect of that affidavit is obliterated and her property set free from the mortgage. If she is perjuring herself by saying that she did not sign the affidavit it appears to me that she would not have hesitated to go further and admit the obvious inference that Maung Hla Maung forged the affidavit. On the other hand if it is true that she did not sign the affidavit it may quite well be that she does not want to be a party to the condemnation of her son in-law. It has to be remembered that she is an old lady not very acute and possibly somewhat obstinate. In the course of her cross-examination she showed herself most unwilling to answer the questions of the cross-examining Advocate:, who would say she "did not remember," she "did not know" and so forth. Nevertheless in the circumstances I cannot see that this shows that she is a perjurer.

In my opinion this is undoubtedly a case which illustrates the danger of an Appellate Court differing from an original Court on the question of the credibility of witnesses and basing its opposite decision on mere inferences from the statements which the witnesses are recorded to have made which an Appellate Court cannot make with such certitude as can the Court which originally heard the witnesses. The learned District Judge has, it seems to me, overlooked the fact that the Sub-Divisional Judge had Daw Min Baw before him for a considerable time and must be in a better position than he to decide as to her veracity. For these reasons this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the decree of the Sub-Divisional Court restored with costs throughout in accordance with the order of this Court in Civil Revision No. 171 of 1932.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, rr. 8, 9, O. IX, r. 3—Clerk of Court fixing date in absence of presiding Judge—Failure to appear on such date—Whether justifies dismissal in default.

In the absence of the presiding Judge, the clerk of the Court has no power to fix a date. Failure to appear on the date so fixed does not justify dismissal in default. Jowala Sahai-Dhera Shah v. Maya Das (1), relied on.

Misc. F. C. A. from an order of the Additional District Judge, Karnal, dated February 20, 1933.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Parkash Chand, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—Hukam Chand's appeal against Mani Shibrat Das and Hussaina was pending in the Court of the Additional District Judge. The Judge issued notice to both parties for January 7, 1933, but on that date the Judge was absent and in his absence and also in the absence of the appellant the clerk of Court fixed February 2, 1933. On February 2, 1933, the appellant was absent and the appeal was dismissed in default. The Additional District Judge dismissed an application to restore the appeal and Hukam Chand appeals against that order. It has been contended here that the clerk of Court had no powor to fix the date and that the failure to appear on a date so fixed did not justify dismissal in default. This contention is supported by the authority of Jowala Sahai-Dhera Shah v. Maya Das (1), with which I can see no reason for not agreeing.

It is urged on the other side that this point was not raised before the Additional District Judge, but in the petition for restoration it had been said that the petitioner did not know of the date (February 2, 1933), having been fixed and the question is whether he ought to have known of it. As it was not fixed by the Judge himself, this must be answered in the negative. Moreover, the defect is one that is patent on the face of the record. It is also argued that the appellant was guilty of negligence, but his omission to appear on a date that was not fixed by the Judge cannot be called negligence. I accept the appeal and set aside the order of the Additional District Judge dismissing the appeal. I direct that it be restored and disposed of according to law. Parties are to bear their own costs here.

F. C. A. from a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Mianwali, dated December 10, 1926.

Messrs. J. N. Aggarwal, M. C. Sud and M. L. Batra, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Badri Das and Nawal Kishore, for the Respondents.

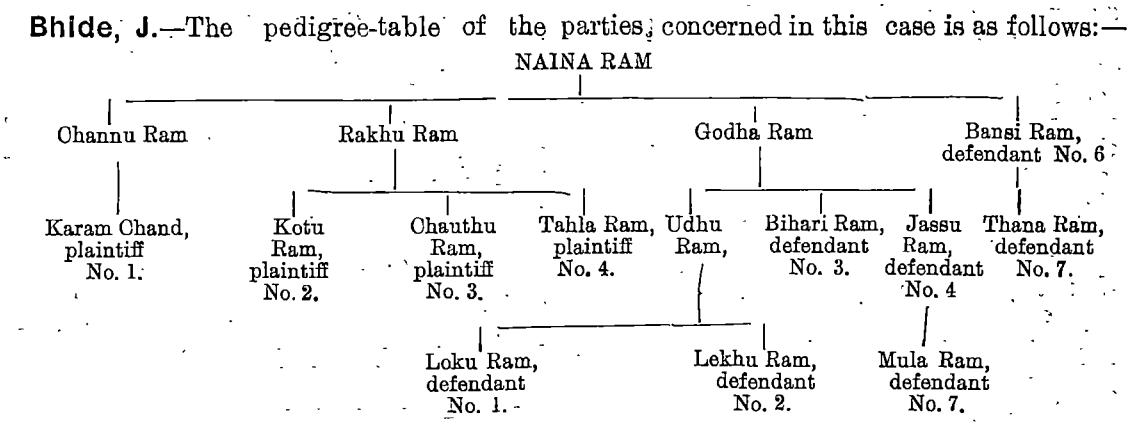
Bhide, J.—The pedigree-table of the parties concerned in this case is as follows:—



The plaintiffs are the descendants of Channu Ram and Rakhu Ram two of the sons of Naina Ram, while the defendants are descendants of the other three sons of Naina Ram.

On the death of Naina Ram, his property was divided into six shares, two shares being allotted to Channu Ram and Rakhu Ram, while four were allotted to the other three sons. According to the ordinary rule of succession all the sons shall have shared the land equally, but an extra share was alleged to have been given to Godha Ram, Bansi Ram and Mula Ram as Naina Ram was living with them and on his death they had performed his funeral ceremonies. Mutation was sanctioned accordingly on March 5, 1896, with the consent of all the sons of Naina Ram. The mutation, however, said nothing about the "Shamilat" land to which Naina Ram was entitled. Later on, the question of the division of the Shamilat land arose during partition proceedings and plaintiffs thereupon contended that the sons of Naina Ram were entitled to share the Shamilat land equally. This contention not having been accepted by the Revenue Authorities they instituted the present suit for a declaration as to their rights. The learned Judge of the trial Court has dismissed the suit and from this decision plaintiffs have appealed.

The sole point for decision in appeal is whether the plaintiffs have succeeded in proving that the sons of Naina Ram had equal shares in the "Shamilat" land although the "khewat" land was divided unequally as stated above. In arriving at his finding in favour of the defendants, the learned Subordinate Judge has relied on certain instances of usage in the family according to which an extra share is given to the son or sons, with whom the father may be living. It was urged that no such usage had been pleaded and that there was no issue on the point. But it appears from the Jawab-i-dawa (see para. 3) that the usage in question was relied on by the defendants and the issue framed was also comprehensive enough to cover it. There is, therefore, no reason whatever to suppose that the plaintiffs have been in any way prejudiced. It was next urged that the extra share was really sold to three of the sons of Naina Ram merely in view of the funeral expenses borne by them. But there is no evidence to support this allegation. The report of the patwari on the mutation sanctioned in 1896 no doubt mentions that the sons had borne the funeral expenses, but there is nothing in the report to show what these expenses amounted to and whether the extra share was given to these three sons by way of sale in lieu of the funeral expenses. There was no mention of these expenses before the Revenue Officer who sanctioned the mutation and all the sons of Naina Ram admitted that they were entitled to succeed to his land according to the shares as shown in the new entries in the mutation. The mutation was sanctioned as one of inheritance and not of sale and there is nothing in the mutation proceedings to indicate that the rule of inheritance, which was accepted in the case of the khewat land was not to apply to shamilat land. As the shamilat land ordinarily goes to the proprietors according to their shares in the khewat land no separate mutation was needed with respect to "shamilat" land. The absence of any mutation in respect of that land does not therefore help the plaintiffs in any way.

There is nothing on the record to support the plaintiffs' contention that the shamilat land was to be inherited equally by the sons of Naina Ram, except the oral statements of a few witnesses. But these statements cannot be attached any importance in view of the mutation proceedings referred to above. The learned Counsel for the appellants had to concede that ordinarily shamilat land is governed by the same rule of inheritance as the khewat land. I feel no hesitation in agreeing with the trial Court that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that there is any justification for departure from this rule in respect of the shamilat land in dispute in the circumstances of the present case.

No other grounds were pressed. I would accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Rangi Lal, J.—I agree.

Landlord and tenant—Forfeiture—Tenancies before Transfer of Property Act and those excepted from its operation—Applicability of English Law—Forfeiture by matter in pais of English Law—Applicability in India—Disclaimer in cases not covered by Transfer of Property Act—Forfeiture, when works—Denial of landlord's title—Forfeiture—Principles—Power of Court to relieve against forfeiture—Manager of joint Hindu family—Disclaimer, whether binding on members—Hindu Law—Joint family—Manager.

The principles of English Law as to forfeiture apply both to tenancies created before the Act came into force and to those excepted from its operation. [p. 517, col 1.]

The English Law as to forfeiture by matter in pais does not apply in India at all. [p. 518, col. 2.]

There can be no forfeiture by disclaimer in cases not covered by the Transfer of Property Act unless the disclaimer is in matter of record. [p. 519, col. 1.]

The principle underlying the rule that disclaimer of the landlord's title by his tenant works a forfeiture of the tenancy is the principle of estoppel or the principle that a man cannot approbate and reprobate. Kally Das Ahiri v. Manmohini Dassee (3) and Ambu Nair v. Kelu Nair (9), referred to. [p. 520, col. 1.]

A person who has lawfully come into possession of land as tenant cannot, by setting up, during the continuance of such relation, any title adverse to that of the landlord, inconsistent with the real legal relation between them, acquire by the operation of the law of limitation, title as owner or any other title inconsistent with that under which he was let into possession. Seshamma Shettati v. Chickaya Hegada (14) and Muhammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Mohan Singh (15), referred to. [p. 520, col. 2; p. 521, col. 1.]

The power of the Courts in India to relieve against forfeiture arising by disclaimer on grounds of justice, equity and good conscience is not necessarily limited to the cases where the tenant establishes that the denial was occasioned by fraud, mistake or accident on the part of the landlord, and the tenant was neither careless nor negligent. [p. 521, col. 2.]

A disclaimer by the manager of joint Hindu family which is effective as forfeiture, is binding on the other members in the absence of anything to suggest the contrary. Guruvayya v. Dattatraya (18) and Lingangowda v. Basangowda (19), applied. [p. 522, col. 1.]

L. P. A. against the decision of Mr. Justice Baker, in S. A. No. 1078 of 1928.

Mr. G. P. Murdeshwar, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Respondent.

Broomfield, J.—The appellants are the present representatives of a family, the Pattars, which has for a long period been in occupation of certain lands at Kurankop in the Dharwar District under a permanent tenancy. Some of these lands belong to the respondent Konher Annarao Deshpande as representative of the Deshpande family. The rest are devasthan lands held by the Deshpandes under a permanent tenancy and sub-let by them to the Pattars. As long ago as 1865 there was litigation between the predecessors of the parties in which it was settled by a compromise decree that the lands should be allowed to continue permanently in the occupation of the Pattars on payment of the assessment as fixed by Government from time to time. In 1923 the respondent brought two suits against Ishvarappa, the father of appellant Rachotappa, and Rachotappa himself, claiming to evict them as being merely annual tenants. In one suit, No. 58 of 1923, which related to those lands covered by the 1865 decree which belonged to the Deshpandes, the defendants Ishvarappa and Rachotappa pleaded and proved their permanent tenancy, and the suit was dismissed on December 12, 1923. On February 27, 1924, Ishvarappa made an application to the Mamlatdar to have his name entered in the Record of Rights as owner of the lands which had been the subject-matter of that suit. The application, Ex. 36, was in these terms:

"The Khata of survey Nos. 30, 31, 33 of Kurankop stands in the name of Konherrao Annarao Deshpande. But he is not the owner thereof, and I am not the permanent tenant. He is now and then harassing me by suits taking advantage of the entry in the records. The Khata should be entered in my name instead of in the name of Konherrao. Notice has been given to him of this."

The order below the application issued to the village officers of Kurankop was,

"We cannot interfere in a matter of this civil nature. If he has a decree of the Civil Court he may take possession accordingly. Applicant may be informed of this and this may be filed as disposed of."

In the other Suit No. 106 of 1923, which related to the devasthan lands, the defendants denied both that Konherrao was a permanent tenant of the lands and that they were tenants under him and they set up title in themselves by adverse possession. That was on August 9, 1923. On March 11, 1924, the respondent withdrew the suit. In December 1925, he brought the two suits, which have given rise to these Letters Patent appeals, to recover possession of the lands on the ground that the tenancy had been forfeited by the disclaimer of title, in one case in the application to the Mamlatdar already referred to, and in the other in the pleadings in the former suit. Ishvarappa who was made the sole defendant,—he was the only tenant shown in the revenue records, being the head of the family—died pending the hearing and his son, appellant No. 1, and nephew, appellant No. 2, were brought on record as his heirs. The trial Court allowed the claim in each case, and the decrees have been confirmed in first and second appeals. There are Letters Patent appeals from the judgment of Baker, J. Letters Patent Appeal No. 12 relates to the devasthan lands, and Letters Patent Appeal No. 13 to the other lands. Three points have been argued by the learned Advocate for the appellants: (1) that the disclaimer of title was not such as to work a forfeiture; (2) that the appellants are not affected thereby; (3) that, even if there has been a forfeiture, the Court can and should relieve against it.

The appeals involve important and difficult questions of law for the solution of which the Transfer of Property Act affords no direct assistance, since we are concerned with agricultural leases to which the provisions of the Act do not apply. However, the Act largely reproduces the English Law, and it has been held in the cases to which Baker, J., has referred, that the principles of English Law as to forfeiture apply both to tenancies created before the Act came into force and to those excepted from its operation. The definition of "disclaimer" in s. 111 (g) of the Act—renunciation by the lessee of his character as such by setting up a title in a third person or by claiming title in himself—is taken from an English case, the judgment of Tindal, C. J., in Doe dem. Williams and Jeffery v. Cooper (1). The cases cited by Baker, J., further show that the repudiation of the landlord's title must be clear and unequivocal and made to the knowledge of the landlord. So far there is no room for dispute.

The first question for consideration, therefore, is, whether the disclaimers, on which the respondent relies, fulfil these elementary requirements. So far as Ishvarappa's application (Ex. 36) is concerned, I think there is no difficulty. Mr. Murdeshwar for the appellants did indeed suggest that, as the Pattars are permanent tenants who pay no rent to the landlord, but merely assessment and local fund to Government, they may be regarded as owners for all practical purposes, and that the application to the Mamlatdar may have been made merely with the object of putting an end to harassing litigation without any intention of repudiating the landlord's nominal title. In that connection reference may be made to Amarsangji v. Ranchhod (2). There might have been some force in this argument if the entries in the Record of Rights had not already made it clear that the Pattars are permanent tenants liable to pay the Government assessment only, but the entries do state that perfectly clearly, and Ishvarappa's application can only mean that he claimed to be full owner and wished to be entered as such. Since it is settled law that under certain circumstances even a permanent tenancy can be forfeited, it would be useless to pretend that the difference between permanent tenant and owner is merely nominal, even though, as appears to be the case here, the tenant pays no rent to the landlord but only the Government assessment. As pointed out in Kally Dass Ahiri v. Manmohini Dassee (3), (page 447*),

"Before the lease the owner had the right to enjoy the possession of the land and by the lease he excludes himself during its currency from that right, but the determination of the lease is a removal of that barrier, and there is nothing to prevent the enjoyment from which he had been excluded by the lease."

The nature of this particular tenancy may be material for the purpose of determining whether the disclaimer works a forfeiture or whether the forfeiture should be relieved against, but that there has in fact been a disclaimer cannot, I think, be gainsaid. In the case of the devasthan lands, Mr. Murdeshwar's suggestion is that the denial of respondent's title was due to a misunderstanding. He says the Pattars were misled by the fact that the Record of Rights mentions, not respondent Konherrao Annarao, but Ramrao Venkatrao, another member of the Deshpande family, as the wahivatdar of the devasthan and holder of the lands, and also by the fact that the present numbers of the lands do not tally with those in the decree of 1865. There is not much in the latter point. Ishvarappa was aware of the decree. He referred to it in his written statement in the suit relating to the other lands, and in the case of those lands also the numbers were not the same. But the position with regard to the devasthan lands was rather peculiar. The Deshpandes were not the owners but themselves only permanent tenants, and by virtue of some arrangement, as to the origin of which there is no evidence but which is recorded in the Record of Rights, the Pattars perform the worship of the deity (apparently in lieu of the assessment, which the decree of 1865 made them liable to pay) and pay only local fund to Government. It does not appear that the decree was produced or referred to in Suit No. 106 of 1923, and it certainly seems significant that on the very day, November 16, 1926, when respondent in the subsequent suit relating to the devasthan lands produced an extract from the Survey Records, Ex. 24, showing the corresponding numbers and making it clear that the numbers mentioned in the decree included the numbers of the devasthan lands, the appellants put in an application, Ex. 22, giving up their contentions about adverse possession and limitation and admitting that they held the lands as permanent tenants of the Deshpandes. It is possible of course that this was merely due to the advice of their Pleaders, but it may not have been so. The possibility of a genuine misunderstanding can hardly be ruled out. It is difficult to see why the Pattars should admit the tenancy in one case and deny it in the other, if they realize that the decree of 1865 applied equally to both sets of lands.

One of the main arguments put forward on behalf of the appellants is that Ishvarappa's application to the Revenue Authorities would not under English Law be regarded as working a forfeiture in the circumstances of this case, and cannot do so therefore in this country. The argument is founded mainly on the judgment of the Privy Council in Maharaja of Jeypore v. Rukmini Pattamahdevi (4) where their Lordships had to consider the effect of an alleged disclaimer of title contained in a letter written by a tenant to his landlord in a case not governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. Baker, J., has discussed this case very briefly and distinguishes it on the facts. He says:

"The tenant did not deny his landlord's title in toto, but what he claimed was that he was not holding his estate on service tenure and he was only liable to pay Rs. 2,200 as rent instead of Rs. 15,000, and he was not required or liable to attend the Dasara Durbar with 500 soldiers as required by the Maharaja and it was held by the Privy Council that this was not such a denial of his landlord's title as to create a a forfeiture. That is a very different matter from the present case. The present denial is of the landlord's title in toto."

But, with deference, I do not think the learned Judge has sufficiently considered what was decided, or the implications of what was decided, in the case. The tenancy was alleged to have been forfeited on two quite distinct grounds, denial of title and refusal of service. We are not concerned with the judgment so far as it deals with the latter point. The question of forfeiture by denial of the landlord's title is discussed by Lord Phillimore at pp. 589 to 600*. He points out that the rules of English Law as to forfeiture of tenancy have been held to be consonant with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience and to be applicable to India, and he states the rule of English Law to be:

"that a tenant will forfeit his holding if he denies his landlord's title in clear unmistakable terms, whether by matter of record, or by certain matters in pais."

He goes on to say that their Lordships did not think it necessary to decide in that case whether there had been a clear and unmistakable denial, because there was neither any denial by matter of record before the suit nor by matter in pais. The effect of the observations at p. 599* appears to be that the English Law as to forfeiture by matter in pais does not apply in India at all. Lord Phillimore further points out that some confusion has arisen from a misunderstanding of the reason why a tenant from year to year may, when he has denied his landlord's title, be ejected without notice. It is not, he says, because the denial or disclaimer works a forfeiture, and he cites Platt on Leases, Vol. 2, Part 7, s. 2, p. 496:

"The holding being from year to year, subject to the mutual will of landlord and tenant to determine it on giving the usual six months' notice;.....evidence of a disclaimer ... is evidence of his election to put an end to the tenancy, and supersedes the necessity for such notice; .....Hence, verbal or written denials of a tenancy have rendered a notice to quit unnecessary; but it does not appear that they have effected a forfeiture of the term."

So that two propositions appear to follow from the judgment of their Lordships in this case: that there can be no forfeiture by disclaimer in cases not covered by the Transfer of Property Act unless the disclaimer is in matter of record, see in that connection *Vidyavardhak Sangh Co.*v. Ayyappa (5), that cases dealing with disclaimer in tenancies from year to year cannot be regarded as authorities on the subject of forfeiture. It is at least a remarkable coincidence that practically all the cases on which Baker, J., has relied for the proposition that Ishvarappa's application to the Mamlatdar was sufficient to work a forfeiture are either cases where the denial of title was in proceedings in a Civil Court or cases of tenancies from year to year. The one exception is Padmanabhaya v. Ranga (6) and the denial of title in that case, which was contained in a letter by the tenant to the landlord, would apparently not work a forfeiture on the principles laid down in the Privy Council case. For a convenient statement of the English Law on the subject of forfeiture by disclaimer, Lord Phillimore in his judgment referred to Bacon's Abridgment, 'Leases,' T. 2. The passage is in Vol. 4, p. 219, and is as follows:

"Here it is to be observed, that any act of the lessee by which he disaffirms or impugns the title of his lessor occasions a forfeiture of his lease. For to every lease the law tacitly annexeth a condition that if the lessee do anything that may affect the interest of his lessor, the lease shall be void, and the lessor may re-enter. Besides, every such act necessarily determines the relations of landlord and tenant; since to claim under another, and at the same time to controvert his title; to affect to hold under a lease, and at the same time to destroy that interest out of which the lease ariseth, would be the most palpable inconsistency."

"A lessee may thus incur a forfeiture of his estate by act in pais, or by matter of record. By matter of record—where he sues out a writ, or resorts to a remedy, which claims or supposeth a right to the freehold; or where in an action by his lessor grounded upon the lease he resists the demand under the grant of a higher interest in the land; or where he acknowledges the fee to be in a stranger; for having thus solemnly protested against the right of his lessor, he is estopped by the record from claiming an interest under him. By act in pais as where he alienates the estate in fee."

Woodfall, Landlord and Tenant, at p. 383, cites this passage word for word, with the comment, as to matter of record, "but anything of this sort can seldom if ever now happen, real actions having been abolished."

Mr. Murdeshwar also refers to Vol. 2 of Bacon's Abridgment at p. 570, a passage which was cited in the argument in Doe dem. Graves v. Wells (7), a leading authority on the English law of forfeiture. There is, in my opinion, great force in the contention that there is something decidedly technical about the English Law on this subject and that matter of record means more than a document of a formal or solemn character and will not necessarily include, as Baker, J., suggests,

"a denial made in a written application to the Revenue Authorities with the object of setting the law in motion, that is, by causing the name of the defendant to be entered in the revenue records instead of the name of the plaintiff."

Mr. Desai evidently saw the force of the argument that the denial to be effective must be in some form of judicial proceeding, for he made a strenuous effort to show that proceedings in connection with the Record of Rights should be regarded as such. In this I do not think he has succeeded. He refers to s. 196, Bombay Land Revenue Code, according to which formal or summary inquiries under the Code are deemed to be judicial proceedings under the Penal Code and the Officer conducting the inquiry is deemed to be a Civil Court. But, according to the judgment of Shah, J., in Emperor v. Narayan (8), s. 196 does not apply to inquiries under the rules relating to the Record of Rights. In any case there was here no proceeding nor inquiry. The Mamlatdar said that it was a matter for the Civil Courts. It was for the plaintiff to show that under the English Law a statement made in an application of this kind should be regarded as working a forfeiture. In my opinion he has not succeeded in doing so. But there are other considerations which appear to me to affect not only Ishvarappa's application to the Revenue Authorities but also the disclaimer in the written statement in suit No. 106 of 1923, which was undoubtedly matter of record. What is the principle underlying the rule that disclaimer of the landlord's title works a forfeiture of the tenancy? The passages cited from Bacon's Abridgment and from Woodfall suggest that the principle is estoppel. The expressions "matter of record" and "in pais" themselves savour of estoppel. In Kally Dass Ahiri v. Manmohini Dassee (3) the principle was stated to be that a man cannot approbate and reprobate, and that is the principle on which Baker, J., has relied. But, of course, the rule that a man may not approbate and reprobate does not simply mean that he may not contradict himself. It means that he may not assume a certain position and take the benefits arising therefrom and then set up a contrary position so as to have it both ways. The rule is explained in this sense in Ambu Nair v. Kelu Nair (9), where the observations of Honyman, J., in Smith v. Baker (10) are cited (p. 811*):

[He cannot] "at the same time blow hot and cold. He cannot say at one time that the transaction is valid, and thereby obtain some advantage, to which he could only be entitled on the footing that it is valid, and at another say it is void for the purpose of securing some further advantage."

Judging from the authorities which have been placed before us, wherever denial of a landlord's title by a tenant has been held effective as a forfeiture, the elements of an estoppel have always been present (a change of position has been brought about or the bar of res judicata has arisen) or the rule that a man cannot approbate and reprobate applies. When, as in Kally Dass Ahiri v. Manmohini Dassee (3), the tenant denies the landlord's title in a suit for rent, the result is that the landlord cannot recover the rent and the tenant escapes liability to pay it. So in the other cases cited in the argument, Mahipat v. Lakshman (11), Gopal Ram v. Dhakeshwar Pershad (12) and Padmanabhaya v. Ranga (6), the tenant obtained some advantage by his disclaimer and the position of the landlord was prejudiced. But in the present case, it does not appear that there is any estoppel or bar of res judicata, nor is there really any question of the tenant enjoying the advantages of two inconsistent positions. It is here that the peculiar character of this tenancy becomes important. Not only it is a tenancy in perpetuity a thing unknown to the English Law, but it is a tenancy from which the landlord derives no benefit as long as it subsists. There is no rent reserved in the ordinary sense: The tenant pays the Government assessment only (in the case of the devasthan lands apparently only the local fund), and, though the compromise decree of 1865 provides that it is to be paid to the landlord, that only meant apparently that it was to be paid to Government through him, in practice it is probably paid direct to the village officers. No claim for arrears of rent or assessment was made in Suit No. 58 of 1923, and though arrears of rent were claimed in the other suit, there appears to have been no justification for the claim. We can only go by the decree of 1865 and the entries in the Record of Rights in the absence of any evidence to contradict them. These are the materials upon which respondent wishes the Court to pronounce that the tenancy is forfeited. Upon this basis when the respondent filed his suits in 1923 against his tenants he was putting forward a completely unsustainable claim. His assertion that they were annual tenants was untrue. It was a permanent tenancy, the terms of which gave him no right to make any claim against the tenants of any kind as long as they paid the assessment, and as far as the record shows there was no question of their having failed to pay the assessment to Government. Therefore, the the disclaimer of title has not resulted in any advantage to the tenants to which they were not entitled under their tenancy, nor has it deprived the landlord of any advantage to which he was entitled as owner.

In Komalukboti v. Muhammad (13), Napier, J., suggested a different criterion, viz., whether the assertion of the tenant would operate as a starting point for adverse possession against the landlord. But it has been frequently held that a person who has lawfully come into possession of land as tenant cannot by setting up, during the continuance of such relation, any title adverse to that of the landlord, inconsisten, with the real legal relation between them acquire by the operation of the law of limitation title as owner, or any other title inconsistent with that under which he was let into possession: see Seshamma Shettati v. Chickaya Hegade (14), and the cases cited there, also Muhammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v. Mohan Singh (15). In the latter case their Lordships of the Privy Council said (p. 298*):

"The Board are unable to hold that the simple assertion of a proprietary right in a judicial proceeding in connection with the land in dispute which ex hypothesi was unfounded at the date when it was made, can, by the mere lapse of six or twelve years, convert what was an occupancy or tenant title into that of an under-proprietor."

On these authorities it appears that neither Ishvarappa's application nor even the written statement in suit No. 106 of 1923 would be sufficient to make the possession of the Pattars adverse to the landlord. On principle then I feel considerable difficulty in holding that the English law, which is admittedly the law to be applied so far as it is applicable to India, requires us to hold, as a matter of justice, equity and good conscience, that there has been an effective forfeiture in the circumstances present here. I think there is good deal to be said for the view that where the Transfer of Property Act does not apply, the disclaimer of the landlord's title, even though clear and unequivocal and even though made in a judicial proceeding would not operate as a forfeiture of the tenancy unless it amounts to an estoppel or comes within the mischief of the rule that a man may not approbate and reprobate, or is made in such circumstances that it would render the tenant's possession adverse to the landlord.

I am not prepared on the materials placed before us to commit myself to that proposition, nor is it necessary, because, assuming that what I may call a bare disclaimer in matter of record is legally sufficient to work a forfeiture, I hold that anyhow the Courts have the power to relieve against it. I will deal with this part of the case next. Only two authorities have been referred to in this connection, viz., Mallappa Venkatesh v. Janardan Govind (16) and Komalukboti v. Muhammad (13). In the former case, where a tenant had contravened a stipulation in the lease against alienation, it was held that, although the lease contained a proviso for re-entry, the Court had equitable power to relieve against the forfeiture. It was argued that the Court had no power to relieve except for non-payment of rent, but Macleod, C. J., said (p. 452*):

" . . . section 111, Transfer of Property Act, and the other sections of Chap. V do not by virtue of s. 117 apply to leases for agricultural purposes; and there is no other restriction that I know of against the Court exercising its equitable powers by relieving against forfeiture in a proper case."

That therefore was not a case of a forfeiture by disclaimer; but the language used by the learned Chief Justice is quite general. In Komalukboti v. Muhammad (13), Seshagiri Ayyar, J., expressed the view that the Courts acting upon the principles of the English Law would have no power to relieve against forfeiture where there has been a denial of title, unless the tenant proves that the denial was occasioned by the fraud, mistake or accident of the landlord, and that the tenant himself was neither careless nor negligent. He referred to and dissented from the opinion of Sadasiva Ayyar, J., in an earlier case Abakka v. Seshamma (17). That learned Judge had been inclined to the view that all cases of forfeiture can be relieved against in India. Napier, J., the other Judge who decided Komalukboti v. Muhammad (13), has not dealt with that aspect of the case.

As I have already pointed out, the possibility of a bona fide mistake cannot be excluded in the case of the devasthan lands; but, apart from that, I am not convinced that the power of the Courts in India to relieve against forfeiture arising by disclaimer on grounds of justice, equity and good conscience must necessarily be limited to the cases mentioned by Seshagiri Ayyar, J. It may well be that English Courts of Equity never gave relief on any other ground but I doubt very much whether they ever had to deal with an analogous case. Suppose there was a lease for 999 years under which the tenant's only liability was to pay the land-tax, and he had never failed to discharge this liability, but under stress of an unfounded claim by the landlord to treat him as an annual tenant and evict him as such had denied the landlord's title, can it be said with confidence that an English Court of Equity would feel itself compelled to maintain the forfeiture? I am not satisfied that it would, and that being so, I see no reason why the Courts in India should deny themselves the power to relieve in a case of this peculiar character.

I do not think that there is any force in appellants' contention that Ishvarappa's disclaimer, if it be effective as a forfeiture, would not be binding upon them. He was the manager of the joint family and, in the absence of anything to suggest the contrary, must be held to have represented the family. The principle laid down in such cases as Guruvayya v. Dattatraya (18) and Lingangowda v. Basangowda (19) will apply. It is not a case of alienation of joint family property. The cases relied on by Mr. Murdeshwar, Birendra Kishore v. Bhubaneswari (20) and Srimati Farman Bibi v. Sheikh Tasha Haddal Hasain (21) do not help him, since it does not appear that the point of representation by the manager of a joint family arose at all. Nevertheless, the fact that Ishvarappa is dead and that his heirs, the appellants, do not dispute the title of the respondent is a matter which may be taken into consideration in deciding whether the Court should grant relief.

To sum up my conclusions, I find that there has been no forfeiture in the case from which Letters Patent Appeal No. 13 arises as there has been no disclaimer by matter of record before the suit. In the other case the permanent tenancy may have been technically forfeited, but the Court has power to grant and should grant relief against it. The appeals must therefore be allowed and the suits dismissed. We think, however, that as Ishvarappa's conduct in disclaiming the tenancy was not justified and must be held to have been largely responsible for this litigation, the appellants are not entitled to their costs from the other party even in Letters Patent Appeal No. 13. So far as that case is concerned, we order that the parties do pay their own costs throughout. In Letters Patent Appeal No. 12, in which the appellants have to seek the indulgence of the Court to relieve against the forfeiture of the tenancy, we direct that the appellants must pay their own costs and the costs of the respondent throughout.

OUDH CHIEF COURT

First Civil Appeal No. 41 of 1933

March 1, 1935

SRIVASTAVA AND THOMAS, JJ.

NIHAL CHAND AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

SHANTI LAL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Arbitrator—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para 15, cl. 1—Relationship of arbitrator with one defendant—Arbitrator having monetary dealings with another defendant—Non-disclosure of facts to plaintiff at time of agreement—Fraudulent concealment, if constituted—Plaintiff not conscious of right to revoke submission—Consequent failure to lodge protest—Whether constitutes waiver—Arbitrator dictating part of award to junior—Contents of award leaking out before pronouncement—Defendant not taken into confidence—Judicial misconduct, if made out.

Where the arbitrator is related to one of the defendants and has monetary dealings with the other, both of which facts ought to have been disclosed but were not disclosed to the plaintiff when he entered into the agreement, the concealment of the relationship must be considered fraudulent and the award should be set aside. As there can be no question of waiver without full knowledge of one's legal rights, where the plaintiff thought that he had no right to revoke the submission, his failure to lodge an unequivocal protest against the arbitrator acting as such, will not operate as a waiver.

The writing of a part of the award by the junior of the arbitrator at the latter's dictation is an act of a ministerial character which can be delegated to a third person and does not constitute judicial misconduct. Buta v. Municipal Committee of Lahore (3), referred to. [p. 525, col. 2]

In the absence of any evidence showing that the arbitrator in any way took the defendant into his confidence, no misconduct can be attributed to him by reason of the contents of the award having leaked out before it was pronounced. Any help given by the defendant in the preparation of the copy of the award sent to the plaintiff cannot also affect the award itself. These circumstances, though raising some suspicion against the arbitrator, are not sufficient to establish a charge of misconduct. [ibid]

F. C. A. against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Unao, dated March 28, 1933.

Messrs. Radha Krishna and S. N. Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Ali Zaheer and S. S. Saraf, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rendition of accounts. The original plaintiff Lala Jai Ram Das, who died during the pendency of the appeal in this Court and is represented by his son Shanti Lal who is now the respondent in the appeal before us, was the proprietor of the Unao Sugar Works. On January 11, 1926, he entered into an agreement, (Ex. A-1), with the two defendants, Lala Nihal Chand and Lala Jagannath, whereby the sugar mill was leased out to the defendants for a period of three years from January 15, 1926, to December 31, 1928. The defendants were to work the mill under their own management, and the profits were to be divided between the parties according to the terms and conditions laid down in the agreement. The agreement further provided that in case of any dispute in respect of it, the matter in dispute was to be settled by reference to arbitration. Admittedly actual possession of the mill was delivered by the plaintiff to the defendants on January 18, 1926, and the defendants began forthwith to make arrangements for working the mill. It is also common ground between the parties that the manufacture of sugar was stopped by the defendants from August 9, 1926, and work was not resumed till January 1927. This led to disputes between the parties in respect of the amount of profits for 1926. So in terms of the agreement the dispute was referred to Lala Bhana Ram, the arbitrator named therein. Lala Bhana Ram after he had carried on the proceeding for sometime declined to proceed with the arbitration on March 8, 1927, the agreement Ex. A-1 provided that in case Lala Bhana Ram is unable to decide the matters in dispute then in his place Lala Makund Lal was to be appointed arbitrator, therefore, in accordance with this condition of the agreement the matter was entrusted to Lala Makund Lal for decision. He gave an award on May 8, 1927, but the plaintiff was not satisfied with it. He thereupon instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Unao on November 6, 1928, asking for rendition of accounts and claiming his share of profits for 1926, and 1927 and damages for breach of certain terms of the agreement. He also impugned the award of Lala Makund Lal on various grounds, and pleaded that he was not bound by it.

The learned Subordinate Judge framed two preliminary issues. His finding in respect of them was that the plaintiff was bound to refer his disputes as regards the affairs of 1927 to arbitration. As regards the award dated May 8, 1927, he found that Makund Lal was closely related to Jagannath, defendant No. 2, and that the plaintiff was not aware of the relationship at the time of the agreement. He further held that the plaintiff did not waive his right to object against Makund Lal acting as arbitrator after the plaintiff had become aware of the relationships. He was also of opinion that the arbitrator was guilty of judicial misconduct. He accordingly held that the award was invalid and was not binding on the plaintiff. In result he decided to proceed with the suit so far as it related to the claim for profits and damages for 1926. In pursuance of this the plaintiff with the permission of the Court, amended the plaint confining his claim to the disputes relating to the working of the mill in 1926. The defendants also filed an amended written statement, and on these revised pleadings of the parties, the Subordinate Judge framed ten issues which were as follows:

1. (a) Were the defendants justified in stopping the manufacture of the sugar since August 9, 1926, as alleged?

(b) Did the defendants close the workshop in August 1926, as alleged?

(c) If so, what loss was caused to the factory on that account?

2. Were the defendants entitled to claim the entire sum of Rs. 70,000 as their share of the profits for the first year, or the year 1926?

3. Were not the defendants bound to deposit the profits, accruing to the plaintiff, in the Punjab National Bank to the credit of the plaintiff as agreed under the terms of the agreement in suit?

4. Did the plaintiff take advances in cash and kind aggregating to a sum of Rs. 48,167-8-0?

5. To what damages is the plaintiff entitled on account of the items mentioned in para. 6 of the plaint?

6. Is the question of the plaintiff's profits res judicata?

7. Are the defendants entitled to a sum of Rs. 17,387-10-3 from the plaintiff as alleged?

8. Is that claim of the defendants barred by time?

9. To what profits, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

10. Is not the plaintiff liable for the items shown in the defendants 'Balance Sheet' excepting the items as alleged at p. 92 of these proceedings?

Parts (a) and (b) of Issue No. 1 and Issues Nos. 2 and 3 were decided against the defendants and in favour of the plaintiff. Issue No. 6 was not pressed and was also decided against the defendants. As regards Issue No. 7 it was held that the defendants were not entitled to make the claim in question in the present suit. In view of the finding on Issue No. 7, Issus No. 8 was left undecided. Under Issue No. 10 it was held that the plaintiff was not liable for the amounts claimed by the defendants under the heads of law charges, miscellaneous expenses, general charges, hundian account, brokerage, motor expenses, post and telegrams, stationery and travelling expenses. It was also held that the items claimed by the defendants in respect of gur and coal should be reduced by two per cent. and five per cent. respectively. Lastly a few items were left over for determination in proceedings for the final decree. Under Issue No. 4, the Subordinate Judge noted the plaintiff's admission of having received a sum of Rs. 22,000 for the profits of the year 1926. For the rest the determination of the issue was postponed till the time of the final settling of accounts. As regards Issue No. 5 and Issue No. 1 (c), the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff is entitled to damages for the loss suffered by him owing to the stopping of the factory in August 1926, and laid down the method to be followed in determining the amount of the said damages on the sum found due to him as profits for damages. He also held that the plaintiff should be allowed interest at 9 per cent. per annum as the period ending August 10, 1926, from August 11, 1926, till date of realization, and interest at the same rate on the balance of the profits from January 1, 1927, till realization. Under Issue No. 9 he decreed the plaintiff's suit for profits but left the exact amount of the profits for determination in the proceedings for the final decree in accordance with the directions recorded in his findings under Issues Nos. 5 and 10.

The defendants have preferred this appeal against this preliminary decree of the Subordinate Judge. They have in the first place contended that the arbitrator's award is valid and binding on the plaintiff. As stated before the learned Subordinate Judge has set aside the award on two grounds (1) concealment of relationship between the arbitrator Makund Lal and Jagannath, defendant No. 2, and (2) judicial misconduct.

1.—Concealment of relationship.

Lala Makund Lal had a paternal uncle Lala Gopal Das. The latter had a grandson Narsingh Das who was married to the sister of the defendant Lala Jagannath. This relationship is not disputed. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that according to the notions of Hindus, amongst whom the existence of joint families is a normal feature, the said relationship is a comparatively close one. The only question is whether the plaintiff was not aware of this relationship at the time when he agreed to the appointment of Makund Lal as an arbitrator. The oral evidence on the point is very conflicting P. W. No. 1 stated that prior to March 9, 1927, when Jai Ram Das wrote Ex. P. W. 1-2, E. A-2 inquiring from him whether he will take up the arbitration he at the house of Lala Kotu Ram had a talk with Jai Ram Das in which the latter told him that he knew of his relationship with Lala Jagannath. D. W. No. 1 Lala Kotu Ram does not make any mention of this conversation at his house but says that Jai Ram Das had told him that he had full confidence in Lala Makund Lal in spite of his relationship with Lala Jagannath. The defendant Nihal Chand deposes that the plaintiff knew the relationship between Makund Lal and Jagannath years before the arbitration. Lala Jai Ram Das on the other hand swore that at the time of the execution of the agreement he did not know that Makund Lal was related to Jagannath. The learned Subordinate Judge has believed Jai Ram Das on this point. We see no sufficient reason to disagree with the Subordinate Judge. In Ex. A-3, which is a copy of a letter dated March 10, 1927, written to Lala Jai Ram Das by Makund Lal, the latter wrote as follows:

"and also say if you know that Lala Jagannath is related to me and you would like the arbitration to be done by me".

Lala Jai Ram Das in his letter Ex. 87 of the same date replied as follows:

"You were kind enough to inform me of your relationship with Mr. Jagannath Syal who is a party in the matter of the dispute. Of course I never knew of it before but I should think that you can be the best Judge under the circumstances to determine the position for yourself. The deed does not give me any option, and as such, I have to abide by what you order me."

It is difficult to think that a leading lawyer of the position of Lala Makund Lal should have written in the terms of Ex. A-3 if he knew that Jai Ram Das was aware of the relationship between him and Jagannath. The statement in Lala Makund Lal's letter, Ex. A-5, written eight days after Jai Ram Das had approached him to do the arbitration, telling him that he already knew of the relationship seems to us quite inconsistent with his earlier letter Ex. A-3. It is clearly an after thought and seems cunningly to have been introduced to avoid objection against his acting as an arbitrator, when he had made up his mind to take up the arbitration. Jai Ram Das's affirmation of his want of knowledge of the relationship in Ex. 87 written immediately after his receipt of Ex. A-3 also strongly supports his statement in the witness box. It is no doubt true that Lala Makund Lal was known to Jai Ram Das as had been for many years and that Jai Ram Das had been on terms of intimate friendship with both the defendants, but there being no relationship between Jai Ram Das and Jagannath, it cannot be expected that he should be aware of the marriage connections of Jagannath's relations. We must, therefore, uphold the Subordinate Judge's finding that the plaintiff Jai Ram Das did not know of the relationship in question at the time when he entered into the agreement Ex. A-1.

One of the grounds laid down in r. 15, cl. (i), sub-cl. (b) of Sch. II of the Code of Civil Procedure for setting aside an award is fraudulent concealment by either party of any matter which he ought to have disclosed. We think that this relationship of Jagannath with Makund Lal was a matter which ought to have been disclosed to Jai Ram Das at the time of the agreement. It is in the highest degree unlikely that Jai Ram Das should have agreed to accept Makund Lal as an arbitrator if he should have been made aware of this relationship. The concealment of the relationship must under the circumstances be considered fraudulent.

It has, however, been argued that the plaintiff having been apprised of the relationship by Makund Lal before his entering upon the arbitration and the plaintiff having allowed Makund Lal to carry on the arbitration without any objection or protest, he must be deemed to have waived the objection. The argument proceeded that the plaintiff wanted to take the chance of a decision being given by the arbitrator in his favour and under the circumstances he cannot be allowed to turn round and question the award on this ground, when the award has been given against him. The following passage in Russell on Arbitration and Award, 12th Edition, p. 436 has been referred to in this connection:

"In proceedings before an arbitrator the practical question is: What form of protest is sufficient or what line of conduct should be followed to avoid the loss of a party's rights?

"The strongest line of conduct and the strongest form of protest for a party to adopt or make is to retire from the proceedings, but such a course when a party is brought before or tied to a particular tribunal, is obviously extremely dangerous, because he may ultimately find, when he has moved to set aside the award made against him, that the irregularity of which he complains is not sufficient to upset the award. The obvious course, therefore, is for a party complaining of irregularity to protest against the irregularity, and to continue to conduct his case in the proceedings, before the arbitrator under such protest".

No doubt the plaintiff on becoming aware of the relationship did not refuse to have the arbitration carried out by Makund Lal. Our reading of the plaintiff's letter Ex. 87 is that when he came to know of the relationship he did not relish Makund Lal acting as arbitrator, but wished Makund Lal himself to decline to carry out the arbitration because of the relationship. At any rate, it cannot be regarded as a deliberate and free acceptance of Makund Lal as arbitrator. "A waiver must be an intentional act with knowledge" [per Lord Chelmsford in Darnley (Earl) v. London, Chatham & Dover Rail Co. (1). There can, in our opinion, be no waiver without full knowledge of one's legal rights. There could be no waiver in this case unless the plaintiff had a consciousness of his right to revoke the submission. This appears to be clearly negatived by Ex. 87 where he says that the deed does not give him any option, and as such, he must abide by Makund Lal's orders. Thus it seems clear that rightly or wrongly Jai Ram Das at the time believed that having executed the agreement Ex. A-1, he was bound by its terms and could not discard Lala Makund Lal who had been nominated as an arbitrator in the agreement. Being in this state of mind, his failure to lodge an unequivocal protest against Lala Makund Lal acting as arbitrator does not in our opinion operate as a waiver.

Next there is the question of the indebtedness of Lala Nihal Chand to Lala Makund Lal. It was admitted in the lower Court that there were monetary dealings between Lala Nihal Chand and Lala Makund Lal. We accept the Subordinate Judge's finding which has not been seriously disputed before us that the plaintiff was not aware of these monetary relations at the time when he entered into the agreement. But it has been argued that the money transactions between them were of a small amount and not of such a nature as to disqualify Lala Makund Lal from acting as arbitrator. This view seems to have found favour with the learned Subordinate Judge, but we are not inclined to agree with him on this point. Lala Makund Lal has not produced his accounts to show the extent of his monetary dealings with Lala Nihal Chand. The cross-examination of Lala Nihal Chand, D. W. No. 2, shows that they used to deal in large sums of money. We think that it was the duty of the defendants to disclose to the plaintiff at the time of the agreement the monetary dealings and business relations which existed between Makund Lal and Lala Nihal Chand. In a case of arbitration where the parties entrust their fate into the hands of an arbitrator, it is essential that there must be abundant good faith. The arbitrator must be absolutely disinterested and impartial. In Mahamed Wahidud Din v. Hakiman (2), it was held that if an arbitrator is indebted to one of the parties at the time of the reference or becomes so indebted after the reference, and in either case does not disclose the fact to the other party, such party would be entitled to revoke the reference upon discovery of fact, and any award made by such arbitrator would be invalid on the ground of judicial misconduct. We are, therefore, of opinion that as the arbitrator Lala Makund Lal was related to one of the defendants and had monetary dealings with the other, both of which facts ought to have been disclosed and were not disclosed to the plaintiff at the time when he entered into the agreement, the award has rightly been set aside.

2.—Judicial misconduct.

As regards the ground of judicial misconduct, the only facts which have been made out are that Babu Lachhman Das, who works with Lala Makund Lal as his junior, wrote some portion of the award at the dictation of Lala Makund Lal, that Lala Nihal Chand remained all along at Ferozepore during the time that the award was under preparation, that he had an inkling into the award being in his favour before it had been delivered and that he filled in his handwriting a blank space in the copy of the award which was sent to the plaintiff with a quotation from the agreement in Urdu. There is nothing to show that the arbitrator did not exercise his own judgment on the matters referred to him. The writing of a part of the award by Lachhman Das at the dictation of the arbitrator was an act of a ministerial character which could be delegated to a third party, Buta v. Municipal Committee of Lahore (3). In the absence of any evidence showing that the arbitrator in any way took the defendant into his confidence, no misconduct can be attributed to him by reason of the contents of the award having leaked out before it was pronounced. Any help given by the defendant in the preparation of the copy of the award sent to the plaintiff cannot also affect the award itself. We are, therefore, of opinion that these circumstances relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge, though raising some suspicion against the arbitrator, are not sufficient to establish a charge of misconduct.

[The rest of this judgment is not material for the purposes of this report —Ed.]

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, PUNJAB—RESPONDENT

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 66 (3), 22 (2)—Notice demanding return of income—Legality of notice, if a question of law—Thirty days' time to furnish return essential—Question not raised before Assistant Commissioner—Right to demand reference.

Under s. 22 (2), Income Tax Act, the Income Tax Officer must give the proposed assessee at least thirty days' time within which to furnish his return. If this minimum is denied, the notice becomes entirely illegal and no subsequent extension of time will cure the defect that initially lay in the notice issued. In the matter of Kajori Mal-Kalyan Mal (1), followed.

The question whether a notice demanding return of income, is illegal for not giving thirty days' time is a question of law within s. 22 (2), Income Tax Act.

The assessee has no right to demand that the Commissioner of Income Tax should refer to the High Court the question which he had not raised before the Assistant Commissioner.

Misc. C. A. from an order of the Commissioner of Income Tax, Punjab.

Messrs. Shiv Dutt Jhingan, Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. N. Aggarwal, for the Respondent.

Order.—An application was made under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act, asking the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case on certain points alleged to be questions of law arising out of the assessment of the petitioner Jamna Dhar Potdar and Co., Lyallpur. Two of these questions which were asked to be referred were: (a) Was not the notice under s. 22 (2) served on August 31, 1931, demanding the return of income on or before September 26, 1931, ab initio illegal as not giving the statutory thirty days' time required under s. 22 (2), Income Tax Act? and (b) Was not the Income Tax Officer bound to decide the preliminary question as to the legality of the constitution of the firm under s. 239, Contract Act, before proceeding to make an assessment? It is not necessary to set out the other questions as it was not contended before us that they should be referred. The Commissioner refused to state a case and to refer the questions for the decision of this Court and the petitioner has applied for a mandamus.

As regards the first question it seems to us that a question of law is involved. It was not disputed before us that the notice under s. 22 (2) was not served till August 31, 1931, or that it only gave time up to September 26, 1931, for the putting in of the return. Apparently this notice is illegal as it would seem that under s. 22 (2) of the Act, thirty clear days must be given for the furnishing of the return from the date of service. It was held in Kajori Mal Kalyan Mal, In the matter of (1), that under s. 22 (2) the Income Tax Officer must give the proposed assessee at least thirty days' time within which to furnish his return. If this minimum is denied, the notice becomes entirely illegal and no subsequent extension of time will cure the defect that initially lay in the notice issued.

As regards the second question, it may also be the case that a question of law is involved, but this question was not raised in the appeal to the Assistant Commissioner and, therefore, does not arise out of the order under s. 31. The petitioner, therefore, had no right to demand that the Commissioner of Income-tax should refer this question. This apparently will not be very important if he finally succeeds on the question arising as to the legality of the notice; for if a fresh notice has to issue, it would seem that it will be open to the assessee to agitate this matter again. For the reasons given we direct the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case as to the legality of the notice served on the assessee on August 31, 1931, under s. 22 (2) of the Act and to refer it for decision to this Court. We make no order as to costs as many other questions were raised which, however, have not been pressed before us.

Cr. A. against an order of the Sessions Judge, Sitapur, dated December 18, 1934.

Mr. E. R. Kidwai, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. S. Gupta, Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—These are three connected jail appeals filed by Mathura, Badlu and Sripal against a judgment of the learned Sessions Judge of Sitapur convicting Mathura of an offence under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and sentencing him to death and convicting Badlu and Sripal of an offence under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and sentencing each of them to transportation for life. The reference in confirmation of the sentence of death is also before us. As Mathura has been sentenced to death, a Counsel was engaged on his behalf by the Crown to defend him and this Counsel has argued not only on behalf of Mathura but also on behalf of Badlu and Sripal, and has discharged his duties in a most efficient manner.

The story of the prosecution is rather lengthy and is as follows:—

On the morning of August 13, 1934, Pragi Pasi who lives in Isharwara came to Ratan chaukidar of Hirapur at about 10 or 11 A.M. and informed him that the headless trunk of a man was lying in the grove known as "Khaggan-ka-bagh" to the north of the village. Ratan chaukidar thereupon went to the spot accompanied by several persons and saw the corpse. A pool of blood was lying near it. The corpse had a sabri or instrument of burglary in its right hand and a janeo or sacred thread across its shoulder, raising a prima facie presumption that the corpse was that of a Hindu male. A shirt, a dhoti and an angocha were also found on the corpse. There were wounds on the right shoulder. The corpse appeared to be that of a young man of 24 or 25 years of age, who apparently had been murdered the previous night. Being a headless trunk, no one could identify whose corpse it was. Ratan chaukidar (P. W. No. 1) made a report of the discovery of the corpse at Thana Sadarpur at 2 P.M. on the afternoon of August 13, 1934. A case of wilful murder under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code was registered at Police Station Sadarpur against some unknown persons. The Thana Moharrir, Head Constable Safir Muhammad Khan (P. W. No. 3) went with Ratan chaukidar to the scene of the occurrence and arrived there at 9 P.M. the same day; he examined the corpse and prepared a panchayatnama or inquest report (Ex. 6) in which he noted amongst other injuries those that he found on both testicles of the murdered man. He also noted the fact that the skin had peeled off and that there were 9 or 10 scratches upon those parts showing that those who had murdered the unknown Hindu bore special resentment against him for some great real or fancied sexual wrong or offence committed by him.

The corpse was then sent in the custody of Constable Hafiz-ur-Rahman (P. W. No. 2) and chaukidar Sita Ram to headquarters for post mortem examination. The Civil Surgeon of Sitapur performed the post mortem examination on the body of the unknown Hindu at 9-55 A.M. on the morning of August 15, 1934. While the Civil Surgeon was conducting the post mortem examination, the head and neck of the corpse were brought in before him, and the Civil Surgeon has stated in his post mortem report that after the arrival of the head and neck, the body was identified as that of Bhagwan Din Ahir by Dayal, a relation of the murdered man. Dayal (P. W. No. 13) has deposed in the Court of Session that the deceased Bhagwan Din was his uncle being the step-brother of his father. Dayal not only identified the clothes which the deceased had on his person at the time he was murdered, but he identified the corpse because of the diseased condition of the right thumb of Bhagwan Din, the first phalanx of which was enlarged and inflamed with chronic suppuration. This diseased condition was noted by the Thana Munshi when he prepared his inquest report (Ex. 6), as also by the Civil Surgeon who preserved the right thumb because of the scar on it (see Ex. 9). The head was identified by Dayal as that of Bhagwan Din and the Civil Surgeon has deposed in Court that it fitted perfectly with the trunk, showing that the head and trunk formed part of one human body and belonged to one another.

The Police investigation revealed that on the evening before the commission of the murder, the deceased Bhagwan Din had gone to Sarai Bazar in the company of Musammat Sukhdei Pasin (P. W. No. 6). Musammat Bilasa (P. W. No. 11), wife of the deceased Bhagwan Din, Ishar Din Brahman (P. W. No. 4), Bhagwan Din Pasi (P. W. No. 12) and Shiam Bihari Brahman (P. W. No. 14) deposed that they saw the murdered man for the last time in the Sarai Bazar and some deposed that they saw him in the company of Musammat Sukhdei, the wife of Parbhu Pasi. Musammat Sukhdei (P. W. No. 6) has herself sworn to this fact. Early in the course of his inquiries, the Investigating Police Officer discovered that there was enmity between Mathura Ahir and the deceased Bhagwan Din because the latter had some years ago run away with the daughter of the former. This enmity is proved by the evidence of Musammat Bilasa (P. W. No. 11), wife of the deceased, Dayal (P. W. No. 13), nephew of the deceased and Jhingur Kurmi (P. W. No. 16).

The suspicions of the Investigating Police Officer, Sub-Inspector Jamil-ur-Rahman (P. W. No. 15) having been aroused, he got the house of Mathura and of Badlu, his cousin, searched. Mathura and Badlu both live in the same house but in different parts of it. A blood-stained chaddar (Ex. 8) was recovered from the possession of Mathura and a blood-stained dhoti (Ex. 9) from Badlu. The Investigating Police Officer prepared the usual recovery list and then arrested Mathura because of his proved enmity with the deceased Bhagwan Din, but he did not think it advisable to arrest Badlu just then. He then took Mathura with him to Isharwara, the place where the headless trunk was first found, and by means of adroit questioning, and after perhaps a good deal of persuasion, he induced Mathura to point out the well into which the head of the murdered man had been thrown. In the presence of a number of people, the head of the murdered man Bhagwan Din Ahir was recovered from the well pointed out by Mathura accused, and a recovery list (Ex. 4) was prepared. Jagdeo Brahman (P. W. No. 17) and Sub-Inspector Jamil-ur-Rahman (P. W. No. 15) prove that the head of the murdered Bhagwan Din was recovered with the help of Mahngu Lonia from the well pointed out by Mathura, and the head was identified to be that of Bhagwan Din not only by Mathura but also by the relations of the murdered man.

At this juncture, fortune favoured the Police investigation. Sub-Inspector Riasat Ali (P. W. No. 18) officer in charge of Thana Sadarpur was on August 14, 1934, in the Magistrate's Court at Sitapur in connection with a theft case in which certain men belonging to village Chandpur were on their trial. In the afternoon of this very day, August 14, 1934, Sub-Inspector Riasat Ali received information that a headless trunk had been found at Isharwara and had been sent to Sadar for post mortem examination. That very day he also received information through a Police constable that Bhagwan Din Ahir of Chandpur had been missing for two days, and it so happened that on that very day judgment was pronounced by the Magistrate of Biswan in a theft case in which the accused who were men from village Chandpur were acquitted. Amongst those who were acquitted were Sripal, the appellant before us in this case, and Mullu, brother of Musammat Sukhdei (P. W. No. 6). A bright idea occurred to Sub-Inspector Riasat Ali that he might make use of these accused who had been acquitted and see if they could identify the trunk or the head of the unknown murdered man which had been sent to the mortuary at Sitapur for post mortem examination. Accordingly these persons were taken to the mortuary and Madan Mohan, Sripal appellant before us, Sri Ram and Mullu, brother of Musammat Sukhdei, identified the head shown to them in the mortuary as that of Bhagwan Din of Chandpur. Sub-Inspector Riasat Ali learnt from constable Jalesar Singh that Musammat Sukhdei, sister of Mullu, who had been acquitted in the theft case had gone with the murdered Bhagwan Din to Sarai Bazar a day before his headless body was found. The Police Officer thereupon told Musammat Sukhdei, Sripal and Mullu when they alighted at Biswan Railway Station that he wanted them all to go with him to Isharwara and he deputed constable Sitla Bakhsh Singh to bring these persons with him to Isharwara. Then Sub-Inspector Riasat Ali mounted his horse and reached Isharwara at 10 P. M. that very night, and met his second officer Sub-Inspector Jamil-ur Rahman and Head Constable Safir Muhammad Khan, and took over charge of the investigation of this murder case and spent the night at Isharwara. Next morning, he went to Chandpur and there the constable produced before him Musammat Sukhdei, Sripal and Mullu. In consequence of the information supplied by Musammat Sukhdei, Sub-Inspector Riasat Ali (P. W. No. 18) arrested Badlu and Sripal. Sripal was taken to Isharwara to the grove where the corpse of Bhagwan Din had been found and then Sripal took the Police to a pond, a couple of furlongs to the north of Isharwara and from this pond he recovered the umbrella (Ex. VI), which he said belonged to the deceased Bhagwan Din. A danda or stick (Ex. VII) belonging to the deceased Bhagwan Din was handed over to the Police by Parbhu who had found it to the south of the grove where the headless trunk had been found. Sripal made incriminating statements before the Police and he was sent to headquarters to have his confession recorded by a Magistrate. Sripal's confession was recorded by a Magistrate on August 16, 1934; and then after completing his investigation, Sub-Inspector Riasat Ali prosecuted all three accused, Mathura Badlu and Sripal on a charge of murder under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code. All three accused were committed by the Joint Magistrate of Sitapur to the Court of Session to stand their trial on the said charge, and the learned Sessions Judge has found them all guilty of the offence charged and has sentenced Mathura to death and Badlu and Sripal to transportation for life.

The first point for determination in this case is whether the headless trunk and the head formed part of the body of the murdered man Bhagwan Din. In our opinion the evidence adduced on behalf of the prosecution leaves no room for doubt that the headless trunk upon which the Civil Surgeon performed his post mortem examination was the body of the murdered man Bhagwan Din. Indeed, the learned Counsel for the appellants who has argued the case on their behalf with great ability is not prepared to deny that the headless trunk was the body of the murdered Bhagwan Din. The next point for determination is whether in respect of the death of Bhagwan Din an offence of wilful murder punishable under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code has or has not been committed. The evidence of the Civil Surgeon and the fact that Bhagwan Din had been decapitated leave no room for doubt that Bhagwan Din was most brutally murdered by some person or persons. There remains then the principal question whether the evidence of the prosecution witnesses brings home the charge of murder against the three appellants or not. The learned Counsel for the appellant has argued that the enmity alleged between Mathura and the deceased Bhagwan Din is rather far-fetched and is not a sufficient motive for the accused Mathura committing this murder. In our opinion the question for consideration is not whether the accused had or had not an adequate motive for committing the crime of murder. The real question for determination is whether the evidence on the record fully proves the guilt of the accused or not. If upon the evidence of the prosecution witnesses the crime of the accused has been brought home to him, then the question of the motive with which the crime was committed becomes a matter of secondary importance. The prosecution is seldom able to pry deep into the secrets of unhallowed lives, or to explain the workings of evil minds or the secret desires and passions of a wicked heart. For aught we know, Mathura may have been actuated in killing Bhagwan Din by some sinister motive other than the alleged motive that he wished to revenge himself on the murdered man because some years ago he had enticed away the daughter of Mathura. It may be that Bhagwan Din's wife herself preferred Mathura to her husband and may have been instrumental in circumventing the murder of her husband. It is, however, quite idle and unnecessary to speculate as to the motive which may or may not have actuated Mathura and the other accused in committing this murder, if the fact of their having committed the murder is brought home to them beyond any reasonable doubt. That the deceased went in fear of his life and looked upon Mathura as his mortal enemy is clear from an entry made by him as Secretary of the Co-operative Society at Kalnepur and Bhadarpur of which Chandpur is a hamlet. In the proceedings of this Co-operative Society, dated March 5, 1934 (See Ex. 12) Bhagwan Din made a note at the foot of the proceedings that the meeting commenced at 9 P. M. and closed at 10-30 P. M. and that he was proceeding to his house at 11 P. M. in the night and that if anything happened to him on the way, no one except Mathura, son of Makka Ahir of Chandpur would have been the author of that harm to him. It is, therefore, clear that as early as March 1934, 5 months before his actual murder; Bhagwan Din had a presentiment and a lurking fear that sometime or other Mathura would find his opportunity and kill him. The genuineness of this entry cannot be disputed. Shiam Bihari (P. W. No. 14), Supervisor of the Co-operative Bank at Biswan has proved this entry and its genuineness is beyond dispute. This entry in the proceedings book of the Co-operative Society at Kalnepur fully supports the evidence of the other prosecution witnesses who deposed to the existence of bitter enmity between the deceased and Mathura. Musammat Bilasa (P. W. No. 11) the young widow of the murdered Bhagwan Din has deposed to an incident which happened three years ago when Mathura tried to rape her in her own house and how she rushed up to the roof of her house and so frustrated the evil designs of Mathura. Dayal (P. W. No. 13) corroborates the story told by Musammat Bilasa and so does Jhingur Kurmi (P. W. No. 16). The learned Sessions Judge who had the unestimable advantage of hearing the evidence of the prosecution witnesses and of noting their demeanour in the witness-box has arrived at the conclusion that there was undoubtedly ill-feeling between the accused Mathura and the deceased Bhagwan Din. We are of opinion that the learned Sessions Judge has arrived at a correct conclusion on this point, and whether the enmity be deemed adequate or not, the fact remains that bad blood did exist between the murdered man and the accused. We need not labour this point any further. The case against Mathura rests primarily upon the evidence of Musammat Sukhdei (P. W. No. 6). The learned Counsel for the appellant has argued with great ingenuity and forensic skill that Musammat Sukhdei is a tutored witness and that she has been compelled by the Police to give false evidence under threat of her brother Mullu being prosecuted for Badmashi or for some criminal offence under the Penal Code. The learned Counsel has tried to create grave doubts and suspicions in our minds as regards the evidence of Musammat Sukhdei, but in the dry light of reason all these doubts and suspicions vanish into thin air like morning mist before the rising sun. In our opinion the conduct of the Investigating Police Officer has been quite straightforward and above board, and Musammat Sukhdei has given her evidence in a very straightforward manner. No doubt, Musammat Sukhdei at first did not like to get herself involved in this brutal murder, and the threats held out by the accused against her may also have served to silence her mouth, but when the Police came to know that she was the last person to be seen with the murdered man and that she had accompanied the murdered man to Sarai Bazar, they plied her with questions and ultimately got out from her the true story of how Bhagwan Din was done to death. The evidence of Musammat Sukhdei has not been shaken in cross examination. It has been read over to us and we see no reason to mistrust it. It gives a very clear and straightforward account of what she saw. It has been argued on behalf of the accused that Musammat Sukhdei does not mention that she saw the bhojali and sabri in the hands of Mathura, but the bhojali and sabri were not used by the accused when they attempted to strangle Bhagwan Din with a rope tied round his neck. What Musammat Sukhdei has deposed to is that Mathura tied a rope round Bhagwan Din's neck, Sripal held his legs and Badlu caught hold of his hands and then Mathura strangled Bhagwan Din with the rope and he also stuffed a cloth in the mouth of Bhagwan Din in order to prevent him from raising an alarm, and after Mathura had strangled Bhagwan Din with the rope, the three accused carried the corpse to the "Munjhwaja" grove and then they told Musammat Sukhdei to go away and threatened to kill her if she breathed a word about what she had seen. No question was asked of Musammat Sukhdei as to whether she saw any other weapon in the hands of Mathura at the time when Mathura was busy in tying the rope round Bhagwan Din's neck and strangling him thereby. It is obvious that the bhojali must have been left just then in the sugar-cane field from which the accused suddenly came out and pounced upon Bhagwan Din. We, therefore, attach no importance to the fact that Musammat Sukhdei makes no mention of any bhojali and sabri. In fact her very omission to mention these weapons seems to us a sign of her truthfulness. Had she been a tutored witness, she would have mentioned not only that Mathura had a bhojali and a sabri but she would have also mentioned the fact that she had seen Bindra Ahir of Chandpur who has been named by Sripal in his confession before the Magistrate.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has also ingeniously argued that even if the evidence of Musammat Sukhdei be accepted as true, still her evidence does not prove that Mathura murdered Bhagwan Din because the evidence of the Civil Surgeon is to the effect that when the head was severed from the trunk, Bhagwan Din was perhaps alive. We are not prepared to accept this contention. In the first place the Civil Surgeon of Sitapur has given no scientific data for his halting expression of opinion that perhaps the neck was severed from the trunk while the deceased was alive. In the second place the post mortem examination on the body of Bhagwan Din was performed two days after the murder of Bhagwan Din and the Civil Surgeon has himself shown in his post mortem report that the body was in a very decomposed condition and that maggots half an inch long were present and the skin was peeling off and the body was distended with gas. When the body was in this decomposed condition, it is hardly conceivable that there would be on the corpse any post mortem appearances justifying the Civil Surgeon in his half-hearted belief that the neck was perhaps severed from the trunk when Bhagwan Din was alive. The Civil Surgeon has himself deposed that the injuries could not be ascertained owing to advanced decomposition. We are, therefore, not disposed to accept the 'excathedra' opinion of the Civil Surgeon on this point in the absence of any proved facts upon which such an opinion could be based. Even if it be assumed that life was not extinct when Mathura cut off the head of Bhagwan Din with a bhojali, still there are other circumstances from which the guilt of the appellants is fully brought home to them. Mathura when he was taken to the spot where the headless trunk was found, was somehow moved to unbosom himself and to point out the well into which he had thrown the head of Bhagwan Din. It has been argued on behalf of the accused that his alleged recovery of the head from a well through the instrumentality of Mathura accused is a pure fabrication on the part of the Police, and that it was the Police themselves who somehow recovered the head from the well and then prepared this bogus recovery list (Ex. 4). In our opinion, there is no force in this contention. Mathura was asked by the learned Committing Magistrate when he was examined under s. 364 of the Code of Criminal Procedure if he took out the head of Bhagwan Din from a well in village Isharwara and handed it over to the Police, and his reply was that he did not know how and where Bhagwan Din's head was recovered. He has not alleged that the Police fabricated the recovery list and that Jagdeo (P. W. No. 17) and Sub-Inspector Jamil-ur-Rahman had given false evidence when they stated that he pointed out the well from which the head of Bhagwan Din was recovered. It has been argued on behalf of Mathura by his learned Counsel that there was no reason for Mathura to implicate himself and to point out the well into which he had thrown the head of the murdered man. The psychology of a murderer's mind is not easy to understand. There is a good old English saying :— "Murder will out". The same idea is to be found in the lines of the Urdu poet :— "Aghar chup rahegi zaban-e-khanjar lohu pukarega astin ka". Whatever may have been the motives which induced Mathura to admit partially his guilt and to point out the well into which he had thrown the head of the murdered man, the fact remains that in the presence of various villagers and of the Sub-Inspector of Police he pointed out the well from which Mahngo Lonia brought out the head of Bhagwan Din and that head was identified by Mathura himself and by various other persons as the head of Bhagwan Din. In our opinion, the recovery of the head of the murdered Bhagwan Din from a well at the instance of the accused Mathura is a strong piece of circumstantial evidence incriminating Mathura in the commission of the murder of Bhagwan Din. It goes to strengthen the deposition of Musammat Sukhdei if any corroboration of her deposition was necessary.

Lastly, there is the retracted confession of Sripal. The retracted confession of an accused has really little or no evidential value against a co-accused but it can be taken into consideration along with the other evidence against that accused. In the first place we consider that the confession of Sripal was both voluntary and true. Sripal's confession (Ex. 8) was recorded by a Magistrate of the first class at Sitapur on August 16, 1934. He was carefully warned by the Magistrate that he was not bound to make a confession or any statement before him. He was also warned not to make any statement at the instance or under the influence of any body. At that time Sripal stated that no one had beaten him nor had any one held out any temptation or offer of pardon nor had any one threatened him. Sripal was also warned that whatever he stated in his confession would be used in evidence against him and so cause him harm. He was asked whether he made the statement under the influence of any drug or on account of illness and whether he felt that he was in the full possession of his senses and he replied that he had not taken any intoxicant nor was he ill but that he was in a sound state of health. It has been held by this Court more than once that when a grown up man in the full possession of his senses chooses to confess his crime, then he could be legally convicted on his own confession even if it be subsequently retracted. The confession of Sripal strikes us as true. There is a natural ring of truth about it. He has given his statement in a straightforward manner. He states that he joined in the commission of this murder willingly because he was rather afraid that if he did not do so, he would incur the displeasure of Mathura who had only recently given evidence on his behalf and saved him from a charge of theft. It is true that he had no personal animus or grudge against the murdered man but because Mathura wanted his help, he gave it freely. He knew that Mathura had killed his (Sripal's) uncle Ram Dayal some 15 or 16 years ago and he feared that if he did not accede to the wishes of Mathura, he might be dealt with in the same manner as Mathura had dealt with his uncle Ram Dayal. Not only does the confession of Sripal strike us as genuine but we note that the confession tallies absolutely with the evidence given by Musammat Sukhdei. The confession of Sripal is corroborated by the recovery of the umbrella of Bhagwan Din from the pond by Sripal in the presence of witnesses. Sripal in his examination before the Committing Magistrate and in the Court of Session has made wild allegations against the Police but he has adduced not an iota of evidence in support of those allegations. We believe that the confession of Sripal is both voluntary and true and we think that upon his retracted confession corroborated by the evidence of Musammat Sukhdei and his recovery of the umbrella from the pond, his conviction for an offence under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code is legally justified. The confession of Sripal which we consider to be both voluntary and true can be used in evidence against his co-accused Mathura and Badlu.

Against Badlu accused, there is not only the evidence of Musammat Sukhdei but also the recovery of a blood-stained dhoti from his possession (Ex. IX recovery list Ex. 3). The accused denies that this dhoti is his but he has adduced no evidence in his defence. He has alleged that Sripal was on bad terms with him but he has also adduced no evidence in support of that fact. The evidence of Jhingur Kurmi (P. W. No. 16) shows that the dhoti was recovered from the house of Badlu. Badlu alleged that he was on bad terms with Jhingur but he has adduced no evidence to corroborate that statement. The accused Badlu is the son of Debi Din Ahir, a cousin of Mathura, and is apparently under the influence of Mathura who is a much stronger character than himself. As, however, he helped Mathura in tying the rope round the neck of Bhagwan Din and so strangling him and as he also helped Mathura in carrying the dead body to the grove where Mathura chopped off the head of Bhagwan Din and threw it into the well, he is clearly guilty of an offence under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code read with s. 114 of the Indian Penal Code. Since he as well as Sripal took a minor part in the commission of this murder, the learned Sessions Judge has very properly not inflicted capital punishment on these two accused. After a very careful consideration of the entire evidence on the record, we are clearly of opinion, that the guilt of all three accused has been proved beyond any reasonable doubt. Mathura appears to have taken a leading part in the commission of this murder and has been rightly sentenced to capital punishment. We affirm the conviction and sentence passed upon Mathura by the learned Sessions Judge and direct that Mathura be hanged by the neck till he be dead. We also uphold the convictions and sentences passed upon Sripal and Badlu and dismiss their appeals, as well as the appeal of Mathura.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Error of law not raising any question of jurisdiction—If a good ground for revision—Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), s. 44.

A mere error of law which does not raise any question affecting jurisdiction is no good ground for interference in revision. Sant Singh v. Mubarik Singh (1), referred to.

Judgment.—A preliminary objection is raised that no appeal is competent. The learned Counsel for the appellant concedes the force of this objection in view of Punjab Marwari Chamber of Commerce, Ltd., Delhi v. Firm Ram Mal-Lilu Shah (1), and requests that this appeal be treated as a petition for revision. It seems to me, however, that there is no good ground for interference in revision under s. 44, Punjab Courts Act. The only ground on which the learned Counsel has laid stress is that the learned Judge of the Court below was wrong in thinking that the award was invalid as the arbitrators were directors of the petitioning Company and consequently interested parties. In support of this argument the learned Counsel has referred to Burma Oil Co. v. Narain Das-Dayal Singh (2) and Ives & Barker v. Williams (3). But assuming that this is so, the learned Judge can at the most be said to have committed an error of law. There is ample authority for the proposition that a mere error of this kind which does not raise any question affecting jurisdiction is no good ground for interference in revision : see Sant Singh v. Mubarik Singh (4).

I must, therefore, dismiss this petition, but in view of all the circumstances, I leave the parties to bear their costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 62—Land alleged to be held as brit zar kharidi*—Opposite party asserting transaction to be mortgage—Compromise that party in possession should give up possession on payment of money—Decree—Construction—Novation—Mortgage, if created by decree—Subsequent suit to redeem mortgage—Maintainability.*

The essence of a novation of a contract lies not in the dissimilarity of the terms between the old and the new contract, but in the intention of the parties to supersede the old by the new.

In a previous suit filed by the predecessor-in-interest of the defendants against the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff, the former pleaded that he held a certain land as brit zar kharidi under a deed of 1241 Fasli while the latter pleaded that the deed was a mortgage. A compromise was entered into and it was agreed that whenever the latter paid a sum of money, the former would gave up possession of the property. The suit was decreed accordingly. The plaintiff filed a suit for redemption :

Held, that by the compromise the parties was created a fresh mortgage in respect of the land and the mortgage could be redeemed. Baldeo v. Sher Bahadur Singh (1) and Kshetranath Sikdar v. Harasukdas Balkrishendas (2), referred to.

S. C. A. against an order of the Additional Sub-Judge of Gonda, dated February 25, 1933, upholding the decree passed by the Munsif, Tarabganj at Gonda, dated August 22, 1932.

Mr. H. Husain, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—These are two connected appeals filed by certain defendants against the appellate judgments and decree of the Court to the 1st Additional Subordinate Judge of Gonda, upholding the judgments and decrees of the Munsif of Tarabganj decreeing the plaintiff's suit.

The facts out of which these two appeals arise are briefly as follows:—

Thakurain Parbati Kuar filed two suits for redemption in the Court of the Munsif of Tarabganj, one in respect of 21-41 acres of land and the other in respect of 22-95 acres of land as detailed in the plaints on the basis of two Settlement Court decrees, both dated March 11, 1872. In the suit out of which Appeal No. 190 arises, she claimed redemption on payment of Rs. 400 and in the suit out of which Appeal No. 191 of 1933 arises, she claimed redemption on payment of Rs. 356. The defendants in both the suits contended that they were holding the land under an irredeemable mortgage of 1241 Fasli, and that the Settlement Court decree relied upon by the plaintiff did not create any mortgage. The learned Munsif of Tarabganj held that the plaintiff could claim redemption on the basis of the Settlement Court decrees in favour of Naipal Singh and that they evidenced a new contract of mortgage, the defendants holding the land in suit under this mortgage, which was intended to be substituted in place of the old mortgages set up by Naipal Singh. He accordingly decreed the two suits of the plaintiff for possession by redemption and he directed the plaintiff to deposit in Court the sum of Rs. 400 plus defendants' costs in one case and the sum of Rs. 356 plus defendants' costs in the other suit, and he directed that if these payments were made as ordered, the mortgages shall stand redeemed. In default of payment of the redemption money, the defendants would be at liberty to apply for a final decree for sale.

The learned Subordinate Judge has upheld the finding of the trial Court and has dismissed the appeal of the defendant with costs.

Dissatisfied with the judgments of the lower Appellate Court the defendants have filed these second appeals.

The main question for determination in these two connected appeals is to decide what is the effect of decrees of 1872 in favour of the plaintiff's predecessors-in-interest. The contention on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent is that these decrees create mortgages which can be redeemed. The contention on behalf of the defendants is that these decrees do not create any new mortgage but merely enforce the earlier mortgages which have now become irredeemable.

One Ram Charan, the predecessor-in-interest of the present defendants, filed a suit against Naipal Singh, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff Musammat Parbati. Exhibit C-2 is the deposition on oath of Ram Charan to the effect that he had 125 bighas under a deed executed by Naipal in 1241 Fasli for Rs. 500 in favour of Hardayal, the cousin of Ram Charan. He described these 125 bighas as brit zar kharidi. In Syke's Compendium relating to the Taluqdars of Oudh p. 173, there is an account of brit rights in Oudh, and it is as follows:

"Brit is another under-proprietary right created by the taluqdar or proprietor and prevails chiefly in the Districts of Gonda, Bahraich and Fyzabad ..... Anyway the true brit is that known as the bai brit, created by the taluqdar or proprietor for money paid".

It is clear that Ram Charan, the predecessor-in-interest of the present appellants, claimed these 125 bighas as his brit or under-proprietary tenure, and not as land mortgaged to him. On the other hand Ex. C-3 is the statement of Mahabir the general agent of Naipal Singh, the defendant in the suit brought by Ram Charan, in 1872. In this deposition recorded on January 16, 1872, Mahabir Singh stated that a hundred bighas were mortgaged to Har Dayal, a cousin of Ram Charan for Rs. 400 by Thakur Kirat Singh in the month of Asar of 1251 Fasli, and that possession of the mortgaged land was with the plaintiff who paid rent and that one condition of the mortgage was that whenever the money was paid back the land would be redeemed. It is thus clear that it was the defendant taluqdar on whose behalf the contention was raised that the land in dispute in Ram Charan's suit was land that had been mortgaged by Kirat Singh to Har Dayal for Rs. 400 in the Hindi month of Asar of 1251 Fasli, whereas the plaintiff Ram Charan claimed the land in suit as his brit or under-proprietary tenure, and not as land mortgaged to him. This suit of 1872 was compromised by the parties, and the compromise dated March 9, 1872, is Ex. 1. It may be mentioned here that Naipal Singh was Taluqdar of Paska in the Gonda District, and the compromise was to the effect that as soon as the defendant taluqdar paid Rs. 400 to the plaintiff Ram Charan, the latter and his heirs would give up the land and have nothing to do with the property. The compromise in the other suit was to the same effect, and therein it was stated that as soon as the defendant taluqdar paid Rs. 356, the plaintiff Ram Charan and his heirs would give up possession over the land and have nothing to do with it in future. Exhibit C-1, (same as Ex. 2), is the decree of the Settlement Court giving effect to the terms of the compromise Ex. 1. In Ex. C-1 Munshi Dhanpat Rai, Settlement Sadar Munsarim, stated the contentions of the two parties in the suit brought by Ram Charan against Naipal Singh, and set forth the issues that were involved in the suit, and then held that as the parties had come to a compromise, he would pass an order in accordance therewith. This judgment of Munshi Danpat Rai shows clearly the respective contentions of the parties. On the one hand the plaintiff claimed that the land in suit was his brit which had been purchased for Rs. 500 (and Rs. 356 in the other case) from Kirat Singh by his cousin Har Dayal. The defence was that the land was not the brit of the plaintiff Ram Charan but that it was mortgaged by Kirat Singh to Har Dayal for Rs. 400 (and Rs. 356 in the other case). In the judgment of the Settlement Court, which embodies the terms of the compromise, it was decided that the land in suit was land which had been mortgaged to the plaintiff Ram Charan, and it was agreed that whenever the zemindar Naipal Singh, paid Rs. 400, (or Rs. 356 in the other case) the mortgage would be redeemed, and the plaintiff would give over possession to the taluqdar. It is thus clear that the compromise, as well as the judgment of M. Dhanpat Rai, created a mortgage and that since the date of this judgment Ram Charan was in the position of a mortgagee, and that being the case, I am clearly of opinion that the plaintiff in the present suits, namely, Thakurain Parbati Kuar, is entitled to redeem the mortgages created by the Settlement Court decree of March 11, 1872.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has argued that under s. 37 of Act XIII of 1879, which is now embodied in s. 48 of the Oudh Courts Act of 1925, mortgages executed before 1844 are irredeemable. To my mind this contention is based upon the assumption that there were mortgages executed by Kirat Singh in favour of Har Dayal in 1241 and 1251 Fasli, but as I have shown above, Ram Charan, the predecessor of the present defendants-appellants, has himself clearly deposed that he sued not on any mortgage executed in 1241 or 1251 Fasli, but that he claimed brit rights in the land in suit which he claimed to have purchased from the zemindar on payment of Rs. 500 and Rs. 356, respectively. In my opinion the lower Courts have correctly construed the Settlement Court decree, and the plaintiff's suit is, therefore, obviously not barred by limitation.

Even if it was held that Naipal Singh had, through his general agent Mahabir Singh, stated in the Settlement Court in 1872 that Ram Charan held under a mortgage executed by Kirat Singh in favour of Har Dayal, the cousin of Ram Charan, still that mortgage was denied by Ram Charan, and the parties entered into a compromise which was given effect to by the decree of the Settlemeent Court, and there was thus a novation of contract, and under s. 62 of the Indian Contract Act, if the parties to a contract agree to substitute a new contract for it, the original contract need not be performed. The Settlement Court decree of March 11, 1872, will, therefore, have to be substituted in place of the old mortgages alleged on behalf of the defendant Naipal Singh in the suit of 1872. The decree of 1872 does not lay down any conditions other than those which Naipal Singh himself had stated through his general agent Mahabir Singh and it is to be noted that Naipal Singh had always claimed the right to acquire the land by paying off the sums borrowed by Kirat Singh from Har Dayal.

Exhibit 3 is the extract of the fard intikhab tasfia lagan, and the date of the decree, namely, March 11, 1872, is treated as the date of mortgage in the column of remarks. Exhibit 4 of the Second Settlement has similar entries and the date of the mortgage is also shown therein as March 11, 1872. Exhibit 5 is the Khewat Karkhas prepared in 1885, and the date of the mortgage is shown therein as March 11, 1872.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent invited my attention to a ruling of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Baldeo v. Sher Bahadur Singh, 74 Ind. Cas. 42 (1), in which it was held that the essence of a novation of a contract lay not in the dissimilarity of the terms between the old and the new contract, but in the intention of the parties to supersede the old by the new.

In Kshetranath Sikdar v. Harasukdas Balkishendas (2), a learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court made the following observation :—

" It is argued that a new contract was substituted in this case. The answer to this contention is that whether or there was an agreement to substitute a new contract is a question of fact depending on the intention of the parties. The true rule seems to me that one should look to the substance of the matter and not to mere form."

Applying that dictum to the present case, it is clear that the parties by the compromise, and the judgment of the Settlement Court which gave effect to that compromise, created a fresh mortgage in respect of the land in suit.

In my opinion the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court are correct. The appeals, therefore fail, and are dismissed with costs.

Petition No. 19 of 1934

January 18, 1935

TEK CHAND, J.

In the Matter of the INDIAN COMPANIES ACT VII OF 1913 AND THE ALL-INDIA CATTLE INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED (IN LIQUIDATION) —PETITIONER

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 86—Directors allotting shares in meeting—Directors not paying allotment money themselves—Resolution allotting shares—Validity of.

Even though none of the Directors of a Company had paid the allotment money on the shares held by them, all acts done by them as such Directors are valid. Where therefore, in a meeting called for the purpose, they allot the shares to the shareholders, the allotment is proper.

Petition under s. 186 read with s. 215 of the Indian Companies Act for an order directing payment of debt due by contributories on account of unpaid calls of share-money.

Mr. Amin Chand Mehta, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Shiv Diyal and Shamair Chand, for some of the Contibutories.

Order.—This is an application under s. 186, read with s. 215 of the Indian Companies Act presented by the Liquidator of the All-India Cattle Insurance Company, Limited (which has gone into voluntary liquidation), praying that payment orders for unpaid calls of share money be passed against certain contributories of the Company, whose names are given in the annexure to the application. All the contributories were duly served. Many of them did not appear and proceedings are ex parte against them. Others are represented by Counsel who filed written statement raising numerous objections. At the hearing to-day Mr. Shamair Chand made a statement withdrawing most of the objections, as his clients had not produced evidence to support them.

The only objection seriously pressed before me was that the objectors should not have been placed on the list of contributories as there had been no proper allotment of shares to them. It was conceded that they had applied for shares in the Company and that allotment letters had been received by them. It was, however, urged that there had been no proper allotment as none of the three Directors of the Company who purported to make the allotment at the meeting of the Board of Directors held on February 16, 1931, was qualified to act as a Director as none of them had paid the allotment money on the share held by him, and that the resolution passed on February 16, 1931, allotting the shares to the objectors was not confirmed at the next meeting of the Board of the Directors held on March 29. 1931, as is clear from the proceedings book.

In my opinion neither of these objections has any force. Assuming that the facts are as alleged by Mr. Shamair Chand, s. 86 of the Indian Companies Act is a complete answer to the objection. Even if Messrs. Ram Lal Anand, Chuni Lal Manchanda and H. C. Bannerji who were present at the meeting of the Board on February 16, 1931, and allotted the shares to the objectors did not hold the necessary share qualification, all acts done by them as such Directors are valid. See also para. 134 of the Articles of Association of the Company which is equally clear.

Further, as laid down by the Privy Council in Hansraj Gupta v. N. P. Asthana (1) the objection is not open to the objectors after the Company has gone into liquidation. There is no substance in the other point as the proceedings were duly confirmed by the Chairman of the meeting. I, therefore, overrule the objection and hold that the objectors, as well as the other respondents against whom proceedings are ex parte, had been properly placed on the list of contributories.

It is not denied that if the respondents are legally liable as contributories the amount claimed by the Liquidator has not been correctly calculated.

I, therefore, grant this application and pass an order directing the contributories mentioned in the list attached to the application to pay the sums noted against their respective names.

I see no reason to allow instalments except in the case of Lala Shiv Dayal, from whom a large sum, i. e., Rs. 1,600, has been found due. I allow Lala Shiv Diyal to pay the amount in eleven monthly instalments, the first ten instalments shall be for Rs. 150 each and the last Rs. 100. The first instalment shall be paid on March 1, 1935. In case of default of two successive instalments, the whole amount shall become due.

The Liquidator's costs of these proceedings shall be paid out of the assets of the Company. The objectors shall bear their own costs.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Extradition Act (XV of 1903), ss. 10, 7, 9, 23—Construction should be in favour of subject—Surrender of fugitive criminals—Warrant, necessity of—S. 23, applicability of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 54 (7).

The provisions of the Extradition Act are meant to ensure that the arrest and the detention of persons, who are alleged to have committed an offence outside British territory, should be in accordance with a certain procedure, and the sections of the Act with reference to that procedure should be construed strictly in favour of the subject. [p. 539, col. 1.]

When a warrant has been received in respect of an extradition offence the procedure should be as under s. 7, Extradition Act. When a requisition is received in respect of any offence the procedure should be as under s. 9, Extradition Act. But when neither a warrant nor a requisition has been received, the Magistrate is empowered to issue a warrant as under s. 10, Extradition Act. It is an essential ingredient of this procedure that there should be a warrant.

Section 23, Extradition Act, refers to the case of persons arrested under s. 54 clause seventh of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that is to say, when a person has been arrested not only without a warrant but also without an order from a Magistrate. Section 54, Criminal Procedure Code, is intended to cover those cases where the Police Officer acts on his own responsibility, that is to say, on suspicion or information as based on facts which the Police Officer has considered for himself. On the other hand where the arrest is made in pursuance of an order of a Magistrate it is that order which must determine the legality or otherwise of the arrest. In re Charu Chandra Majumdar (1), relied on.

Mr. S. K. Sen (with him Mr. Dinesh Chandra Roy), for the Petitioner No. 1.

Mr. T. C. Moore (with him Mr. Haridas Gupta), for the Petitioner No. 2.

Mr. Probodh Chandra Chatterjee, for the Crown.

S. K. Ghose, J.—The two petitioners have filed an application under s. 491, Criminal Procedure Code and obtained a Rule in their favour in terms of a writ of Habeas Corpus upon the authorities concerned to show cause why the petitioner should not be set at liberty. It appears that there is an allegation that these two petitioners together with three others forcibly seized within British territory a sepoy of Pashupatinagore Court of Nepal territory, took him into Nepal territory and there assaulted him and took away some money and certain letters which he was carrying. On September 2, 1934, an information was lodged at Sakiapokra Thana in British territory of an offence under s. 341, Indian Penal Code but in this matter a final report "true" was submitted for lack of evidence. Subsequently the Lieutenant Hakim of Illam Amin, a Court in Nepal territory, addressed letter No. 16 and bearing the date August 16, 1934 to the Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling to the effect that the five accused persons, including the present two petitioners, had come into Nepal territory, and assaulted and robbed the aforesaid sepoy. The Hakim requested that the men should be arrested and put in jail pending action for their surrender. It also appears that the sepoy was brought to Victoria Hospital, Darjeeling, where he made a statement on August 8, which was recorded by a Sub-Inspector and that the man died on August 28. Subsequently, another letter bearing the date of September 19, 1934 was received from the Lieutenant Hakim of Illam Court intimating to the Deputy Commissioner that the accused were charged with robbery and murder. The Deputy Commissioner ordered the Police on August 27, to arrest the accused, and in pursuance of this order the present two petitioners were arrested in Calcutta on September 17. They were produced before the Darjeeling Court on September 19, and then remanded to jail custody. Their application for release was rejected by the Magistrate by his order dated September 29. In the course of that order the learned Deputy Commissioner stated that he,

"as Deputy Commissioner ordered the Police to arrest the accused on August 27, 1934, and his instructions were carried out".

He considered that the action taken by him was

"of a purely executive nature under s. 10 and s. 23 of the (Indian Extradition) Act," and that he was

"definitely debarred from allowing bail".

He also doubted if the prisoners need be produced after fortnightly intervals, but he directed that the papers should be put up before him after such intervals or on receipt of the necessary requisition from the authorities of Nepal. It does not appear if the fact of the arrest was reported to the Nepal Court. A motion was taken before the learned Sessions Judge of Darjeeling and he, in the course of an order bearing the date the October 6, pointed out that the learned Deputy Commissioner, if he had purported to act under s. 10 of the Indian Extradition Act, should have issued a warrant as contemplated in cl. (1) and that he had overlooked provisions of cl. (4) with regard to the granting of bail. But on the merits the learned Judge held that no case had been made out for the release of the prisoners on bail. Thereupon the present petition was filed in this Court and on October 10, 1934 the present Rule was issued as mentioned above. In showing cause against the Rule the learned Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling wrote to say that he had moved the Legal Remembrancer to take steps to represent the Crown and to show cause why the prisoners not be set at liberty. I am constrained to mention that it would have been much better if the learned Deputy Commissioner had followed the rule prescribed by this Court and furnished a proper explanation stating the facts and the grounds on which he relied, so that the petitioners could have the opportunity of examining them.

The contention on behalf of the petitioners and upon which the present Rule was issued is to the effect that the arrest and the detention of the petitioners are not in accordance with law and in particular with the provisions of the Indian Extradition Act, XV of 1903. The question whether the petitioners are British Indian or Nepalese subjects is of no importance. The provisions of the Extradition Act are meant to ensure that the arrest and the detention of persons, who are alleged to have committed an offence outside British territory, should be in accordance with a certain procedure, and it has been held that the sections of the Act with reference to that procedure should be construed strictly in favour of the subject. Chapter III describes how the surrender of fugitive criminals in case of States other than Foreign States is to be effected. When a warrant has been received in respect of an extradition offence the procedure should be as under s. 7. When a requisition is received in respect of any offence, the procedure should be as under s. 9. But when neither a warrant nor a requisition has been received, the Magistrate is empowered to issue a warrant as under s. 10. It is an essential ingredient of this procedure that there should be warrant, because the provision is that the issue of the warrant is to be reported forthwith and there is a time limit of two months for the detention of the persons arrested. In the present case the procedure was clearly not under s. 10. But it is contended that it is covered by s. 23. This argument cannot be supported because that section refers to the case of persons arrested under s. 54 clause seventh of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that is to say, when a person has been arrested not only without a warrant but also without an order from a Magistrate. Section 54 is intended to cover those cases where the Police Officer acts on his own responsibility, that is to say, on suspicion or information as based on facts which the Police Officer has considered for himself. This was pointed out by Choudhuri, J., in the case of In re Charu Chandra Majumdar (1) and indeed it is apparent from the terms of s. 54 itself. On the other hand, where the arrest is made in pursuance of an order of a Magistrate it is that order which must determine the legality or otherwise of the arrest. Mr. Chatterjee for the Crown has contended that, merely because the Magistrate has given an order, the case is not taken out of s. 54 where the Police Officer himself has received credible information or has conceived a reasonable suspicion. But this does not seem to be the case here. The learned Magistrate in his order of September 29, expressly says that he as Deputy Commissioner ordered the Police to arrest the accused on August 27, and that he considered that the action taken by him was purely of an executive nature. Mr. Chatterjee has drawn our attention to a certified copy of an application filed by one Syed Hossein on September 13, 1934, but we are not satisfied that the Police in this case effected the arrest on anything except the order of the Deputy Commissioner. Nor does it appear that even if the arrest were by the Police on their own responsibility, the latter provision in s. 23 of the Indian Extradition Act was followed and the detention of the prisoner was made subject to the restrictions as under s. 10 of the Act. In these circumstances it seems to us that the arrest and the detention of petitioners were not in accordance with the provisions of the Extradition Act, and therefore we must direct that the prisoners be released.

It has been brought to our notice by Mr. Chatterjee that subsequent to the issue of this Rule, a warrant was received by the Deputy Commissioner on October 13, 1934, and another warrant was received by the Chief Presidency Magistrate on October 24, 1934. We understand that neither of these warrants has yet been executed. It is open to the Magistrate to take action with reference to s. 7 and to the subsequent sections, including s. 18 of the Act and the treaty provisions relating to the surrender of prisoners. In so far as the present proceedings on which this Rule is based are concerned, we direct that the petitioners be released.

Henderson, J.—I agree.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision Application No. 38 of 1934
March 7, 1934
BAJPAI, J.
DIP CHAND—APPLICANT
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 358—Accused using criminal force on grave and sudden provocation—Conviction under s. 358—Propriety of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 237—Charge under s. 353, Penal Code—Conviction under s. 323—Legality of—Quaere.

Where the accused uses criminal force on grave and sudden provocation given by the patrol who had abused the accused the conviction ought to be under s 358, Penal Code.

Quære—Whether a man who has been charged under s. 323, Penal Code, cannot be convicted on the failure of the prosecution to prove that the person against whom the criminal force was used was a public servant, under s. 323, Penal Code, because the latter is not a minor offence as compared to the former.

Mr. B. S. Darbari, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—The accused, Dip Chand, was charged under s. 353, Penal Code, the allegation being that he gave two or three slaps to a canal patrol. The facts are that the Naib Tahsildar had gone to village Malikpur to make collections of land revenue and canal dues. Certain persons including the accused represented to the Naib Tahsildar that the entries regarding the canal dues were incorrect. The Tahsildar sent for the canal patrol who started explaining the entries. Dip Chand and others objected and said that they were incorrect. Upon this the canal patrol abused Dip Chand and Dip Chand gave him two or three slaps.

The learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that the patrol was not a public servant in the execution of his duty at that moment. He, therefore, did not convict Dip Chand under s. 353, Penal Code, but convicted him under s. 323, Penal Code, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 100. This conviction has been upheld by the learned Judge who has also maintained the sentence.

In revision it is argued that a man who has been charged under s. 323, Penal Code, cannot be convicted on the failure of the prosecution to prove that the person against whom the criminal force was used was a public servant, under s. 323, Penal Code, because the latter is not a minor offence as compared to the former. It is argued that s. 353, Penal Code, comprises only assault or criminal force whereas s. 323, Penal Code, comprises hurt which implies causing bodily pain, disease or infirmity. It is contended that assault is mere gesture and criminal force is mere motion whereas hurt implies the giving of bodily pain The maximum punishment provided under s. 352, Penal Code, the maximum may extend to Rs. 1,000 whereas under s. 352, Penal Code, the maximum punishment is three months' and the fine may extend to Rs. 500. This, it is said, also shows that the man who is said to cause assault or use criminal force alone is deemed to commit a minor offence as compared to the man who caused hurt. It is not necessary for me to give an authoritative decision on this point although I am inclined to think that there is considerable force in the argument of learned Counsel for the applicant. The accused, however, can be convicted under s. 352, Penal Code, for having assaulted or used criminal force to the canal patrol. It is said that the accused used criminal force on grave and sudden provocation given by the patrol who had abused the accused and, therefore, the conviction ought to be under s. 358, Penal Code. I agree with this contention. The finding of the learned Magistrate which has not been set aside by the Judge is that the patrol abused Dip Chand. Dip Chand thus had received grave and sudden provocation and no wonder he lost his temper and gave the patrol two or three slaps. Under the circumstances it is contended that the sentence of Rs. 100 fine is too severe. I agree with this submission.

The result is that I change the conviction of the accused to one under s. 358, Penal Code, and sentence him to a fine of Rs. 15. The fine, if paid, will be refunded to the extent of Rs. 85.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60 (1) (g)—Ala jagirs in Ambala District—Whether political pensions—Exemption from attachment.

Jagirs known as "ala jagirs" in the Ambala District, should be treated as political pensions and so exempt from attachment in execution of decrees within the meaning of s. 60 (1), Civil Procedure Code. Secretary of State v Khem Chand-Jey Chand (1), referred to.

S. C. A. from an order of the District Judge, Ambala, dated November 23, 1933.

Messrs. Nanak Chand and Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Amar Nath Chona and Faqir Chand, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The only question for decision in these three second appeals (C. A. Nos. 233, 234 and 235 of 1934), is, whether the jagirs known as "ala jagirs' in the Ambala District, should be treated as political pensions and so exempt from attachment in execution of decrees. The history of these jagirs is fully given in the judgment of the learned District Judge and need only be summarised here. According to his findings these jagirs were assigned to a number of small independent rulers, who had shared between them the sovereignty of Cis-Sutlej States prior to the British accession in 1849. These States had already been brought under protection in 1809 when a guarantee was given that they would remain in the exercise of the same authority that they had previously enjoyed. In arriving at a decision on the nature of these assignments, the learned District Judge has accepted the definition laid down by a Full Bench of the High Court of Bombay in Secretary of State v. Khem Chand Jey Chand (1), which runs as follows:

"A fixed periodical allowance or stipend granted, not in respect of any right, privilege, perquisite, or office, but on account of past services or particular merits, or as compensation to dethroned princes, their families, and dependants."

He has found that these assignments are in the nature of fixed periodical allowances, but has held that they were not granted by the British Government and cannot be taken as "compensation to dethroned princes." The jagirs in question have accordingly been held to be liable to attachment. There is no dispute as to the facts, and the only question is whether the test given above has been properly applied by the learned District Judge to these facts. The two points on which he has held that the other jagirs of the Ambala District failed to comply with the definition have been given above. Firstly it has been held that they cannot be considered compensation to dethroned princes. The chiefs to whom the assignments were originally granted are described as independent rulers and there are frequent references in the authorities on which the lower Court relies to their exercise of sovereign powers. These sovereign powers were taken away from them in 1849 and there is no doubt that they must be regarded as dethroned princes. Secondly, it has been held that the assignments of land revenue were not granted by the British Government and that the jagirdars merely continued in enjoyment of the privilege which they had previously enjoyed. Here there seems to be some confusion. What had been previously enjoyed by the chiefs was the rights of raising revenue by any means they pleased. This right was taken away from them and in place thereof they were granted a fixed proportion of the land revenue assessed and collected by the Collectors of the new sovereign authority. This seems to me to be as clear an example of compensation for the loss of sovereign rights as could be found anywhere.

There are three connected appeals. In two of these objection has been taken that the memorandum of appeal is not properly accompanied by copies of the judgment since the final order under appeal was written in the case which was first decided. Each memorandum of appeal contains a note referring to the detailed order which may be taken as a prayer for exemption and I see no reason why such exemption should not be granted. The result is that I accept all the three appeals, holding that the jagirs in question are exempt from attachment as political pensions, and return the proceedings to the lower Court with this finding. As the learned District Judge states the question involved is one of difficulty and I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

December 18, 1934

BENNET, J.

GANGA SINGH AND OTHERS—APPLICANTS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 537—Cross-cases—Joint trial—Irregularity, if cured by s. 537, when no prejudice is caused to accused—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 452—Trespass into complainant's house to overawe him so as not to employ a person as priest—Interference with religion—Offence not to be treated lightly.

Although the joint trial of two cross-cases, the prosecution evidence in one of which constitutes the defence evidence in the other, is an irregularity, it can be cured under s. 537, Criminal Procedure Code, if no prejudice has thereby been caused to the accused. Sukhai Ahir v. Emperor (2) and Madat Khan v Emperor (4), relied on. Allu v. Emperor (1), dissented from.

An interference with religion by preventing a person from employing another as his priest by forcibly entering the former's house to overawe him is not to be treated lightly. A fine of Rs. 50 is not excessive.

Cr. R. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Kumaun, dated September 18, 1934.

Mr. H. P. Sen, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application in Criminal Revision on behalf of six persons who were sentenced by a Magistrate under ss. 147 and 452, Indian Penal Code to 3 months' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 50, fine. On appeal the lower Court altered the conviction to one under s. 143, Indian Penal Code, and set aside the sentence of imprisonment and maintained the sentences of fine. The case for the prosecution was that the accused objected to the complainant, Udai Singh, employing a Brahman called Khiali Ram as his priest and because they had out-casted Khiali Ram, the accused in a body forcibly entered the house of the complainant in order to overawe the complainant and threatened to beat the complainant and complainant ran away. The first ground which is argued was No. 3 in revision that the joint trial of the applicants along with the accused in the cross-case filed by Ganga Singh was illegal as prosecution evidence in one constituted the defence evidence in the other. There were these two cross-complaints before the Magistrate, one by Udai Singh and the other by Ganga Singh. The Magistrate has stated that the prosecution in the one case is the defence in the other. The evidence produced by the parties does both for the prosecution in one and defence in the other case excepting that Udai Singh, etc., have examined three more witnesses in defence besides the nine witnesses examined as prosecution witnesses. Ganga Singh and others have examined six witnesses both for the prosecution purposes and in their defence. The Counsel in each case agreed to this course. It is not alleged for the applicants in revision that there was any irregularity in the recording of the prosecution evidence in the present case or that there was any defence evidence which they desired to produce and which was not allowed. Their objection merely is a technical one. Learned Counsel relied on the case of Allu v. Emperor (1), where it was held that any irregularity of this nature could not be cured under s. 537, Criminal Procedure Code. No other ruling was produced in support of the contention. On the other hand it has been held by a Bench of this Court in Sukhai Ahir v. Emperor (2), in a similar case that it was not necessary for the Court to interfere unless it were shown that the accused were prejudiced by the procedure. Similar rulings were given in Queen-Empress v. Chandra Bhiniya (3). There was also a case reported in Madat Khan v. Emperor (4), in which there were two trials but the evidence for the prosecution was similar to a substantial extent in each case and each party was a witness against the other. The High Court of Lahore gave one judgment and the Sessions Court had also given one judgment. Their Lordships of the Privy Council found that although technically it might have been better to keep the evidence entirely distinct and to have delivered two separate judgments, no injustice has followed from what was done. Therefore, there was no interference. Following this ruling, I consider that it has not been shown in the present case that there was any prejudice to the case for the accused. I consider that no ground for interference in revision has been made out on this point.

The next point which was argued was in regard to the charge which is as follows:—

"That you on or about May 19, 1934, at village Pastora War with the common object or overawing Udai Singh who had sent for and employed Khialiram a Brahman against your wishes at Puja that he offered that day, forcibly entered the house of Udai Singh and there created a riot and thereby committed an offence punishable under ss. 147 and 452, of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance."

The learned Sessions Judge was under the impression that the Magistrate intended to make charges under two sections and he made comments on the form of the charge. The ground of revision is No. 4 that the charge did not disclose the common object. In s. 141 (third) Indian Penal Code, it is laid down that a common object of an unlawful assembly may be to commit any mischief or criminal trespass or other offence. The prosecution evidence shows that there was a common object of the accused persons to commit the offence of s. 452, Indian Penal Code—house trespass—after preparation for hurt or assault. I consider that the charge sheet is intended to show that the offence of riot was committed with a common object of committing the offence of s. 452, Indian Penal Code. I do not consider that the charge sheet is in any way defective. I do not think that the Magistrate intended to frame separate charges under each section and he has not in fact framed separate charges. Some further comments were made by the Sessions Judge on the use of word 'overawe' and he considers that the word 'overawe' can only be applied to s. 141 (first) where the overawing is of certain branches of Government, etc. But the word 'overawe' is tantamount to the word 'intimidate' which enters into the definition in s. 441, Indian Penal Code of the offence of criminal trespass which is involved in the offence of s. 452, Indian Penal Code. The use of the word, therefore, was correct, I find nothing in this ground.

The next ground argued was ground No. 5 that the Magistrate, having disbelieved the prosecution evidence in material particulars, ought to have discredited the entire evidence and acquitted the applicants. The alleged disbelief is contained in a passage which says:

"It is possible that there has been some exaggeration as there often is in these cases, and the story that the appellants, or some of them entered the complainant's house and threatened his son and daughter-in-law may not be altogether reliable."

In s. 3 of the Indian Evidence Act there are definitions of 'proved', 'disproved' and 'not proved'. The finding of the learned Sessions Judge clearly means merely 'not proved'. The ground of revision turns this round into an allegation of 'disproved.' This is incorrect. The ground as stated does not correspond to the judgment. I, therefore, consider this ground has nothing in it.

Ground No. 6 argued that the fines of Rs. 50 on each accused were severe as no force was used. But the accused are found to have committed the offence of s. 143, Indian Penal Code, being members of an unlawful assembly the punishment for which may extend to 6 months' rigorous imprisonment and it has also been found that the common object of the unlawful assembly was to prevent Udai Singh from employing Khiali Ram as his priest. An interference in this manner with religion is not to be treated lightly. Accordingly I do not think that the amount of fine is excessive.

The last point argued was ground No. 2 of the revision which states that the refusal of the trying Magistrate to supply the defence after the framing of the charge sheet with even such copies of the statements of witnesses to the Police as had been examined for the prosecution resulted in failure of justice. No such point was taken in the grounds of appeal to the lower Court. The judgment of the lower Court on page 3 shows that an objection was orally made to the lower Court that a general application was made before the trial commenced for copies of all statements made by witnesses from whom the Police had enquired and that the application was refused. The Court said that it would have been better, if the Magistrate had allowed the request. But that application was not one which could come under s. 162 as it had not been made when the witnesses were called for the prosecution. Learned Counsel has not been able to find the application mentioned to the lower Court but he finds an application of August 2 which was the date when the prosecution evidence was heard and when the charge sheet was framed. That application asks for copies of the statements of such prosecution witnesses whose evidence has been recorded. The order of the Magistrate was that the diary should be sent for and it would then be seen of which witnesses statements had been recorded. There was thus no refusal by the Magistrate on the application in question. Learned Counsel has not been able to find any further reference in the record to this matter. It is possible that when the statements were produced, they proved to be of no use to the defence and copies were not required. There is nothing to show that when the diary came, the Magistrate made any refusal. I consider that no ground for revision has been made out. In the result I dismiss this application in revision.

Madras Abkari Act (I of 1886)—Abkari license—Clauses 27, 37—Partnership to carry on abkari business standing in another's name—Sanction of Collector not obtained—Suit to recover money advanced to licensee—Maintainability—Legality of partnership.

The effect of cl. 27 of the General Sales Notification issued under the Madras Abkari Act is that a partnership in an abkari business is prohibited unless the previous permission of the Collector has been obtained.

The first defendant successfully bid a toddy shop at an auction on July 30, 1927, and the license was issued in his name on October 1, 1927. Meanwhile on August 17, 1927, the plaintiff advanced a sum of money to the first defendant on a promissory note under an agreement to work as partners. No application was ever made for the issue of the license in the name of the partners nor was the permission of the Collector obtained;

Held, that the object with which the money was lent being for the purpose of carrying on a business in contravention of the law and opposed to public policy, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the note. Nalan Padmanabhan v. Badrinadh Sarda (1), Marudamuthu Pillai v. Rangaswami Mooppan (2), Behari Lall Shah v. Jagadish Chunder Saha (3) and Raghunath Lalman v. Nathu Hirje Bhata (4), relied on. Appadurai Mudali v. Murugappa Mudali (5), Nanna Vazhmuni Mudali v. Nathamuni (6) and Narayanamurthy v. Subramanyam (7), distinguished.

C. R. P. under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tenali, in S. C. S. No. 63 of 1930, dated December 22, 1930.

Mr. V. Govindarajachari, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. V. V. Choudhury and G. S. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Respondents.

Beasley, C. J.—This was a suit on a promissory note. The plaintiff was one Chava Ramanayudu and there were four defendants. The amount claimed was Rs. 907-13-0. The 1st defendant admitted the claim but pleaded non-liability on the ground that the plaintiff exonerated him. The 3rd defendant was ex parte. Defendants Nos. 2 and 4 pleaded that the suit promissory note was for advances to be made by the plaintiff for carrying on a toddy shop which they (the defendants and the plaintiff) agreed to work as partners after the 1st defendant had already become the successful bidder for the year 1927-28 and that the partnership was an illegal partnership. The learned Subordinate Judge finds as a fact that the promissory note was executed for advances to be made by the plaintiff for the partnership, that the plaintiff was a partner and that the 1st defendant who obtained the license was not shown to have obtained the Collector's permission to work the shop in partnership. In view of these findings he dismissed the suit.

The question before the learned Subordinate Judge was and before us is, whether the partnership was formed for the purpose of doing something which was either illegal or opposed to public policy. The General Sales Notification issued annually by the Commissioner of Excise under the Abkari Act, laying down the general conditions applicable to all abkari and opium licenses, by cl. 27 provides:

"No privilege of supply or vend shall be sold, transferred or sub-rented without the Collector's previous permission. Nor, if the Collector so orders, shall any agent be appointed for the management of any such privilege without his previous approval".

This condition is of one those which is set out in the Abkari license. Clause 37 provides for the penalties to be inflicted on the infraction of any of the conditions of the license by a licensee or by any person in his employment. The effect of cl. 27 is that a partnership in an abkari business is prohibited unless the previous permission of the Collector has been obtained. In Nalan Padmanabhan v. Badrinadh Sarda (1), the facts were that A and B were farmers of opium revenue under Government. They obtained a license from the Collector for the sale of opium subject to the condition, among others, that they should not sell, transfer or sub-rent their privileges without the permission of the Collector (similar to cl. 27 in this case). A and B, without the sanction of the Collector, entered into an agreement with C by which they admitted him as a partner in the opium business. C having brought a suit for dissolution and winding-up of the business, it was held that the agreement was void and the suit was not maintainable, the effect of the agreement between A and B on the one hand and C on the other being to enable C to sell opium without a license, an act directly forbidden by the Opium Act and made penal by it, that the contract being intended to enable C to do what was forbidden by law was unlawful and void, that the provisions of the Abkari and Opium Acts are not intended merely to protect public revenue but the prohibitions contained in them are based on public policy and that the agreement was also illegal as it amounted to a transfer by A and B of their privilege to C in violation of the condition against transfer subject to which the license was granted. In the course of the judgment, reference was made to Marudamuthu Pillai v. Rangaswami Mooppan (2),

"The provisions of the Abkari Act, as whole, show clearly that every person carrying on abkari business as a principal must be licensed".

"to hold that a person who has not got a license could still be a partner with one who has a license, and as such partner, carry on the business with or without the other would enable the unlicensed partner to evade the liabilities intended by the law to be cast on persons carrying on abkari business".

Other cases in point are Behari Lall Shah v. Jagadish Chunder Saha (3), and Raghunath Lalman v. Nathu Hirje Bhate (4). For the petitioner, however, reliance was placed upon the following cases, viz., Appadurai Mudali v. Murugappa Mudali (5) Nanna Vazhmuni Mudali v. Nathamuni 122 Ind. Cas. 342. (6), Narayanamurthy v. Subramanyam 114 Ind. Cas. 655 (7). In the first case, which is a decision of Odgers and Madhavan Nair, JJ., the plaintiff lent a sum of money on a promissory note to a partnership. The partnership consisted of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and took a contract of sale of arrack in certain shops and borrowed money from the plaintiff for the purpose of that business. First of all, in the opinion of Odgers, J., the business was not an illegal one on the ground that there was no sufficient material for the Court to so decide and, even on the supposition that the condition of the license was that all the names of of the licensees or persons concerned in that particular business by way of partnership must appear on the face of the license, it was a question whether on the evidence of the plaintiff he could be said to be particeps criminis in the carrying on of the illegal trade because, assuming that there was a prohibition in the terms of the license, there was no evidence that the plaintiff ever knew of it. The important distinguishing feature in that case is that the plaintiff was not a member of the partnership but was a stranger lending money to it. In the present case, the plaintiff was a partner and, if the partnership had for its object the carrying on of an illegal business, the plaintiff as a member of that partnership cannot be heard to deny that he had guilty knowledge. In the second case, which is a decision of Anantakrishna Ayyar, J., the plaintiff was a partner and sued for the taking of the partnership accounts between him and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and for the recovery of the amount to be found due to him on the taking of the accounts. The suit was decreed but on appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed that decree and remanded the suit to the District Munsif for a fresh trial and whilst doing so suggested that the District Munsif might at the re-trial consider a new ground pressed before him, namely, that the partnership was illegal. At the re-trial, the 1st defendant put in an additional written statement contending that the partnership in question was illegal and opposed to public policy. The District Munsif found that the contract of partnership was illegal and opposed to public policy. The District Judge on appeal reversed the decision and the case came up on second appeal before Anantakrishna Ayyar, J. The facts were that the 1st defendant held a license to sell toddy in a shop and according to him took the plaintiff as a partner in respect of that business. The license was not produced by the 1st defendant. The District Judge held that, since the license relating to the year in question had not been produced, there were no grounds for saying that the contract of partnership was illegal. The license, however, was produced in second appeal and was sought to be admitted in evidence, but Anantakrishna Ayyar, J. refused to allow it to be admitted in evidence at that stage. Anantakrishna Ayyar, J. held that it was essential that the license granted to the 1st defendant should be produced and that the view of the District Judge was correct in stating that at the time the partnership was formed the 1st defendant had not begun to trade in toddy and had no stock which he made the joint property of all the three partners.

(7) 114 Ind. Cas. 655; A I R 1928 Mad. 1197.

In his view the partnership could not be held to be illegal as there was nothing prima facie illegal in such a partnership under the Abkari Act. The decision in this case appears to me to have turned on the absence of proof that the partnership was entered into for an illegal purpose. In the last case, which is a decision of Reilly, J., it was held that although a partnership entered into in contravention of a license or of any rule under the Abkari Act is void and the licensee of a toddy or arrack shop cannot legally take a partner without sanction, yet it is not illegal for several persons to enter into a partnership for the purposes of bidding at a toddy shop auction and if successful in the auction of obtaining a license and of carrying on a toddy shop business. Reilly, J., holds that it is not illegal for persons to enter into a partnership for the purpose of carrying on a toddy shop business or one for which they hope at a future date to obtain a license. That is quite true if it is intended at a future date to get a license in the names of all the partners. That is not the fact here as a few dates will show. The 1st defendant was a successful bidder at the auction on July 30, 1927, and it was in his name that the license was issued on October 1, 1927. The promissory note is dated August 17, 1927, and the money was, therefore, lent to the partnership after the 1st defendant had become the successful bidder at the auction and was the person in whose name the license would be issued. The 1st defendant in his evidence said that the two months' deposit of Rs. 140, was paid by him about August 20. After the license was issued, it is plain from the evidence that the partnership carried on the business. The permission of the Collector required by cl. 27 of the General Sales Notification was neither obtained nor applied for and there is evidence that the plaintiff himself was collecting the money of the business and keeping accounts. One thing, therefore, is perfectly clear, namely, that an illegal partnership was actually being carried on but it is contended that at the date of the commencement of the partnership it has not been shown that it was formed for an illegal purpose. The plaintiff in his evidence did not say that it was intended to apply for the Collector's permission for a transfer of the license or to carry on the business in partnership nor was there any cross-examination of the defence witness with regard to this point. The question is whether the learned trial Judge was right in drawing the inference from the facts that it was the intention of the partnership to carry on the business in the name of the 1st defendant alone. In my view, that is the only fair inference. The partnership was formed after the 1st defendant had become the successful bidder. The license would, therefore, be issued in his name. No application had been made for the issue of the license in the names of the partners. In fact no such license was ever asked for nor was the permission of the Collector obtained and the fair inference is that the object of the partnership was to do that which it did in fact do, namely, carry on the business in contravention of cl. 27. On the facts of this case, I am satisfied that the District Munsif properly decided this case: and in the result this Civil Revision Petition must be dismissed with costs.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for a declaration that the hypothecation bond, dated January 2, 1925, executed by defendant No. 2, the father of the plaintiff, in favour of defendant No. 1, was unenforceable and that the family property mortgaged by that deed was not saleable in execution of an ex parte decree for sale obtained by defendant No. 1 on the basis of the said mortgage deed. The plaintiff also prayed for a declaration that the purchase made by defendant No. 3 in execution of simple money decree ..is null and void as against the plaintiff and the property in dispute."

The plaintiff valued the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction at Rs. 10,000 and paid a court-fee of Rs. 20. The plaintiff's case was that there was no legal necessity for the execution of the mortgage deed by defendant No. 2, and the amount, if any, borrowed by defendant No. 2 was spent by him on "improper acts and immoral purposes". It was recited in the plaint that defendant No. 1 obtained an ex parte decree on the basis of the mortgage deed without impleading the plaintiff The relief as against defendant No. 3 mentioned above was based on the allegation that the purchase made by her was in execution of a simple money decree with respect to a debt that was taken by defendant No. 2 for immoral purposes.

Defendant No. 1, alone contested the suit and one of the pleas raised by him was that ad valorem court-fee on Rs. 10,000 was payable and the plaint was insufficiently stamped. The learned Subordinate Judge relying on the Full Bench decision in the case of Kalu Ram v. Babu Lal (1) accepted the contention of the defendants and called upon the plaintiff to pay ad valorem court-fee on Rs. 10,000. He granted time to the plaintiff for making good the deficiency in the Court-fee, but as the plaintiff failed to make good the deficiency, he dismissed the suit with costs.

The plaintiff has come up in appeal to this Court and it is contended on his behalf that the court-fee paid on the plaint was sufficient and the view taken by the Court below was erroneous. In our judgment this contention is well-founded.

The question whether the court-fee paid is or is not sufficient must be decided with reference to the relief prayed for in the plaint irrespective of the fact whether the omission of the plaintiff to ask for some further or consequential relief would or would not entail the dismissal of the suit in view of some statutory provision, e. g., the provisions of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. At the stage at which the consideration of the question of court-fee arises the Court is not concerned with the question as to what reliefs should have been prayed for by the plaintiff. It has to confine its attention to the reliefs contained in the plaint and to see whether the court-fee paid by the plaintiff is or is not sufficient in accordance with the provision of the Court Fees Act. Further, in the decision of the question of court-fee the Court has to bear in mind the principle that a fiscal enactment is to be strictly construed and in favour of the subject.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that as the plaintiff merely prayed for a declaratory decree, the case fell within the purview of Art. 17 (iii) of the Second Schedule to the Court Fees Act, which provides a fixed court-fee of Rs. 10 for a plaint "to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed". It is contended, on the other hand, on behalf of the defendant respondents that the prayer contained in the plaint was not only for a declaratory decree but also for a consequential relief and the plaintiff was therefore, liable to pay ad valorem court-fee on the amount (Rs. 10,000) in accordance with s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act that provides about court-fee in suits to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed.

The Full Bench decision in Kalu Ram v Babu Lal (1) mentioned above has no application to the case before us. In that case the relief prayed for in the plaint was for the cancellation of an instrument and also for the cancellation of the compromise, the preliminary decree and the final decree in a certain suit and it was held by this Court that the court-fee payable was under the residuary articles, Sch. I, Art. I of the Court Fees Act. We are not concerned in the present case with any prayer for the cancellation of any instrument or for the cancellation of any decree. The only question that we have to consider is whether the reliefs sought by the plaintiff were mere declarator reliefs or there was also a consequential relief prayed for by the plaintiff. In the Full Bench case mentioned above it was observed that the words "consequential relief" in s. 7 (iv) (c) mean some relief which follows directly from the declaration given and "cannot be claimed independently of the declaration as a substantive relief". Similarly in Mirza Hyder Ali Sahib v. Hussain Raza Sahib 24 Ind. Cas. 316 (2) it was held that consequential relief means a subatantial and immediate remedy in accordance with the title that the Court has been asked to declare. In short, consequential relief means some relief which is a necessary corollary to the principal declaratory relief prayed for by the plaintiff. Instances of consequential relief within the meaning of s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, are furnished by cases in which, over and above the prayer for declaration of his title, the plaintiff asks for some relief by way of injunction, or possession, or appointment of receiver, or for partition of his share, etc. Such cases must be distinguished from cases in which two or more declaratory reliefs are prayed for by the plaintiff. It may be that one of such declaratory reliefs can in one sense be said to follow from the other declaratory relief claimed by the plaintiff but this fact alone cannot make a declaratory relief a consequential relief within the meaning of s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act. Instances of suits in which more than one declaratory relief were prayed for and each of the reliefs was held to be an independent declaratory relief, are furnished by the decisions of this Court in Brij Gopal v. Suraj Karan (3), Lakshmi Narain Rai v. Dip Narain Rai (4) and Abdul Samad Khan v. Anjuman Islamia, Gorakhpur (5). In the last mentioned case the plaintiff prayed for a declaration that a deed of gift executed by a certain person in favour of the defendant was illegal and inaffectual as against the plaintiff and that the defendant had no right to interfere with the possession of the plaintiff. It was held that a court-fee of Rs. 20 paid on the plaint was sufficient as the relief claimed in the plaint involved two declarations.

In the case before us the declaratory relief prayed for by the plaintiff that the hypothecation bond was unenforceable and that the family property was not saleable in execution of the decree obtained by defendant No. 1, was really only one declaratory relief for the simple reason that on the date of the suit the hypothecation bond had merged in the decree and had ceased to exist, and it was the apprehension of the family property being sold in execution of the decree that led the plaintiff to institute the suit and to claim the relief noted above. Indeed, if he had simply asked for a declaration that the property was not saleable in execution of the decree, that relief could, on proof of the facts alleged by the plaintiff, have been granted to him. The relief for a declaration that the family property was not saleable in execution of the decree was, therefore, a declaratory relief and not a consequential relief. The plaint was, therefore, sufficiently stamped and the Court below was wrong in dismissing the suit.

For the reasons given above we allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case to that Court with directions to re-admit it to its original number and to try and dispose it of according to law. Costs here and hitherto shall be costs in the cause and shall abide the result.

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), s 221—Bona fide dispute of ownership—Obstruction offered to contractor—Held, no offence committed.

Where there exists a bona fide dispute regarding the ownership of a plot of land between the Municipal Committee and the accused and it is doubtful whether the Committee could direct its contractor to pave the disputed land and thus constitute him a person legally authorised under s. 221, Punjab Municipal Act, the accused will not be guilty of offence under s. 221 of the Act, if he, on the contractor proceeding to pave the site, tells the contractor that the property belonged to him and should not be paved.

Cr. R. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Peshawar, dated December 5, 1933.

Mr. Nur Elahi, for the Municipal Committee.

Mr. S. Raja Singh, for the Crown.

Judgment.—On February 8, 1933, Municipal Committee, Peshawar, filed a complaint against S. Wajidalishah and Sajjadalishah under s. 221, Punjab Municipal Act. This was filed by the "perokar" of the Municipal Committee whose name is Zahirali. He stated that a plot of land shown in the plan in red was the property of the Municipal Committee and that the Municipality had ordered it to be paved by Bhola Khan contractor. The accused obstructed the contractor in the discharge of his functions and have, therefore, committed an offence under the foregoing section. He requested that they should be punished. The plan attached to this complaint shows in red a trapezodical piece of land in front of the house of the accused which abuts on what is shown in the plan to be a lane on three sides. There was no allegation in the complaint that it is the part of the lane itself.

Zahirali appeared personally as a witness at the trial and Bhola Khan also gave evidence as such. It is significant in Bhola's statement that the obstruction offered to him consisted only of the assertion by the accused that the property belonged to them. Bhola has not definitely stated that he was physically obstructed or anything else was done to deter him from carrying out his duties. The impression one gets from his statement is that directly the accused objected to the pavement being made on their ground, the contactor ceased to continue his work. Hiralal, Municipal draftsman, proved the plan. Sarbiland Shah, an enemy of the accused with whom a third brother of the accused has been bound down, was produced to prove that the land belonged to the Municipality. The accused have produced Akbarali Khan, retired D. S. P. and S. Abdull Shah, Municipal Commissioner. Both of them have averred that the land in dispute is a raised platform which had always been in the possession of the accused and their father.

The Magistrate convicted both the accused and sentenced them to pay a fine of Rs. 4 each. The accused went up in revision to the Sessions Court. The Second Additional Sessions Judge rejected the revision and they have now petitioned this Court against the order of the Magistrate. The petition was admitted on the ground that there was a bona fide dispute between the Municipal Ccmmittee and the petitioners as regards the ownership of the site in question, and it was doubtful whether in the circumstances, the Committee could direct the contractor to pave the disputed land and thus constitute him a person legally authorized under s. 221. I have heard the Counsel for the Municipal Committee and the learned Government Advocate has been kind enough to assist me by giving his views which he put very ably before me.

After giving my careful consideration to the arguments at the bar and the facts of the case, I have come to the conclusion that the convictions of the accused cannot stand. All that the Municipal Committee can say in its favour is that the site in question is entered in the Municipal plan. Abdulla Shah, a respectable Municipal Commissioner, has stated before the Court that the Municipal plan had many a time been found to be incorrect and that lands, which were entered in it were often admitted to be the property of the members of public by the Committee. No act of ownership or possession has ever been exercised by the Municipality on this land so far as the record goes. On the other hand, I have no reasen whatsoever to reject the weighty evidence of Haji Akbar Ali Khan, D. S. P. and of S. Abdulla Shah that this is a raised platfrom and has been used by the accused and their father for a very long time. The very face that the Committee has not shown it in the plan to be a part of the street convinces me that the evidence of the two defence witnesses is reliable and true.

The learned Government Advocate has very ingeniously suggested that this is an open space and therefore under s. 3 (13) (a) and (b) it should be taken to be a public street. He then proceeded to argue that under s. 56 (g) the Municipality had every right to pave this street and when in exercising that right it ordered the contractor to do so, the accused in obstructing that contractor were guilty of the offence under s. 221, Punjab Municipal Act. I am of opinion that this is not a public street, and the Municipal Committee had no jurisdiction over it. So far as this record goes, this raised platform has been in the possession of the accused and there is a bona fide dispute between the Municipality and the accused over its proprietorship. The fact that the accused applied to the Municipality for permission and were refused does not per se create any equities in favour of the Committee. To my mind it is clear that the Municipal Committee has attempted, just like a private individual, to vindicate its right to this plot of land by sending a contractor to forcibly pave it. In the circumstances there was nothing wrong in the accused telling the contractor that it was their property and should not be paved. It is doubtful whether this statement in itself was enough to constitute obstruction, but in view of my finding as regards the nature of the accused's possession and the locus standi of the Committee to order pavement, this point does not necessarily arise. The reasoning of their Lordships of the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Shivdas Onkar, 19 Ind. Cas. 507 (1) applies to this case. I therefore, set aside the convictions of the accused and direct that the fines, if paid, should be refunded.

I must note that there is nothing on this record to show that the Municipal "perokar" was personally authorized by the Municipality to file the complaint. There is no document on the file to show me that it had been done. I have brought it to the notice of the Municipal Counsel. He states that there is some authority, although the statement of "perokar" that only the Secretary authorized him to prosecute the accused indicates the contrary. If the "perokar" was not personally authorized to prosecute these accused, the complaint did not lie under s. 228, Punjab Municipal Act.

Contract—Plaintiff's debtor executing bona in favour of defendant—Money left with defendant to pay plaintiff—Suit on failure to pay—Agreement to lend—Enforceability of—Decree against defendant, if can be passed.

Where a person who was indebted to the plaintiff executed a bond in favour of the defendant leaving the entire amount with the latter for payment to the plaintiff and on not receiving payment, the plaintiff instituted a suit on the basis of the bond :

Held, that in substance the plaintiff's case, so far as it was based on the bond, amounted to a claim for enforcement of the defendant's promise to advance money in future, and as an agreement to lend money not being specifically enforceable, no decree could be passed against the defendant. Dwarkanath v. Piya Nath (1), distinguished.

C. R. A. against the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Gorakhpur, dated February 5, 1934.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Applicant.

Mr. K. Verma, for the Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—This revision has arisen from a Small Cause Court suit, brought by the plaintiff-respondent against Ram Raj, defendant No. 1, and Musammat Humela Kunwar, defendant No. 2, for recovery of Rs. 516-14-0 principal and interest. The lower Court decreed it against defendant No. 2, who has applied in revision.

Defendant No. 1 owed Rs. 1,473 to the plaintiff. On July 4, 1930, he satisfied his liability by handing over some cattle delivering some grain and by executing a mortgage deed for Rs. 977. There remained a balance of Rs. 350, for which he executed a bond in favour of defendant No. 2, leaving the entire amount with the latter for payment to the plaintiff. The plaintiff's case is that defendant No. 2 did not make any payment.

The suit was not contested by defendant No. 1. The defendant No. 2, however, filed a written statement in which it was pleaded that there was no privity of contract between her and the plaintiff and a suit for enforcement of the bond, executed in favour of defendant No. 1, could not be maintained against her. There was also a plea of payment. This plea has not been accepted by the lower Court whose finding on this point has not been impeached before me.

As regards the principal question, the lower Court found in favour of the plaintiff. His case was that defendant No. 2 had personally undertaken to pay to him Rs. 350, for which defendant No. 1 executed a bond in her favour, and that relying on her assurance the plaintiff returned certain bonds, duly endorsed, to defendant No. 1. The only evidence in the case consisted of the testimony of the plaintiff and the husband of defendant No. 2. The latter, who is said to be a 'pardanashin' lady, did not give her own evidence. The plaintiff supported his case in its entirety and deposed that the transaction was carried through at one sitting, at which the plaintiff-defendant No. 1, defendant No. 2 and her husband were present. Defendant No. 2's husband, Ram Kumar, contradicted the plaintiff so far as the presence of his wife was concerned. He said that he represented his wife on that occasion and she was not present. The lower Court has given no finding on the question of fact whether defendant No. 2 was present and gave the assurance relied on by the plaintiff. The learned Judge apparently thought that the lady has effectively represented by her husband. He observed:

"Whether the defendant No. 2 was present at the time of the settlement or she was represented at that time by her husband, it is clear that the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 and Musammat Humela or her husband all took part in the settlement and it was expressly agreed by Musammat Humela or her husband to pay Rs. 350 to the plaintiff."

If Musammat Humela had been present and had given an undertaking to the plaintiff for the payment of Rs. 350, for which she took a bond from defendant No. 1, and acting on that undertaking the plaintiff had given a discharge to defendant No. 1 returning certain bonds that were at that time outstanding, a case of estoppel might have been made out against defendant No. 2. The lower Court has not given any finding as to whether defendant No. 2 gave such an undertaking to the plaintiff.

The same result will undoubtedly be arrived at if her husband had the requisite authority to act on her behalf and gave an undertaking to the plaintiff. If the plaintiff's evidence that defendant No. 2 was herself present be discarded, there is no evidence on the record to prove that defendant No. 2 had authorised her husband not only to take a bond from defendant No. 1 but also to enter into a collateral arrangement with the plaintiff undertaking to pay to him the sum of Rs. 350, for which defendant No. 1 was to execute a bond in her favour. In the absence of such evidence it is impossible to hold defendant No. 2 liable for the consequences of any verbal undertaking given by her husband on her behalf. This controversy narrows down to the simple question whether defendant No. 2 was personally present, as is alleged by the plaintiff. It is a case of oath against oath: and as the plaintiff is highly interested in the result of this suit, I do not think it safe to accept his uncorroborated testimony on this point. The lower Court apparently felt the same hesitation and therefore did not definitely find that defendant No. 2 was present. In these circumstances, I hold that so far as the plaintiff's case is based on the undertaking alleged to have been given by defendant No. 2, it must fail.

As regards defendant No. 2's liability to the plaintiff arising from the bond executed by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 2, I think the plaintiff cannot succeed. Defendant No. 2 did not advance anything at the time when the bond in question was executed. She promised to pay it in future. In substance, the claim is to enforce a promise to advance money. It has been held in numerous cases that an agreement to lend money is not specifically enforcible. In substance, the plaintiff's case, so far as it is based on the bond, amounts to a claim for enforcement of defendant No. 2's promise to advance money in future. The lower Court has relied upon Dwarkanath v. Piya Nath 36 Ind. Cas. 792 (1). That case is clearly distinguishable as it was a transaction of sale of immovable property. Money was left in the hands of the purchaser for payment to a third person. It was held that the purchaser was, to that extent, a trustee and, therefore, the third person, who should be regarded as a beneficiary, was entitled to enforce payment. It was not a case which could be considered to be one for enforcement of an agreement to lend.

The plaintiff claimed the sum in suit from both the defendants. The lower Court decreed it against defendant No. 2 only. In view of the findings which I have recorded, no decree can be passed against defendant No. 2; but the plaintiff is undoubtedly entitled to a decree against defendant No. 1 who in turn can sue defendant No. 2 for damages for breach of promise to lend. Accordingly I allow this application, set aside the decree of the lower Court and decree the plaintiff's suit against defendant No. 1, who is a respondent in this case but has not entered appearance. I am clearly of opinion that in circumstances like those appearing in this case, a decree can be passed against defendant No. 1 under O. XXI, r. 33, Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff shall have his costs from defendant No. 1 in both Courts. Defendant No. 2 shall bear her own costs in both Courts.

Custom (Punjab)—Succession—Gujranwala District—Non-ancestral property of father—Daughters and collaterals of 7th degree—Preferential heir.

A daughter is entitled to succeed to the non-ancestral property of her father in preference to collaterals of the 7th degree and collaterals of the 7th degree cannot possibly be regarded as "near male kindred." C. A. No. 1518 of 1931 decided on November 29, 1934, followed

First Appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujranwala, dated November 7, 1931.

Messrs. N. C. Mehra and L. M. Datta, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Vishnu Datta, Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand, for the Respondents.

Skemp, J.—On April 10, 1924, Musammat Ram Kaur, a widow gifted the property in dispute to her daughters in the following shares:—

Musammat Nihal Kaur one half; Musammat Ishar Kaur and Musammat Harnam Kaur one-half in equal shares.

The plaintiffs who are collaterals in the 7th degree of Musammat Ram Kaur's deceased husband Sham Singh, brought the present suit for a declaration that Musammat Ram Kaur had no right to give the property to her daughters and that the gift would not affect the plaintiffs' reversionary rights. The Senior Subordinate Judge of Gujranwala has dismissed the suit on the findings: (1) that the property in suit is non-ancestral, and (2) that the rights of collaterals in the 7th degree as heirs are postponed to those of daughters.

It should be explained that Musammat Ram Kaur was married twice, first to Teja Singh by whom she had Musammat Nihal Kaur and Musammat Ishar Kaur and secondly to Sham Singh who is the father of Musammat Harnam Kaur. It is not clear on the record whether she has alienated the property both of Teja Singh and Sham Singh or the property of Sham Singh only, but this fact is not material for the decision of the present dispute, because, in any event, the question is whether collaterals in the 7th degree are to be preferred to daughters because the gift is an acceleration of the right of succession of daughters.

Mr. Mehra the appellants' Counsel attacks the finding of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge on the ground that the property in suit is ancestral; and he has invited our attention to a statement made by Musammat Harnam Kaur one of the defendants on November 8, 1930, that the land in dispute is ancestral. But she also stated that the plaintiffs were not collaterals of her father and therefore did not mean to admit that the land was ancestral qua the plaintiffs but used the term, loosely meaning that her father had not bought the land. For the rest the plaintiffs never asserted even in their plaint that the land was ancestral; and on the other hand, its ancestral character was denied in the written statements of all the defendants. Beyond this the appellants' Counsel was unable to show us anything on the record leading to the conclusion that the land in dispute was ancestral.

On the second question Mr. Mehra relies on the answer to question No. 47 in the Customary Law of the Gujranwala district. The question is:—

"Under what circumstances are daughters entitled to inherit:

(1) the immovable or ancestral

(2) the movable or acquired property of their father.

Do they inherit in the presence of sons or widow, or near male kindred of the deceased ? If so, then to what extent and for how many generations is the right of near male kindred superior to that of daughter?

Answer. In no case can daughters inherit. "Then there are qualifications that among certain tribes male descendants and collaterals have preferential treatment up to the fourth degree.

This question and answer have very recently been the subject of consideration by a Division Bench in Civil Appeal No. 1518 of 1931, decided on November 29, 1934. In this ruling which also dealt with a case between collaterals of the 7th degree and daughters, it was held after careful consideration that a daughter was entitled to succeed to the non-ancestral property of her father in preference to collaterals of the 7th degree and it was pointed out that collaterals of the 7th degree could not possibly be regarded as "near male kindred". The previous rulings of this Court and judgments of Judges in the Gujranwala district were considered and with that judgment I am, with respect, in entire agreement. No evidence was led in the present case to show that collaterals of the 7th degree have a better right to succeed to non-ancestral property than daughters and I am of opinion that the judgment and decree of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge should be maintained and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Tek Chand, J.—I agree.

Divorce—Desertion—Husband bringing concubine into family house—Wife leaving house—Husband, whether guilty of desertion.

In order to constitute desertion, there must be a cessation of cohabitation but there is no substantial difference between the case of a husband who intends to put an end to a state of cohabitation and does so by leaving his wife and that of a husband who with a like intent obliges his wife to separate from him.

Where the husband brought a concubine into the house where his wife was living with him and the wife had accordingly to leave the house:

Held, that the conduct of the husband amounted to desertion. Dickinson v. Dickinson (1) and Sickert v. Sickert (2), followed.

Case referred by the Agent to the Governor, Ganjam, at Chatrapur in his letter Ref. No. O. P. No. 1-32 dated February 17, 1933, under s. 9 of the Indian Divorce Act for decision of the High Court (M. C. No. 1 of 1929, on the file of the Court of the Sub-Divisional 1st Class Magistrate and Special Assistant Agent, Ballinguda Division).

Mr. C.P. Connell, Counsel, Amicus Curiae.

Order:—This case has been referred to us by the Agent to the Governor in Ganjam. It relates to a petition for divorce on the grounds of adultery and desertion under s. 10 of the Indian Divorce Act. The facts of the case are that the petitioner separated herself from her husband on account of his adultery with a concubine in his house. On these grounds she was awarded maintenance by a Criminal Court on July 29, 1929, at the rate of Rs. 2 a month. This order the respondent failed to comply with only paying Rs. 13-3-0 to the petitioner from that date and no more. The learned Agent to the Governor says that, although for judicial separation adultery or desertion may form a reasonable cause, both these facts have to exist before a dissolution can be ordered but he is of the opinion that the husband's living in adultery does not imply that he deserted the petitioner but that the fact that he failed to maintain her even after a decision of a competent Court may imply desertion. In his opinion it does do so. The decision of the High Court is requested upon this latter point. The learned Agent to the Governor has, if I may say so, overlooked the real point or the point of importance which is whether the conduct of the husband brought about a cessation of cohabitation between himself and his wife. If it did, then in law that is desertion. In the present case, the husband brought a concubine into the house where his wife was living with him and she had accordingly to leave the house. There is clear authority in English decisions that such conduct as that by a husband amounts to desertion. The first of these decisions is Dickinson v. Dickinson (1), a case exactly in point. There a wife petitioned for the dissolution of her marriage on the grounds of adultery and desertion. The parties were married in 1866 and in 1872 the husband brought to the house a woman with whom he had immoral relations. The wife refused to admit her, but the husband insisted. The wife remained a short time in the house and then told her husband that either she or the woman must leave the house. The husband told her that she might do as she liked, but that the woman would remain. The wife thereupon left, and never afterwards cohabited with her husband. It was held that the husband was guilty of deserting his wife. Another case is Sickert v. Sickert (2). In that case the observations of Gorell Barnes, J., on p. 282* are very much in point. He there says.

"In order to constitute desertion there must be a cessation of cohabitation and an intention on the part of the accused party to desert the other. In most cases of desertion the guilty party actually leaves the other, but it is not always or necessarily the guilty party who leaves the matrimonial home. In my opinion, the party who intends bringing the cohabitation to an end, and whose conduct in reality causes its termination, commits the act of desertion. There is no substantial difference between the case of a husband who intends to put an end to a state of cohabitation, and does so by leaving his wife, and that of a husband who with the like intent obliges his wife to separate from him". In view of these two decisions the real question here must be answered by saying that the petitioner has proved that the respondent, her husband, deserted her. The case must, therefore, be sent back to the Agent to the Governor at Ganjam to be disposed of in the light of the opinion which we have given. We are very much obliged to Mr. Connell for the valuable assistance he has given us as amicus curiae.

Record of Rights—Entry of the name of mahant in column of owner, whether a proof that property is his private property—Religious endowment.

The Revenue Authorities can only function through a human agency. They cannot enter into any transaction with a legal entity like an idol installed in a thakardwara. The name of the mahant or trustee is, therefore, generally entered in the column of owner, so that the Revenue Authorities may have dealings with him in all those matters which concern the thakardwara or the religious institution in question. Therefore, the mere entry of the name of the mahant in the column of owner does not prove that the property was his private and exclusive property. Court of Wards v. Illahi Bakhsh (1), relied on.

F. C. A. from the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated July 19, 1928.

Messrs. Badri Das and Basant Krishen, for the Appellant.

Messrs. J. N. Aggarwal and J. L. Kapur, for the Respondents.

Agha Haidar, J.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit instituted under the provisions of s. 92, Civil Procedure Code. The Senior Subordinate Judge, Hoshiarpur, substantially decreed the plaintiffs' suit. The defendant has come up to this Court in appeal. In the village Pur Hiran, District Hoshiarpur, there is a thakardwara to to which are attached certain buildings, vacant sites, lands and occupancy rights. The original founder of this thakardwara was one Dhanna Ram Bairagi who lived somewhere at the end of the 18th century. He had one son, namely, Baldev Das, who was also his disciple. Bhagwan Das and Brahm Das were Dhanna Ram's two other disciples. On the death of Dhanna Ram, Bhagwan Das became mahant. Bhagwan Das was succeeded by his Chela Bajrang Das on whose death the defendant Raghu Nath Das succeeded as mahant.

The plaintiff' case was that the thakardwara was a public trust of a religious nature, that the defendant was not a man of good character, that he had unlawfuly alienated certain houses and lands appertaining to the thakardwara, that he did not look after the thakardwara properly, with the result that the building had fallen down for want of repairs and that in other respects the institution was being neglected on account of the incompetency of the present mahant, namely, the defendant. They therefore, as worshippers of the said thakardwara, asked the Court (1) to remove the present mahant from the thakardwara, smadhs, lands and houses attached to it, (ii) to appoint a new mahant, (iii) to take accounts from the defendant and to make over the property to the new mahant, and (iv) also to draw up a scheme for future administration and governance of the thakardwara. The pleas raised in defence by the defendant, Raghu Nath Das, briefly were that the thakardwara was not a public religious trust, that the temple had been built by Bhagwan Das for his personal use and the plaintiffs had no right or interest in the same. As regards the lands attached to the thakardwara the defendants' case was that they were the personal property of his predecessors and he could do whatever he liked with them. He therefore pleaded that the suit should be dismissed as the plaintiffs had no locus standi to assail his position as the mahant of the institution.

Verious issues were framed and evidence was led by the parties. The Senior Subordinate Judge recorded the following findings: (1) that Dhanna Ram orginally installed the idols in a kacha room and called it a temple; (2) that Bhagwan Das made the temple pakka and acquired lands by means of subscriptions which he managed to collect from his disciples and benefactors, and (3) that the thakardwara was a public religious institution and the members of the public had every right to go there for the purpose of their devotions. The allegations in the plaint that the defendant was a man of bad character were not accepted by the Senior Subordinate Judge who gave the defendant an opportunity of continuing as a mahant of the institution on condition that he gave security for a sum of Rs. 500 for keeping proper accounts and looking after the institution in an efficient manner. The defendant, however, failed to give security, with the result that he was removed and a Committee was appointed with authority to nominate a mahant.

The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant argued that the institution was not a public religious trust, but that it was the private and the exclusive property of the defendant and his predecessors-in-interest. There is, however, abundant evidence on the record to show that Dhanna Ram who was originally an ordinary zemindar became a bairagi and built a modest kacha thakardwara many years ago. But the mahant who considerably improved the old thakardwara and raised it to its present position of importance was Bhagwan Das. He used to travel extensively in foreign parts and bring home sums of money with which he built the present thakardwara and his devotees later on endowed lands for the benefit of the institution. The thakardwara is open to all pious Hindus who believe in idol worship and they can freely enter it in order to perform their religious exercises and devotions. A certain amount of criticism was directed by the learned Counsel to the evidence of some of the witnesses for the plaintiffs who differed as to the exact names of the idols which are to be found installed in the thakardwara. This criticism is not of much importance because, in my judgment, a Hindu who believes in idol-worship, enters a thakardwara where there are thakars or idols installed and performs his devotions there without being an authority on the Hindu pantheon.

Apart from the plaintiffs' oral evidence, which cannot be ignored in the present case, there are some important admissions by Bhagwan Das which put the defendant completely out of Court. As already mentioned, Bhagwan Das used to go out to southern India and his absence from the thakardwara used to be fairly prolonged on these occasions. In the year 1879 when he returned to the village Pur Hiran, he found that his co-disciple Brahm Das in his absence had transferred certain lands in favour of one Imam Bakhsh. In fact Imam Bakhsh instituted a suit for possession of the land which had been transferred to him by Brahm Das. Bhagwan Das was impleaded as a defendant. In his written statement (Ex. P-11), Bhagwan Das, pleaded that Brahm Das was his co-disciple and that he (Bhagwan Das) was the mahant at Mauza Pur Hiran. He further pleaded that Brahm Das or his disciple was not competent to alienate the land in his presence, he being the mahant, that the land did not belong to him and was not his personal property and that therefore, he (the mahant) had no power to alienate it. According to him the mahant, who served the temple, could only enjoy the income of the property. In his statement before the Court he reiterated the allegations contained in his written statement by stating that the land in question was attached to the thakardwara at Pur Hiran and that Brahm Das, to whom he had entrusted the management of the thakardwara when going away on pilgrimage, had no authority to make any alienation. The case was tried by an Extra Assistant Commissioner and his finding was that the land was in reality attached to the thakardwara, that the defendants were bairagi fakirs and that Bhagwan Das was the mahant. This judgment (Ex. P-7), though not inter parties, is an important piece of evidence under the provisions of s. 13, Evidence Act. But the real importance of this litigation lies in the clear and unambiguous admissions made by Bhagwan Das, the predecessor-in-title of the defendant and the mahant for the time being, who stated that the lands belonged to the thakardwara and that his co-disciple Brahm Das had no right whatsoever to transfer it. This is not a mere statement lightly made without giving any serious thought to it. It was an admission embodied in a formal and solemn document like a written statement and, therefore, great weight attaches to it.

On May 29, 1880, Bhagwan Das instituted a suit for possession of a certain land which had been transferred by Brahm Das, his co-chela, while he had gone to Madras on a pilgrimage. In the petition of plaint (Ex. P-6), Bhagwan Das again clearly alleged that the land was dharmarth property attached to the thakardwara and was, therefore, inalienable. He made the position clear that even the mahant was not competent to alienate such a property. There was a similar suit instituted at the same time by Bhagwan Das for the possession of another parcel of land. In his petition of plaint. (Ex. P-10) in that suit Bhagwan Das made similar allegations. Both these suits were compromised. The importance, as already mentioned, of these suits lies in the fact that Bhagwan Das made clear admissions against his own interests as regards the character and status of the institution and the lands attached to it.

The defendant led a certain amount of rebutting evidence and his learned Counsel invited the attention of the Court to various portions of it. This evidence so far as it purports to prove the private character of the thakardwara is, to say the least, decidedly of an inferior type and reliance cannot be placed upon it. The evidence that no one either from Pur Hiran or the neighbouring villages comes to worship in the thakardwara cannot be accepted for a moment and the further evidence that the sole congregation of the thakardwara consists of two or three families living in the village Jhaj, which is 12 miles away, is too absurd to be believed. The defendant also placed reliance upon certain Revenue Records. It may be mentioned in this connection, that the landed property attached to the thakardwara is situate in three villages. The land of which the thakardwara is the proprietor lies in the village, Pur Hiran, while there are some occupancy rights in the villages of Dholanwal and Shergarh. Exhibit D-99 is an extract from the annual jamabandi papers for 1876 Fasli relating to Mauza Pur Hiran. The headings in this document are missing and, therefore, it is impossible to attach any value to the entries which are to be found in column 3 and on which reliance is placed.

At p. 143 of the paper book there is an extract from the Khewat Khatauni papers attached to the Settlement Record of 1884 relating to Mauza Pur Hiran. This relates to the second regular settlement and the name of Bhagwan Das is undoubtedly entered in the column of owner. But this entry, having regard to the history of the institution as disclosed by the evidence on the record, is not of much importance. The Revenue Authorities can only function through a human agency. They cannot enter into any transaction with a legal entity like an idol installed in a thakardwara. The name of the mahant or trustee is, therefore, generally entered in the column of owner, so that the Revenue Authorities may have dealings with him in all those matters which concern the thakardwara or the religious institution in question. An identical point was raised in Court of Wards v. Ilahi Bakhsh (1), where their Lordships at p. 305* observe as follows :

"In the ownership column Mukhdum Hussain Bakhsh now represented by the Court of Wards is entered as owner. It would seem that he was properly entered as owner, being trustee and custodian of the shrine of the said Mai Pak Daman."

Therefore, the mere entry of the name of Bhagwan Das in the column of owner does not prove that the property was his private and exclusive property. The same remark applies to the entries relating to the other two villages, namely Dholanwal and Shergarh. Reliance was placed upon a certain muafi grant which is to be found at pp. 162 and 163 of the printed record. They show that somewhere in the year 1847 certain muafi lands were granted to Brahm Das, chela of Dhanna Ram, by one Sardar Dayal Singh. The area covered by these grants was 7 ghumaons. Now, the area in suit is 27 ghumaons and it is impossible, on the record as it stands, to trace these 7 ghumaons to the 27 ghumaons. It is an admitted fact that the defendant, during the course of his management, has alienated certain lands and houses and it is quite possible that this area of 7 ghumaons might have been transferred by him. On this point, however, it is impossible to express any decisive opinion and all that is necessary to observe is that the defendant-appellant has failed to show as to what happened to these 7 ghumaons which form the subject-matter of the muafi grant of 1847. This is all the evidence on the record.

In my judgment, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge was justified in his findings and I would accordingly affirm his decree and dismiss this appeal with costs throughout.

Criminal Revision Application No. 410 of 1934
January 22, 1935

BADE alias BASORE—APPLICANT

EMPEROR—NON-APPLICANT

C. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), s. 201—Proceedings under, by Revenue Court—Affidavit in evidence accepted—Legality—Applicability of Civil Procedure Code to Revenue proceedings—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Pre-amble, O. XLI, O. XIX, r. 2.

Revenue Courts are Courts of civil judicature in matters arising under the Land Revenue Act.

Any application made under s. 201 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act is an original proceeding which must be governed by the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code. Similarly the provisions of O XLI, of the Civil Procedure Code apply to the proceedings in appeal before any Revenue Court. Under O. XIX, r. 2, it is permissible for any party to give evidence upon any application by affidavit, although the Court may at the instance of either party, order the attendance for cross-examination of the deponent. Thus as the Revenue Court is a Court of civil judicature it is authorised to receive affidavits in evidence.

[Case-law referred to].

Cr. Rev. App. against an order of the Sessions Judge, Jubbulpore, dated August 20, 1934.

Mr. W. Datta, for the Applicant.

Mr. Vivian Bose Standing Counsel, for the non-Applicant.

Order.—The applicant Bade alias Basore was convicted for the offence of filing a false affidavit in the course of a revenue appeal before the Deputy Commissioner by the City Magistrate, Jubbulpore, and was sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50 under s. 199, Indian Penal Code. His appeal before the Sessions Judge, Jubbulpore, was dismissed. He moves this Court in revision.

The false affidavit which he had filed in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner in Revenue Appeal No. 27 of 1933-34 had been sworn by him before Mr. Kunte, First Class Magistrate, and the appeal before the Deputy Commissioner had arisen out of proceedings under s. 201 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act. The question that is mainly argued before me in this revision is that the Revenue Court was not authorised by law to receive the affidavit as evidence, as the Civil Procedure Code did not apply to the proceedings. I cannot accede to this contention since the preamble to the Civil Procedure Code itself purports to lay down the procedure for all the Courts of civil judicature. Revenue Courts are undoubtedly Courts of civil judicature in matters arising under the Land Revenue Act. In numerous cases it has been held that the procedure of the Revenue Courts must be governed by the Civil Procedure Code: see Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Taranath Mukerjee (1), Chaitan Patgosi Mahapatra v. Kunja Behari Patnaik (2), Madho Prakash Singh v. Murli Manohar (3), and Veeraswamy v. Manager, Pittapur Estate (4). Section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, itself lays down that the procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction. As far back as 1895 their Lordships of the Privy Council ruled that the proceedings spoken of in this section, which was then s. 447 of the Code of 1882, referred to original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probate, guardianship and so forth. Any application made under s. 201 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act is an original proceeding which must be governed by the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code, Similarly the provisions of O. XLI of the Civil Procedure Code would apply to the proceedings in appeal before any Revenue Court. Under O. XIX, r. 2, it is permissible for any party to give evidence upon any application by affidavit, although the Court may at the instance of either party, order the attendance for cross-examination of the deponent. Thus it appears to me clear that as the Revenue Court is a Court of civil judicature, it is authorised to receive affidavit.

The conviction under s. 199, Indian Penal Code, is, therefore, perfectly in order. The sentence is by no means severe.

The application is dismissed.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 1—Costs—Appeal against order for costs—Court-fee, if payable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Discretion as to costs exercised by lower Court—No legal principle involved—Second appeal, competency of.

Ordinarily no court-fee is payable upon costs entered in the decree against which an appeal is presented, but where apart from and independently of any other relief which the appellant seeks, he seeks distinct relief on the ground that by the decree under appeal the costs of the parties have not been properly assessed or apportioned, the value of such distinct relief should be reckoned as part of the subject-matter in dispute for the purpose of the First Schedule of the Court Fees Act Kewal Singh v. Makrand Singh (1), relied on.

Where the Courts below have exercised their discretion and no legal point or matter of principle is involved, the High Court will not interfere in second appeal.

S. C. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Montgomery, dated May 23, 1931.

Mr. Nawal Kishore, for the Appellants.

Mr. Anant Ram Khosla, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—Tulsi Das and Nand Lal defendants Nos. 19 and 20, appealed to the District Judge by appeal No. 145 of 1930 on two grounds, namely, (1) that the decision of the trial Court as against them was wrong in respect of the disputed kothris and (2) that the costs of Rs. 404-2-0 awarded against them should be reduced by being calculated on a value of Rs. 200 instead of on a value of Rs. 2,300. The District Judge dismissed the appeal in respect of the first prayer but accepted it in respect of the second prayer and reduced the costs payable by Tulsi Ram and Nand Lal from Rs. 404-2-0 to Rs. 35-2-3.

Tulsi Ram and Nand Lal, however, had not paid court-fees on the amount of the relief sought in respect of costs and it is urged in this second appeal on behalf of the plaintiff that they could not on this account be given this relief by the District Judge. I think this contention is correct. As held in Kewal Singh v. Makrand Singh 3 Ind. Cas. 584 (1), ordinarily no court fee is payable upon costs entered in the decree against which an appeal is presented, but where apart from and independently of any other relief which the appellant seeks, he seeks distinct relief on the ground that by the decree under appeal the costs of the parties have not been properly assessed or apportioned, the value of such distinct relief should be reckoned as part of the subject-mater in dispute for the purpose Sch. I, Court Fees Act. The present case seems to fall clearly under the latter portion of the above dictum. It follows that defendants Nos. 19 and 20 could not be granted relief in respect of their costs not having paid court-fee on that part of the subject-matter.

The plaintiff also requests that the other defendants should have been made to share in the responsibility for paying his his costs but this matter was in the discretion of the Courts below and no legal point or matter of principle is involved and I will not interfere on second appeal.

The plaintiff also contends that his own appeal No. 7 of 1931 should not have been rejected by the District Judge with costs, as he declares that it was not contested by the other side. This appears to be correct. The costs awarded against him in this connection are Rs. 20 for Pleader's fee but it is not denied before me that no Pleader appeared to argue that appeal against the plaintiff. This error should, therefore, now be rectified.

Accordingly, I accept this second appeal of the plaintiff and setting aside the judgment and decree of the District Judge, dated May 23, 1931, in appeal No. 145 of 1930, I restore the judgment and decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Montgomery, dated November 17, 1930. Costs of appeal No. 145 of 1900 in the District Judge's Court to be borne by the parties. I also modify the decree of the District Judge dated May 23, 1931, in appeal No. 7 of 1931 and direct that the parties to that appeal should pay their own costs. The costs of the appellant in this Court will be borne by the respondents Tulsi Ram and Nand Lal, defendants Nos. 19 and 20.

N. Order accordingly.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art 6—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 17—Security bond furnished for setting aside ex parte decree in Small Cause suit—Proper stamp duty.

A security bond furnished under the proviso to s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, falls within Art. 6 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act and requires a stamp of eight annas only.

An order setting aside an ex parte decree in a Small Cause suit is an order made under the Civil Procedure Code and even in cases where the petitioner tenders a security along with the very first application without a previous order of the Court the security bond falls within Art 6 of Sch II of the Court Fees Act. In re District Munsif of Tiruvellur (1), Amirthammal v. Maddala Karan (2) and In re: Reference from the Munsif, Fourth Court, Habibganj (3), referred to.

R. C. stated under Art. 6 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act by the Additional District Munsif of Nellore re security bond filed in the application to set aside the ex parte decree in S. C. S. No. 56 of 1932.

Mr. Kasthuri Seshagiri Rao, Amicus Curiae.

Ramesam, J.—This matter comes up on reference by the Additional District Munsif of Nellore on account of a difference of opinion between him and the Court-fee Examiner.

The facts out of which this reference arises are these. A Small Cause decree was passed ex parte for Rs. 155-10-0. The defendant then put in a petition to set aside the ex parte decree and filed along with it a security bond executed by a surety for the performance of the decree. It looks as if the security bond was not originally stamped at all, but, when the petition came before the Court, the Court ordered the petitioner to affix the usual court-fee stamp of 8 annas to the security bond which was the practice of that Court. The decree has been set aside and the suit restored.

The Court-fee Examiner now thinks that the stamp to be affixed to the security bond is not 8 annas stamp under Art. 6 of the Sch. II of the Court Fees Act but a stamp of Rs. 1-4-0 under Art. 15 of the Stamp Act. Now Art. 15 of the Stamp Act does not apply if the Court Fees Act applies. So we have first to see whether Art. 6 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act applies or not. For the Court Fees Act to apply, two conditions must be satisfied: (1) the order setting aside the ex parte decree must be an order passed under the Code of Civil Procedure, and (2) the bond must be given in pursuance of an order made by a Court. It is true that the order was passed under s. 17 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act but it seems to me that nevertheless it is also an order passed under the Civil Procedure Code. The Civil Procedure Code is a general Act of procedure applicable to the Civil Courts in India. The Provincial Small Causes Courts Act is a kind of supplemental Act indicating the special procedure to be followed in Small Cause Courts which are Civil Courts. Order L, Civil Procedure Code, gives a list of certain provisions of that Code which are not applicable to Provincial Small Causes Courts. This indicates two things: first that the Civil Procedure Code itself governs the procedure of Small Causes Courts to some extent, and secondly, that the provisions not included in the list apply to Small Cause Courts and one of them is O. IX, r. 13. So, when a Small Cause Court sets aside an ex parte decree, it is really under O. IX, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code. Again s. 17 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act itself makes the procedure under the Civil Procedure Code applicable to Small Cause Courts. Either way we come to the conclusion that the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act is supplemental to the Civil Procedure Code. But it is said by the Court-fee Examiner that this order is under the proviso to s. 17 and not under the first part of the section. The proviso does not add to the section but only cuts down the very wide discretion which Courts have under O. IX, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, in setting aside an ex parte decree, and in imposing terms upon the petitioner. Under the proviso the petitioner should either deposit the decree amount or give security. No other alternative such as that no condition need be imposed at all is allowed.

I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the order passed is an order under the Civil Procedure Code.

On account of the somewhat inconsistent and therefore obsecure language of s. 17 of the Provincial Causes Courts Act, there is some difficulty as to the exact procedure to be followed by a petitioner. This obscurity has been caused by the words "shall at the time of presenting his application, either deposit in Court.....as the Court may direct".

The section contemplates some direction of the Court and the petitioner obeying that direction. The earlier part says that the petitioner shall deposit money or give security at the time of presenting the application. There is an apparent difficulty in obeying both these directions. This obscurity has been noticed by most Courts which deal with this section and deserves being cleared up by the Legislature. Most Courts have attempted a practical solution. It is unnecessary to discuss this matter at great length in this case but it seems to me that when a party applies to set aside an ex parte decree it may be regarded as consisting of two parts; first a preliminary application to get a direction of the Court with a view to get the ex parte decree set aside, and secondly, after obeying the direction of the Court the actual application to set aside the ex parte decree. The second part follows only after obeying the directions of the Court. Looked at in this way the party first applies. Where he deposits money, there is no further difficulty; but where he is unable to do so, he seeks the direction of the Court. The Court may now direct the party either to deposit money or to give security in some form. He should now obey the direction and when the matter again comes up before the Court it is then we have the actual application to set aside the decree and it may be said that he has either deposited money or given security with the application. However, in whatever form the Court's direction is obtained and complied with, the bond would be in pursuance of an order made by Court within the meaning of Art. 6 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act.

I have indicated the general construction of the Article without reference to the particular facts of the case. In this particular case it would appear that the Court actually asked the petitioner to supply a court-fee stamp of 8 annas. That would certainly be an order of the Court. Even in cases where the petitioner tenders a security along with the very first application without a previous order of the Court, if the Court orders notice on it to the opposite party and passes final orders setting aside the ex parte decree having found sufficient cause, it amounts to an order of Court. The acceptance by the Court of a bond previously furnished is equivalent to an order of the Court followed by compliance with it.

In my opinion, therefore, Art. 6 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act applies to the case and the bond should be stamped with an 8 annas stamp.

So far I have arrived at the conclusion without referring to any decision. My conclusion is in accordance with the Full Bench decision in In re The District Munsif of Tiruvallur (1) where it was held that a bond given in pursuance of rules made under the Code should be deemed to be given in pursuance of an order made by the Court. The conclusion in Amirthammal v. Maddala Karan (2) is also similar so far as the Court Fees Act is concerned. The question of the application of Art. 40 of the Stamp Act does not arise in the present case. The conclusion in In re Reference from the Munsif, Fourth Court, Habibganj (3) is also similar. But no question now arises with reference to Art. 57 of the Stamp Act. There is a circular of the Madras High Court (P. Dis. 365 of 1929 dated March 23, 1929) which practically adopts the above conclusion. This must have been overlooked by the Court-fee Examiner. I answer the reference accordingly.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 304, 302, 149—Accused acting without premeditation and on grave and sudden provocation—Accused beating complainant's party—Actual person causing fatal injury not known—Death—Offence—All are liable for offence—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 162—Statement of accused to Police during investigation—Whether can be used to discredit accused on account of any contradiction.

Where without premeditation but on grave and sudden provocation, the accused, more than five in number, attacked the complainant's party and beat them and as a result of the injuries received, one of the latter died, and while it was not known who of the accused party caused the fatal injuries, it was found that though they were not acting in self-defence, they did not take undue advantage or act in a cruel or unusual manner:

Held, that all the accused were responsible for the injuries inflicted but the offence committed was not murder but culpable homicide not amounting to murder and were punishable under ss. 304-149, Pena Code.

It is not proper that the Sessions Judge should cross-examine the accused with a view to confronting them with the statements which they made to the Investigating Officer. Statements made even by witnesses to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation are not permitted to be used in evidence for any purpose, except as provided in s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that is to say, on the request of the accused the Court shall refer to the written statement and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy of it in order that the witness may be contradicted by the use of this statement. It was certainly never intended that an accused person when being examined by the Court for the purpose of explaining anything in evidence against him should be confronted with the statement which he had made to the Police for the purpose of being discredited on account of any contradiction.

Cr. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Budaun, dated September 12, 1934.

Mr. L. N. Gupta, for the Appellants.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The seven appellants have been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Budaun of an offence under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code, and Bhagwan Das has been sentenced to death and the other six appellants to transportation for life. They have also been convicted of offences under ss. 147, 325 and 323 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years and one year, respectively, under those sections. They have all appealed against their convictions and sentences, and the record has been forwarded by the Sessions Judge for confirmation of the sentence of death passed on Bhagwan Das.

The incident in the course of which Chhote Lal was killed on May 26, 1934, has been described by the witnesses as follows. Chet Ram, in the course of executing a decree against Kallu, his judgment-debtor, attached a house, and Mullu filed an objection to this attachment which was to have been heard in the Court of the Munsif of Budaun on May 26. On that date the decree-holder, Chet Ram, Chhote Lal, the deceased, Ram Chander and Kallu Ahir, with a Civil Court peon, Gulzari, and the Patwari, Ram Chander, were going from their village to Court. All of them were seated in a bullock cart, except the Patwari who is said to have been walking behind the cart. It was early in the morning, and as they went along they saw a bullock cart on the road in front of them and eight persons standing beside it. The bullock cart is described as going along very slowly. Among the persons who were with the bullock cart in front of them were Mullu, the objector in the execution case, and Kallu, the judgment-debtor.

As to what happened after this, we have two different accounts from the prosecution witnesses: the story told by Chet Ram, Ram Chander Brahiman and Kallu Ahir, which is the least favourable to the defence, and the story told by Nur Muhammad and Rafi Uddin, who were undoubtedly in the bullock cart which was accompanied by the accused persons, and who have given a version of the story which in most respects supports the story for the prosecution. According to Chet Ram's story, when he saw the bullock cart of the opposite party in the way he told the driver, Kallu Ahir, to give that cart a wide margin in passing. When his cart drew abreast of the other cart, the appellant Bhagwan Das without any provocation whatever struck a lathi blow on Chhote Lal's head, on which the other accused persons attacked all those who were in Chet Ram's bullock cart. The Patwari and the peon ran away, but Chet Ram, Kallu Ahir and Ram Chander, son of Moti, were all beaten. Chhote Lal was killed on the spot, and a report was made in the thana some five miles away at 9 A.M. This report was made by Chet Ram, and agrees with the evidence which he afterwards gave in Court. The story told by Nur Muhammad and Rafi Uddin, however, is that when Chet Ram's cart drew abreast of the other cart, Chhote Lal told his servant, Kallu Ahir, to give that cart a wide berth, and he also told the accused with an abusive implication to get out of the way, on which Kallu Brahman, appellant, also abused Chhote Lal. Chet Ram and Chhote Lal then told their driver, Kallu Ahir, to beat the accused, and a lathi fight started. Neither Nur Muhammad nor Rafi Uddin stated in examination-in-chief in the Sessions Court that Kallu Ahir actually struck the accused when Chhote Lal told him to do so; but in cross-examination each of them stated that the first blow in the fight was delivered by Kallu Ahir.

As regards the fight that followed, we have already stated that Chhote Lal appears to have been killed on the spot. The evidence of the Civil Surgeon who conducted the post mortem examination on the evening of the same day shows that Chhote Lal had received eleven injuries and that his skull had been smashed to pieces. Chet Ram and Ram Chander Brahman had received seven and six injuries respectively, Chet Ram having had one of his fingers broken, but all the other injuries were simple, and evidently caused by lathis. On the other side we only find that three slight injuries were caused. The fight, therefore, was a very one-sided one, and in fact as Chet Ram's party consisted of only four inside the cart, including the driver, after the Patwari and peon had run away, while the accused party consisted of seven or eight excluding Nur Muhammad and Rafi Uddin, who were with the party, but who did not join in the fight, it is somewhat curious that Chet Ram adopted such an aggressive attitude. Even if Chet Ram's statement is to be accepted, it is clear that Chet Ram's party had to pass the other cart and had every intention of pushing past it, and they must have known that the cart was accompanied by the opposite party, the judgment-debtor and the objector and their friends but they made no attempt to steer clear of this formidable party, as they might easily have done if they had wished to avoid an encounter. According to the statements of Nur Muhammad and Rafi Uuddin, Chhote Lal was decidedly aggressive, and must be held responsible for having started the fight. The learned Sessions Judge has accepted the more extreme version of the prosecution evidence, that is to say, he has believed the statement of Chet Ram rather than the statement of Nur Muhammad, and he has discussed the incidents of the fight from that point of view, and consequently he has come to the conclusion that all the appellants are guilty of murder and that Bhagwan Das, who started the fight by striking Chhote Lal on the head, must be hanged. We have been through the whole of the evidence and we have come to the conclusion that the account of the incident which has been given by Nur Muhammad and Rafi Uddin, is much more likely to represent the true course of events. We have already mentioned that Chhote Lal and his party evidently had no idea of avoiding the others and were quite determined to push past them, and it is also certain that as they pushed past them, Chhote Lal made some remark to his driver. As to this, both Nur Muhammad and Chet Ram agree. It is true that the party of Chhote Lal was not so strong in numbers as that of their enemies. They had, however, had the best of matters in the Courts, and they represented the decree-holder's party. They also had authority on their side, in the persons of the Patwari with his papers and the peon of the Court. We think it, therefore, to be far more probable that they adopted or that Chhote Lal adopted the more aggressive tone, which has been described by Nur Muhammad, and there is no reason for supposing that either Nur Muhammad or Rafi Uddin is a prejudiced witness. We regard it as certain that Chhote Lal did direct Kallu to strike the accused or some of the accused, and we have the evidence of two of these witnesses to prove that Kallu Ahir did actually strike the first blow. As to what happened after that, there can we think be little doubt from the account that has been given by all the witnesses for the prosecution. The appellants party were naturally incensed by the abuse and by the blow or blows struck by Kallu, and they surrounded the cart and belaboured Chhote Lal and his friends, with the result that Chhote Lal received a mortal injury and was killed. In these circumstances, we have to consider whether all the appellants have been properly convicted of murder. In our opinion, the offence is not one of murder, but the appellants cannot escape conviction for culpable homicide. Exception No. 1 or Exception No. 4 to s. 300 of the Indian Penal Code might be applied in the circumstances that we have described above, but in our opinion Exception No. 4 is the more suitable. The fight arose, without premeditation on the part of the appellants, and the blows were struck in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel and, so far as we are able to judge, without their having taken undue advantage or acting in a cruel or unusual manner. The case would no doubt have been different if they, being a party in overwhelming strength had themselves taken the aggressive and attacked the party of Chet Ram without giving them a chance to defend themselves. They were themselves provoked, and though it would be difficult to say that they were acting in self-defence when they surrounded the cart, we are very strongly of opinion that they had received grave and sudden provocation and that they acted without premeditation and must receive the benefit either of Exception No. 1 or Exception No. 4. We do not consider it to be proved by whose hand the blow or blows that were fatal to Chhote Lal were struck. We consider that the evidence of Chet Ram, even though it is supported by the first report, is not to be relied on because this is an entirely partial account of the manner in which the quarrel broke out and we have decided that it must be discarded.

Our attentton has been drawn in the course of the arguments to the very irregular proceeding of the Sessions Judge in cross-examining the appellants or some of the appellants with a view to confronting them with the statements which they made to the Investigating Officer. Statements made even by witnesses to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation are not permitted to be used in evidence for any purpose, except as provided in s. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that is to say, on the request of the accused the Court shall refer to the written statement and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy of it in order that the witness may be contradicted by the use of this statement. It was certainly never intended that an accused person when being examined by the Court for the purpose of explaining anything in evidence against him should be confronted with the statement which he had made to the Police for the purpose of being discredited on account of any contradiction. This is, however, the way in which the Court has proceeded, and has come to the conclusion that the appellant Mullu is a liar. But so far as the defence in general is concerned, the only result of this irregularity has been that one of the persons put on trial, Lochan, has been acquitted.

We consider that the evidence proves that all the seven appellants took part in this fight, and that, for the reasons we have given above, they are guilty not of murder, but of culpable homicide. We consider that they must all be held to be responsible for the injuries inflicted on Chhote Lal and the others because when they surrounded the cart, though they acted under provocation, their assembly became an unlawful one as their common object was to inflict a beating on Chhote Lal and the others in the cart. They were not then acting in self-defence, but had passed into the aggressive and every member of their assembly became, under s. 149 of the Indian Penal Code, guilty of the offence that was committed by one or more of them of killing Chhote Lal and of injuring Chet Ram and Ram Chandar.

In the circumstances, we do not consider that a very severe punishment is necessary. Chhote Lal was really very largely to blame for the beating which he had invited, and the offence of beating him has to be distributed over a large number of appellants. Of these Mullu is described as an old man of 70 years, and cannot have taken a leading part in the fight. We, therefore, allow the appeal to this extent, that we set aside the convictions under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and the sentences passed under that section, and substitute therefor orders of conviction against all the appellants under s. 304-149, Indian Penal Code, and we reduce the sentence in the case of each of the appellants, except Mullu, from a sentence of death and sentences of transportation for life respectively to sentences of two years' rigorous imprisonment under this section. The sentence of Mullu under these sections is reduced to one of six months' rigorous imprisonment. The other sentences of imprisonment are concurrent and it is not necessary for us to interfere with them, except in the case of Mullu. His sentences under ss. 325, 323 and 147, Indian Penal Code, are also reduced to six months' rigorous imprisonment, and will be concurrent.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 68—Sale by Official Receiver at public auction—One person making highest bid and depositing one-fourth of price—Subsequent higher offer by another—Registered deed in latter's favour—Deed, if can be cancelled by Insolvency Court—More appropriate proceedings should be taken.

The Insolvency Court cannot summarily set aside a registered sale deed. Where, therefore, the Official Receiver sells a house of the insolvent at public auction and one person R offers the highest bid and deposits one-fourth of the price but subsequently another person G offers a higher price and the Official Receiver under order of the Court executes a registered sale deed in G's favour, it is not open to R to apply to the Insolvency Court for cancellation of the sale deed. The matter in controversy should be settled in more appropriate proceedings, granting leave, if necessary, for a suit against the Receiver and the third person claiming rights under the sale deed.

Messrs. Panna Lal and K. N. Malaviya, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the order passed by the learned District Judge, Aligarh, in the exercise of his jurisdiction as Judge of the Insolvency Court. One Ganga Saran was adjudged insolvent. The Official Receiver proceeded to sell a house belonging to the insolvent. On May 7, 1933, he held a public auction and one Ram Prasad offered the highest bid of Rs. 775. He deposited one-fourth of the price on that day and the three-fourths on May 16, 1933. The Receiver duly acknowledged receipt of these sums. In the meantime on May 12, 1933, Ganeshi made an offer of Rs. 1,025 to the Receiver, who referred the matter to the Court, and the Court directed that the property should be sold to the highest bider. The Receiver sent a notice by registered post to Ram Prasad intimating the fact that Ganeshi had offered Rs 1,025. The letter was returned with the endorsement that the addressee had refused to take it. Thereupon the Receiver executed a sale-deed in favour of Ganeshi and had it registered. This was done under the orders of the Court. It now appears that Ram Prasad, who had offered the highest bid on May 7, 1933, was the agent of the appellant and entered into the transaction of sale on behalf of his master and not himself. The appellant then applied to the District Judge insisting on the sale made to him on May 7, 1933, and in the alternative offering to purchase the property for Rs. 1,800. He prayed that the sale deed in favour of Ganeshi be cancelled. The learned District Judge dismissed this application on the ground that a registered sale-deed having been executed in favour of Ganeshi Lal could not be set aside by him. The present appeal has been preferred from that order.

In my opinion the view taken by the learned District Judge is perfectly correct. The regularity of the Receiver's action in entering into the transaction of sale to Ganeshi after having accepted the purchase money from the appellant and the validity of the order of the Court permitting the Receiver to sell to Ganeshi cannot be considered at this stage. The fact remains that a registered sale deed exists, and that Ganeshi, who has paid the full purchase money, has a vested interest in the house so long as the sale is not set aside. It is open to the appellant to impunge the act of the Receiver and attack the sale deed in favour of Ganeshi in such manner as he may be advised. The learned District Judge, sitting in insolvency proceedings, could not have summarily cancelled the sale deed in favour of Ganeshi.

The learned Advocate for the appellant contended that s. 68 of the Insovency Act allows an appeal to the Court from an order of the Receiver, and that it was open to the Court to "confirm, reverse or modify the act or decision complained of". Even if the Court had power to reverse or modify such acts of the Receiver as have had the effect of vesting rights in third persons which I doubt, I do not think the lower Court should have granted the relief prayed for by the appellant under s. 68. In the circumstances of the case the matter in controversy between the appellant on the one side and the Receiver and Ganeshi on the other cannot be decided except in proceedings admitting of detailed pleadings and evidence. In such a case the Court should leave the controversy to be settled in more appropriate proceedings granting leave, if necessary, for a suit against the Receiver and the third person claiming rights under the sale deed. In the view of the case I have taken, this appeal fails, and is dismissed with costs.

MOHANLAL SAKARCHAND—RESPONDENT

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55—Material defects in property and title thereto—Buyer, if bound to complete the sale—Material defect, what constitutes—Title free from reasonable doubt, meaning of—Restrictive conditions in the nature of easements, if material defect — Vendor, if bound to disclose—Vendor and vendee

A buyer is not bound to complete the sale if there are defects in the property or in the title to the property which are material and also latent, that is to say, not discoverable by the exercise of ordinary care, or if the title is not free from reasonable doubt. A defect to be material must be of such a nature that it might be reasonably supposed that if the buyer had been aware of it he might not have entered into the contract at all, for he would be getting something different from what he contracted to buy. The liability of property to be compulsorily acquired may be fairly said to amount to a material defect which is not capable of being discovered with ordinary care. [p. 566, cols. 1 & 2; p. 567, col. 1.]

The meaning of a title free from reasonable doubt is a marketable title which can at all times be forced upon an unwilling purchaser. Specific performance should not be allowed even though the Court takes a favourable view of the title if it appears that its opinion may fairly and reasonably be questioned by other competent persons. [p. 566, col. 2.]

Restrictive conditions in the nature of easements imposed on the property, are material defects and it is the duty of the vendor to disclose them to the vendee. His failure to do so, would entitle the vendee to refuse to complete the sale [p. 567, col. 2.]

F. C. A. against the decision of the First Class Sub-Judge, Surat, in C. S. No. 365 of 1927.

Messrs. M. B. Dave and P. A. Dhruva, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Carden Noad and U. L. Shah, for the Respondent No. 2.

Broomfield, J.—The first of these appeals is against the decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Surat decreeing the respondent's suit for specific performance of a contract for sale of a house in Gopipoora, Surat. The second appeal is a companion appeal from the decree of the same Subordinate Judge dismissing the appellant's suit for return of the earnest money paid by him in respect of the contract. The agreement of sale took place on February 26, 1927, and is Ex. 28. It contains an averment that the house is of the ownership and possession of the plaintiff. It states that Rs. 500 had been paid by the purchaser as deposit or earnest money and provides that the balance was to be paid on delivery of possession of the house and execution of a conveyance. On April 5, 1927, the plaintiff sent the defendant a notice calling upon him to complete the sale. On April 19, 1927, defendant replied demanding inspection of the title-deeds. Inspection was given in the office of defendant's Pleader. The defendant then wrote a letter, Ex. 10, taking various objections. He pointed out that at the instance of the Municipality, Government had decided to acquire the suit property along with others in the same locality under the Land Acquisition Act, and that a notification to that effect had been published in the Bombay Government Gazette in August, 1912. Next it was stated that plaintiff had purchased the house from one Bai Hirakor in 1925 under a deed, Ex. 25, that under the will of her husband this Bai Hirakor had only a widow's estate and that the will was unsigned and unattested. Thirdly, it was pointed out that there had been litigation between the plaintiff and his neighbour Champaklal in 1925 and a consent decree had been passed imposing restrictive conditions as to the user of the plaintiff's property, that is to say, the decree bound the plaintiff not to build on part of the open land at the back of the house and not to close certain windows in Champaklal's house. As to one of these windows the decree provided that it was not to be closed at all; as to the other it was to remain open until such time as the plaintiff desired to build up to that height. In view of these defects, or alleged defects, in the title, the defendant refused to complete the contract and demanded return of his deposit. To this letter plaintiff replied by Ex. 36 on June 2, 1927, but he did no more than state that the defendant was aware of all the facts. The defendant then rejoined by Ex. 37 denying his knowledge of the facts, and on June 11, 1927, plaintiff filed his suit for specific performance.

On the issues framed by the trial Judge in the main suit the one to which argument has been mainly directed in this appeal is Issue No. 3, which is in this form:

"Whether it is proved that the plaintiff's title to the property agreed to be conveyed was defective so as to entitle the defendant to refuse to complete the contract and accept the conveyance?"

The relevant provisions of the law are ss. 55, Transfer of Property Act, and 25, Specific Relief Act. Section 55 Provides:

"In the absence of a contract to the contrary... ..., (1) The seller is bound—(a) to disclose to the buyer any material defect in the property or in the seller's title thereto [the latter words were added by Act XX of 1929, but the law was the same before the amendment: see Haji Essa Sulleman v. Dayabha Parmanandas (1)] of which the seller is, and the buyer is not aware, and which the buyer could not with ordinary care discover; (b) to produce to the buyer on his request for examination all documents of title relating to the properties which are in the seller's possession or power; (c) to answer to the best of his information all relevant questions put to him by the buyer in respect to the property or the title thereto..."

Clause 2 of the section provides:

"The seller shall be deemed to contract with the buyer that the interest which the seller professes to transfer to the buyer subsists and that he has power to transfer the same."

The concluding words of the section are:

"An omission to make such disclosures as are mentioned in this section, para. (1), cl. (a) .....is fraudulent."

Section 25, Specific Relief Act, provides:

"A contract for the sale or letting of property, whether movable or immovable, cannot be specifically enforced in favour of a vendor or lessor:

(a) who, knowing himself not to have any title to the property, has contracted to sell or let the same;

(b) who, though he enterered into the contract believing that he had a good title to the property, cannot, at the time fixed by the parties or by the

(1) 20 B 522.

Court for the completion of the sale or letting, give the purchaser or lessee a title free from reasonable doubt....."

The effect of these provisions is that a buyer is not bound to complete the sale if there are defects in the property or in the title to the property which are material and also latent, that is to say, not discoverable by the exercise of ordinary care, or if the title is not free from reasonable doubt. Paragraph 2, s. 55 need not be discussed and has not been discussed in the argument. The correct view appears to be that the covenant for title in that paragraph contemplates a completed contract and corresponds to the covenant for title in English conveyances. Prior to completion the buyer's right is to a title free from reasonable doubt: see Mulla's Transfer of Property Act, p. 270. The test of materiality was laid down by Tindall, C. J., in Flight v. Booth (2); it was held there that a defect to be material must be of such a nature that it might be reasonably supposed that if the buyer had been aware of it he might not have entered into the contract at all, for he would be getting something different from what he contracted to buy. The question whether a defect is patent or latent, presents more difficulty because the expression "ordinary care" is somewhat indefinite. A defect which can be seen on inspection is obviously not latent, for instance the ruinous condition of a house, and it may be said generally that a defect should be regarded as capable of discovery with ordinary care if there is anything to put the buyer on inquiry which would disclose the defect, for instance a foot-path across a meadow. In Manji Karimbhai v. Hoorbai (3), Scott, C. J., cited the observations of Lindley, J., in Bailey v. Barnes (4) p. 35*:

".....a purchaser of property is under no legal obligation to investigate his vendor's title. But in dealing with real property, as in other matters of business, regard is had to the usual course of business; and a purchaser who wilfully departs from it in order to avoid acquiring a knowledge of his vendor's title is not allowed to derive any advantage from his wilful ignorance of defects which would have come to his knowledge if he had transacted his business in the ordinary way."

Those words were cited with reference to the meaning of the expression "reasonable care" in s. 41, Transfer of Property Act, but it would appear that they apply equally well to the expression "ordinary care" in the section with which we are dealing. We were also referred to Jones v. Smith (5), in the same connection, and I may mention Harilal Dalsukhram v. Mulchand (6). There Fawcet, J., held that a failure to refer to entries in the Record of Rights, being the neglect of an easy means of investigating questions of title, amounted to a want of care and wilful abstention from an inquiry or search which the party ought to have made and that therefore the purchaser in that case had not carried out his duty under s. 55 (1) (a). As regards defects in title as distinct from defects in the property itself, they are almost always to be regarded as latent because prima facie the seller knows his title and the purchaser does not. On that point various cases are cited in Sir Dinshah Mulla's Transfer of Property Act, p. 264. The meaning of a title free from reasonable doubt was explained in Pyrke v Waddingham (7), as a marketable title which can at all times be forced upon an unwilling purchaser, and it was held in that case that specific performance should not be allowed even though the Court takes a favourable view of the title if it appears that its opinion may fairly and reasonably be questioned by other competent persons.

Applying these principles to the facts of the present case, I am of opinion that the liability of this property to be compulsorily acquired may fairly be said to amount to a material defect. The buyer is entitled to say that he wants a house and not a right to compensation, and the learned trial Judge in dealing with this part of the case has obviously applied the wrong criterion. It has been suggested by learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent that the notification having been made as long ago as 1912 must be regarded as obsolete and that therefore there is no real likelihood of this property being acquired. I do not feel satisfied however that that is so. The learned Counsel referred us to various sections of the Land Acquisition Act, but, as far as I can see, it is nowhere provided that the acquisition must follow within any limited time after the notification. Difficulties might no doubt arise in the event of steps being taken to acquire property after the lapse of many years, because under the Act the property is to be valued as at the date of the notification. Possibly the procedure in such cases may be to publish another notification. As to that we have no evidence. But it seems to me that when once there has been a notification by Government at the instance of the Municipality that certain properties are to be acquired for Municipal purposes, such as the widening of a street, or a town planning scheme, there must always be a likelihood of steps being taken in that direction sooner or later. If this liability to be acquired under the Land Acquisition Act is a material defect, as, in my opinion, it is, there can be no doubt, I think, that it is also one which is not capable of being discovered with ordinary care in the sense of those words as used in s. 55 (1) (a). As far as we are aware there was really nothing at all to put the buyer on inquiry as to that particular matter. In that respect the fact that the notification was in 1912 is obviously in his favour. The view that this should be regarded as both a material and a latent defect is supported by the cases cited by Mr. Dave for the appellant in Nursing Dass v. Chuttoo Lall (8) and Ballard v. Way (9). The Calcutta case was decided under s. 20, Contract Act, because it was found that both parties to the contract were unaware of the fact that the property had been notified for acquisition. But obviously the position of the purchaser could be no worse if he was ignorant of the fact of the notification while the seller was aware of it.

I may at this stage refer to a difficulty which has arisen in this appeal owing to the manner in which the case was tried by the learned Subordinate Judge. As I have mentioned, in the correspondence the plaintiff's case was that the defendant was aware of the alleged defects in the title at the time he entered into the contract of sale. The principal averment in the plaint was the same, and one would have expected that an issue would have been framed therefore to cover the point whether defendant did or did not know of the facts on which his objections are based. He has throughout denied knowledge. But the learned trial Judge apparently understood the pleadings to mean that the plaintiff alleged a specific agreement by the defendant to accept the plaintiff's title such as it was. He framed an issue to cover that point and decided it against the plaintiff, as he was obviouly bound to do. It is not suggested in the argument before us that the plaintiff has succeeded in proving any such agreement, but it has been argued with much force by his learned Counsel that the question, whether the defendant was aware of the facts relating to the plaintiff's title, is most material for the purpose of applying the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. It is unfortunate therefore that the question has been left undecided by the trial Judge. He decided the case on the assumption that the defendant was not aware of the facts, although he admitted that it was only an assumption, and that the plaintiff had all along alleged the contrary. In dealing with this appeal, therefore, we are compelled to act upon the same assumption, though, if the case had depended upon the view we take of the alleged defects in the property as distinct from the defect in the title, we should probably have thought it necessary to have a remand to the trial Court in order that evidence might be taken on this question of knowledge. Although, as I have said, the liability of this property to be acquired under the Land Acquisition Act is, in my opinion, a material defect within the meaning of s. 55 (1) (a) and one which the seller was bound to disclose, it obviously would not be so if the purchaser was already aware of the facts.

I will next deal with the restrictive conditions imposed by the consent decree. These have been held by the learned trial Judge himself to be material defects in the property, and, I think, there can be no doubt that they are. The learned Judge took the view that the defendant might have discovered the existence of these easements if he had exercised ordinary care, but on that point I am not prepared to agree with him. The existence of these restrictive conditions was certainly not discoverable by mere inspection, at any rate so far as the prohibition against building on the chowk is concerned. The view taken by the learned trial Judge is that the defendant should have inspected the property; in that case he would have seen the windows, and he should then have questioned the plaintiff, from whom he would have discovered all the facts. That may be so, no doubt, but the seller's duty to answer requisitions or inquiries is distinct from the duty to disclose, and the omission of the buyer to inquire would not in a case like this absolve the seller if he has not made a full disclosure. In that connection I may refer to Reeve v. Berridge (10). In Dosibai v. Bai Dhanbai (11), a similar restrictive covenant not to build on a portion of the property was held to be a material defect and non-disclosure of it was held to give a right to rescind the contract. As in the case of the first objection, of course, defendant could not rely upon the provisions of the consent decree if he was aware of the decree at the time he entered into the agreement, but if he was not aware of it, then I hold that the plaintiff was bound to disclose the fact relating to this decree, and his failure to do so would entitle the defendant to refuse to complete the contracts.

Coming lastly to the question of the plaintiff's title, he purchased the house from one Bai Hirakor by a sale-deed, Ex. 25, dated June 13, 1925. This lady was in possession of the property under a document, Ex. 23, purporting to be the last will of her husband Panachand. This is a short document and runs as follows :

"On Thursday the Maha Vadi 9th of the s. Year 1953 written by Shah Panachand Tarachand that my wife Bai Hirakor is the owner of my goods and properties, cash and ornaments and the house at Surat, etc., and of all the household furnitures that may be. She is also the owner of the property in Bombay. When none of us two may exist, all the things should be spent in repairs of the old things and for good purposes. This document has been passed in writing with my free will and pleasure. Neither my heirs nor any legal representatives nor anybody else have got any claim over my property. My wife has got all powers. Ujam should be maintained therefrom."

The defendant's objections are, firstly, that the will is not proved, and secondly that Bai Hirakor, on the proper construction of the will, took only a widow's estate. It purports to be a holograph will. The name of Shah Panachand appears at the top. There is no signature nor attestation. That, of course, is not necessary, but in order that the Court could accept the document as a legal will, there would have to be evidence of the handwriting of Panachand and of the fact that it is his last will and testament. It is important to note that Ex. 23 is dated in 1897 and Panachand did not die till 1918. From the appearance of Ex. 23 it might obviousl be a mere draft. The plaintiff has relied in support of it on certain recitals in the sale-deed which Bai Hirakor executed in his favour, Ex. 25. In this sale-deed she referred to the will and said that in his last illness her husband had authorized her to sell the house for her maintenance, if necessary. These recitals however, are not binding upon the defendant: see Shrivadas Bavri v. Meherbai (12). No other evidence has been produced in support of the will. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff says that no evidence was necessary because the defendant had admitted that this was the will of Panachand and had merely objected that the plaintiff's vendor had only a widow's estate and, as to its execution, that the will was not signed nor attested. That is to say, the suggestion is that objection was taken only on the ground of construction and the form of the will, and plaintiff was not put to proof of the fact that this was the last will and testament of Panachand. The reference to the will in the defendant's letter, Ex. 10, dated May 27, 1927, is this—

"Bai Hirakor the vendor of Mr. Chimanlal your client has got a right as a Hindu widow only. It appears so from the will executed by Panachand Tarachand on Maha Vad 9th of s. 1953. Moreover, there are no signature and attestations on the said will."

At the conclusion of the letter it was stated that the plaintiff has no title at all. "Hence my client is not bound to take the property." Mofussil correspondence like mofussil pleadings, is apt to be badly worded, but, in my opinion the defendant's objections really amount to this that the will was not accepted as a valid deed of title without further evidence in support of it. I may note that the plaintiff said nothing about the will in his reply to this letter. I may also refer to the case of Dahyabhai v. Kanaiyalal (13), which points out the necessity for caution in accepting such a document as this as a valid and final testamentary disposition. I cannot accept the view that the defendant has admitted the execution of the will or the fact that it is the last will of Panachand, and it is clear in my opinion that there is no legal evidence of those facts. As to the effect of the will there is some force in Mr. Dave's argument that the provisions as to the disposal of the property after the death of the widow and as to the continuance of the ujam ceremony are in consistent with the absolute right of the widow.

In view of the authorities cited by learned Counsel for the plaintiff, Raghunath Prasad v. Deputy Commissioner, Partabgarh (14), and Saraju Bala Debi v. Jyotirmoyee Debi (15), it may no doubt appear probable that on the construction of this will the proper view to take would be that it gives an absolute estate and that the provisions fettering and cutting down that estate should be held repugnant and void. But a claim by the agnates of Panachand on the death of the widow is by no means improbable and though as I say, it may seem doubtful whether such a claim would be likely to succeed, I think it would be rather difficult to say that there is any certainty about it. So that even if the proof of the will had been beyond question, I should hesitate to say that the title is one which the purchaser should be forced to accept having regard to the propositions laid down in Pyrke v. Waddingham (7). It may be mentioned in that connection that the learned trial Judge refused to allow interest to the plaintiff on the ground that this will, Ex. 23 and that, therefore, there was some justification for the defendant hesitating before accepting plaintiff's title. In view of the two-fold objection, the deficiency of proof and the possibility of a reasonable dispute as to construction, I am of opinion that it must be held that the plaintiff has not made out his title beyond reasonable doubt. Mr. Carden Noad points out, that on the question, whether a title free from reasonable doubt has been made out the burden of proof is on the defendant and he refers to Low & Co., Ltd. v. Jyoti Prosad Singh Deo (16). Taking the burden of proof to be so the defendant has succeeded in showing facts from which I think, the only reasonable conclusion is as I have stated.

If any one of the three grounds of objection alleged by the defendant is substantiated, he would be entitled to repudiate this transaction. Had it been necessary to decide the case on the point as to the land acquisition notification or the point as to easements, I should not myself have been prepared to dispose of it without a remand to the lower Court for further evidence. But that is quite unnecessary on the question as to title. The defendant-appellant having succeeded on that point is entitled to succeed in these appeals. The result is that both appeals must be allowed. The plaintiff's suit for specific performance must be dismissed with costs. The appellant's suit for return of the deposit will be allowed with costs and interest at six per cent. until date of payment, and the appellant will be allowed his costs in this Court.

A suit brought by one member of a family against a transferee from the manager raises a question as to the authority of the manager, and in that sense, involves a dispute as to the respective rights of the members of the family inter se. The nature of such a suit is obviously distinguishable from that of a suit brought against a person, who is an entire stranger to the family, who does not claim title through any member of the family and who is setting up his adverse possession as a paramount title. In such cases the manager of the joint Hindu family represents the family as one unit and if time has run out against the manager, limitation is not saved merely because there are some minor members still living. The provisions of s. 7, Limitation Act, do not apply to such a suit. Sheonandan Prasad v. Tahiran Bibi (1) and Jawahir Singh v. Udai Parkash

Where the plaintiffs file a suit on the allegation that a certain grove was in the possession of the defendants, and choose the Civil Court as the forum, it must be assumed against them that they treated the property as if it was not land within the meaning of the Agra Tenancy Act. A plea that the grove was a tenant's grove and the suit was not cognizable in the Civil Court cannot be entertained for the first time in a Letters Patent Appeal.

Where a custom is recorded in the wajib-ul-arz under which a tenant's grove can be sold with the permission of the zemindars, and the zamindars constitute a joint Hindu family, the consent of the managing member or karta will be enough to validate the transfer.

L. P. A. against the decision of Mr. Justice Kendall, dated November 28, 1933, under s. 10 of Letters Patent in Second Appeal No. 1703 of 1930.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellants.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal under the Letters Patent from the judgment of a learned single Judge of this Court affirming the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiffs brought a suit in the Civil Court in respect of a grove in the possession of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who also are zemindars, on the allegation that they purchased it from a tenant on January 12, 1917, who had no right to sell the grove, without the permission of the zemindars. At the time of the sale-deed, the plaintiffs' father was alive, and although he survived till 1925, he did not bring any suit against the defendants. The present suit was filed on April 18, 1919, just over 12 years after the date of the sale. The plaintiff No. 1, the eldest brother is an adult, but the other brother is a minor. The defendants pleaded adverse possession over the grove and the finding on the question of adverse possession is against the plaintiffs. Their contention, however, is that the claim of the plaintiffs is not barred by time, because the suit is brought within 3 years of their attaining their majority.

No doubt under s. 6 of the Limitation Act where a person entitled to institute a suit is a minor at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, he is allowed to institute the suit within the same period after his disability has ceased, but under s. 8, that period cannot exceed 3 years. There is, however, s 7, of the Limitation Act, under which where one of several persons jointly entitled to institute a suit is under any such disability but a discharge can be given without his concurrence, time will begin to run against them all. The question for consideration in this case is whether when time begins to run against the father and the manager of the joint Hindu family in favour of a stranger to the family, limitation is still saved if some of the other members are minors.

The learned Advocate for the appellants relies on the case of Sheonandan Prasad v. Tahiran Bibi (1), which followed the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jawahir Singh v. Udai Parkash (2). But that was a case where a suit was brought by a younger brother for setting aside an alienation made by his father when another elder brother was alive and had not brought the suit. It was held that the claim of the younger brother was a distinct claim and was not barred on account of the omission of the other brother, who would not be entitled to give a valid discharge. It is to be noted that a suit brought by one member of a family against a transferee from the manager raises a question as to the authority of the manager, and in that sense, involves a dispute as to the respective rights of the members of the family inter se. The nature of such a suit is obviously distinguishable from that of a suit brought against a person, who is an entire stranger to the family, who does not claim title through any member of the family and who is setting up his adverse possession as a paramount title. In such cases the manager of the joint Hindu family represents the family as one unit and if time has run out against the manager, limitation is not saved merely because there are some minor members still living. There is plenty of authority of this Court in support of the proposition that limitation is not saved when the dispute is between the joint Hindu family as one unit on the one hand and a stranger on the other. In the case of Baij Nath v. Ram Bilas (3), a Division Bench of this Court held that if a suit is brought by a younger brother against a trespasser, then the claim is barred by time if limitation has run out against the elder brother, who is the managar and karta of the family. Lala Shiam Lal v. Mool Chand, 87 Ind. Cas. 177 (4), another Bench of this Court also held that where several Hindu brothers constitute a joint Hindu family, the eldest brother represents the entire family and can give a valid discharge on behalf of his minor brothers to judgment-debtors against whom there is decree in favour of the family. In the case of Radha Kant Shukul v. Butai Misir, 94 Ind. Cas. 922 (5), yet another Division Bench came to the conclusion that the manager of joint Hindu family being a member of a joint Hindu family can give a valid discharge on his own behalf and on that of a minor brother, and although a mortgage decree is obtained in their favour jointly, limitation is not saved if the younger brother remains a minor. All these were cases of dispute arising between the family as a whole on the one side and a stranger on the other, and it was held that s. 7 was applicable and the manager and the karta of the family represented the whole family so far as the outside world was concerned. We may also quote the case of Rati Ram v. Nadar (6), as well as the Full Bench case of Hori Lal v. Munman Kunwar (7). When the manager and the karta of the family is alive, minor members of the family are not entitled to bring a suit ignoring him, unless it were established that there is any collusion or fraud on the part of the manager. Time, therefore, would begin to run not only against the manager in his personal capacity but also as against the family. We are, therefore, of opinion that the learned Judge was right in holding that the present plaintiffs as junior members were not entitled to institute a suit on behalf of the joint family in 1917 when the transfer took place while their father was alive, and that, therefore, limitation began to run not only against the father but also against the family from that date, and is not now saved simply because a minor member has attained majority within 3 years of the present suit.

There is an additional reason which could also be invoked against the appellants. They rely on a custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz under which a tenant's grove can be sold with the permission of the zemindars. It could not possibly have been intended that such a consent cannot be obtained if there is any minor member living among the families of the numerous zemindars in the village. Obviously the consent of the managing member or the karta would be enough, otherwise it would be practically impossible to sanction a transfer.

The last point urged on behalf of the plaintiffs is that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court and their plaint should be returned to them for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiffs came to Court on the allegation that this was a grove in the possession of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who were the zemindars. There was no suggestion in the plaint that at the present moment the grove retains the character of a tenant's grove and is not a zemindar's grove. The defendants were pleading adverse possession over this property. Without going into the question of fact, it would be impossible to say that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court. As the plaintiffs chose the forum, it must be assumed against them that they treated the property as if it was not a land within the meaning of the Agra Tenancy Act. We, therefore, see no reason to entertain this plea for the first time in the Letters Patent Appeal, particularly, as it was not urged before the learned Judge who heard the appeal.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

On the principles underlying the plea of res judicata which aims at avoiding multiplicity of litigation and at securing finality, if two conflicting decrees have been obtained by parties from two different Courts or even from the same Court then the last one should be the effective decree between the parties and the first decree should be regarded as dead. The basis of this salutary rule is that if a party who could raise the plea of res judicata does not raise the same when an opportunity is given to him he must be deemed to have waived it.

The plea of res judicata is not one which affects the jurisdiction of a Court. It is a plea in bar and such a plea can be waived

Where the cause of action of and the issues in, a suit by A against B in a Court at C are different from those in a subsequent suit by B against A in a Court at S, it is not possible for A to plead before the Court at S that the decree of the Court at C was res judicata. In such circumstances there are no two conflicting decisions and it is not possible for B to argue that the decree of the Court at C is incapable of execution.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal and the facts which have given rise to this appeal may be stated. The Firm of Sansarchand Lachhman Das has two branches, one at Saharanpur and the other at Hoshiarpur. On January 10, 1927, Dina Nath sued the Saharanpur firm in the Calcutta High Court for recovery of a sum of Rs. 4,301. This suit was numbered as 72 of 1927. The record of the Calcutta case was before the Court below but in spite of attempts made by parties the record could not come to this Court. The plaintiff, however, has filed the plaint of the suit and a perusal of the same shows that Dina Nath's claim was formulated in the following way. He alleged that between May 2, 1926, and October 11, 1926, he supplied goods of the value of Rs. 10,502-11-0 to Sansarchand Lachhman Das and again between August 14, 1926, and October 11, 1926, the defendant took delivery of four wagons of soft molasses of the value of Rs. 3,824-13-9 although the defendant had agreed to take delivery of twenty-three wagons. The total price for the goods actually taken delivery of by Sansarchand Lachhmandas thus came to Rs. 14,327-8-9. To this was added a sum of Rs. 273-7-3 by way of interest. It was then alleged that because of the fact that the defendant did not take delivery of nineteen wagons of soft molasses although he had agreed to that effect, Dina Nath suffered a loss of Rs. 1,200. Thus the claim was for the recovery of Rs. 4,301. On February 27, 1927, this suit was shelved by the Calcutta High Court and the exact reasons for this procedure are not quite apparent. It appears, however, from certain statements made by Counsel before me that Dina Nath, because of certain representations made by a relation of Sansarchand, thought that this matter as well as a certain other matter had been compromised and some payments under the compromise had been made. Dina Nath, therefore, on January 15, 1930, filed a suit in the Small Cause Court at Calcutta for Rs. 395-2-3 which according to him was the balance due to him under the compromise in respect of the two matters. Sansarchand Lachhmandas on February 15, 1930, denied that there was any compromise or that the compromise was effected by an authorised person and indeed they alleged that there was an over-payment made by them. Upon this Dina Nath withdrew his suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit on April 10, 1930.

On March 5, 1930, Sansarchand Lachhmandas filed suit No. 729 of 1930 in the Court of Small Causes at Saharanpur against Dina Nath for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 196-10-0. This claim was formulated in the following manner. It was alleged by them that they purchased goods of the value of Rs. 14,303-6-0 and not of Rs. 14,327-8-9 as alleged by Dina Nath and that they made payments to the extent of Rs. 14,500. This sum of Rs. 14,500 is composed of the sum of Rs. 11,500 admitted by Dina Nath in his suit No. 72 of 1927 and Rs. 3,000 said to have been paid later on after the institution of the suit. Sansarchand's case, therefore, was that he made an over-payment of Rs. 196-10-0. This suit was decreed ex parte by the Small Cause Court Judge at Saharanpur on June 12, 1930, and the decree has been satisfied.

Dina Nath then took some proceedings in the Calcutta High Court for the revival of his suit No. 72 of 1927. What exactly these proceedings were is not quite known but it appears from the decree of the Calcutta High Court filed on the record of this suit that Dina Nath's claim was decreed for Rs. 1,001 with interest and costs. It is obvious how this sum was arrived at. Dina Nath's claim was originally for Rs. 4,301. Dina Nath admitted that subsequent to the institution of the suit a sum of Rs. 3,300 was paid by Sansarchand Lachhmandas and, therefore, his claim for Rs. 1,001 was still outstanding and his suit was decreed ex parte for this amount.

It would thus appear that so far as suit No. 72 of 1927 of the Calcutta High Court is concerned, the claim includes a claim for Rs. 1,200 as damages in respect of nineteen wagons and that credit was given for a sum not only of Rs. 3,000 but of another extra sum of Rs. 300. So far as Sansarchand Lachhmandas's suit at Saharanpur is concerned, it is also clear that it did not in any way embrace any question relating to nineteen wagons nor did it in any way admit the payment of Rs. 300 by himself; indeed his case as stated by his Counsel before me was that this sum of Rs. 300 was paid towards the liability of the Hoshiarpur branch. It would, therefore, appear that in suit No. 72 of 1927 a claim for damages in connection with nineteen wagons was included and a payment of Rs. 300 was also given credit and neither of these two transactions formed part of suit No. 729 of 1930 in the Court of Small Causes at Saharanpur.

It may also be mentioned that Sansarchand Lachhmandas was fully aware of the Calcutta suit as well as the revival proceedings that took place on or about May 1, 1930. In the same way Dina Nath was aware of the suit filed against him at Saharanpur.

Dina Nath got his decree in suit No. 72 of 1927 transferred from the Calcutta High Court to the Saharanpur Court and prayed for the realisation of Rs. 1,570-9-0 which is composed of the principal sum of Rs. 1,001 and interest and costs.

Sansarchand Lachhmandas then brought the present suit No. 466 of 1931 in the Court of the City Munsif of Saharanpur praying that the defendant Dina Nath may be ordered not to take out execution of his decree in Suit No. 72 of 1927 by the Calcutta High Court. The trial Court held that this was in the nature of an objection to the execution taken out by Dina Nath and, therefore, the suit was converted into proceedings under s. 47, Civil Procedure Code. It is said before me by parties that this procedure was a correct procedure. Courts below have come to the conclusion that there is no bar to the execution taken by Dina Nath and that the plaintiff Sansarchand Lachhmandas is not entitled to say that Dina Nath should be restrained from executing his decree.

The contention of Sansarchand Lachhmandas is that by reason of the decree which he obtained in suit No. 729 of 1930, Dina Nath's decree in suit No. 72 of 1927 has become ineffectual. It is contended that there are two conflicting decrees and therefore, the last of such decrees should prevail. There is no doubt that the decree at Saharanpur in Sansarchands' suit was passed after the decree of the Calcutta High Court and the question which I have got to decide is whether the two decrees are conflicting or whether they relate to two different matters. It is not correct to say that the plea taken by Sansarchand is a plea of res judicata strictly speaking. His contention must be deemed to amount to this, that on the principles underlying the plea of res judicata which aims at avoiding multiplicity of litigation and at securing finality, if two conflicting decrees have been obtained by parties from two different Courts or even from the same Court then the last one should be the effective decree between the parties and the first decree should be regarded as dead. The basis of this salutary rule is that if a party who could raise the plea of res jvdicata does not raise the same when an opportunity is given to him he must be deemed to have waived it. The plea of res judicata is not one which affects the jurisdiction of a Court. It is a plea in bar and such a plea can be waived. When Sansarchand filed his suit in Saharanpur it is said that it was open to Dina Nath to plead that the suit was barred by res judicata because of the decree that Dina Nath had obtained in the Calcutta High Court. I have, therefore, got to decide whether Dina Nath could with success have advanced the plea of res judicata. In an earlier portion of my judgment I have taken some pains to describe at length the claim which was made by Dina Nath in the Calcutta suit and the claim that was made by Sansarchand before the Small Cause Court at Saharanpur, and I have come to the conclusion that the Calcutta suit comprised a claim for damages which was not in issue in the Saharanpur Court. The Calcutta suit, further, took into consideration a payment of Rs. 300 which was not dealt with in the Saharanpur suit and as such the cause of action and the issues in the Calcatta suit were different from the cause of action and the issues in the Saharanpur suit and it was not possible for Dina Nath to have pleaded before the Saharanpur Court that the decree of the Calcutta High Court was res judicata. In this view there are no two conflicting decisions and it is not possible for Sansarchand Lachhmandas to argue that the Calcutta decree is incapable of execution.

For the reasons given above, I think the view taken by the Courts below is correct and I dismiss this appeal with costs. The injunction that has been issued at the instance of the appellant will be discharged. Leave to file an appeal by way of Letters Patent is allowed.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Execution of promissory note by member—Decree against that member alone—Decree cannot be executed against shares of other members in joint family property—Binding nature of debt cannot be gone into in execution.

Where a person in whose favour a member of a joint Hindu family has executed a promissory note, obtains a decree on the note against the executant alone without impleading the other members of the family as parties to the suit, he cannot execute the decree by attaching the shares of the other members of the family. The question of the binding character of the debt as against the other members of the family at any rate if they are not sons or descendants of the judgment-debtor cannot be gone into in execution proceedings Viraraghavamma v. Samudrala (1), followed. Krishna Iyer v. Krishnasami Iyer (4), referred to.

C. A. against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, dated April 18, 1929, in Original Suit No. 162 of 1926.

Messrs. K. V. Krishnaswamy Ayyar, A. C. Sampath Ayyanger, and T. R. Srinivasa Ayyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswamy Iyer and K. V. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondents.

Varadachariar, J.—The appellant obtained a decree against the second defendant, in O. S. No. 71 of 1925 on a promissory note executed by the second defendant. In execution of that decree he attached certain properties which formed the joint family properties of the plaintiff and the second defendant, the plaintiff being the second defendant's minor younger brother. The plaintiff intervened with a claim petition and contended that his share of the joint family properties should not be attached in execution. As that petition was dismissed, he has filed the present suit for a declaration under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code.

The plaintiff rested his case on several grounds. One contention of his was that he and the second defendant were divided in status and that the second defendant could not have represented him at all. Another contention was that the promissory note was not executed for any purposes binding upon him and, therefore, his share could not be proceeded against. He also relied on the fact that he was not a party to O. S. No. 71 of 1925.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held against the first two contentions of the plaintiff and he has found that the promissory note was executed for debts binding upon the plaintiff except to a small extent. He has also found that the plaintiff and the second defendant were undivided and that the second defendant was the manager. He has, however, decided in plaintiff's favour on the ground that as the decree in O. S. No. 71 of 1925 was only against the second defendant on a personal claim, the plaintiff's share in the properties of the joint Hindu family are not liable to be attached in execution. In support of this view he has relied on the decisions in Viraraghavamma v. Samudrala (1), and Mela Mal v. Gori (2). The passage cited from Mayne's Hindu Law (page 487) and from the judgment in Subramaniam Chettiar v. Sivaswami Chettiar (3), are also to a certain extent in favour of the view taken by him.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer on behalf of the appellant contents that the case in Viraraghavamma v. Samudrala (1), was not correctly decided and at any rate ought not to be followed at the present day. We are unable to agree that anything has happened since that case was decided which affects the correctness of that decision. Prior to the Code of 1908, it had generally been held in this Court that the question of the binding character of a debt upon persons not impleaded in the original suit was not a proper subject for investigation in the execution proceedings. That Rule has to a certain extent been modified by s. 53 of the Code of 1908, but the present case does not fall under that provision. Where a suit is instituted on a promissory note it is prima facie a personal claim; and but for the decision of this Court in Krishna

Iyer v. Krishnasami Iyer (4), (which has been generally followed in this Court) it is open to question whether the liability of other members of the family could have been adjudicated on at all in a suit on the promissory note. However, in view of that line of cases it was open to the creditor to implead the present plaintiff also, in O. S. No. 71 of 1925. Not having done so, he cannot ask the Court to presume that the suit against the second defendant was instituted in a representative capacity. Even apart from this question of the capacity in which the second defendant was sued, the reasons given in the case in Viraraghavamma v. Samudrala (1), justify the view that the question of the binding character of the debt as against other members of the joint family at any rate if they are not sons or descendants of the judgment-debtor could not be gone into in execution proceedings. It is, therefore, not proper that a decree like that in O. S. No. 71 of 1925 should be executed by attaching the interest of the plaintiff in the properties of the joint family. On this short ground the plaintiff must succeed. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. Where a suit instituted on behalf of a minor is dismissed for default owing to the non-appearance of the guardian on the date of hearing and the minor applies for the restoration of the suit to the file, the suit should be restored, whether the guardian had sufficient reasons for non-appearance or not. Donthi Venkataratnam v. Nagappa (1), Kesho Prasad v. Hirday Narain (2) and Kathaswamy Chettiar v. Ramachandran (3), referred to.

If a suit dismissed for default is restored, the Court should, in view of the provisions of O. IX, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, appoint a day for proceeding with the suit. It is illegal for the Court to proceed with the suit on the same day on which the suit is restored.

Where the Court restored a small cause suit which had been dismissed for default and on the same day passed an ex parte decree against the defendants and the latter applied to the High Court to revise the decree:

Mr. Kasturi Seshagiri Rao, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. G. Lakshmanna and G. Chandrasekara Sastri, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff who was a minor brought a suit on a pro-note S. C. S. No. 284 of 1932, on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Amalapuram which was first dismissed for default. On this a petition was put in to set aside the dismissal order and restore the suit to file and the Court passed the following order:

"First defendant affixed again, service sufficient against first defendant; absent and ex parte Second defendant also called, absent. Petition allowed."

This order is the subject of Civil Revision Petition No. 1736 of 1933. It is argued that the Court should have stated the reasons why it held that the plaintiff had sufficient reasons for his absence at the date of the hearing. I am not inclined to interfere in this revision petition because the plaintiff being represented by his guardian it would appear that whether the latter had sufficient reasons for non-appearance or not the suit had to be restored to file: Vide, Donthi Venkataratnam v. Nagappa (1) following Kesho Prasad v Hirday Narain (2) and Kathaswamy Chettiar v. Ramachandran (3). The Civil Revision Petition is dismissed with costs.

nate Judge proceeded to try it and as the defendants were ex parte and as the plea was want of consideration gave an ex parte decree to the plaintiff. This forms the subject-matter of Civil Revision Petition No. 1644 of 1934. It is quite clear that the learned Subordinate Judge failed to observe the provisions of O. IX, r. 13, which lays down that the Court "shall make an order setting aside the decree as against him upon such terms as to costs, payment into Court or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit." Hence it was clearly illegal for the Court to proceed with the suit on the same day on which it restored the suit to file. The injustice to the defendants was obvious. They might not have been prepared to contest the petition for restoration to file, and in fact on the law stated above useless for them to do so, but they might have reasons to contest the suit itself. It is, however, argued for the respondent that the petition is not maintainable because the correct procedure is that laid down in s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and it is contended that the petitioner should have applied to set aside the ex parte decree and at the same time have deposited in Court the amount due under the decree or have given security. This argument overlooks the fact that the only grounds on which the 1st defendant (Petitioner) could have asked the lower Court to have the ex parte decree set aside are those set out under O. IX, r. 13, i.e., that he was not served with notice or was for some sufficient cause unable to attend Court on the day of hearing. The ground which he takes here is that the Court's decree itself is illegal because the Court had no right to dispose of the suit on that day. This is a small cause suit in which there was no appeal against the decree and there is no provision by which the Court can be asked to set aside its own ex parte decree on the ground that it is illegal. Order XLVII, will not apply as there is no error apparent on the face of the judgment or decree. Consequently the only remedy is by way of revision. Sir Dinsha Mulla states under O. IX, r. 13 as follows.—

"A defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed is at liberty to apply to set aside the decree under this rule, or to appeal from the decree, or to apply for review of the judgment. He is entitled to apply under this rule to set aside the decree and at the same time to appeal from the decree. Further, he is entitled to appeal from the decree without a previous application to set aside the decree under this rule. Similarly he is entitled to apply for review without previously applying under this rule. If he applies under this rule, and his application is rejected, he is entitled under O. XLIII, r. 1, to appeal from the order rejecting the application."

The case quoted by him is Raj Narain Purkait v. Ananga Mohan Bhandari (4). I do not see how it can be contended that when the petitioner has no other remedy, except by way of revision to the High Court if he is to put forward his strongest ground for having the decree set aside, there can be any objection to interference in revision. This Civil Revision Petition No. 1644 of 1933 is therefore allowed with costs. The decree of the lower Court is set aside and the suit remanded for disposal according to law.

Mortgage—Suit for redemption—Proof that mortgage is subsisting Onus—Acknowledgment by mortgagee—Admission by him at sale of his rights, whether amounts to acknowledgment—Limitation Act, (IX of 1908), s. 19.

In a redemption suit the onus lies on the mortgagor to show that at the time of the suit his mortagage was still subsisting, and if he relies on any acknowledgment for the purposes of saving limitation. it is for him to prove that that acknowledgment was made when the limitation was still alive. The mere making of an acknowledgment does not and cannot imply that it was being made within time nor does the mere fact of a mortgagee having claimed the status of a mortgagee and not that of an owner at the time of the sale of his rights, estop his assignee from demanding proof from the mortgagor at the time he seeks redemption that the mortgage was subsisting at the time the mortgagee described himself as a mere mortgagee. Anup Singh v. Fateh Chand (1), referred to.

Malak Mohammad Amin, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. C. Soni, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from the judgment of Dalip Singh, J., dated November 16, 1933*.

The sole point for determination in this case is, whether the learned Judge was right in holding that in a redemption suit the onus lay on the mortgagor to show that at the time of the suit his mortgage was still subsisting, and if he relied on any acknowledgment for the purposes of saving limitation it was for him to prove that that acknowledgment was made when the limitation was still alive.

After giving due weight to the arguments addressed to us by the Counsel for the appellants, we consider that the view of the law expressed by the learned Judge is correct. It is no doubt true that in some judgments of the Allahabad High Court it has been laid down that an acknowledgment by the mortgagee, e. g. in the shape of a sale by him of his mortgagee rights, is tantamount to an admission that the original mortgage was subsisting at the time of the sale. But, in the first place a Full Bench judgment of the same Court reported as Anup Singh v. Fateh Chand (1), is opposed to that view, and, secondly, as remarked by Dalip Singh, J., such an inference is not justified by law. The mere making of an acknowledgment does not and cannot imply that it was being made within time nor does the mere fact of a mortgagee having claimed the status of a mortgagee and not that of an owner at the time of the sale of his rights, estop his assignee from demanding proof from the mortgagor at the time he seeks redemption that the mortgage was subsisting at the time the mortgagee described himself as a mere mortgagee. A man may at one time be ignorant of the date of the mortgage and may labour under a wrong impression that it was still subsisting but if it turns out later that it was acutally not subsisting at that time he cannot be estopped from taking advantage of that position and putting the mortgagor to the proof of his rights. The very opening words of s. 19 of the Limitation Act indicate that an acknowledgment to be valid must relate to the time when the right was still enforceable. We, therefore, uphold the judgment of the learned Judge and dismiss this appeal. In the peculiar circumstances of the case, however, we leave the parties to bear their own costs before us.

Letters Patent (Patna), cl. 33—Jurisdiction exercised by High Court in reference for confirmation—Nature of—Petitioners having no right of appeal under cl. 33 or Privy Council Act—Whether can proceed direct to Privy Council for royal prerogative—Leave or certificate of High Court, if necessary—Cl. 33, strict construction—Necessity of.

The wording of cl. 33, Letters Patent (Patna) is very precise and must be strictly construed.

The jurisdiction exercised by the High Court in a reference for confirmation of death sentence is of an appellate character and can in no sense be said to be of an original nature.

Where, therefore, there is no right of appeal granted by the Letters Patent or under the Privy Council Act, those who desire to appeal must have recourse to the prerogative and approach His Majesty in Council direct for leave to present their case. In such cases, that is to say, where an appeal is presented for the exercise of the royal prerogative, either leave or a certificate from the tribunal which passed the appellate decision is not required as a preliminary step. They can proceed direct, without an intermediate application to the High Court, to His Majesty in Council and there obtain leave to present their case. Rashbehari Lal v. Emperor (2), referred to.

P. C. A. for leave to appeal to His Majesty, in Privy Council, from the decision dated October 10, 1934.

Mr. M. N. Pal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Syed Jaffar Imam, for the Crown.

Courtney Terrell, C. J.—These are two applications made on behalf of five persons who have been sentenced to death in respect of a murder. Four of the applicants were convicted by the Sessions Judge on the verdict of the jury and were sentenced by him to death. The matter of their conviction and sentence came before this Court by way of the usual reference and by way of appeal. In the case of the fifth, the jury by a majority acquitted the accused man. The Judge, however, disagreed with the verdict and referred the case to the High Court. The High Court in his case accepted the reference convicted that individual of complicity in the murder and sentenced him to death.

The present applications are for the grant of a certificate by this Court that the case is a fit and proper one for consideration by His Majesty in Council by way of appeal. Now, it is clear that His Majesty in Council under the royal prerogative has the right to entertain appeals from Criminal Judgments in any part of His Majesty's dominions and it is the right of the subject who is aggrieved by such conviction and sentence to approach His Majesty in Council with a view to his case being heard. It is, however, a very different question whether this Court has, in the circumstances of a Criminal Appellate decision, the right or power to certify that the matter is fit to be heard by His Majesty in Council. The matter of appeals to His Majesty in Council from decisions of this Court is limited by the Letters Patent under which our jurisdiction is exercised. Clause 31, Letters Patent, refers to civil appeals only; the matter of criminal appeals is dealt with by cl. 33 and the wording of that clause is very precise and must be strictly construed. In the first place there is granted an appeal from any judgment, order or sentence of the High Court of Judicature at Patna "made in the exercise of original Criminal Jurisdiction."

Now, the cases of these petitioners do not come under the exercise of original Criminal Jurisdiction. In the case of the four persons who were convicted by the jury and sentenced to death by the Judge, it is manifest that, notwithstanding the necessary reference to the High Court for confirmation of the sentence, the jurisdiction exercised by the High Court was of an appellate character and can in no sense be said to be of an original nature. It is urged, however, that in the case of the person who was acquitted by the jury and whose case was referred to the High Court by the Judge, the High Court in sentencing him to death exercised original Jurisdiction. This argument is hardly worthy of serious attention. The accused person is not in the circumstances brought before the Court nor are the witnesses heard by the Court and moreover, it is incumbent upon the Court in exercising its jurisdiction in such cases to pay weight to the verdict of the jury and to the opinion of the Judge as well as to the evidence which was recorded in the lower Court. In paying attention to these matters, it is obvious that this Court has not exercised original Criminal Jurisdiction, but is exercising jurisdiction by way of appeal. Similarly it might have been argued, if there had been any weight in such argument, that in the case of a person who has been acquitted by the jury, but whose case is brought on appeal by the Government before the Court, that the Court in convicting such a person and passing sentence was exercising original Criminal Jurisdiction. It is clear that in neither case has the original Criminal Jurisdiction been exercised; in both cases the jurisdiction is of an appellate character. The second class of cases in which leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is granted by cl. 33, Letters Patent, is when a point or points of law have been reserved for the opinion of the said High Court in the manner provided by the 18th clause of the Letters Patent. It could not be argued that this case came under that class.

Now, a precisely similar clause was construed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Barendra Kumar Ghosh v. Emperor (1), and the passage in question is at p. 57* where the decision is given by Lord Sumner. In that case their Lordships were considering cl. 41, Letters Patent of 1865 of the Calcutta High Court, and, in construing that decision, they pointed out that under the section which corresponds as I have said to cl. 33, Letters Patent, an appeal is limited and the right must be strictly construed and is given in the two cases to which I have made reference and beyond those cases any appeal is incompetent. It follows, therefore, that there being no right of appeal granted by the Letters Patent and certainly no right of appeal under the Privy Council Act, the petitioners, who desire to appeal, must have recourse to the prerogative and approach His Majesty in Council direct for leave to present their case. We know of no case before the High Court in India in which their Lordships have directed that in such a case, that is to say, where an appeal is presented for the exercise of the royal prerogative either leave or a certificate from the tribunal which passed the appellate decision has been required as a preliminary step. In such a case and in one recent case in particular from this High Court I refer to the

It is not possible to lay down any general method of valuation in calculating the amount of compensation to be paid in a land acquisition case under the U. P. Town Improvement Act as it is necessary to take the circumstances of each property into consideration in determining the suitable basis of compensation. Where the property is a bazar and the income of the property by its nature is of a fluctuating character, it is necessary to employ a costly staff for making realisations from day to day from the various stall keepers in the bazar, considerable vigilance is required on the part of the collection staff to prevent evasion of payments and close supervision is also necessary in order to prevent embezzlements by the staff entrusted with the realisation of these dues In such circumstances taking into consideration the use to which the land was put at the time of the acquisition, it is difficult to think that any buyer would have been prepared to purchase the property on the basis of the gross collections without making any allowance for the expenditure necessary for making collections. It will, in such case, be most unfair in calculating the compensation on the basis of gross collections. Birjrani v. Deputy Commissioner, Sitapur (1) and Ali Akbar v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (2), referred to.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against the award of a Tribunal constituted under s. 59 of the Town Improvement Act (U. P. Act VIII of 1919).

The appellant Nawab Roshan Jahan Bagum and one Nawab Iqbal Jahan Begum owned an area of land lying on two sides of Canning Street and known as Rakabganj Bazar. On April 16, 1921 a notification was published in the U. P. Government Gazette in respect of a scheme regarding the aforesaid land framed by the Lucknow Improvement Trust under s. 36 of the Town Improvement Act, but actual proceedings for acquisition of the property were not taken until about six years later. Notices under s. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act were served on the owners on November 11, 1927 and after trying the objections and claims made before him, the Land Acquisition Officer on March 29, 1928 made an award declaring Nawab Roshan Jahan Begum and Nawab Iqbal Jahan Begum entitled to Rs. 16,142 as compensation for the property under acquisition. The two ladies objected to the amount of the award and the Collector made a reference under s. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act to the District Judge. The reference was heard by the Tribunal constituted under the Town Improvement Act.

It is common ground between the parties that for about the last thirty years, the bazar in dispute has been leased out to contractors. The last lease in force at the time of the proceedings for acquisition was given to three persons, Manni Lal, Thakur Din and Anant Ram in 1920 and the rent reserved in it was Rs. 1,850 per annum. The Land Acquisition Officer had taken the rent reserved under the lease as the basis of the compensation awarded by him but had reduced its amount on the ground of the theka being a collusive transaction. As the entire land included in the theka did not form the subject of acquisition, he had also made a further reduction in the proportion which the non-acquired area bore to the acquired one. He had thus fixed Rs. 1,153 as the annual income of the acquired property and awarded compensation at fourteen times of this amount. The majority of the Tribunal did not agree with the opinion of the Land Acquisition Officer. They held that the theka money alone should not be the basis of determining the actual value of the land. On the other hand they were of opinion that compensation at the rate of 16 2/3 times of the profits should be calculated on the aggregate net yield of the property worked out on the basis of the actual collections made by thekedar. They also made reference to the award of an arbitrator which had been made a rule of Court in a dispute which existed between the three thekedars by which it was settled that each of the three thekedars shall manage the theka in rotation for one year and that the managing thekedar shall pay the lessors the rent for the year and Rs. 13 per month to each of the other two thekedars. They came to the conclusion that the net profits of the bazar were not far different from the amount which had been settled by the arbitrator. Accepting this as the basis of their calculation and making necessary deduction for the land included in the lease which did not form the subject of the acquisition, they fixed the amount of the net annual profits at Rs. 2,240-12-0 and awarded a sum of Rs. 37,335 as compensation at the rate of 16 2/3 years purchase. They further awarded the ladies interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the difference between this amount and the amount awarded by the Land Acquisition Officer from the September 17, 1928, the date on which the Lucknow Improvement Trust entered into possession of the property upto the date of the award and future interest on the same amount till realization.

The United Provinces Town Improvement (Appeals) Act of 1920 provides that appeals from award of the Tribunal shall only lie on one or more of the following grounds, namely:—

(i) the decision being contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law;

(ii) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law;

(iii) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by the said Act which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits.

The learned Counsel for the appellant in view of this provision has not disputed the findings of the Tribunal as regards the actual income derived by the lessors under the theka or as regards the net profit from the bazar. He has confined his arguments to the question as regards the principle to be followed in awarding compensation in the case of property of the nature of the bazar in suit. He has contended strongly that the value of the property should have been determined on the basis of the gross collections without making any deductions for the costs of collections, etc. In other words his argument is that the appellants should have been allowed compensation at 16 2/3 years purchase on the amount of Rs. 3,017-9 and not on the amount of Rs. 2,240-12. Section 23 of the Land Acquisition Act provides that in determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired under this Act, the Court shall take into consideration inter alia, the market value of the land at the date of the publication of the notification under s. 4, sub-s. (1). It is not disputed that this date with reference to which the market value is to be determined is April 16 1921. Section 58 of the Town Improvement Act provides that for the purpose of acquiring land under the Land Acquisition Act for the Improvement Trust, the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act shall be subject to the modifications indicated in the schedule. One of these modifications laid down in s. 10, sub-s. (3) of the Schedule referred to in s. 58, is that the market value of the land shall be the market value according to the use the land was put at the date with reference to which the market value is to be determined under that clause. The evidence of Manni Lal, P. W. No. 4 one of the thekedars shows that the sources of income in respect of the bazar in suit were rent realized daily from the tenants, tax on bhusa at the rate of one pice per bundle, chungi in kind of grass, leaves of trees, tax on season fruits such as mangoes and kharboozas, tax on grain carts, gur carts, earthenware carts pattal carts, vegetable carts especially cauliflowers and other miscellaneous income. He further stated that he used to realize three annas per cart load of grain, one anna for a thela load of grain, nine pies per camel and two pice per pony. The grass taken by way of chungi used to be sold by him in the market. Besides this there were three shops which were let out on a monthly rent. Thus it will appear that realizations had to be made in kind and in cash and that the realisations made in cash ranged from one pice to four annas per dealer. In Birjrani v. Deputy Comm.

sioner, Sitapur, 57 I. C. 301 (1) Mr. Stuart, J. C. held that market value means the price that would be paid by a willing buyer to a willing seller when both are actuated by business principles prevalent at the time when the transaction takes place in the locality in which it takes place. The question in the case was as regards the market value of five shops in the Khairabad Bazar. In determining whether the compensation awarded by the Land Acquisition Officer was adequate or not, he directed his attention to finding out "the nett income from the shops" and in doing so remarked that allowance should be made for "repairs, bad debts and the shops standing empty." Again in Ali Akbar v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (2), a Bench of this Court remaked that the words "market value" have never been defined by Statute or enactment and that different methods must obviously be employed in obtaining the market value in each particular instance. They further observed that in all cases the Tribunal should look to the use to which the proprietor was putting the property, the limitations that attached to that use and the income if any he was making out of it. In this case also the learned Judges tried to find out the nett income of the property after deducting the expenses of making collections. In the case of the Official Trustee of Bengal v. The Secretary of State for Indian in Council 39 I. C. 619 (3) which was a case of acquisition of a bazar, the special Land Acquisition Judge had based the valuation upon nett income of the market and allowed 18 2/11 years purchase on that amount. This award was finally upheld by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court. In the present case the income of the property by its nature was of a fluctuating character and it was necessary to employ a costly staff for making realisations from day to day from the various stall keepers in the bazar. Considerable vigilance was required on the part of the collection staff to prevent evasion of payments. Close supervision was also necessary in order to prevent embezzlements by the staff entrusted with the realisation of these dues. Thus taking into consideration the use to which the land was put at the time of the acquisition, it is difficult to think that any buyer would have been prepared to purchase the property on the basis of the gross collections without making any allowance for the expenditure necessary for making collections. The case of agricultural lands stands on a different footing from property of the nature of the bazar in dispute. We are of opinion that while it is not possible to lay down any general method of valuation as it is necessary to take the circumstances of each property into consideration in determining the suitable basis of compensation, yet we are quite clear that the circumstances of the property in dispute were such that it is impossible to say that the Tribunal was wrong in awarding compensation on the basis of the nett profits. We have no hesitation in agreeing with the Tribunal that in such a case it would be most unfair to calculate compensation on the basis of gross collections.

We are, therefore, of opinion that no ground has been made out for interference with the award of the Tribunal. The appeal must, therefore, fail and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Revision Petition No. 1061 of 1930

YELURI SATYANARAYANA AND OTHERS —PLAINTIFFS—PETITIONERS

YELURI MALLAYYA AND OTHERS— DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Promissory note—Note executed by guardian of minor—Guardian not signing as such—Minor described as maker in body of note—Liability of minor—Guardian's power to execute promissory notes on behalf of minor—Frame of suit—Hindu Law—Minority and Guardianship.

A promissory note was executed by the mother of the minor defendants. In the body of the note the minor defendants were described as the makers with the words 'represented by their mother and guardian V,' but the note was signed by the mother V without any such description attached to her name. The pro-note was itself executed in renewal of an earlier promissory note executed by the defendants' father:

Held, in a suit upon the note, that it was binding on the estate of the minor defendants. In inferring the intention of the parties in such a case one must look at all the surrounding circumstances and the liability of the minor in such cases under the Hindu Law is not affected by the fact that the promissory note was made by the guardian.

The fact that a minor can be made liable only if it was executed for the purposes binding on him does not make the liability under the promissory note conditional.

It is not necessary that the plaintiff should sue in such cases on the debt. Koyyalamudi Subbanna v.

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Guntur, in Small Cause Suit No. 1399 of 1929.

Mr. D. NarasaRaja for Mr. N. Rama Rao, for the Petitioners.

Mr. P. Satyanarayana Rao, for the Respondents.

Ramesam, J. - This Revision Petition arises out of Small Cause Suit No. 1399 of 1929 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Guntur in which the plaintiff sought to recover a sum of money due to him evidenced by the promissory note (Ex.-A) which itself was in renewal of an earlier promissory note (Ex. A-1). Both these notes were executed by the defendants' mother Venkayamma. In the body of the note the minor defendants are described as the makers with the words 'represented by their mother and guardian Venkayamma' but she signed the notes without any such description attached to her name. Exhibit A-1 itself was in renewal of an earlier promissory note (Ex. A-2) executed by the defendants' father on February 28, 1922. According to the Hindu Law the sons are liable to pay their father's debt to the extent of the joint family properties received by them from their father or other assets inherited by them from him. The District Munsif held that on a construction of the suit promissory note it was not intended to make the defendants liable. Referring to Koyyalamudi Subbanna v. Koduri Subbarayudu (1) the learned District Munsif observed that 'the liability on a promissory note must be determined on the wording of the note and, in each case, the question is whether the instrument has been so drawn in form as to make the executant liable personally or only in his capacity as agent, guardian, etc'. He then thought that the mother did not intend to make the sons liable because she had used feminine gender in the operative part of the note. This seems to be scarcely relevant as one finds it difficult to conceive in what other form the promissory note can be drawn up. Finally, purporting to follow the decisions in Ramaswami Mudaliar v. Muthuswami Ayyar 30 Ind. Cas. 481 (2), Koyyalamudi Subbanna v. Koduri Subbarayudu (1) and Muthuswami Naicken v. Somasundaram Mudaliar (3), he dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has filed this Revision Petition.

The Revision Petition first came on for hearing before Sundaram Chetty, J. The respondents did not appear. Following the decision in Ramajogayya v. Jagannadhan (4) and Meenakshi Sundaram Chetty v. Ranga Ayyangar, 139 Ind. Cas. 383 (5), the learned Judge set aside the lower Court's decree and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff as sued for. Afterwords the respondents applied to set aside the ex parte decree by showing sufficient cause for their non-appearance. The ex parte decre was accordingly set aside and the petition came up for disposal before our brother Varadachariar, J. The learned Judge referred the matter to a Bench of two Judges who referred it to a Full Bench.

In Koyyalamudi Subbanna v. Koduri Subbarayudu (1), the question in a similar case was whether the guardians were personally liable. It was held that they were not, as it was clear on the note that they intended to exclude personal liability. Whether the minor was liable or not did not arise in that case. But as it must have been intended to bind somebody and as it was held that the guardians were not liable, probably it would have been held that the minor was liable if the question had arisen. A portion of the case related to executors and the conclusion was different. This case does not therefore support the District Munsif's conclusion.

The decision in Muthuswami Naicken v. Somasundaram Mudaliar (3), is a decision of a single Judge.

The case in Ramaswami Mudaliar v. Muthuswami Ayyar 30 Ind. Cas. 481 (2), was decided in 1915 and is similar to the case in Muthuswami Naicken v. Somasundaram Mudaliar (3). So far as the form of the promissory note and the intention of the maker are concerned, the case before us is similar to Koyyalamudu Subbanna v. Koduri Subbarayudu (1). The intention of the makers of the note was to exclude the personal liability of the guardian but to make the wards liable.

One must look at all the surrounding circumstances in inferring the intention. Seeing that the note was in renewal of earlier promissory notes—ultimately leading up to the father's liability, I think this is the proper inference to draw.

But the further question arises whether in such circumstances, it is within the competence of the guardian by executing a promissory note to make the minors liable to the extent of the joint family property in their hands. On this point it was held in some of the early cases that the minors may be liable under such circumstances [See Subramania Ayyar v. Arumuga Chetty (6) Krishna Chettiar v. Nagamani Ammal (7) and Venkataswami Naickar v. Muthuswami Pillai (8)].

The matter came up before a Full Bench in Ramajogayya v. Jagannadhan (4). Wallis, C. J., held that a guardian cannot make personal covenants in the name of the ward so as to impose personal liability upon him, relying upon Waghela Rasanji v. Sheikh Masludin (9). But Seshagiri Ayyar and Ayling, JJ., held that such a wide proposition was not intended to be laid down in Waghela Rajsanji v. Sheikh Masludin (9), and they were of opinion that the liability of a minor under the Hindu Law is not affected by the fact that the promissory note was made by a guardian. They referred to a number of decisions of this and other High Courts which are in accordance with that view. This decision has always been followed in this Court as settling the law, and I do not think that anything has happened since to induce me to depart from that decision. Its effect, as stated by Curgenven, J. in Venkata Jagannatha v. Venkata Kumar (10) is that any liability to which the minor would be subject under the Hindu Law is not the less a liability because it was incurred by his guardian on his behalf. [See also Ramakrishna Reddiar v. Kasinesi Chidambara Swamigal (11) and Meenakshi Sundaram Chetty v. Ranga Ayyangar, 139 Ind. Cas. 383 (5)].

In The Imperial Bank of India at Madras v. Veerappan, (12), our brother Pandrang Row, J. observed 'the appellant bank can succeed in fixing the liability on the minor in respect of the promissory notes only if it is shown that the bank believed in good faith that there was a real necessity for the execution of the promissory notes or that the agent was acting for the benefit of the minor's business.' In that case it was found that this was not shown, and hence the bank failed. There is no such difficulty in the present case. That decision implies that minors may be liable on a promissory note under such circumstances.

But the decision in Meenakshi Sundaram Chetty v. Ranga Ayyangar 139 Ind. Cas. 383, (5), has been doubted in Swaminatha Odayar v. Natesa Iyer (13). In the latter case the promissory note was executed by a person who was not the lawful guardian at all but at p. 883*, Reilly, J. proceeded to observe 'how can any guardian impose a liability upon a minor by executing a promissory note on his behalf? If a promissory note is to effect anything, it must create an unconditional personal liability'. The doubt seems to arise because of the fact that the payee of the note can succeed against the minor and his estate only if certain facts are established. This is true. But I do not think this fact makes the liability under the promissory note one other than an unconditional personal liability. What is meant by that phrase is that the liability mentioned in the note should not be made contingent on some event, for if it is so made conditional or contingent upon the happening of some event, it will not conform to the definition of a promissory note. But so long as the form of the promissory note conforms to the definition of a promissory note under the Negotiable Instruments Act, it is not the less unconditional simply because when the matter goes to a Court of law and the defendant raises some defence, the plaintiff has got to establish certain facts before he can succeed against the minor. The truth is that in no transaction entered into by a guardian on behalf of a minor, can the opposite party succeed, if challenged, without establishing some facts such as that the transaction was for the benefit of the minor or some such other fact. That such a fact has got to be established does not, in my opinion make the liability under the promissory note a conditional liability. On the doubt entertained by Reilly, J. it follows that a promissory note on behalf of a minor is impossible. Such a view is opposed to the trend of all the decisions in all the High Courts including the Full Bench decision in Ramajogayya v. Jagannadhan (4). I am unable, therefore, to agree with the doubt suggested by Reilly, J. The actual conclusion in the case before him rested on the fact that the promissory note was not executed by a lawful guardian at all. Otherwise, that decision must be regarded as overruled.

It was suggested that in such a case the suit should be on the debt and not on the note. But this seems to be a merely verbal distinction and not one of substance: Krishna Chettiar v. Nagamani Ammal (7). A note is only evidence of a debt. It is true that in the case of insufficiently stamped promissory notes, parties are not allowed to fall back upon the debt where the debt and the making of the note were simultaneous. Such a principle is necessary to protect the interests of public revenue. It is not necessary to extend the principle beyond such a case. In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree. This is also the view of Sundaram Chetty, J. and of Varadachariar, J.

I would, therefore, set aside to decree of the District Munsif and give a decree to the plaintiff as prayed for with costs throughout.

Beasley, C. J.—I agree.

King, J.—I agree.

LORT-WILLIAMS AND M. C. GHOSE, JJ.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR
versus
NUR AHMED—ACCUSED

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 297—Cases arising out of sexual matters—Charges by woman against man—Testimony of woman—Corroboration—Judge's duty in charging the jury—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 376.

The Judge should warn the jury that in cases arising out of sexual matters, when charges are made against a man by a woman, it is dangerous to convict upon her evidence alone and that they ought to require corroboration of her story before they bring in a verdict of "guilty." The kind of corroboration required by the rule must be independent evidence, that is to say, the evidence of some witnesses other than the girl herself. He should make the jury understand that only in exceptional cases would they be justified in accepting her uncorroborated testimony R. v. Baskerville (1) and Job Whitehead (2), relied on.

J. Ref. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Alipore.

Mr. Debrata Mookerjee, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Khondkar and Haridev Chatterjee, for the Crown.

Lort-Williams, J.—In this case Ohajuddin Molla and Nur Ahmed alias Nonia were tried by the Additional Sessions Judge at Alipore and a jury which consisted of three Hindus and two Muhammadans. They were convicted under ss. 366 and 376, Penal Code, by a majority of 3 to 2. The learned Judge considers that the verdict against Nur Ahmed was against the weight of evidence and unreasonable and that he ought to be acquitted under both the sections.

The facts were that a girl named Kiran Bala Dassi of the Bairagi caste lives in a small village near to a much larger Muhammadan village. According to her story, some time before the date of the offence alleged in this case, Ohajuddin made immoral suggestions to her, asking her to go and live with him. She said that she was highly shocked and screamed out with fear. This is alleged to have taken place at midday, while she was working in her hut and Ohajuddin is alleged to have called her from outside. Further, it is suggested that before this incident, some persons approached her bari at night, but were chased away by male members of her family. There is the evidence of one witness that Ohajuddin was seen among those who were running away. This witness was Adel Molla. His evidence appears to be unsatisfactory, because it is clear that he told two entirely different stories before the Magistrate and before the Sessions Judge. On the night of the alleged offence the girl's husband was away. Her evidence was that two men whom she did not name came into her hut and gagged her with a piece of cloth. She tried to scream, but they brandished a knife, then they dragged her away to their house and raped her one after the other.

The next day, she was kept in the house and Ohajuddin forced her to eat and then raped her twice that day. The next morning, Ohajuddin came with Maniruddi and let her out. Maniruddi was not there the previous night. Ohajuddin told her to go to her father's house and on her way home she met her 'deor' and the chaukidar to whom she told what had happened. Then, "looking unwillingly" at the two men in the dock, she said "Ohajuddin and Maniruddi are in the dock." It will be noticed that in her examination-in-chief she did not mention either of the two accused when she described what happened in her hut, nor did she mention anybody else but Maniruddi, who she said was with Ohajuddin when she was let out on the Thursday morning.

Not satisfied however with the paucity of evidence elicited in examination-in-chief, the learned Pleader on behalf of the accused brought out a great deal more evidence in her cross-examination, which in my experience almost invariably seems to be the practice in this country. She said then that she had known both the accused for some four years, but neither of them had been to her hut before. She said that she could not see their faces in the dark, nor could she see any knife or whether they had a knife or not. Then she explained her former evidence by saying that she was threatened in the room twice by word of mouth. She said that the accused were outside the curtain when she awoke: she was pulled outside the curtain and then they seized and gagged her. In view of this evidence it is a little difficult to understand why the girl was not able to scream before she was gagged and threatened. Then she said that she was taken by them to their house and it is apparent from other evidence of witnesses who saw three persons going along together, that she was walking quietly between the other two. Her mouth was not gagged, but she says it was "clogged" and explains that expression as meaning that she was threatened with a knife, although she did not see one, which seems a little difficult to understand. Then the Court cross-examined her and elicited that at Ohajuddin's house that night she saw his face. Still she persisted in not mentioning the other man. Then there was further cross-examination, the Pleader for the accused being still dissatisfied with the amount of evidence elicited against his client. And after further cross-examination, she said that she recognized them both on the Tuesday night and that she saw their faces clearly in the dawn.

It appears from the evidence that she was confined the whole of Wednesday in a room in which there were two open windows. She made no effort to escape though she was left alone there. She did not see Nonia the whole of that day. Finally, the jury put some questions to which she said that on Tuesday night it was dark and she recognized the accused by their voices. Before the Magistrate she had sworn that she could not recognize either of the two men. They took her inside some one's house where both of them raped her in the course of the night; they were with her the whole of the night, but she could not recognize them at all. She says, however, that the next morning, when there was light, she recognized them both. This, again, sounds a somewhat improbable story. It is a little difficult to understand why they waited until she was able to recognize them when the light came. She did not make any complaint of actual hurt, nor were any marks found upon her. There was evidence of one or more witnesses who saw her leaving Ohajuddin's house on Thursday morning weeping. During the search for the girl, Ohajuddin assisted; in fact, it was he who said, "Let us all join in search of the girl." They searched Hindu houses but did not suspect any Muhammadan. When previously some men had been chased from their house at night, they did not suspect them of coming after Kiran Bala, but thought they were thieves. Ohajuddin has a young wife aged between 18 and 20 and two daughters. One witness said that he saw two men, whom he did not recognize, carrying a woman off. He knew their voices to be of Ohajuddin and Nonia, but he was not called as a witness. When the chaukidar met her, she used a curious expression "Ohajuddin took me away and dishonoured my religion." Kanai Bairagi, one of the witnesses, said that there had been a maramari between him and the accused before and there was friction between Ohajuddin and Chandra about the advances to Kiran Bala. This witness in the Court below said that when he observed two men taking a woman away, he did not recognize any one.

Elaj Molla said that he saw three folk walking together and he asked them where they were going. He vaguely recognized Ohajuddin from his voice chiefly. He did not feel suspicious of them. They were walking in the ordinary way. The accused being Muhammadans and the girl a Hindu, it is unfortunate that the jury was composed as it was. It is obvious from the references which I have made to the evidence that this case is unsatisfactory from many points of view apart from the direction given by the Judge to the jury. His charge unfortunately is somewhat short and sketchy. There is little attempt to deal with the story in chronological sequence or to examine or weigh the evidence with care and point out its relevancy to the jury. The Judge has quite properly warned them that in cases of this description arising out of sexual matters, when charges are made against a man by a woman, it is dangerous to convict upon her evidence alone and that they ought to require corroboration of her story before they bring in a verdict of "guilty." He said that they were entitled to accept the evidence of the girl, but that they should be slow in accepting it. They should scrutinize her evidence very carefully and unless her story convinced them so much that they felt that it did not possibly stand in need of any corroborative evidence, they should not accept her uncorroborative evidence. This direction was correct. But in my opinion, the learned Judge has not emphasized sufficiently the danger of convicting any man upon the uncorroborated testimony of the girl in cases such as this. He ought to have dealt with this part of the charge so as to make the jury understand that only in exceptional cases would they be justified in accepting the uncorroborated testimony. Unfortunately also he misdirected them by stating that there was corroborative evidence and it was only this:

"that the prosecution says that there were those two instances before, that she was missing all the night and the following day. But she could equally have been missing if she had gone of her own free will. The corroborative evidence consists of what the girl said to the manager and to her deor."

This is not the kind of corroboration required by law. The leading case on this subject in which the whole law was exhaustively discussed by Lord Reading, who was then the Lord Chief Justice, is R. v. Baskerville (1). This being the leading case on the subject, I am surprised to find no reference to it in some of the leading text-books, except a passing reference upon another point. In that case, the learned Lord Chief Justice said:

"We hold that evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words, it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particular not only her evidence that the crime has been committed but also that the prisoner committed it."

Then referring to the Criminal Law Amendment Act (1885), ss. 2 and 3, he says:

"The language of the statute 'implicating the accused' compendiously incorporates the test applicable at common law in the rule of practice. The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. It would be in a high degree dangerous to attempt to formulate the kind of evidence which would be regarded as corroboration except to say that corroborative evidence is evidence which shows or tends to show that the story of the accomplice that the accused committed the crime is true not merely that the crime has been committed but that it was committed by the accused."

Again at p. 89* he says:

"What is required is some additional evidence rendering it probable that the story of the accomplice is true and that it is reasonably safe to act upon it. The corroboration must be by some evidence other than that of an accomplice and, therefore, one accomplice's evidence is not corroboration of the testimony of another accomplice."

It is clear, therefore, that the kind of corroboration required by the rule must be independent evidence that, is to say, the evidence of some witnesses other than the girl herself. If there were any doubt about this, it was made clear in the case of Job v. Whitehead (2), the head-note of which is that "the witness cannot be corroborated by himself." The Lord Chief Justice Lord Hewart in that case said that "corroboration should come from another person altogether." Therefore applying the rule to the evidence in this case it is clear that the evidence referred to by the learned Judge is not corroborative evidence within the meaning of the rule because what the girl said to the manager and to her deor and what she said about Ohajuddin having made improper proposals to her were statements made by her and equally dependent upon whether her testimony was to be believed or not. The fact that she was missing all the night and the following day was not a fact which implicated either of the accused and this the Judge has realized, because he points out that she could equally have been missing if she had gone of her own free will. The fact that some persons had been near the house at night on a previous occasion and one of them was Ohajuddin, even if the evidence of identification can be relied upon, is not evidence which implicates Ohajuddin in the offence charged. The only piece of corroborative evidence which I can find in the record is the statement of one or more witnesses that they saw her coming out of Ohajuddin's house on the Thursday morning weeping. But this has not been referred to by the Judge as corroborative evidence within the meaning of the rule which the jury might take into consideration to confirm the story of the girl.

The learned Judge has pointed out a number of reasons which induced him to think that there has been a miscarriage of justice in this case and we agree with him that the trial for various reasons has been unsatisfactory. Against Nonia, there is nothing but the girl's evidence and that is not very convincing. Against Ohajuddin there is, as I have already pointed out, some evidence which might be accepted as corroboration within the meaning of the rule. It is true that if, after a careful and sufficient warning, the jury choose to condemn either or both, then upon the girl's statement alone there is nothing in law to prevent them from doing so. That being the position, we think that the fairest and the best way of dealing with this case is to set all the convictions and sentences aside and to direct a new trial of both the accused and we direct that they shall be tried by another Judge because this Judge will not wish to try the same case all over again. The accused who are on bail will continue on the same bail pending further orders by the trial Court.

March 16, 1934
RANGI LAL, J.
SHEOGA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
DHANNA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152—Order under—Applicability—Judge purporting to act under s. 152 but wrongly passing fresh decree—Appeal, if lies.

Although no appeal lies from an order under s. 152, Civil Procedure Code, yet where the Judge purporting to act under s. 152, wrongly passes a fresh decree, the mere fact that the new decree was wrongly passed does not take away the plaintiff's right to appeal.

S. C. A. from a decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated July 4, 1932.

Mr. R. C. Soni, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mehr Chand Sud, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—On January 29, 1926, one Raman mortgaged a house and two vacant sites adjoining it. His first cousin Phusa brought a declaratory suit to challenge the mortgage on the usual ground of want of consideration and necessity. It was held that the mortgaged property was ancestral but that the mortgage was for necessity. The suit was therefore dismissed. On January 24, 1930, the mortgagee brought the present suit for possession against Phusa and two others, namely Dhanna and Mani Ram. It was alleged that Phusa had taken possession of the house after the death of the mortgagor and that Dhanna and Mani Ram were also among the latter's heirs. The trial Court held that the mortgaged property was not proved to be ancestral and that the mortgage was for necessity. The claim was, therefore, decreed. On appeal the learned District Judge held that the site under the house was ancestral, but the building was erected by Raman himself. No clear finding was given in respect of the two vacant sites adjoining the house but it appears that the finding of the trial Court with regard to them was not disturbed. It was, however, held that no necessity for the mortgage was established. The concluding paragraph of the judgment runs thus:

"The appeal is accordingly accepted so far as to give the plaintiff a decree for possession of the site of the house only, the defendant being allowed to retain the building as security for the debt. The defendant will not be disturbed in his possession for one year from to-day so that he may in the meanwhile realize his security or remove the building material, after which period the plaintiff will be entitled to obtain possession of the site even by the ouster of the defendant from the building. The parties shall bear their own costs throughout."

A decree was framed in due course in accordance with this judgment. On April 29, 1932, Phusa, Dhanna and Mani Ram made an application under s. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code for an amendment of the decree. It was alleged that there was an error in the judgment and the decree arising from an accidental slip. This application came before Mirza Abdul Rab and in trying to correct the mistake made by his predecessor in his judgment and decree dated May 7, 1931, he fell into another error. He ordered that the plaintiff's suit shall stand dismissed and that a fresh decree shall be prepared in accordance with that judgment. This order was complied with and a fresh decree was prepared.

The mortgagee has now preferred an appeal against that decree.

The learned Counsel for the respondents contended that an appeal did not lie because the District Judge passed his order under s. 152 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is true that the District Judge purported to act under that section but he wrongly passed a fresh decree and the appellant has a right to appeal from that decree. The mere fact that the new decree was wrongly passed does not take away the plaintiff's right to appeal.

On the merits the appeal must succeed and the decree must be made to conform to the findings given by the District Judge on May 7, 1931. There was no appeal against his decision and the findings, therefore, became final. I accept the appeal, set aside the decree passed by Mirza Abdul Rab on July 4, 1932, and amend the decree passed by Lala Ghanshyam Das on May 7, 1931, as follows:—The appeal is accordingly accepted and the plaintiff's suit for possession is dismissed but he can realize his security by sale of the materials of the mortgaged house. The parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 65 of 1934

GRILLE, J. C.

BALWANTRAO—APPLICANT

BALMUKUND AND ANOTHER—NON-APPLICANTS

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 12—Condonation of delay in filing application must be specifically asked for—Figures in copy of judgment—Presumption of correctness—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, r. 1 (1)—Delay in filing appeal not due to mistake on the part of appellant—Appellant knowing facts—Appeal dismissed as time-barred—Review—Held, there was sufficient cause.

Where delay in filing an application for review is caused by the supply of wrong information on the part of the copying department which resulted in delay in getting the copy of the decree a person making the application is not entitled to deduction of time under s. 12, Limitation Act, as of right. He has to satisfy the Court that the wrong information was given in circumstances for which he was not responsible, and if the Court is satisfied as to the justness of his contention the Court will then extend the time under s. 5, Limitation Act. Where the appeal on the face of it is time-barred it is the duty of the applicant to append to his appeal the reason for the delay and to ask for condonation of the delay under s. 5 of the Limitation Act.

An appellant is entitled to presume the accuracy of the figures which are given him in the copy of the judgment.

The error made in the Copying Department in the heading of the copy of the judgment and the consequent delay in filing an appeal may be treated as a sufficient reason within O. XLVII, r. 1 (1), Civil Procedure Code, for review of the order dismissing the appeal as time-barred. Chhajju Ram v. Neki (2), relied on.

Application for review of this Court's order dated April 13, 1934, passed in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 44 of 1934, dismissing the applicant's appeal (as time-barred) preferred against the decree dated July 24, 1933 passed by the District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Appeal No. 43 of 1932, arising out of Civil Suit No. 270 of 1931, dated February 29, 1932, of the Court of the Sub-Judge, Second Class, Saoner.

Mr. G. R. Pradhan, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. D. Khandekar, for the Non-Applicants.

Order.—The applicant Balwantrao filed an appeal in this Court which was on the face of it time-barred. Certain details appearing in the schedule stamped on the reverse of the copy of the decree filed with the memorandum of appeal led to enquiries being made in the Copying Department, and it was found that the Copying Department had been in error in directing the appellant to appear on a future date without pointing out to him that the application for a copy of the decree contained inaccurate information as a result of which it was impossible to trace the decree, a copy of which had been applied for. Even excluding such time from the period requisite for obtaining a copy, it appeared that the appeal was time-barred by six days, and the following order was passed:

"In accordance with the principles laid down in Mohammad Khan v. Fatma Bi (1) this appeal must be dismissed as time-barred. On two occasions the appellant gave wrong information as a result of which the copy could not be supplied. Even if the period from October 5 to October 17, 1933, during which the Copying Department failed to point out the incorrectness of the information supplied, is deducted, the appeal will still be time-barred by six days."

The appellant has now applied for a review of that order and he has pointed out that the inaccurate information supplied by him when he asked for a copy of the decree was due to a mistake on the part of the Copying Department which gave the wrong number of the case in supplying him with a copy of the judgment which he had obtained before he applied for a copy of the decree; that is to say, the appellate judgment against which Balwantrao wished to prefer an appeal bore the No. 43 of 1932 in the Court of the District Judge and it was an appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Saoner in Civil Suit No. 270 of 1931, dated February 29, 1932. In the copy supplied to the appellant for the purposes of the appeal before the District Judge this date has wrongly been copied as March 29, 1932, and in the copy of the appellate judgment supplied there are two typing errors where the Civil Appeal is described as being appeal No. 43 of 1933 and the date of the Subordinate Judge's decision is given as February 29, 1933. It is clear, therefore, that in asking for a copy of the decree the appellant did not rely on the date which he had given in asking for a copy of the judgment, which must have been correct since the copy of the judgment was promptly supplied but on the data given in that copy which were incorrect. It is clear, therefore, that the delay caused by the giving of wrong information was in reality due to no fault on the part of the appellant. He cannot be held bound to consult the figures which he had already used in making one application and which in all probability were destroyed; he was entitled to presume the accuracy of the figures which were given him in the copy of the judgment.

It is contended on behalf of the non-applicants in this case that without disputing the correctness of the facts they do not constitute an adequate ground for review, and it is maintained that the appellant should, in preferring his appeal, have asked for an extension of time under the provisions of s. 5 of the Limitation Act. The applicant, on the other hand, contends that there was no occasion for an application under s. 5 as he was entitled to have the time deducted as of right under s. 12 of the Limitation Act. The applicant is incorrect in this contention. Where delay is caused by the supply of wrong information, a person making the application is not entitled to deduction of time as of right. He has to satisfy the Court that the wrong information was given in circumstances for which he was not responsible, and if the Court is satisfied as to the justness of his contention the Court will then extend the time under s. 5. The appeal on the face of it was time-barred and it was the duty of the applicant to append to his appeal the reason for the delay and to ask for condonation of the delay under s. 5 of the Limitation Act.

It is urged on behalf of the applicant that he was misled by the practice of this Court to call on an appellant in such circumstances to show cause why the appeal should not be dismissed as time-barred. If such a practice exists, it is certainly not invariable and the Courts have power to reject summarily an appeal which prima facie is time-barred and which contains no explanation of the delay or any prayer for condonation. The facts were certainly within the knowledge of the applicant and he made no attempt to explain them. The claim that the time to be deducted was a matter of right and not a matter of grace, I have already stated to be incorrect. The claim for a review cannot fall under the heading of "the discovery of new and important matter" since the facts now alleged were already within the applicant's knowledge at the time the appeal was presented. Neither is there any mistake or error apparent on the face of the record. I am satisfied, however, that there is a ground for granting review covered by the expression "for any other sufficient reason" in O. XLVII, r. 1 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code, and the error made in the Copying Department in the heading of the copy of the judgment may be treated as a sufficient reason analogous to an error on the face of the record to bring the case within the ambit of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (2). It would be manifestly unjust to penalise an appellant who has relied on what is supplied to him as a true copy when that copy proves to be inaccurate in the very description of what the copy purports to be.

The application for review is accordingly granted, but in order to emphasise the principle that a petition filed out of time must show on the face of it reason for the delay and contain an express prayer for condonation of the delay I direct that the costs of the review application be borne by the applicant since the observance of this principle would have resulted in a different order being passed in this Court and would have avoided the necessity of an application in review. Criminal Revision Petition No. 1776 of 1933

GURBAKSH SINGH—ACCUSED.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 294-A—'Drawing', meaning of—Publication of scheme of lottery—Scheme not contemplating drawing by mechanical or human agency involving their chance extraction—Whether an offence

The meaning of the term 'drawing' in relation to a lottery is that the lots should be drawn by some mechanical or human agency involving their chance extraction. Where under a scheme there was no physical or mechanical 'drawing' to determine the lucky lots which depended on a sort of arithmetical progression based on an original number to be determined merely by the chance death of a bond-holder, then the publication of a scheme involving such a lottery is no offence under s. 294, Penal Code.

Cr. Revn. P. from order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore.

Facts.—These two revision petitions against convictions under s. 294-A, Penal Code, in separate cases, each present for consideration two legal questions which are identically the same in both cases. They may therefore be dealt with in one order. In the case Crown v. Sardar Gurbakhsh Singh Narang, the accused is the editor of the weekly paper, the Fateh of Lahore whilst in the case Crown v. Sayed Inait Shah, the accused is the Editor of the Siyasat, a daily paper of Lahore. Both these persons have been convicted for publishing a notice of a proposal for an alleged lottery managed by the Industrial Bank, Ltd. There are no facts in dispute. The publication of the notice which is the same in both cases and refers to the same lottery is admitted.

It has merely been argued: (a) that the scheme published is not a lottery and, (b) that even if it is, the publication thereof is not illegal, as it involved no "drawing" within the meaning of s. 294 A, Penal Code. A reference to the notification will explain the conditions upon which this scheme was to work. The Bank issued a lac of ten rupee bonds which were redeemable at the end of 20 years by every holder who would receive Rs. 10-8-0. Thus none of the investors suffered any capital depreciation. This money was to be invested and from the interest a series of prizes were to be allotted yearly, in the following manner. Every bond-holder who died within the ensuing year was treated as a prize winner. For the distribution of the rest of the prizes, the number of the bond held by the deceased holder whose death was first reported to the Bank, was to be taken and ten added thereto, e. g., if the deceased's bond was No. 813, then the first prize winner would be the holder of the bond No. 823 and the remaining prizes were distributed by adding ten, e. g. No. 833, 843, 853, etc., until the prizes were exhausted. Thus it will be seen that the prizes although allotted by chance were not drawn in the manner generally accepted and were derived entirely from interest and not capital.

It has been argued before me on the first point mentioned above that such a scheme does not amount to a lottery and the Full Bench ruling in Narayana Aiyangar v. Vellachami Ambalam (1), has been cited before me in support of this contention. This concerned a chit fund and the law of lottery is discussed at length therein with special reference to English cases. It was finally held that a scheme whereby nobody lost their capital, even though they failed to profit by making interest, could not be called a lottery. Similarly an old ruling in Kamakshi Achari v. Appavu Pillai (2), has also been put forward to support the same contention. I would very respectfully venture to differ from these two rulings. The word "lottery" is nowhere defined in the Criminal Procedure Code, or in any other statute that I know of. Its common meaning, as disclosed by the dictionary is "a scheme for the distribution of prizes by lot or chance," and in the present instance the prizes were certainly to be distributed by chance, the factor of chance being the death of a bond-holder, I am unable to see how any Court is legally authorized to place a more arbitrary or restricted interpretation on the word "lottery" than is in common use in the English language. There may be in England a judicially restricted interpretation accepted in English Common Law which differs from the common and current meaning; but in India we are not bound by Common law and are obliged to give the current meaning to any word used in a statute. In this I am supported by a number of rulings: Madan Gopal v. Emperor (3), A. D. Raj v. A. P. Thoppe Naidu (4), Universal Mutual Aid & Poor House Association, Limited, Madras v. A. D. Thoppa (5), Ram Parshad Khanna v. Union Bank of India (6), and Emperor v. Syed A. M. Vazirally (7), which are all rulings which support the prosecution contention that a scheme such as the present is certainly a lottery. I therefore hold on the first point that the scheme published was a lottery.

On the second point it has been argued before me that the provisions of s. 294-A, Penal Code, only make illegal that type of lottery which involves an actual drawing and that the word "drawing" must be given a usual physical interpretation; that is to say, lots will have to be drawn by some human or mechanical agency from a receptacle. The relevant portion of the first part of the section reads:

> "whoever keeps an office or place for the purpose of 'drawing' a lottery; and the second part reads 'and whoever publishes any proposal to pay any sum on any event or contingency relative or applicable to the 'drawing' of any ticket, lot number or figure in any such lottery."

It has been specifically held in Ram Parshad Khanna v. Union Bank of India (6), that the word "drawing" must be read as being used in its physical sense and this is followed in Emperor v. Syed A. M. Vazirally (7), where the origin of the word "draw" and the place it finds in this section, is discussed at length. Webster's dictionary defines the word "drawing" as "the act of pulling, attracting, extracting, taking lots, a card or cards from the pack, etc." So its meaning relative to a lottery is clearly that the lots should be drawn by some mechanical or human agency involving their chance extraction. The present scheme, as has already been seen, contains no such element. There was no physical or mechanical "drawing" to determine the lucky lots which depended on a sort of arithmetical progression based on an original number to be determined merely by the chance death of a bond-holder. I would therefore hold that the publication of a scheme involving such a lottery is no offence as the law at present stands. The remedy for this if any is needed, lies with the legislature and not with the judiciary.

I forward these revision petitions to the High Court with a recommendation that in both cases the convictions be quashed on the grounds I have set out.

Mr. R. A. Jeremy, for the Respondent.

Order.—For reasons given by the Sessions Judge I accept the petition, set aside the conviction and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

VEDAGIRI SASTRIAR – APPELLANT

JAGATHGURU SANKARACHARIAR SWAMIGAL AT KUMBAKONAM —RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 7, 36, 102, 120, 124—Suit by archaka against trustees for recovery of emoluments—Limitation—Article applicable— Archaka, status of—'Wages', meaning of.

An archaka is a servant of the temple trustees and the perquisites or emoluments received by him are 'wages' within the meaning of Art. 102 of the Limitation Act. A suit by an archaka against the trustees for recovery of emoluments due to him is, therefore, governed by Art. 102 of the Limitation Act and not by Art. 120 or Art. 36.

Article 7 and Art. 102 deal with different classes of wage-earners. The former deals with a lower class of wage-earner than that dealt with by Art. 102. Baradwaja Mudaliar v. Arunachala Gurukkal (1), and Seshadri Ayyangar v. Ranga Bhattar (6) followed. Subbier v. Ranga Iyengar (2), not followed. Ratna Mudaliar v. Tiruvenkatachariar (4), distinguished. Chinnaswami Thathachariar v. Srirangam Nallan (5), considered.

L. P. A. against the judgment of Mr. Justice Pakenham Walsh, dated April 11, 1933, and passed in S. A. No. 396 of 1929, preferred to the High Court against the decree of the District Court of Chingleput in A. S. No. 296 of 1926 preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Conjeevaram, in O. S. No. 35 of 1924.

Mr. K. L. Rajagopalachari, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. S. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Pakenham Walsh, J. in S. A. No. 396 of 1929. The plaintiff is the appellant here and was a hereditary stanika office-holder of the temple of Sri Kamakshi Amman in Conjeevaram. The first defendant in the suit is the trustee of the temple and the second defendant is his agent. The suit was for the recovery of emoluments due to the plaintiff from December 31, 1918 to February 11, 1919. The suit was filed on January 10, 1924, more than three years and less than six years from the date of the cause of action. One plea taken at the trial was that the suit was barred by limitation. The trial Court, the lower Appellate Court and Pakenham Walsh, J. have upheld that plea. At the outset it must be stated that the emoluments sued for were received by the appellant in kind, that is to say, so many measures of rice and also food offerings. These have been assessed in the plaint at Rs. 81-14-4. The question here is which article of the Limitation Act applies. Both the lower Courts and also the second Appellate Court have applied Art. 102 following Baradwaja Mudaliar v. Arunachala Gurukkal (1), which is a direct decision upon this point. There the Court had to consider whether Art. 36 of the Limitation Act or Art. 102 or Art. 120 applied and it was held that the claim there, which was exactly similar to the claim here, fell under Art. 102 and not under Art. 36 or Art. 120. In none of the cases cited by the appellant in support of his argument was there any consideration as to whether Art. 102 should be applied rather than Art. 120. The earliest case is Subbier v. Ranga Iyengar (2). It was there held that a suit for the recovery of profits of a hereditary office by a hereditary stanika-holder in temples fell under Art. 120 and not, as contended, under Art. 36. The applicability of Art. 102 was not there considered and this case has been dissented from in Baradwaja Mudaliar v. Arunachala Gurukkal (1). In Venkatavaraga v. District Board of Tanjore (3), the applicability of Art. 102 was not considered and in any case on the facts of that case it does not appear to us to be much in point. In Ratna Mudaliar v. Tiruvenkatachariar (4), the question was whether the marriage fees payable to the archaka and claimed by him fell within Art. 144 or Art. 120. The lower Courts held that Art. 144 applied but the High Court applied Art. 120 and Art. 102 was not considered. As Pakenham Walsh, J. in his judgment says, presumably the fees there would be payable by the persons who were married. This, in our view, would be an important distinction because it could be contended with reason that the relationship of employer and servant did not there exist. This question has been considered in two recent cases in this High Court. The first is Chinnaswami Thathachariar v. Srirangam Nallan, 109 Ind. Cas. 771 (5). It was in that case observed that "an office in connection with such institutions must really be regarded as a bundle of duties liable to be performed by the same persons under a particular designation and carrying with it certain emoluments;"

and the applicability of Art. 124 was considered in connection with a claim for recovery of the emoluments attached to an office and it was held that Art. 124 did not apply. The Court, however, was of the opinion that there would be no limitation at all in such a suit. The second is S. A. No. 1523 of 1927. There, Jackson, J., in dealing with Chinnaswami Thathachariar v. Srirangam Nallan (5), whilst agreeing that Art. 124 would not apply to such a suit, declined to accept the view that there is no bar of limitation and was of the opinion that the article applicable would be Art. 120. The applicability of Art. 102 was not discussed in either of these cases. So far as this High Court is concerned, Baradwaja Mudaliar v. Arunachala Gurukkal (1), is the only direct decision upon the point. A reference to Art. 7 is of some assistance in the present case. Under Art. 7 in a claim "for the wages of a household servant, artisan or labourer not provided for by this schedule" one year's period of limitation is given starting from the time when the wages accrue due. This article must be contrasted with Art. 102 which deals with a claim "for wages not otherwise expressly provided for by this schedule". It is clear that Art. 7 and Art. 102 deal with two different classes of wage-earners. The former obviously deals with a lower class of wage earner to that dealt with by Art. 102 in respect of which a three years' period of limitation is given. In spite of the appellant's contention that emoluments such as these cannot correctly be described as "wages", in our opinion, the real test is whether those emoluments are payable by an employer to his servant, in other words, whether the relationship of employer and servant exists. If it does then we think that what is payable can be described as wages. Upon this point also there is a direct decision by a Bench of this High Court, viz : Seshadri Ayyangar v. Ranga Bhattar (6), where Benson and Sundara Ayyar, JJ. say:

"The position of an archaka, though he may have a hereditary tenure in the office is, in our opinion, essentially that of a servant. The trustee is the representative of the temple and the archaka must be subject to his disciplinary authority."

It was, however, contended by the appellant that in that case the Court was merely considering the position of an archaka with reference to the disciplinary powers of the trustees. It is no doubt true that the disciplinary powers of the trustees were there in question but it was essential that the position of the archaka should be established first of all before the right to suspend him by the trustees could be sustained. In our view, the decision in Seshadri Ayyangar v. Ranga Bhattar (6), is correct upon this point; and an archaka is, therefore, a servant of the temple trustees and if he receives perquisites or emoluments, he receives them as a servant and the word "wages" used in Art. 102 seems to us to be a quite sufficiently correct description of what he receives. In our opinion, before the residuary Art. 120, can be applied to a claim, it must be established clearly that it does not fall under any other article. For the reasons we have given, the claim in this suit does not fall under Art. 120 because, in our opinion, it is one to which Art. 102 applies. This Letters Patent Appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

DISTRICT BOARD, BAREILLY AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

U. P. District Boards Act (X of 1922), s. 48—Agenda paper mentioning that draft resolution and report regarding dismissal of Secretary would come up for final decision — Whether constitutes sufficient notice under s. 48—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 21 (b) — Suit for injunction by Secretary of Local Board in Civil Court — Maintainability — (Quære).

Where the agenda paper as issued for a meeting of the District Board made it clear that a draft resolution of the members regarding the dismissal of the Secretary together with the explanation and the report of the Sub-Committee would come up before the Board on a certain date for final decision;

Held, that this undoubtedly notified that final orders would be passed on the matter and that it necessarily included a resolution adopting the draft resolution as proposed by the members and hence constituted sufficient notice within the meaning of s 48, U. P District Boards Act, for a resolution for adopting a resolution for dismissal of the Secretary.

Quaere.—Whether a suit for an injunction by a Secretary of a Local Board filed in a Civil Court is at all maintainable and whether any relief for injunction can be granted in the face of the provisions of s. 21 (b) of the Specific Relief Act?

S. C. A. from the decision of the District Judge of Bareilly, dated October 31, 1933.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Respondents.

Sulaiman, C. J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for an injunction brought by the plaintiff who was the Secretary of the District Board, Bareilly, against the Board restraining the Board from enforcing their resolution of March 8, 1933. A relief for a declaration that the plaintiff's dismissal was against law and unenforceable had been claimed but was withdrawn.

The Courts below have dismissed the plaintiff's suit. In appeal it is contended before us that the decree is wrong.

A question has been raised as to whether a suit for an injunction by a Secretary of Local Board filed in a Civil Court is at all maintainable and whether any relief for injunction can be granted in the face of the provisions of s. 21 (b) of the Indian Specific Relief Act. Under that section a contract which is so dependent on the personal qualifications or volition of the parties or otherwise from its nature is such that the Court cannot enforce specific performance of its material terms cannot be specifically enforced. The question whether the contract of service of the plaintiff was dependent on his personal qualifications or the volition of the parties is of some difficulty and I would not express any final opinion on it at this stage of the case because the case can be disposed of without deciding this question.

Before considering the objections raised by the plaintiff it would be convenient to give briefly the previous history of the matter: Early in January, 1933, a proposal signed by 18 members of the Board in the form of a resolution was received by the Board. It suggested that the Secretary and the Engineer had been negligent in the discharge of their duties and guilty of lack of supervision causing disorder in the affairs of the Board and making its finances suffer heavily and that they were incapable and unworthy of the posts they held. The proposal was that they should be called upon to submit replies to the charges against them within 15 days and in case of their not doing so or their replies being unsatisfactory the question of their dismissal should be considered by the Board. There was a further proposal that the post of the Secretary and the Engineer should be combined. On receipt of this resolution the Chairman called upon the persons complained against to furnish explanations. Copies of the charges as well as copies of the draft resolution were handed over to them. The draft resolution together with the explanations submitted were placed before a meeting of the District Board on February 15, 1933. The resolution was considered and it was resolved by the Board that a Sub-Committee of three members should be appointed to go into the charges and examine the explanations submitted on those charges and to submit a report to the Board before its next meeting on March 8, and that the matter should come up for final decision on that date. Admittedly 0 days before March 8, 1933, a notice was issued notifying that a meeting of the Board would be held on March 8, 1933. On March 1, 1933, an agenda paper was issued which contained, as the matter for consideration, the draft resolution of the 18 members about the dismissal of the Secretary and the Engineer along with the report of the Sub-Committee, the explanations of the Secretary and the Engineer as well as the report of the Special Officer and the resolution of the Board dated February 15, 1933. A complete copy of the draft resolution as well as a copy of the resolution of the Board dated February 15, 1933, were appended. On March 8, 1933, at a full quorum the Board passed a resolution dismissing the plaintiff.

The first objection taken is that there was no due notice given of the business that was transacted. Section 48 of the U. P. District Boards Act requires that no business which is required to be transacted by a special resolution shall be transacted unless previous notice of the intention to transact such business has been given, and under s. 71 the dismissal of a Secretary is one of the matters for which a special resolution is necessary. It also appears that the Board acting under the power conferred upon it by s. 173, has framed certain regulations which require that there should be ten days' notice of a meeting and a seven days' notice of the agenda.

The first objection is that there was no notice given within the meaning of s. 48 of the Act. We are wholly unable to accept this contention. The agenda paper as issued made it perfectly clear that the draft resolution of the members together with the explanations and the report of the Sub-Committee would come up before the Board on March 8, 1933, "for final decision." This undoubtedly notified that final orders would be passed on the matter. That necessarily included a resolution adopting the draft resolution as proposed by the members. We, therefore, think that there is no force in this objection.

The second objection is that under the regulations the agenda papers should have been issued ten days earlier. We are unable to accede to this contention. The notice which is to be issued ten days before the meeting is a notice of the meeting itself, whereas the agenda is a notice of the matters which have to be considered at the meeting. There has in fact been no non-compliance with the regulation for notice of the meeting was given 10 days earlier and the agenda paper was issued seven days before the meeting. This objection also has, therefore, no force.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

Bennet, J.—I concur.

By the Court.—The order of the Court is that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision Petition No. 727 of 1934
July 19, 1934
COLDSTREAM, J.
SAIN – CONVICT – PETITIONER
versus
EMPEROR – OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 199—Complaint, if should specify the section under which accused is to be charged—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 366, 368, 497—Complaint under ss. 366, 368—All requirements of s. 497, fulfilled—Conviction under s. 497, if legal

For the purpose of s. 199 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the complaint need not specify precisely the section under which the accused is to be charged so long as it sets forth matter which, if proved, would warrant a conviction, and a desire is expressed that the accused be punished for what he has done. Jatra Sheikh v. Reiazat Sheikh (1) and Mohan Singh v. Emperor (2), referred to.

If a complaint under ss. 366 and 368, fulfils all the requirements of a complaint under s. 497, and clearly makes an accusation of an offence under that section, then, if the adultery complained of is proved, a conviction under that section will not be illegal on the ground that there has been no complaint as required by s. 199 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

C. R. P. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Sialkot, dated April 12, 1934.

Mr. Amolak Ram Kapur, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Dina Nath Bhasin, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The complainant in the case out of which this revision petition arises made a complaint on March 1, 1932, through an Advocate in the Court of the Additional District Magistrate of Sialkot against Sain and others declaring that they had abducted his wife Taro and that Sain had been having sexual intercourse with her against her will knowing that she was his wife. At the consequent trial Viru gave evidence that Sain had seduced his wife, had had children by her and was now residing with her in Sialkot City. On the facts alleged the trying Magistrate charged Sain under ss. 497 and 498, Penal Code, and convicting him under these sections, sentenced him to six months' rigorous imprisonment on each charge, the sentences to run concurrently. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge of Sialkot maintained the conviction and sentence under s. 497, Penal Code alone.

The petitioner has come to this Court in revision and the point taken before me on his behalf is that the trial was illegal for want of a complaint by the husband without which under the provisions of s. 199, Criminal Procedure Code, no Court had jurisdiction to take congizance of an offence under s. 497, Penal Code.

There is no force in this contention in the circumstances of this particular case. The complaint made by Viru on March 1, 1932, alleged all the ingredients necessary for a conviction under s. 497, that is to say, marriage between Musammat Taro and Viru, sexual intercourse between Musammat Taro and the accused without Viru's consent or connivance, and knowledge on the part of Sain that Musammat Taro was Viru's wife. The fact that the lawyer acting for Viru did not mention s. 497, but only ss. 366 and 368 in the heading of the complaint is immaterial. The complaint clearly accused Sain of adultery with Musammat Taro. For the purpose of s. 199, Criminal Procedure Code, the complaint need not specify precisely the section under which the accused is to be charged so long as it sets forth matter which, if proved, would warrant a conviction, and a desire is expressed that the accused be punished for what he has done. As pointed out by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Jatra Sheikh v. Reazat Sheikh (1), the intention of s. 199, Criminal Procedure Code is to prevent Magistrates enquiring of their own motion into cases connected with marriage unless the husband or other person authorised moves them to do so. The same view was taken by the Allahabad High Court in Mohan Singh v. Emperor (2). It is true that the present case is not on all fours with those dealt with in the judgments referred to, inasmuch as in both those cases the conviction of the accused had been under s. 498, which was regarded as a minor offence of the kind punishable under s. 366 (the offence specifically mentioned in the complaint both in those cases and here) while in the present case the offence of which the present petitioner has been convicted, that is to say adultery, could not be so described. They do, however, appear to lend support to the proposition that if a complaint described in its heading as one under ss. 366 and 368 fulfils all the requirements of a complaint under s. 497, and clearly makes an accusation of an offence under that section, then, if the adultery complained of is proved, a conviction under that section will not be illegal on the ground that there has been no complaint as required by s. 19 ', Criminal Procedure Code.

Holding that in this case the Court was moved to take cognizance of the case by a complaint of adultery made by Viru I find that the trial and the conviction of Sain under s. 497, Penal Code, was not illegal.

The petitioner's Counsel contends that in the circumstances of this case the sentence imposed is excessive. I do not agree and I note that the learned Judge in Chambers in rejecting the petitioner's application for bail described the petitioner's conduct as having been most reprehensible. I dismiss the petition.

Mortgage—Redemption—Suit by prior mortgagee without impleading subsequent mortgagee—Decree —Purchase of property by prior mortgagee in execution—Suit for redemption by puisne mortgagee—Amount, how to be ascertained—Liability to interest.

Where a prior mortgagee obtains a decree on foot of his mortgage and purchases the mortgaged property in execution of his own decree, to which the puisne mortgagee was not a party, the sale cannot be considered to be of no effect at all. It effectively transfers the mortgagor's right to the prior mortgagee (auction-purchaser), as between the mortgagor and the prior mortgagee, though the sale is not binding on the subsequent mortgagee, who can, in spite of it, exercise his right of redemption. When such a suit for redemption is filed, the puisne mortgagee can set off against the mortgage money the net profits from the property received by the prior mortgagee as auction purchaser. At the same time he is liable to pay interest on the mortgage amount up to date to the prior mortgagee. In the absence of evidence to show whether in the years which followed the auction sale, the profits of the property were sufficient to pay the interest each year on the aggregate amount on which interest was running, if the prior mortgagee claims that redemption may be allowed on payment of a certain sum as due to him on the date when he obtained possession, the Court may pass a decree for redemption on the puisne mortgagee accepting that amount. Nannu Mal v. Ram Chander (1), followed. Lalta Prasad v. Kafayat Husain (5), explained. Nannu Mal v. Ram Charan Lal (2), Muthammal v. Razu Pillai (3) and Jnanendra Nath Singh v. Shoreshi Charan Mitra (4), referred to.

Judgment.—A Bench of this Court, o which one of us was a member, remitte the following issue to the lower Court fo finding:—

"What amount, if any, is due to the defendant mortgagee from the mortgagors on the basis of th mortgage deeds, dated July 21, 1880 and July 27 1882."

For the detailed circumstances in whic it was found necessary to have a findin on the above issue the remand order shoul be seen. For the purposes of our decisio on the issue remitted to the lower Cour whose finding is before us, it is necessar to state the facts very briefly. The defen dant-respondents were mortgagees of a $12\frac{1}{2}$ biswansi share in a certain villag under the deeds, one of July 21, 1880, an the other of July 27, 1882. The plaintiff took a mortgage of the same share to gether with another share under a dee of a subsequent date. The defendant obtained a decree for sale on foot of thei mortgages in 1886, and purchased th share themselves in execution of thei decree. They obtained possession of th property and have been in possession eve since. They had omitted to implead th plaintiffs as a party, and the latter there fore were not bound by the result of tha suit. The plaintiffs subsequently brough a suit on foot of their mortgage and ha the same property sold. They were them selves declared to be the auction-purcha sers in 1916. The suit, which has give rise to this appeal, was brought by th plaintiffs on May 15, 1928, for redemptio of the mortgages in favour of the defend ants, to which reference has already bee made. It was alleged that the mortgag money due under the aforesaid deeds ha been fully satisfied by the usufruct of th share which has been in possession of th defendant since 1886. The defendant denied this allegation and claimed a certai sum as a condition of redemption. They alleged that they were entitled to th entire decretal amount with interest up t date. This Court held by its remand orde that the plaintiffs were bound to pay t the defendants the amount due under th two mortgages. The issue remitted to th lower Court accordingly mentioned th question arising between the parties.

The lower Court has returned a findin which is not quite definite. It is pointe it that the defendants claimed by their ritten statement Rs. 1,926-2-6 which re-esents the mortgage money due under ie two deeds on the date of the decree assed in their favour. They claimed no nterest subsequent to the date on which ossession was delivered to them. They eem to imply that the plaintiffs should ay the same amount for redemption now s they would have had to pay if they ad been impleaded and desired to re-eem. The lower Court is, however, of pinion that, but for this defence, the efendants would have been entitled to a rger sum of money representing the ecretal amount above referred to and terest thereon upto date, the total of hich comes to Rs. 6,457-12. Apparently ie lower Court has left it to us to decide hether one or the other of the two figures ould be considered to be the sum due nder the two mortgages.

The learned Advocate for the plaintiff-ppellants has raised a question which does ot appear to have been considered by the wer Court. He argues that the account etween the parties should be made up by iving credit to the defendants for interest ccruing on the mortgages, but the profits erived from the property purchased by iem should be set off each year against ie interest, and that so far as the profits ere in excess of the interest each year, ey should be set off against part of the incipal. It is contended that if account e made on this footing, the entire mort-age money due under the mortgage deeds question will be found to have been paid f and that some surplus is due to the aintiff-appellants. Unfortunately the de-ndant-respondents are not represented fore us. Their learned Counsel, Mr. anak Chand has stated that he has no structions. From the pleadings and from e attitude they adopted when the order remand was passed it is clear that they ntested the appellant's right to have the ofits set off against interest each year; id we cannot give effect to the plaintiff ppellants' contention as if there is no ntest on the point. The first question, erefore, which we have to decide is ether the plaintiff-appellants are, in w, entitled to have the profits of the operty purchased by the defendant-spondents in execution of their mortgage cree set off against the interest and, far as it was in excess of the interest gainst the principal.

Where a prior mortgagee obtains a decree on foot of his mortgage and purchases the mortgaged property in execution of his own decree, to which the puisne mortgagee was not a party, the sale cannot be considered to be of no effect at all. It effectively transfers the mortgagor's right to the prior mortgagee (auction-purchaser), as between the mortgagor and the prior mortgagee, though the sale is not binding on the subsequent mortgagee, who can, in spite of it, exercise his right of redemption. This has been held by a Full Bench of this Court in Nannu Mal v. Ram Chander (1). Applying that rule to the facts of the present case we have to accept the position that the mortgagors' rights were transferred to the defendant-respondents in 1886; but the plaintiff-appellants, who were no party, are entitled to redeem. In the exercise of their right of redemption they are entitled to treat the prior mortgages as still subsisting. Not being bound by the decree they can ignore it. The necessary corrolary to this is that account of the mortgage money is to be made up on the basis of the stipulations contained in the mortgage-deeds. In redeeming the mortgages they must pay the principal and interest calculated up to date. At the same time, the prior mortgagees who have been in possession of the mortgaged property by virtue of the auction sale held in execution of their own mortgage decree, should account for the usufruct received by them. They have to do this, not because their possession can be traced to anything in the mortgages in their favour, which were simple, but to the fact that the usufruct received by them should be considered to be tantamount to payments made by the mortgagors. In this connection it should not be overlooked that as between the prior mortgagees and the mortgagors the latter's rights were assigned to the prior mortgagees under the auction sale in lieu of the mortgage money. The prior mortgagees have been in receipt of the usufruct as against the mortgagor in consideration of the whole or part of the mortgage money which as against the mortgagors should be considered to have been wiped out. Any payments which the mortgagor makes to the prior mortgagee enures for the benefit of the puisne mortgagee also. If the prior mortgagees be considered to be in possession of the mortgaged property under an arrangement made by the Court in the auction sale on behalf of the mortgagor to the effect that the prior mortgagees may take possession of the mortgaged property and retain it as the owners thereof in full or part satisfaction of the mortgage money subject to the right of the puisne mortgagee's right to redeem, there can be no doubt that the usufruct received by the prior mortgagees under such arrangement should, in relation to the puisne mortgagee, be considered to be payments made by the mortgagor. Otherwise the prior mortgagees would have it both ways. On the one hand they insist on payment of the mortgage money consisting of the principal and interest calculated up to date, and on the other hand they are allowed to appropriate the usufruct which, but for the auction sale in their own suit, would have been taken by the mortgagor. This view was taken by a Division Bench of this Court of which one of us was a party in Nannu Mal v. Ram Charan Lal (2). To the same effect is the view of the Madras High Court in Muthammal v. Razu Pillai (3), which was followed by this Court in the case referred to above. The Calcutta High Court has taken the same view in Jnanendra Nath Singh v. Shoreshi Charan Mitra (4). There is a passage in Lalta Prasad v. Kafayat Husain (5), which is relied in support of the contrary view. The question which the learned Judges were called upon to decide was not quite similar to the one before us. In repelling the contention that interest should cease from the date the prior mortgagee obtained possession under the auction sale in his favour held in a suit on foot of his own mortgage, to which the puisne mortgagee was not a party, the learned Judges observed:—

"It is argued that as Lalta Prasad has obtained possession of the property, no interest should be allowed to him from the date of his obtaining possession. We think there is no force in this contention, as Lalta Prasad obtained possession of the property not as mortgagee but as an auction purchaser in execution of his own mortgage decree."

The view herein expressed is right so far as it goes. It is not open to the puisne mortgagee to say that, though he treats the prior mortgage as still subsisting, yet interest should be calculated only up to the date on which the prior mortgagee obtained possession after his purchase in his own suit against the mortgagor. The very hypothesis on which the puisne mortgagee claims redemption precludes the possibility of interest being calculated only up to the date when possession was obtained by prior mortgagee under the sale in his favour. The puisne mortgagee must pay interest up to date since he treats the mortgages as still subsisting. The learned Judges do not go further than this. They did not hold that the usufruct received by the prior mortgagee in his capacity as auction purchaser should not be set off against the mortgage money. They were not called upon to consider this question, the only argument before them being that interest should cease from the date of the auction purchase by the prior mortgagee. It is true that the learned Judges allowed the entire principal and interest without making any allowance for the usufruct for which no claim had been made and which had probably not been proved. As already stated, the question which has been raised before us was not considered by the learned Judges in that case. The passage quoted above is, therefore, no authority for the proposition contrary to that recognized in Nannu Mal v. Ram Charan Lal (2) and in the Madras and Calcutta cases, to which reference has already been made. The conclusion which we have arrived at is that while the defendant-respondents are, on the one hand, entitled to have an account taken of what is due to them under the mortgage deeds of 1880 and 1882, they are, on the other hand, liable to give credit for the net profit received by them every year after they entered into possession.

The plaintiff-appellants are faced with a peculiar difficulty in showing that the mortgage money has been satisfied out of the usufruct. The mortgage deed carries interest at the rate of Re 0-14-0 per cent. per mensem compoundable every year. The defendant-respondents obtained possession in 1886. It is not known what amount of principal, interest and compound interest was due to the prior mortgagees in 1886, nor is there any evidence to show whether in the years which followed the auction sale the profits of the property were sufficient to pay the interest each year on the aggrega-amount on which the interest was running. It is quite possible that for many years after 1886 the net profit was not equal to the interest which went on accumulating till it reached an unknown high figure. All that the plaintiff-appellants have been able to establish in the present case is that during the years ranging from 1327 Fasli (1920) to 1338 Fasli (1931), the profits of the property were in excess of the interest calculated on the original principal amount at the contractual rate. We cannot, however assume that in 1920, (1327 Fasli) interest for all preceding years had been paid off, so that interest was running only on the original principal. As already pointed out, it is possible that the aggregate amount on which interest was running had swallowed to a figure on which interest at the contractual rate exceeded the annual profit accruing between 1920 and 1931. In these circumstances, we cannot accept the contention put forward on behalf of the plaintiff-appellants that the entire mortgage money was satisfied by the usufruct and the next best thing that can be done for the plaintiff-appellants to accept the defendants case that redemption may be allowed to the plaintiff on payment of Rs. 1,926-2-6 due under the two mortgages on the date when the defendants obtained possession.

The result is that we pass a decree, in supersession of the decree of the lower Court, for redemption on payment of Rs. 1,926-2-6. Parties shall receive and pay costs in proportion to success and failure. Three months' time is allowed for payment.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 114, 302—Two persons going to commit robbery—Armed with guns—Retreating on coming of villagers—Shots fired while trying to escape—One of the villagers killed from shot fired by one of the persons—Other person also is guilty under s. 302 read with ss. 34 and 114—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 274 and 276—18 jurors summoned in murder case—8 present—7 selected and trial with their aid—Trial valid.

Two men armed with guns entered into the shop and put the inmates into fear of instant hurt and demanded the keys. Some of the inmates managed to escape, others were put to terror. About this time many villagers came up and wanted to know what was the matter whereupon one of the intruders opened the door and threatened the villagers The intruders fired two shots and got out of the room and proceeded to go away. The villagers pursued them at a distance. The offenders continued to fire at them. At a certain place in the pursuit one of the pursuers came very near the two men and shouted, whereupon one of the two, shot and killed him :

Held, that it was not the primary intention of the two persons to kill any of their pursuers. Their intention was merely to effect their escape from the pursuers. But from the circumstances, it may be concluded that their intention was to effect their escape even though for that purpose it was necessary to shoot any of the pursuers mortally and in the circumstances of this case, the other person who did not shoot should also be convicted under s. 302 read with s. 34 or s. 114, Penal Code. Barendra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (1), referred to.

In a murder case 18 jurors were duly summoned for the trial of the case. But when the Judge took up the trial and the names of the 18 jurors were called, only eight of them were found present in Court. Thereupon the Judge chose seven of them and held the trial with the aid of seven jurors:

Held, that it was not the duty of the Judge to send his Court officers to search for jurors in adjacent Sessions Court. The constitution of a jury of seven, in the circumstances, was not, an illegality such as would render the trial invalid. Serajul Ismail v. Emperor (2), Dwarika Malo v. Emperor (3), Amir Khan v. Emperor (4), Shaheb Ali v. Emperor (5), Emperor v. Tamiz-ud-din (6) and Emperor v. Erman Ali (7), referred to. M. C. Ghose, J.—This is an appeal by Mukunda Murari Pal alias Jatindra Pal alias Harendra Chandra De who has been convicted under s. 393 read with s. 398 and s. 75, Indian Penal Code, and also under s. 302 read with s. 114, Indian Penal Code. He was sentenced under the first section to transportation for life and under the second section sentenced to death. There is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge for confirmation of the sentence of death. The facts in short are that about 2 to 3 A. M. on May 1, 1931, two men armed with guns entered into the shop of Sita Nath Sil at Bahadurabad and put the inmates into fear of instant hurt and demanded the keys. Some of the inmates managed to escape, others were put to terror. About this time many villagers came up and wanted to know what was the matter whereupon one of the intruders opened the door and threatened the villagers. The intruders fired two shots and got out of the room and proceeded to go away. The villagers pursued them at a distance. The offenders continued to fire at them. At a certain place in the pursuit one of the pursuers Astha Lal Mali, came very near the two men and shouted, whereupon one of the two, not the present accused, shot and killed Astha Lal Mali. The villagers, however, continued to pursue the men who continued to fire shots. One of the shots struck and caused slight injury to witness Salim. After a long pursuit the two men at last ceased firing and the villagers concluded that their ammunition was exhausted. Then the villagers beat them down, captured them together with two guns and brought them back to Bahadurabad where they were kept in the local zamindar's cutchery. A chowkidar went to the Thana and the Police arrived in the morning and took charge of the two captives and the two guns.

The two men took the Police to a certain boat where a dog prevented the Police party from entering. The present accused caught the dog and tied it and thereafter the boat was searched and the present accused produced a bag containing gold and silver coins from the sand near the boat. The two men were duly sent up and were committed to the Court of Sessions. While the trial was pending one of the men, Ismail, died in prison. It appears that the present accused who was allowed bail absconded from bail by reason of which the trial was not held till more than two years after the occurrence. The learned Advocate for the appellant has read the whole of the evidence before us. It is urged that many of the witnesses who were said to have seen the occurrence have not been examined. It appears that there were 5 men inside the shop when the offenders entered. Of them three men were examined in the Sessions Court and two men were tendered for cross-examination. Of the pursuers, who amounted to a large number, a good many have been examined in the Sessions Court. There is, in our opinion, no prejudice caused to the accused because all the pursuers were not examined. The two guns which were found in the possession of the two offenders were proved by evidence to have been stolen shortly before the occurrence. It is urged that a certain bullet was found on the body of the deceased but the bullet was not produced in the Sessions Court and further that no expert was examined to show that the guns had been recently fired. We are of opinion that these omissions have not cast any doubt upon the prosecution story. Upon the whole of the evidence it is clear that the jury had sufficient materials in finding the present accused guilty under s. 393 read with s. 398 and s. 75, Indian Penal Code.

It is urged that the conviction under s. 302 read with s. 114 is wrong in law inasmuch as there is no evidence that the present accused abetted his companion Ismail to shoot and kill Astha Lal Mali. The charge of the learned Sessions Judge on this point has been read and commented upon before us. There is no doubt on the evidence that the accused's companion Ismail deliberately shot and killed Astha Lal Mali and thereby committed an offence of murder punishable under s. 302, Indian Penal Code. The question is whether in the circumstances it can be said that the accused abetted his companion in committing the murder. Under s. 107, Indian Penal Code, a person abets the doing of a thing who (1) instigates any person to do that thing; (2) engages with one or more other person or persons in any conspiracy for the doing of that thing, if an act or illegal omission takes place in pursuance of that conspiracy, and in order to the doing of that thing; or (3) intentionally aids, by any act or illegal omission, the doing of that thing.

As the learned Sessions Judge rightly pointed out to the jury in the present case there is nothing to show that the present accused instigated Ismail or intentionally aided him to commit the murder. The question is whether he engaged in a conspiracy with Ismail for the commission of the murder. For this purpose, the whole of the circumstances must be taken into account. The two men were armed with guns and had plenty of ammunition and they entered the shop for the purpose of committing robbery. When they were disturbed in their act by a large number of villagers they decided to retreat, and in so retreating, they fired a large number of shots. It is clear that their primary intention was to effect their escape from their pursuers and it was their determination to prevent the pursuers from arresting them. It may be conceded that it was not their primary intention to kill any of their pursuers. Their intention was merely to effect their escape from the pursuers. But from the circumstances, it may be concluded that their intention was to effect their cial Small Causes Courts Act and is not cognisable by a Small Cause Court.

The intention of Art. 13 is to exclude claims to the somewhat arbitrary dues designated as meras and resums from the cognisance of the Small Cause Court.

Petition under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Tirupati in S. C. S. No. 927 of 1930.

Mr. P. Srikantan, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Ramachandra Ayyar, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This Civil Revision Petition arises out of a Small Cause suit filed by the Rajah of Kalahasthi to recover a sum of Rs. 263-11-0 said to be due as jodi or meras from the agraharamdars of Parlapalle Agraharam for Faslis 1336 to 1338. There have been several previous suits to recover the same dues for earlier Faslis, of which O. S. No 393 of 1905 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Tirupati ended in a Second Appeal reported as Rajah of Kalahasthi v. Kamall Shama (1). The learned District Munsif has decreed the claim subject to a certain deduction as set off, and this petition has been presented by two of the agrharamdars.

The main contention raised is that the suit was of a kind excepted from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court as falling within Art. 13 of the second schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The Article excepts,

"A suit to enforce payment of the allowance or fees respectively called milikana and hakk or of cesses or other dues when the cesses or dues are payable to a person by reason of his interest in immovable property or in an hereditary office or in a shrine or other religious institution."

I do not think that any assistance in deciding this point can be obtained from the earlier litigation. It is true that in the appeal and the Second Appeal in O. S. No. 393 of 1905 it was assumed, in considering the issue of res judicata that the previous suit (O. S. No. 787 of 1902) was of a Small Cause nature, but no question seems to have been raised as to the applicability of Art. 13. The point has to be decided here for the first time, on a consideration of the nature of the dues claimed. The original deed of grant to the agraharamdars is not forthcoming, but there is a document of the year 1803, which gives details of the various reasons and means which the agraharamdars had been previously paying in kind and which at the request of the agraharamdars were converted into fixed cash payments. Although these payments have been described by the plaintiff as jodi, I think it is clear that they are not of the nature of rent at all. They are customary dues payable to the Rajah in consideration of certain things done by him or certain expenses borne by the zemindari-performing ubhayams in a temple, visiting the village, employing a Diwan, employing a karnam, etc. They are styled meras or resums, and a mera is defined in Wilson's glossary as "a portion of crop given as perquisite to holders of proprietary rights in village lands or to hereditary village officers and servants, out of the common stock on the threshing floor". It will be seen how closely this definition resembles the terms of Art. 13 in each the proprietor of an estate and the holder of a hereditary office are designated as recipients. It appears to me that the intention of the article is to exclude claims to the somewhat arbitrary dues designated as meras and resums from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court, and that for a very good reason. As the litigation itself shows, difficult questions are raised both as to the original liability for these payments and as to the conditions upon which the landholder may continue to exact them. These questions ought not to be decided summarily, and, so far as the right of appeal is concerned, finally by a Small Cause Court. The learned Advocate for the respondent, while contending that such dues do not fall within Art. 13, has been unable to specify any other due which does so fall. It appears to me that, in general, they are payable to the plaintiff by reason of his interest in immovable property, i. e., as landholder and that in other respects the language of the Article is wide enough to cover them. Several cases have been cited to me, but I have not derived much assistance from them. Most of them relate to what is in fact rent, variously described as Kattubadi (1) Mullapudi Balakrishnayya v. Venkatanarasimha Appa Rao (2); Melvaram (2) Krishnaswami Naidu v. Sriramulu Naidu (3);

(2) 19 M 329.

Poruppu (3) Ramaswami Chettiar v. Muthu Vijya Raghunatha Doraisingam (4), Chontayi Krishna Mahanty v. Gangadhara Padhi (5). In one or two cases, such as Maharajah of Vizianagaram v. Kota Veeranna (6), and Krishnaswami Naidu v. Sriramula Naidu (3), the dues collected were merely passed on by the landholder. Even if this be true of the Samprati Mera claimed in this case, which is said to be a payment for the services of a karnam, it is only one among other meras, of which the same cannot be said. Nor is this a case of a voluntary payment such as was dealt with in Raja of Venkatagiri v. Budam Venkatasubbayya (7).

My conclusion accordingly is that the suit was of a nature excepted from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court. For the reasons which I have already given, I think that its trial by Small Cause procedure was objectionable, and that, since the decree was passed without jurisdiction this Court ought to interfere in revision. I accordingly allow the petition, set aside the decree of the lower Court, and direct it to return the plaint for presentation in accordance with law.

The petitioners will have their costs in both Courts.

BANDHOO AHIR AND OTHERS—ACCUSED

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 333—Assault on Sub-Inspector in consequence of what he had done to accused—Accused, when can be convicted for such offence against public servant—Held, 18 months' rigorous imprisonment not enough.

Under the provision of law contained in s. 333, Penal Code, a person who causes grievous hurt to a public servant can be convicted under three circumstances; (1) when grievous hurt is caused while the public servant is in the discharge of his duty as such public servant; in this case motive and object are irrelevant; (2) when a public servant is prevented or deterred from discharging his duty as such public servant; in this case it is necessary that the object of the accused should be to deter the public servant from discharging his duty but it is not necessary to prove any motive; (3) when the public servant is assaulted in consequence of anything done or attempted to be done by that public servant in the discharge of his duty; in this case it is not necessary that the public servant should be discharging his duty at the time of the assault. The object, too, is irrelevant. The only thing that has got to be seen is the motive. The last circumstance mentioned above applies to a case, where the assault is committed on the Sub-Inspector, in consequence of what he had done against the accused.

[In this particular case, considering the high-handedness of the offence under s. 333, Penal Code, it was held, that the proper sentence was a sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment and that 18 months' rigorous imprisonment was not sufficient]

Cr. A. from an order of the Third Additional Sessions Judge, Gorakhpur, dated June 18, 1934.

Messrs. Ismail and N. Upadhaya, for the Crown.

Messrs. Kalim Jafri and Kanhaiya Lal Misra, for the Accused.

Judgment.—Bandhu Ahir, Badal Dube and Magan Beldar were placed on their trial before the Additional Sessions Judge of Gorakhpur for offences under ss. 307, 325 and 333, Penal Code. They were acquitted of offences under ss. 307 and 333, Penal Code, but were convicted of an offence under s. 325, Penal Code. The Local Government has filed an appeal against the acquittal of the three accused under s. 333, Penal Code, and in the appeal of the Local Government the accused are represented by Mr. Kalim Jafri; Badal Dube and Magan Beldar have appealed against their conviction under s. 325, Penal Code, and are represented by Mr. Kanhaiya Lal Misra. Bandhu has remained content with his conviction under s. 325, Penal Code. We have heard the learned Government Advocate in support of the Government appeal and Mr. Jafri in answer. We have also heard Mr. Misra who has taken us through the entire record in connection with the appeal filed by Badal and Magan.

The facts alleged by the prosecution are that Nurul Huda, the Sub-Inspector in charge of Gola thana, had made several reports against the three accused and therefore, on February 7, 1934, when the Sub-Inspector had gone to Gorakhpur to give evidence in a criminal case, the three accused surrounded the ekka of the Sub-Inspector and struck him with lathis. Bandhu was caught on the spot, but the other two managed to run away. Before the Committing Magistrate the two accused escape even though for that purpose it was necessary to shoot any of the pursuers mortally. There can be no other conclusion from the fact of their constant shooting. It is true that if none of the pursuers had come within the range of their shots no one would have been killed. Astha Lal Mali happened to run near the pursuers and immediately one of the offenders turned and shot him dead. That person was the accused's companion Ismail. From these circumstances the jury, in our opinion, were right to conclude that the accused conspired with Ismail to commit the robbery and to effect their escape if necessary by shooting with their guns. In the prosecution of the object of their conspiracy the accused's companion shot Astha Lal Mali dead. There is thus no doubt that accused Mukunda Murari Pal has been rightly convicted under s. 302 read with s. 114, Indian Penal Code. Indeed in the circumstances of this case, the accused might well have been convicted under s. 302 read with s. 34, Indian Penal Code: see the case of Barendra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (1).

A preliminary objection was taken that the whole trial was illegal inasmuch as the jury were not properly constituted. The facts are that 18 jurors were duly summoned for the trial of the case. But when the learned Judge took up the trial and the names of the 18 jurors were called one by one, only eight of them were found present in Court. Thereupon the learned Sessions Judge chose seven of them and held the trial with the aid of seven jurors. It is provided by s. 274, Criminal Procedure Code that where an accused person is charged with an offence punishable with death the jury shall consist of not less than seven persons and, if practicable, of nine persons. In numerous cases of this Court it has been held that the meaning of this section is that in trying an offence punishable with death the jury shall consist of nine persons, but if it be not practicable to have nine persons then it may be held with the aid of seven persons. Section 326, Criminal Procedure Code provides that the number of jurors to be summoned shall not be less than double the number required. Upon the two sections it has been held that in a murder case at least 18 jurors must be summoned for the trial: see Serajul Ismali v. Emperor (2), Dwarika Mali v. Emperor (3), Amir Khan v. Emperor (4), Shahebali v. Emperor (5). In the case of Emperor v. Tamiz-ud-Din (6) the learned Judges went so far as to hold that where less than 18 jurors were summoned though nine jurors attended and were chosen without objection, yet the jury were not properly constituted according to the above sections. This case, however, was overruled by the Full Bench decision in the case of Emperor v. Erman Ali (7) where the Court held that in a murder case where 14 jurors were summoned and nine of them were chosen without objection the trial was not bad merely by reason of the fact that only 14 jurors were summoned. In the present case, 18 jurors were summoned and there can be no objection on the score that a proper number of jurors were not summoned under s. 326, Criminal Procedure Code. The question is whether the learned Judge duly complied with s. 274, Criminal Procedure Code, according to which he should have considered whether it was practicable to have nine jurors. Upon considering the fact that only eight jourors were present, it is clear that there were not a sufficient number of persons from whom nine jurors might have been chosen. The question is whether the learned Judge complied with s. 276, Criminal Procedure Code which provides inter alia that in case of deficiency of persons summoned the number of jurors required may, with the leave of the Court, be chosen from such other persons as may be present. It is apparent in this case that there were no such persons present in the Court of the learned Sessions Judge. It has been urged by the learned Advocate for the appellant that there are four or five Sessions Courts in Mymen Sing and it may be presumed that there were Sessions cases going on in one or other Court on that date, and it is urged that it was the duty of the learned Sessions Judge to send his Court Officers to those other Court-rooms and bring from there such jurymen as were available. The question is whether s. 276, Criminal Procedure Code, casts a duty upon the trial Judge to send his Court Officers to adjacent Sessions Courts to find out men to serve as jurors in his Court. Upon considering the wording of the section, we are of opinion, that no such duty is cast upon the trial Judge. The section merely says that the number of jurors required may, with the leave of the Court, be chosen from such persons as may be present. The meaning of the words is plain. It cannot, in our opinion, be held to mean that it was the duty of the Judge to send his Court Officers to search for jurors in adjacent Sessions Courts. We are, therefore, of opinion, that in this case as there were not nine suitable persons present in Court it was not practicable for the trial Judge to empanel nine jurors. The constitution of a jury of seven, in the circumstances, was not in our opinion, an illegality such as would render the trial invalid. The preliminary objection is overruled.

It remains to consider the sentence of death which has been passed upon the appellant. The learned Sessions Judge recorded his age to be about 28 to 30 years. The Committing Magistrate estimated his age to be about 25 years. He did not fire the fatal shot. He fired many shots from his guns but it does not appear that he caused hurt to anyone. His companion who fired the fatal shot died in jail while he was under trial. Having regard to all the circumstances, we are of opinion, that a sentence of transportation for life will meet the ends of justice in this case. In the result, the convictions are upheld and the sentence of death is reduced to transportation for life.

Ameer Ali, J.—I agree. I desire only to emphasise that we have no intention of laying down any general rule as to what is or is not to be considered "practicable" under any particular set of circumstances.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 3—Suit for possession of land and demolition of constructions against several defendants—Decree—Appeal—Death of one defendant during pendency of appeal—Legal representatives not brought on record—Dismissal of suit by lower Appellate Court—Procedure, if proper.

The plaintiff's suit for recovery of possession of a plot of land and for demolition of certain constructions made by the defendants thereon, was decreed by the trial Court. The defendants, eight in number, filed an appeal in the lower Appellate Court, during the pendency of which one of the defendants died and his legal representatives were not brought on the record. The appeal was accepted and the plaintiff's suit dismissed in toto:

Held, on second appeal, that any one of the defendants could have resisted the plaintiff's claim to possession and to demolition of the constructions made by the defendants. As anyone of them could have impugned the entire decree and the lower Appellate Court did set aside the entire decree at their instance and dismissed the plaintiff's suit in toto, no fault could be found with the procedure of that Court and its decree was not open to challenge.

S. C. A. from the decision of the First Sub-Judge Meerut, dated March 16, 1934.

Mr. K. C. Mital, for the Appellants.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal and arises from a suit for recovery of possession of a plot of land and for demolition of certain constructions admittedly made by the defendants thereon. The plaintiffs' case was that the defendants had encroached upon the plaintiffs' land in 1927 and that they had no right to built on it. The defence was that the land was the property of the defendants and that the constructions complained of by the plaintiffs had been made 30 years before the suit. The plaintiffs' suit was decreed by the trial Court. The defendants, eight in number, preferred an appeal to the lower Appellate Court. The appellant has filed an affidavit which shows that during the pendency of the appeal before the lower Appellate Court one of the defendants namely, Amar Singh, died and his legal representatives were not brought on the record. Apparently this fact was not brought to the notice of the lower Court when the appeal was heard. The learned Judge accepted the appeal and dismissed "the plaintiffs' suit in toto." One of the grounds taken in second appeal is that the legal representatives of one of the defendants not having been brought on the records the entire appeal should be deemed to have abated, and that in any case the decree of the trial Court should not have neen reversed so far as it affects the deceased Amar Singh. I am unable to give effect to this contention. The appellants in the lower Appellate Court were the defendants. It cannot be disputed that any one of them could have resisted the plaintiffs' claim to possession and to demolition of the constructions made by the defendants. If Amar Singh had not originally joined in the appeal, the remaining seven or, for the matter of that, anyone of them, could have appealed from the decree of the trial Court, impugning it in its entirety. The fact that Amar Singh died can only lead to the conclusion that the appeal in the lower Appellate Court abated so far as he was concerned; but the appeal could not abate so far as the surviving appellants were concerned. As anyone of them could have impugned the entire decree and the lower Appellate Court did set aside the entire decree at their instance and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit in toto no fault can be found with the procedure of that Court. In my opinion the decree of the lower Appellate Court dismissing the plaintiffs' suit is not open to challenge.

The only other question argued before me is whether the conclusion arrived at by the lower Appellate Court on the main question on which his decree proceeds is correct. That conclusion is that the defendants constructed the 'gher' in question not in 1927, as alleged by the plaintiffs, but 30 years before the institution of the suit. It is the plaintiffs' own case that in constructing the 'gher' the defendants were guilty of an act of trespass. This being so, the trespass complained of by the plaintiffs took place 30 years before the institution of this suit. The logical result of this finding is that the defendants were in adverse possession for more than 12 years before the institution of this suit. The learned Advocate for the appellants argues that the defendants did not take the plea of adverse possession in so many words in the written statement. This is true; but I think it is clearly implied in the defendants' allegation that they constructed the 'gher' 30 years before the suit. There was no other object in making an allegation of this kind. It was understood in that sense by the Courts below; and since a finding has been arrived at, effect must be given to it. The only manner in which effect can be given to such a finding is that the plaintiffs' suit should be held to be barred by limitation. This appeal has no force and is dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 89, 92 (3), s. 148—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 166—Deposit of amount for setting aside sale—Deposit not made due to act of Court—Effect of—'Actus curiae neminem gravabit'—Applicability of.

It may be taken as settled law that under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code, read with r. 92, (3) and Art. 166 of the Limitation Act, it is necessary that not only the application but also the deposit must be made within thirty days of the date of the sale. Section 148 has no application to such cases and the period of thirty days cannot be extended by the Courts. But at the same time a party litigant ought not to be penalized when he found it impossible to comply with the requirements of the statute, not because of any fault of his own, but by reason of the action or inaction of the Court. On the happening of such a contingency, the maxim "actus curiae neminem gravabit" (an act of Court prejudices no man) applies. Consequently, when a deposit is not made in time due to the Court's action, the person depositing will be deemed to have deposited at the time he was ready to deposit. Mohamad Akbar v. Sukhdeo Pandey (1), Munna Lal v. Radha Kishen (2), Gajadhar Das v. Ram Sumiran Dube (3) and Gopala Krishna Pillai v. Kunjithapatham Pillai (4), referred to.

C. R. P. from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Jhelum, dated July 11, 1933.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Amar Nath Chona, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—In execution of a money decree for Rs. 270-12-0 obtained by respondent No. 1 against the petitioner, his land was attached and sold for Rs. 775. The auction-sale was held on March 9, 1933, and April 18, was fixed for confirmation after hearing the objections (if any) of the judgment-debtor. In the meantime on March 28, 1933, the judgment-debtor presented in the Executing Court an application under O. XXI, r. 89, stating that he was prepared to pay the decretal amount together with five per cent. of the purchase price and praying that on his depositing the amount the sale be set aside. He also prayed that he be informed of the exact amount to be deposited. On the same day the Court recorded an order that the amount payable was Rs. 315, which might be deposited in the Treasury, and the case brought up for hearing on the date fixed, i. e., on April 18.

On April 8, 1933, the petitioner presented another application stating that the amount be ordered to be deposited and the sale set aside. It is clear from the uncontradicted affidavit of the petitioner that he had actually brought the money with him but under the rules the deposit had to be made in the Treasury after the chalan had been obtained from the Court. As the exact amount to be deposited had already been calculated, all that was necessary to do was to issue the chalan. But instead of doing so the learned Sub-Judge quite unnecessarily sent the application to the office for kaifiyat. The next day April 9, was a holiday and, therefore, the kaifiyat was put up on the 10th, when the learned Judge passed a fresh order that the amount be deposited in the Treasury, and issued a chalan accordingly. The petitioner says that he went immediately to the Treasury with the money, but it had become too late and he was asked to come the next day. The respondent, however, does not admit this allegation. In the view which I take of the case it is not necessary to determine whether the allegation of the Treasurer actually asking the petitioner to come the next day is correct. It is common ground that the amount was actually deposited on April 11.

At the date of hearing (April 18), the auction-purchaser objected that the deposit had not been made within thirty days of the date of the sale as required by Art. 166, Limitation Act, and, therefore, the sale could not be set aside. This objection has been accepted by the Courts below and the sale confirmed. It may be taken as settled law that under O. XXI, r. 89, read with r. 92 (3) and Art. 166, Limitation Act, it is necessary that not only the application but also the deposit be made within thirty days of the date of the sale. It has also been held in several cases that s. 148 has no application to such cases and the period of thirty days cannot be extended by the Courts. But it is equally well-setted that a party litigant ought not to be penalized when he found it impossible to comply with the requirements of the statute, not because of any fault of his own but by reason of the action or inaction of the Court. On the happening of such a contingency the maxim "actus curiae neminem gravabit" (an act of Court prejudices no man) applies: Mohamad Akbar v. Sukhdeo Pandey (1), Munna Lal v. Radha Kishan (2), and Gajadhar Das v. Ram Sumiran Dube (3).

In this case, as already stated, the sale was held on March 9, the judgment-debtor made the application on March 28, and on being informed of the amount to be deposited he brought the money to Court on April 8, when he asked for a formal order for its deposit in the Treasury, but the Sub-Judge instead of issuing the chalan forthwith, unnecessarily delayed issuing it till the 10th, and therefore, the amount was actually deposited the next day. It is clear that if the chalan had been given to him on April 8, as it should have been and the deposit made that day or the following day, the requirements of the law would have been complied with and the sale set aside. The inaction of the Sub-Judge for two days, however, made the application out of time by the same period, i. e, two days and I do not see why the petitioner should suffer in consequence. As observed by the Madras High Court in Gopala Krishna Pillai v. Kunjithapatham Pillai (4):

"it will be contrary to all principles of justice to require a man to comply with the rules which insist on the taking out of a chalan and paying the money to a different officer and then to dismiss the application on the ground that the money ought to have been paid to the Judge himself or to hold that the payment to the officer contemplated by the rules would not be equivalent to compliance with the rules where the delay in payment is entirely due to causes beyond the control of the person taking out the chalan."

I hold that the petitioner had complied with the requirements of O. XXI, r. 89, and that the sale should have been set aside, he having duly deposited the decretal amount as well as 5 per cent. of the purchase price in the Treasury. I accept the petition, reverse the orders of the Courts below and set aside the auction sale. Having regard to all the circumstances I leave

Police Act (V of 1861), s. 30—Scope of—Power of absolutely refusing permission to take out a procession—Whether can be read into the Act—Breaking promise not to take out procession—Whether amounts to disobeying order issued under the Act.

It is the right of a citizen to use the public thoroughfares, provided that he commits no offence in doing so, and the taking out of a procession is not in itself an offence, nor does it require a special licence, except as provided by s 30 of the Police Act. Section 30 empowers the authorities to control processions, and the manner in which they are to be controlled, if it is necessary to control them, is set forth in sub-s. (2). Neither in the marginal note, nor in the body of the section, is any express power given to the authorities absolutely to forbid the taking out of a procession. It is impossible to read into the Act any authority for absolutely refusing permission to take out a procession. Sitaram Das v. Emperor (2), relied on, Emperor v. Abdul Hamid (1), distinguished.

To break a promise to the Superintendent of Police made by a person that he would not take out a procession is not to disobey an order issued under the Act and he cannot be convicted.

Cr. R. from an order of the Sessions Judge of Agra dated July 16, 1934.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application for the revision of an appellate order of the Sessions Judge of Agra, dismissing an appeal from an order of the City Magistrate in which he convicted the applicant of an offence under s. 30 of the Police Act of 1861 and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 100. It appears, however, that the Magistrate intended to convict the applicant of an offence under s. 32 of the Act, which provides a penalty for disobeying orders issued under the three preceding sections, or for violating the conditions of a licence. The circumstances of the case are fully stated in the orders of the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge. It is only necessary to repeat here that the applicant, who is a Shiah Muhammadan, had been up to 1931 in the habit of taking out a procession called the "Duldul" procession from his house in the City of Agra, that in 1931 and the two following years the procession had been discontinued owing to certain orders passed by the authorities, and that in 1934 the applicant applied both to the District Magistrate and to the Superintendent of Police for permission to take out a procession. On a report by the Superintendent of Police, this application was refused, apparently by both the authorities applied to. After this, some time in April 1934, notices were issued by the Superintendent of Police, and one of these was affixed to the applicant's house. It evidently purports to be a notice under sub-s. (2) of s. 30 of the Police Act, and it contains the following order:—

"Besides the persons who have already obtained permission, no other person without obtaining permission of the Superintendent of Police will be authorised to take a procession on the public way and thoroughfare."

On April 23, the applicant made another application by telegram to the District Magistrate informing him that he was proposing to take out the procession, and this was forwarded to the Deputy Magistrate in charge of the mohalla, who sent for the applicant and informed him that his application had already been refused. We are informed by Counsel that after this the applicant asked for a written order for his use in the Civil Court, and then decided to take out a formal procession, which he did. The procession was stopped about five paces from his house and no trouble resulted. But the applicant was prosecuted and convicted, as we have described above.

Both the Courts have convicted the applicant on the grounds that the order refusing permission to take out a procession was issued under ss. 30-31 of the Police Act and that as the applicant disobeyed that order, he is therefore, liable to punishment under s. 32, but it has been argued before us by Mr. Dube that the conviction is illegal, because the order refusing permission to take out the procession was in itself not a legal order, and in any case was not an order passed under the provisions of ss. 30-31 of the Act.

We may mention that two other matters were argued before us, which may at once be disposed of. It was said that on the facts of the case, as stated by the witnesses for the prosecution the procession was stopped before any harm was done and, therefore, there was no offence. This, however, is irrelevant, as the question is whether a legal order under the Police Act has been contravened. It was also said that the applicant had committed no offence because the road on which he had actually taken out the procession was his private property. It has not, however, been proved that this road is his private property, and as it has been admitted that this road is freely used as a public thoroughfare, the objection cannot be seriously considered.

The more technical objection, however, is not so easily disposed of. Section 30 of the Police Act, as the marginal note shows, is one for "regulating of public assemblies and processions and licensing of same." Sub-section (1) shows that:

"The District Superintendent or Assistant District Superintendent of Police may, as occasion requires, direct the conduct of all assemblies and processions on the public roads or in the public streets and thoroughfares and prescribe the routes from which or the time at which such processions may pass."

Sub-section (2) says:

"If he is satisfied that it is intended by any person or class of persons to convene or collect an assembly in any such road, street or thoroughfare or to form a procession which would, in the judgment of the Magistrate of the District or of a Sub-Division, if uncontrolled, be likely to cause a breach of the peace, he may require by general or special notice that the person convening or collecting such assembly or directing or promoting such procession shall apply for a licence."

The third sub-section shows that when such application has been made,

"he may issue a licence specifying the names of the licencees and defining the conditions on which alone such assembly or such procession is to be permitted to take place, and otherwise giving effect to the section."

In the present case, it is not denied that the applicant had applied for a licence, and that the application had been rejected. The learned Judge has remarked that under sub-s. (3) of s. 30, the Magistrate may issue a licence, and that this means that he has the power to refuse to issue one, otherwise the word "shall" would have been used. It appears to us that under the section it is the Superintendent of Police and not the Magistrate who may issue the licence, but this is not a matter of importance in the present case. We may agree with the learned Judge that there could be no obligation on the Superintendent of Police to issue a licence merely because an application has been made for one. What the Judge does not appear to have considered, however, is what the effect of "refusing to grant" a licence will be. We have used the expression "refusing to grant a licence" because that is in fact what the authorities did or claimed to have done. But we think we shall be following the wording of the section more closely if we hold that the Superintendent of Police under sub-s. (3) of s. 30 either may issue a licence or may not issue a licence, because when the matter is put in this way it is clear that the Superintendent of Police is authorised by the Act to issue a licence, if he thinks it necessary, or not to issue a licence, if he thinks it unnecessary to do so. The Act does not in terms give him authority to refuse to issue a licence, for the purpose of preventing a procession from being taken out. It is quite conceivable that after an application for a licence has been made and the Superintendent of Police has satisfied himself, after examining the application and, if necessary, questioning the applicant, that there is no danger to the public peace, it may be unnecessary to issue a licence or regulate or direct the conduct of the procession at all, and in this case he would presumably not issue a licence and not lay down any conditions.

In such a case it could hardly be contended that it would be an offence to take out a procession merely because no licence had been issued.

In fact it has not been suggested to us that the act of taking out an unlicensed procession is in itself an offence against any law. It is the right of a citizen to use the public thoroughfares, provided that he commits no offence in doing so, and the taking out of a procession is not in itself an offence, nor does it require a special licence, except as provided by s. 30 of the Police Act. That is a section which empowers the authorities to control processions, and the manner in which they are to be controlled, if it is necessary to control them, is set forth in sub-s. (2). Neither in the marginal note, nor in the body of the section, is any express power given to the authorities absolutely to forbid the taking out of a procession.

It has been argued by Dr. Wali Ullah, on behalf of the Crown—and again this must be obvious—that if this interpretation of the section is correct, then a person whose application for a licence under sub-s. (2) of s. 30 has been refused is in a better position than one whose application has been accepted and who has obtained a licence, because the procession of the latter will be regulated by the conditions of his licence, whereas the unsuccessful applicant will not be fettered in any way. The apparent paradox, however, appears to us to be due to a misreading of s. 30 of the Act. If once it is admitted that the Superintendent of Police has no power under the Act absolutely to forbid a procession, but only has the power to regulate one, it becomes clear that it is his duty to regulate a procession, if he thinks that it requires regulating, in the manner prescribed by the Act, that is to say, by the issue of a licence, or to leave it alone; and thus the issue of a licence imposes a liability on the applicant and not a privilege.

We are far from saying that the Act has been worded as clearly as it might have been, but we have to interpret it strictly, and we consider that it is impossible to read into it any authority for absolutely refusing permission to take out a procession. We have been referred to a decision of a Full Bench of the Patna High Court in the case of Emperor v. Abdul Hamid (1), in which there are some passages which support the argument of the learned Assistant Government Advocate in this case. In the course of his judgment Mullick, J., remarked:

"Now s. 30 of the Police Act, though not happily worded, appears to mean this. The Superintendent of Police has to be satisfied that an assembly or procession is in the judgment of the District Magistrate likely to cause a breach of the peace. He may then issue a notice upon the person... ...to apply for a licence. It is contended that the Superintendent is not authorised to issue a general order, but must call upon the convenor or promoter of the assembly or procession to take out a licence for the occasion. In my opinion, the words are sufficiently general to enable the Superintendent to issue a general notification containing a prohibition from convening or collecting an assembly or promoting or directing a procession without a licence. The terms of the section are also wide enough to cover a prohibition without any limit of time. If the person or persons against whom the notice is directed convene or collect an assembly or promote or direct a procession without licence, he or they will be punishable under s. 32 of the Act."

This is an obiter dictum, as the persons who were convicted in that case were not convicted under the provisions of the Police Act, but under the Penal Code, and we notice that Das, J., disagreed with the other two learned Judges in the interpretation of the Police Act. In a later case, that of Sitaram Das v. Emperor (2), in dealing with a case under s. 32 of the Police Act it was remarked:

"So far as I can see the Police have no power to forbid the issue of a procession. The power to control does not include the power to forbid," and that is the view we have taken in the present case. It was, in our opinion, believed by the Legislature that it should be possible for the authorities so to regulate a procession by the conditions of a licence that no danger to the public peace would be likely to arise, and for this reason it was not thought necessary to restrict the liberties of the subject further than has, in our opinion, been already done in s. 30 of the Act.

It has been remarked by the Magistrate that the present applicant gave a promise to the Superintendent of Police that he would not take out the procession and that he broke this promise, and if this is so his conduct was most improper. But to break a promise to the Superintendent of Police is not to disobey an order issued under the Act, and we must, therefore, hold that the applicant has been wrongly convicted. We, therefore, set aside the orders of the Courts below convicting the applicant and direct that he be acquitted and that the amount of the fine, if paid, be returned to him.

Minor—Ratification—Minor just attaining majority—Old promissory note executed by mother-guardian renewed—If proves ratification of old debt—Legal necessity—Hindu Law—Minor—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 118—Presumption under—Power of Attorney—Agent authorised to represent family in Civil, Criminal, revenue, registration and mutation proceedings—Whether includes power to incur debts.

In order that an act may amount to a ratification, there must be, after majority and after the late minor has acquired full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction, some promise or other act, which shows an internal acknowledgment of his liability in respect of the act done on his behalf during minority. Where, therefore, a person, two months after attaining majority, renews the promissory note executed by the late agent of his mother guardian, and such agent, at the time of the renewal is in the employ of the person in whose favour the promissory note is executed, it cannot be said that the act of the minor amounted to a ratification of the act of his mother guardian and the plaintiff must prove that there was a legal necessity.

Section 118, Negotiable Instruments Act, does not raise any presumption that the consideration of the promissory note was advanced for legal necessity and the burden of proving that such advance was for legal necessity rests on the plaintiff making the advance on the promissory note.

Where an agent has a power-of-attorney authorising him to represent the members of the family in Civil, Criminal and Revenue Courts and in registration and mutation proceedings, there is no presumption that he was authorised to incur debts on behalf of the family.

C. App. for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Akola, dated August 30, 1933, in Civil Suit No. 913 of 1932.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicant.

Mr. T. L. Sheode, for the Non-Applicant.

Order.—The plaintiff sued to recover money due on a promissory note, Ex. P-1, executed by the defendant Shriram in his favour on February 23, 1930. The consideration, as stated in the note, was Rs. 21 in cash, which was admittedly not paid, and Rs. 729 due on a previous promissory note dated July 22, 1927. This history of the previous debt is as follows:—

On August 11, 1922, Narayan, the brother of Shriram's grand-father, borrowed Rs. 600 in cash from the plaintiff, and Ganpat Mulluji, who was then Narayan's agent, signed a receipt in the plaintiff's account books. Narayan was then the sole adult male member in the family. Narayan died in 1924, and on July 29, 1925, a promissory note for Rs. 400 was executed in renewal of the old debt by Ganpat Malluji as agent of Musammat Kashibai, the mother and guardian of the defendant Shriram. This promissory note was renewed on July 22, 1927, by the execution of another promissory note for Rs. 450, which was again executed by Ganpat Malluji as the agent of Shriram's mother and guardian Kashibai. On July 22, 1927, Rs. 729 was found due on this promissory note.

The defendant Shriram attained the age of 18 years on December 23, 1929, just two months before the promissory note in suit was executed. Ganpat Malluji, who had managed the estate of the defendant's family for many years, left the defendant's service in March 1929 and was in the plaintiff's service when the promissory note in suit was executed. The defendant alleged that he executed this promissory note under the undue influence of the plaintiff and Ganpat Malluji without understanding what he was doing, and he also alleged that there was no legal necessity for the original loan of Rs. 600. To this the plaintiff replied that the defendant had specifically admitted his liability under the old promissory note and had ratified the act of his agent Ganpat. It may be noted that Ganpat was the agent not of the defendant but of the defendant's guardian and that the plaintiff did not allege that the original loan was borrowed for legal necessity. It was, therefore, not open to the plaintiff to prove legal necessity, and there is in fact no evidence of legal necessity except a remark to that effect by Ganpat which can hardly be considered conclusive.

Ganpat had a power-of attorney authorising him to represent the members of the defendant's family in Civil, Criminal and Revenue Courts and in registration and mutation proceedings. This power did not authorise him to incur debts on behalf of the family, and even though he managed the estate I do not see why it should be inferred that he had power to borrow money, nor why anybody should think that he had. He was in any case merely the agent of the defendant's guardian, and the defendant's guardian had no power to borrow money on the defendant's behalf, except for legal necessity. The defendant, therefore, was not liable under the old promissory notes.

It was of course open to the defendant to ratify the acts of his guardian, and the acts of the guardian's agent may be taken to be the acts of the guardian. Ganpat stated that he was not present when the promissory note in suit was executed, but this can hardly be true if, as the plaintiff states, the previous dealings were explained to the defendant. The defendant had just attained majority, and Ganpat, who had for many years looked after him and his estate, was then in the plaintiff's service. It is conceded that the defendant had no independent advice. Even if these circumstances do not inevitably raise the inference that undue influence was exerted on the defendant, I am of opinion that at least there was no valid ratification. Ratification is defined at page 199 of Trevelyan's Law Relating to Minors, 6th edition, as follows:

"To amount to a ratification, there must be, after majority and after the late minor has acquired full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction, some promise or other act, which shows an internal acknowledgment of his liability in respect of the acts done on his behalf during minority."

It seems to me clear that the defendant did not execute the promissory note with full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction and that it cannot be inferred that he intended to acknowledge liability for the old debt. I hold, therefore, that he is not liable under the promissory note in suit.

It has been argued that under s. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, there is a presumption that the promissory note in suit was for consideration. That presumption, which is of course rebuttable, merely means in effect that there is a presumption that Rs. 600 was originally advanced in cash. In does not raise any presumption that Rs. 600 was advanced for legal necessity and the burden of proving that such advance was for legal necessity rests on the plaintiff.

The application for revision is, therefore, allowed with costs and the plaintiff's suit stands dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 20.

Musammat HAJRAN—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Maintenance proceedings — Wife, examination of—Husband expressing willingness to take back wife—Duty of Court to examine wife—Bona fides of offer and sufficiency of reasons for refusal to go back to husband should be considered before making order.

Proceedings under s. 488, Criminal Procedure Code, are not complaints and hence it is not legally necessary for the wife to be examined. But when a husband expresses his willingness to take back the wife and child, it is the duty of the Magistrate to enquire from the wife her reasons for not going back to her husband and failure to do so amounts to illegality. Subbayya v. Ambamma (1), referred to.

The mere fact that some three years ago the husband beat the wife and turned her out is no reason for holding that the subsequent offer to take her back, was not bona fide or could justify the refusal of the wife to go back to her husband. Unless the Magistrate finds that the offer is not bona fide or that the reason given by the wife for not going back to her husband is sufficient, he should not make an order for maintenance Phula Khan v. Emperor (2) and Sultan v. Mahtab Bibi (3), referred to.

Case reported by the Additional District and Sessions Judge, Lahore, with his No. 2262 of 2nd June, 1934.

Facts:—Musammat Hajran, wife of Nur Muhammad, claimed separate maintenance from her husband for herself and her son under s. 488, Criminal Procedure Code, on the allegation that she was beaten and turned out of her house by her husband three years ago since when she has been living with her brother Fazal Din and her mother and that though attempts were made to persuade Nur Muhammad to take her back, they failed.

According to the allegation of Nur Muhammad he neither beat his wife nor turned her out, but Musammat Hajran left her house with her ornaments during his absence in dudgeon as he did not agree to marry his sister to P. W. No. 1 Fazal Din, her brother. He tried to get her back several times but without success.

The Magistrate after taking evidence found that Musammat Hajran was turned out of her house by Nur Muhammad and that she and her son have not been allowed any allowance during the last three years although Nur Muhammad had ample means to do so. The Magistrate, therefore, ordered that Nur Muhammad should pay Rs. 8 for Musammat Hajran and Rs. 4 for her son monthly towards the maintenance allowance from July 1, 1933, onwards.

From this order the petitioner Nur Muhammad has petitioned to this Court on the revisional side to recommend to the Hon'ble High Court to set it aside on the grounds that the order is illegal: (1) as before the issue of process the statement of Musammat Hajran was not recorded and there was no order dispensing with her personal attendance, (2) that the petitioner stated that he was ready to take her back, and Fazal Din, P. W. No. 1, her brother said that he was willing to send her back hence the provisions of s. 488, Criminal Procedure Code, did not justify the order of payment of separate maintenance, (3), that it was the duty of the Magistrate to examine the wife as to the reason why she was unwilling to go back to the respondent but the Magistrate never made such enquiry, (4) that on the merits no desertion or neglect was established. With respect to the non-examination of the wife before issue of process, it must be noticed that the complaint itself was lodged by her mukhtar who was examined before issue of process. Proceedings under s. 488, Criminal Procedure Code, are not complaints and hence it is not legally necessary for the wife to be examined.

But when a husband expressed his willingness to take back the wife and child it was the duty of the Magistrate to enquire from the wife her reasons for not going back to her husband and failure to do so amounts to illegality: Subbayya v. Ambamma (1).

The mere fact that some three years ago the husband beat her and turned her out is no reason for holding that the present offer was not bona fide or could justify the refusal of the wife to go back to her husband.

For, in this case, the evidence produced by the wife showed that attempts were made to make the husband take her back. The previous beating therefore was no bar to her going back to her husband. Further still if the wife was willing to go back to her husband, the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to fix maintenance ceased to exist: Phula Khan v. Emperor (2). The Magistrate in this case altogether ignored the offer of the husband and never enquired from the wife if she was willing to go back to her husband, and if not, why not. He never gave any finding that the offer was not bona fide or the reason given by the wife for not going back to her husband was sufficient: Sultan v. Mahtab Bibi (3). The order for maintenance was, therefore, made without going through the necessary procedure and is illegal. Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 3, 11—Suit for specific performance of contract by two plaintiffs—Plaintiffs' shares not specified—Share in consideration not known—Appeal by them against lower Court's decision—Death of one of them—Legal representative not brought on record within time—Held, appeal abated as whole—Held also that ignorance of death was not sufficient cause to extend limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 45.

A contract was entered into by defendant No. 1 in favour of two persons named P and K who were the plaintiffs in a suit for specific performance of the contract to sell certain land and both of them had preferred the appeal jointly. During the pendency of the appeal P died and no application was made within the prescribed period to bring his legal representatives on the record. It was, however, made after the prescribed period, but it merely stated that the delay was due to ignorance on the part of the applicants:

Held, (i) that the reason for delay could not be considered to be an adequate ground for extension of time under s. 5 of the Limitation Act, Amin Chand v. Firm Baldeo Sahai Ganga Sahai (1), relied on.

(ii) that the right of appeal on the death of P vested in the legal representative of P and not in K and the appeal abated according to the provisions of rr. 3 and 11 of O. XXII, Civil Procedure Code, at least so far as P was concerned.

(iii) that since the agreement between the parties did not specify any shares and it was impossible to say in what shares the consideration was to be paid by, or the land to be divided between the two plaintiffs, the right to enforce the contract vested on the death of P in his legal representatives along with K and not in K alone. Therefore, no relief could be given to K when the legal representatives of P had not been brought on the record and his share could be ascertained. Consequently, the whole appeal abated.

Mr. M. L. Sethi, for Mr. J. G. Sethi, Messrs. Har Bhajan Das and Badri Das, R. B. for the Respondents.

Bhide, J.—This Second Appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract to sell certain land and in the alternative for damages. The suit was decreed by the trial Court but was dismissed on appeal by the learned District Judge who merely allowed plaintiffs a refund of the earnest money paid by them.

The contract was entered into by defendant No. 1 in favour of two persons named Pir Bakhsh and Khuda Bakhsh who were the plaintiffs in this case and both of whom had preferred this appeal jointly. During the pendency of this appeal Pir Bakhsh died and no application was made within the prescribed period to bring his legal representatives on the record. A preliminary objection is raised that the whole appeal abates in the circumstances.

An application for bringing the legal representatives of Pir Bakhsh on the record was made after the prescribed period but it merely states that the delay was due to ignorance on the part of the applicants. This cannot be considered to be an adequate ground for extension of time under s. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. The learned Counsel for the respondents has relied upon Amin Chand v. Firm Baldeo Sahai Ghanga Sahai (1), which dissents from the view taken by the Punjab Chief Court in Piyare Lal v. Chura Mani (2). This ruling certainly appears to support his contention that the appeal abates. The learned Counsel for the appellant tried to distinguish this ruling on the ground that it related to a suit for accounts, while the present case was a suit for specific performance of a contract. But the reasoning in Amin Chand v. Firm Baldeo Sahai-Ganga Sahai (1) does not seem to be confined to a suit for accounts.

The question has to be decided primarily on the basis of the provisions of O. XXII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, read with r. 11, of the same Order. According to these rules, the appeal would abate so far as the deceased appellant was concerned, if the right to appeal does not survive to the surviving appellant. The learned Counsel for the appellant has urged that the right to appeal does survive to the surviving appellent Khuda Bakhsh, inasmuch as according to the provisions of O. XLI, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code, he alone could have appealed from the whole decree. But this argument does not appear to be sound. What has to be considered is whether Pir Bakhsh's right to appeal has survived to the appellant Khuda Bakhsh and it seems to my mind clear, that that right, on the death of Pir Bakhsh vested in the legal representative of Pir Bakhsh and not in Khuda Bakhsh. It is true that Khuda Bakhsh could have appealed from the whole decree, but he did not purport to do so and in any case that point seems to be hardly relevant to the question of devolution of Pir Bakhsh's right to appeal after his death. I would, therefore, hold that the appeal would abate according to the provisions of the rules referred to above at least so far as Pir Bakhsh was concerned.

But it was urged that the whole appeal must abate as Pir Bakhsh's share was not specified in the contract and in support of this argument reliance was placed on Sant Singh v. Gulab Singh (3). This contention also appears to me to be correct. The agreement between the parties does not specify any shares and it is impossible to say in what shares the consideration was to be paid by, or the land to be divided between the two plaintiffs. The right to enforce the contract vests on the death of Pir Bakhsh in his legal representatives along with Khuda Bakhsh and not in Khuda Bakhsh alone (cf. s. 45 of the Indian Contract Act). It seems, therefore, impossible to give any relief to Khuda Bakhsh when the legal representatives of Pir Bakhsh have not been brought on the record and his share cannot be ascertained. I would accordingly hold that the whole appeal abates and dismiss the same. As there is some conflict of authority on the question of abatement when one of the appellants dies, I would leave the parties to bear their costs.

Dalip Singh, J.—I agree.

Judgment.—This is a Civil Revision Petition filed against the judgment of the District Judge of Coimbatore in C. M. A. No. 31 of 1928 confirming the decision of the trial Court in an application under ss. 53 and 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, V of 1920, for the annulment of the mortgage deed Ex. 1, dated October 9, 1924, and executed by one Subbaraya Gounden (who was subsequently adjudged an insolvent) in favour of Subramaniam Chettiar, by his agent Narayanan Chettiar, for Rs. 7,000. The applicant was one of the petitioning creditors at whose instance the debtor, Subbaraya Gounden, was declared an insolvent. Both the lower Courts have given a concurrent finding that the aforesaid mortgage was a fraudulent preference in favour of one of the creditors within the meaning of s. 54 of the Act and on the strength of that finding annulled the mortgage as against the Official Receiver. The petition for annulment had to be filed by one of the creditors as the Official Receiver declined to take any action. There is no doubt that a creditor can make an application of this kind when the Receiver refused to act. The present Civil Revision Petition was filed by the alienee. The debtor is the first respondent in this petition, and on his death, his two sons have been added as his legal representatives. The second respondent is the applicant who filed the petition for annulment of the mortgage.

The facts of this case may be briefly stated. Subbaraya Gounden, though possessed of some property, was in embarrassed circumstances. He was indebted to several-money lending firms and other creditors. In respect of some of the debts, decrees also appear to have been passed. When the matters stood thus, he found himself unable to pay his debts as they became due, with the result that a sort of composition with his creditors was attempted to be effected. At a meeting of some of the creditors, the debtor desired them to reduce the rate of interest upon his debts from three to one per cent. per mensem, and asked them to wait for two months. Two of the creditors agreed to the reduction of interest to 18 per cent. in respect of all the debts, but Narayanan Chetty the agent of the present petitioner, did not agree to such a reduction in respect of his dues. No final agreement could be reached; subsequently some arrangement was effected as between Narayanan Chettiar (the agent of the petitioner) and the debtor, whereby the mortgage in question for Rs. 7,000 was created in favour of the petitioner over almost the entire property of the debtor's family. The interest due to the petitioner on the previous debts was fixed at 1½ per cent. per mensem, and for the amount so found due, namely Rs. 5,009 together with a sum of Rs. 1,991 received in cash, (in all Rs. 7,000) interest at 2 per cent. per mensem was fixed in the mortgage bond. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is to the effect, that the debtor who was in embarrassed circumstances, was pricked in mind on account of the refractory conduct of some of the creditors who declined to reduce the interest as desired by him, and created a mortgage practically over his entire property in favour of the present petitioner, to whom he gave a vindictive preference, with a view to punish the other creditors. The learned District Judge has adopted a similar view. He says that the debtor acted in this way in order to put one creditor (the petitioner) in a favoured position. It is, however, argued before me that the Courts below should have held that the dominant motive of the debtor was to secure the cash advance of Rs. 1,991 and not to show any preference to the petitioner over the other creditors of the insolvent. It is true that for the purpose of avoiding a transfer of property under s. 54 of the Act as a fraudulent preference, it must be shown that the dominant or substantial motive of the debtor was to give preference to one creditor over the rest. That is a question of fact to be decided according to the circumstances of each case. After a due consideration of the argument on both sides, I am not inclined to interfere in revision with a concurrent finding of fact arrived at by both the Courts below. It does not appear that the mortgage was given in the present case as the result of any pressure put upon the debtor by the petitioner's agent, Narayanan Chettiar. As observed by the learned District Judge, a mere threat to sue, which if at all, was the only pressure, would not be such as to change the nature of the debtor's act from a voluntary to an involuntary one, especially when he was in expectation of such suits being filed by almost all the creditors. It was not, therefore, to secure freedom from being sued for the debts that this mortgage was created. In this case the debtor seems to have been in a position to tell Narayanan Chettiar, that he would not give a mortgage in order to give security for the debts due to the petitioner, unless a further loan was advanced. Narayanan Chettiar does not appear to have been in a position to dictate to the debter that a mortgage must be executed as a security for the debts due to the petitioner. The dominant or substantial motive of the debtor in the present case was to give preference to one creditor over the rest, and the transfer was not made simply to protect himself from legal proceedings. Nor can it be said that the further advance of Rs. 1,991 was the main factor which prompted the debtor to execute the mortgage deed. I concur with the findings of the Courts below that the transaction in question amounts to a fraudulent preference within the meaning of s. 54 of the Act.

A new question of law was raised in this Civil Revision Petition, that in the view taken by the Courts below, namely, that this mortgage is a fraudulent preference, it could be annulled only in respect of the insolvent's share in the mortgaged properties but not in respect of the shares of his two sons also which were comprised in the mortgage. Under s. 54 of the Act, it is only a transfer of property effected by the insolvent that can be annulled. In the present case, the mortgage deed Ex. I was executed not only by Subbaraya Gounden (the insolvent) but also by his two minor sons represented by him as their father and guardian. The deed expressly recites that they have hypothecated the properties specified in the schedule belonging to them and remaining in their enjoyment. The deed purports to be a transfer by way of mortgage of the joint properties of the father and his two sons who constitute a joint Hindu family. Obviously, it is not a transfer of property by the father alone. This is a case where the creditor dealt not with the managing member only of an undivided family but with all the members of the family as co-obligors. The mere fact that the two sons were minors and had to be represented by their father as guardian does not make it a mortgage effected by the father alone as the managing member of the family. It must be taken that the executants of this mortgage deed are three and not one, and that would be the case if the two sons were majors when the mortgage deed was executed. Can it be said that the two sons were not parties at all to this mortgage deed and that the deed does not purport to transfer their interests also in the properties mentioned in the schedule? Any such contention would be against the plaint recitals in Ex. 1. It is clear that the parties to this transaction intended that all the members of the family, namely, the father and his two sons should execute the mortgage deed as co-obligors: vide the observations in Narayana Iyer v. Venkatraman Iyer (1), and Sivasami Chetty v. Sevugan Chetti (2). If three co-owners one of whom alone being an adjudged insolvent, should transfer their joint properties in favour of one of their creditors, the transfer by the insolvent alone to the extent of his own share therein, would come within the scope of s. 54 of the Act. The transfer by the other two co-owners to the extent of their interests in the properties cannot be dealt with under s. 53 or s. 54 of the Insolvency Act, though such a transfer may be sought to be avoided under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Reference was made by the learned Counsel for the 2nd respondent to the decisions reported in Surapu Raju v. Venkayya (3), and Rajagopalan v. Subbarama Iyer (4). Those cases do not in my opinion help him in his contention in this case. In the first case, the sale deed was executed by the elder brother who was a major and also the manager of the family, and the younger brother a minor represented by his mother as guardian, also joined in the execution of that sale deed. It was found that the sale by the minor represented by his mother as guardian would be invalid, but this circumstance was held not to be sufficient to vitiate the sale as such, inasmuch as the elder brother as manager of the family was competent to sell the family property for justifiable purposes. On such a view, the sale as a whole was upheld. In the second case also, the transfer was not only by the father who was clearly entitled to dispose of the properties in order to discharge the debts binding on the minor sons, but the minors also joined in the execution represented by their guardian ad litem. Even if such a guardian was not competent to execute a sale deed or mortgage deed on their behalf, the sale as a whole was treated as a valid transaction, ignoring or leaving out of consideration the fact of the minors by their guardian ad litem having joined as co-executants. In the present case, there is no question of the invalidity of the mortgage deed, Ex. I, so far as the execution of it by the minor sons represented by their father as guardian is concerned. According to the recitals in the deed, this mortgage was effected to the extent of the major portion of the consideration, for the purpose of discharging the antecedent debts of the father. The cash consideration received is stated to be for discharging some other debts by him. The purpose for which this mortgage was effected being such as would justify the guardian of the minors to alienate their shares in the family property, the execution of the deed by the father as guardian of the minor sons would not be invalid by reason of any defect as found in the aforesaid decisions. There is no need to treat the mortgage deed in question as one executed by the father alone as the manager of the family ignoring the fact of its execution by the minors also for the purpose of enabling the Insolvency Court to annul this mortgage deed in its entirety. I am clearly of opinion that in so far as it is an alienation by the two sons of the debtor (insolvent) it cannot be viewed as a transfer by the insolvent for the purposes of ss. 53 and 54. On this ground, I hold that the mortgage deed Ex. 1, cannot be annulled so far as the two third share of the insolvent's sons in the mortgaged property is concerned.

Another contention raised on behalf of the petitioner, is, that the mortgage must be upheld in respect of the amount advanced in cash at the time of the mortgage, as there could be no question of fraudulent preference of a creditor regarding the same. It is true that at the time of giving preference by means of a transfer of property there should be the relation of debtor and creditor between the parties to the transfer. The petitioner was a creditor to whom a sum of Rs. 5,009 was due at the time of this transfer. The sum of Rs. 1,991 was cash advanced as a fresh loan and the mortgage given to secure the repayment of that sum cannot strictly be deemed to be a transfer in favour of the one who was already a creditor. This seems to be the view taken by a Division Bench of this Court in a decision reported in Janki Ram Vilas Nidhi v. Official Assignee, Coimbatore, 78 Ind. Cas. 16 at p. 18 (5). The learned Judges have held that so far as the amount newly received was concerned s. 54 of the Act could have no application. But, in the present case, the application was filed under both the sections. The circumstances disclosed in the evidence from which a fraudulent preference was inferred indicate also that when this sum of Rs. 1,991 was advanced as an additional loan to get the mortgage-deed executed, the petitioner could not be deemed to have acted in good faith. He was fully aware of the debtor's embarrassed condition. No bona fide enquiries were made as to the alleged necessity for borrowing this sum. The fraudulent object of the debtor which would prejudicially affect the interests of the other creditors was well known to the petitioner's agent Narayanan Chettiar. I should think that even if it could not be strictly brought under s. 54, the annulment could be effected under s. 53 of the Act. No modification of the order of the Courts below need be made in respect of this newly raised objection. The finding of the Courts below that the mortgage-deed Ex. 1, is fully supported by consideration is upheld.

For the foregoing reasons, the order of annulment passed by the Courts below is modified by declaring that the mortgage-deed Ex. 1, is fraudulent and void as against the Receiver to the extent of its being an alienation of the debtor Subbaraya Gounden's one-third share in the mortgaged properties and it shall stand annulled to that extent only. Considering the peculiar circumstances of this case and also the partial success and failure on both sides, I direct the parties to bear their own costs in this revision petition, and would leave the order as to costs made by the Courts below undisturbed.

Punjab Alienation of Land Act (XIII of 1900), ss. 3 (2), 14, 21-A (2)—Decree in violation of s. 3 (2), if a nullity—Remedy by Deputy Commissioner—S. 14, application of—Alienation by decree of Court—Deputy Commissioner's power to change nature of alienation.

A decree passed in violation of the terms of s. 3 (2) of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act is not a nullity. Such a decree unless set aside, in appeal or revision cannot be treated as a nullity. It is not a decree passed without jurisdiction. Darya Ditta v. Mana Singh (1), followed.

The only course open to the Deputy Commissioner in a case where a decree is passed by a civil Court which offends against the provisions of s. 3 (2) Punjab Alienation of Land Act, and this defect is brought to the notice of the Deputy Commissioner, is that under s. 21-A (2) of the Act, which authorises him to move the higher Civil Court for revision in accordance with the Act. The permanent alienation cannot be converted by himself, under s. 14 of the Act, into a temporary one.

Section 14 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act has no application to a case where a permanent alienation of land in favour of non-agriculturist has been effected by a decree of Civil Court. It deals with those cases only in which the dispute as to the validity of the alienation has not been taken to a Civil Court and that Court has not passed a decree in connection therewith.

L. P. A. from the decree of Bhide, J., dated July 19, 1929, reported in 120 Ind. Cas. 481.

Mr. R. C. Soni, for the Appellants.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Respondent.

Tek Chand, J.—In December 1896, Samundar Khan, father of defendants-appellants mortgaged with possession his occupancy rights in the land in dispute to Prem Das. About ten years later, on March 25, 1906, Samundar Khan executed a sale-deed of the same occupancy rights in favour of Prem Das for Rs. 1,000. Mutation of the sale was duly sanctioned in the name of the vendee.

Some years later Samundar Khan died, and after his death his sons, Sarbuland and Ghulam Zakria, on January 10, 1921, instituted a suit against Prem Das for possession of the land alleging: (1) that the sale was not binding on them as the occupancy tenancy was ancestral and Samundar Khan has sold it without consideration or legal necessity, and (2) that the sale was contrary to the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, the vendor Samundar Khan being a Hattar Rajput, which is a notified agricultural tribe in this District, and the vendee Prem Das a non-agriculturist. Prem Das denied the ancestral nature of the tenancy and urged that the transaction had been effected for consideration and necessity. He further pleaded that Hattars were not Rajputs and that therefore the Punjab Alienation of Land Act did not apply. On August 6, 1923, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit as time-barred so far as the share of Sarbuland was concerned and decreed it as regards the share of Ghulam Zakria. On appeal Ghulam Zakria's suit also was dismissed by the District Judge Mr. Forbes on March 3, 1924. On the evidence the learned Judge held that the sale of 1906 had been effected for consideration and necessity and could not be challenged by the plaintiff on that ground. He further found that Hattars were a branch of Rajputs, and therefore he expressed the opinion that the alienation contravened the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. But instead of himself deciding what the effect of this finding on the case was, he dismissed the suit ordering that a copy of his decree be sent to the Deputy Commissioner under s. 21-A (1), Punjab Alienation of Land Act.

A copy of the decree was accordingly sent to the Deputy Commissioner but he, instead of taking action under sub-s. (2), s. 21-A, and moving the High Court to revise the decree of the District Judge so as to make it consistent with the Act, took cognizance of the matter himself and, purporting to act under s. 14, passed an order on June 8, 1925, converting the sale into a mortgage for 20 years, ending March 25, 1926, on which date the sons of the vendor could recover possession without any payment. In pursuance of this order the appellants took possession of the land in March 1926.

It may be mentioned here, that it appears to have been overlooked that Prem Das was, in any case, entitled to remain in possession under the mortgage of 1896 which had been effected long before the Alienation of Land Act had been enacted, and upon which he could have fallen back in the event of sale of 1906 being set aside. That mortgage was never redeemed, and the learned Counsel for the appellant frankly conceded that for this reason at least the dispossession of Prem Das in March 1926, without payment of the mortgage money, was illegal.

On November 20, 1926, the present suit was brought by Prem Das for recovery of possession of the land on the ground that the Deputy Commissioner had no power to himself alter the decree of the District Judge and that his order and the consequent dispossession of the plaintiff were illegal and ultra vires. This contention did not find favour with the Subordinate Judge, who dismissed the suit. His decision was affirmed by the District Judge, but on second appeal the learned Judge in Chambers took a different view. He held that the only course open to the Deputy Commissioner was to apply to the High Court under sub-s. (2), s. 21-A, within two months of the date on which he was informed of the decree of Mr. Forbes, and that he having failed to do so the decree had become final and conclusive between the parties. The learned Judge accordingly decreed the plaintiff's suit. He however granted a certificate to the defendants for a further appeal under cl. 10, Letters Patent.

It is beyond dispute that on the finding that the vendor was a member of a notified agricultural tribe and the vendee was a non-agriculturist, the sale as such could not take effect under s. 3 (2), Punjab Alienation of Land Act, and if the matter had not been the subject of litigation in Civil Courts in 1921—24, the Deputy Commissioner would have had full power to convert the sale into a mortgage for a period not exceeding 20 years under s. 14 of the Act. But, as already stated, the sons of the vendor had instituted a suit in the Civil Court impeaching the sale, inter alia, on the ground that the sale contravened the provisions of the Act and the parties had joined issue on this point. The learned District Judge Mr. Forbes while holding that the alienation contravened the provisions of the Act, had dismissed the suit. It is conceded that the effect of this decree unless it was set aside on appeal or revision by the High Court, was that the sale was binding on the plaintiff. It is also conceded that it was open to the appellants to appeal to the High Court against the decree of the District Judge, and it was equally open to the Deputy Commissioner to whom the District Judge himself had sent a copy of the decree to take action under sub-s. (2), s. 21-A to have the decree altered by the High Court so as to make it consistent with the Act. But neither the appellants nor the Deputy Commissioner chose to adopt the course open to them under the law. The position therefore is that the decree of Mr. Forbes stood unaltered by a higher Court.

Mr. Soni urged that the decree was none the less a nullity, as it gave effect to a sale which contravened the provisions of the Alienation of Land Act. This contention is, however, without force. This point was considered by Chief Court in Darya Ditta v. Mana Singh (1), where Clerk, C. J., ruled that a decree passed in violation of the terms of s. 3 (2) of the Act, was not a nullity. The learned Chief Judge observed that :

"the decree was open to appeal or revision, but unless set aside, it cannot be treated as a nullity. It was not a decree passed without jurisdiction."

It was also pointed out in that case that under the Act, as originally passed in 1900, there was no remedy against a final decree passed by a Civil Court upholding a permanent alienation of land in contravention of the provisions of the Act; and in order to remove this defect the Legislature in 1907, enacted s. 21-A, which makes it obligatory on every Civil Court passing a decree involving a permanent alienation of his land by a member of an agricultural tribe, to send a copy of its decree to the Deputy Commissioner and further empowers the Deputy Commissioner to move the superior appellate or revisional Civil Court to revise the decree so as to bring it in conformity with the Act.

There can be no doubt that the course laid down in sub-s. (2) s. 21-A is the only one, that is open to the Deputy Commissioner, whose attention has been drawn to a decree passed by a Civil Court, which appears to give effect to a permanent alienation of land which had been effected in contravention of the provisions of the Act, and if he fails to take action in the manner prescribed therein, the decree stands. Obviously s. 14 has no application to such a case. It deals with those cases only in which the dispute as to the validity of the alienation has not been taken to a Civil Court and that Court has not passed a decree in connection therewith. The action of the Deputy Commissioner taken under s. 14 in this case was, therefore, clearly ultra vires and could not in any way affect the decree passed by Mr. Forbes in favour of the respondent. It is unfortunate that the District Judge, Mr. Forbes, made a mistake in dismissing the defendant's suit, but as observed by the Lord Hobhouse in Malkarjun v. Narhari (2), at p. 347* :

"In doing so the Court was exercising its jurisdiction. It made a sad mistake it is true ; but a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right. If it decides wrong, the wronged party can only take the course prescribed by law for setting matters right; and if that course is not taken the decision, however wrong, cannot be disturbed."

Here, as shown already, neither the appellants, who were the wronged party, appealed nor the Deputy Commissioner, on whom the Legislature has conferred a special locus standi to move the higher Civil Court for the revision of the decree, took action in the manner prescribed in s. 21-A. The decree, therefore, remains unaltered. The order passed by the Deputy Commissioner under s. 14, was passed without jurisdiction and being ultra vires and manifestly illegal, has no legal effect.

For the foregoing reasons I am of opinion that the decision of the learned Judge in Chambers is correct and must be upheld. In this view of the case it is not necessary to consider the further question decided by the learned Judge whether the plaintiff had acquired an indefeasible right to the land by adverse possession. I would accordingly dismiss the appeal, but having regard to all the circumstances would leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Din Muhammad, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. VII, r. 11—Interlocutory order—Powers of interference of High Court—Interlocutory order on question of court-fee—Revision, if competent.

Although ordinarily the High Court will not interfere in revision with an interlocutory order when there is another course open to him, yet when there is no right of appeal and the order complained against is calculated to cause irreparable damage to the petitioner, the High Court may interfere with an interlocutory order. An interlocutory order deciding the question of court-fee will not be interfered with in revision as another remedy by way of appeal is open to the injured party. Sham Narain Singh v. Basudeo Prasad Singh (2) and Manilal v Durga Prasad (3), followed, Ram Bhusan Das v. Bachu Rai (1), doubted.

C. R. from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, dated November 27, 1933.

Sir Sultan Ahmad and N. C. Ghosh, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, M. N. Pal, S. C. Mazumdar and P. B. Ganguli, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—These are two rules directed against the order of the Subordinate Judge in two actions brought by the same plaintiffs against the same defendants and relate to a matter of court-fees. In the case of Kumar Ram Kinkar Singh v. Kumar Jogendra Nath Singh the learned Judge has decided that in the circumstances of the case the plaintiffs were liable to pay ad valorem court-fees. In the case of Surendra Nath Basu v. Sitaram Singh the learned Judge has decided that the court-fees of Rs. 15 was sufficient. As I have said, against these two decisions these rules are directed.

If the report is correct of the case of Ram Bhusan Das v. Bachu Rai (1), decided by the Chief Justice and Luby, J. (and there is no explanation which appears on the face of the report), then I am in the unfortunate position of having to choose between that decision and the decisions not only of the Privy Council but a long line of cases in this Court decided by Divisional Benches, all of which are for one reason or another in agreement. I might at this stage refer to the case of Sham Narain Singh v. Basdeo Prasad Singh (2) in which I with my brother Kulwant Shay expressed the view that the point decided by the Subordinate Judge in that case was one within his jurisdiction. That together with the fact that there was another remedy open to the petitioner placed the matter beyond the revisional powers of this Court. The learned Chief Justice in the case to which I have first referred has stated that the decision reported in 11 Patna Law Times [Sham Narain Singh v. Basdeo Prasad Singh (2).] might be explained on the basis that it came within that class of cases which was not open to revision. But as a party to that judgment I must say that the matter there in dispute was whether the Judges had rightly decided what was the nature of the action brought by the plaintiff and, therefore, what was the proper court-fee; in other words, what category did the case come within. I would add also that the case was decided not only on the ground that it was within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge to decide the question, but that the plaintiff had another remedy which would immediately arise on his refusal to pay the extra court-fee and the Subordinate Judge rejecting the plaint. On the plain reading of s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, therefore, it was impossible for this Court to exercise its revisional powers. In the case decided by the Chief Justice and Luby, J. unless it is misreported (the only explanation can be that it is misreported) s. 115 would come into operation in that another remedy was open to the plaintiff and, therefore, the revisional power of the Court could not be exercised. The learned Chief Justice in the judgment of which I have referred had said that if it was a matter of "category" an application in revision lay. If the matter to be determined by the Subordinate Judge was a matter of 'category', it was for him to decide what was the nature of the action and what was the relief claimed to the suit. Having decided that, he would then decide under which provisions of the Court Fees Act, the case came and decide the question of court-fee accordingly. That might be a question of fact; if it were, it certainly would be within the jurisdiction of the Judge. It might at the most be a question of law and in that event it would equally be within the jurisdiction of the Judge. The decision of either kind would only affect the matter of jurisdiction if the Judge had to determine whether the particular kind of action or the amount claimed brought it within his jurisdiction. As the Privy Council has pointed out, if a conclusion of fact or law was the basis of a decision as to jurisdiction, then the matter would be open to revision and not otherwise. The learned Chief Justice referred to the case of Manilal v. Durga Prasad (3), the reasons given therein being adopted by the Chief Justice. The point which the late Jwala Prasad, J. appeared to be dealing with was whether in any event an order which was interlocutory could be dealt with in revision by the High Court and, if I may say so with respect to that distinguished Judge, I do not disagree with the general proposition that if an interlocutory order was such as raised the question of jurisdiction and the order would do an irreparable damage to the complaining party, then an application such as this would lie. But with great respect to the Judges in the case of Ram Bhusan Das v. Bachu Rai (1), that is very far from saying that although another remedy was open and although it was a matter within the jurisdiction of the Judge deciding it, yet an application in revision lay. I am bound in my judgment in this case to rely upon the decisions of the Privy Council, because it is in my judgment impossible to distinguish the principles involved in this case.

The first and the best known case is that of Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Bakhsh Singh (4). In the trial Court it appears to have been argued that as the Code forbade a Court from deciding a matter which had already been disposed of by a previous litigation, the Court was acting with material irregularity by proceeding to try such a suit. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the judgment of Sir B. Peacock said this :—

"The question then is, did the Judges of the lower Court in this case, in the exercise of their jurisdiction, act illegally or with material irregularity. It appears that they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them, and they did decide it. Whether they decided it rightly or wrongly, they had jurisdiction to decide the case; and even if they decided wrongly, they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity".

I then come to the well-known case of Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyer (5) in which their Lordships of the Judicial Committee made this observation at page 267* of the Report referring to s. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure;

"It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law of fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved. And if the appellant's contention be correct, then if the Civil Court should absolutely and whimsically decline to exercise its jurisdiction and refuse to make any orders as to the filling up of vacancies, no matter how many existed, there would not, in a case such as the present, be any remedy available under this section and no appeal would lie".

This Court in Bankey Behari v. Ram Bahadur (6) has decided against the jurisdiction of the High Court in matters of this kind. Coutts, J. and Adami, J. decided in Lachmibati Kumari v. Nand Kumar Singh (7) that this Court will not interfere in revision with an interlocutory order where there is another course open to the applicant and no irremediable harm can be suffered by the interlocutory order. This judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in my judgment, with great respect, applied to the facts of a Ram Bhusan Das's case (1). There is then the decision of this Court in Sham Narain Singh's case (2) to which I have already made reference. It seems to me to be perfectly clear that if I come to the conclusion that what the learned Judges in both these cases were deciding was the question of the construction of the plaint and the reliefs claimed therein and the construction of the Court Fees Act, then it is impossible to say that it was not a question of law; and if indeed it was a question of law, their Lordships of the Privy Council have finally and for all time decided that an application for the exercise of the revisional powers of this Court would not lie. But not only am I bound in my judgment to follow their Lordships of the Judicial Committee for the reasons which they have stated, but I am also bound to follow the plain reading of the section itself which prohibits an application of this kind, as I have said more than once, where the aggrieved party has another remedy open to him. He most certainly had a remedy open here; he merely declines to pay court-fees; his application is dismissed under the condition and an appeal is open to him.

In those circumstances both the rules must be discharged with costs; hearing fee two gold mohurs in each case.

In Civil Revision No. 630 two months' time is allowed to pay the court-fee.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, rr. 1, 2, cl 3—Cl. 3 of r 2, whether covers breach of injunctions issued under r. 1.

Clause 3 of r. 2 of O. XXXIX, Civil Procedure Code, applies to disobedience generally of an injunction granted by the Court and the words 'in case of disobedience' in cl. 3 are wide enough to cover breaches of injunctions issued under O. XXXIX, r. 1, for which breaches no penalty is elsewhere provided. Balbhaddar v. Balla (1), dissented from; Ram Prasad Singh v. The Benares Bank, Ltd (2), and S. Adaikhale Thevean v. Imperial Bank, Madura Branch (3), followed.

C. Rev. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Monghyr, dated August 30, 1934, affirming that of the Munsif, Monghyr, dated March 9, 1934.

Messrs. Syed Ali Khan and Ameer Ali Khan Warsi, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. L. K. Jha and S. N. Ray, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a revisional application against an order of a Munsif of Monghyr committing the petitioners to the civil prison for a period of three weeks for breach of an injunction under O. XXXIX, r. 1, restraining them as defendants in a suit on the file of the Munsif from burying dead bodies in the disputed land during the pendency of the suit. The order of the lower Court was upheld on appeal. The only point raised before the Munsif and the Court of appeal below was that the petitioners were not guilty of the breach complained of by the other side. This point is no longer open, and Mr. Syed Ali Khan has quite properly confined his argument to a question of law. He has argued that though the injunction was issued by the trial Court in the present case under O. XXXIX, r. 1, the order of commitment was passed under cl. 3 of r. 2 of O. XXXIX, and that this clause only applies to breaches of injunctions issued under r. 2. The contention seems to be supported by the decision of Dalal, J. in Balbhaddar v. Balla (1), which Mr Syed Ali Khan has cited in support. But the report of the case does not by any means make it clear how far the question of the applicability of cl. 3 to injunctions passed under r. 1 arose before the learned Judge. It is, however, clear that the learned Judge was of opinion that there was some inadvertence with reference to the provision of a penalty for breach of an injunction under r. 1 of O. XXXIX and that though it is likely that the provisions of r. 2, cl. 3 of O. XXXIX, were intended to be applied to the breach of an injunction under r. 1 also, as cl. 3 is included in r. 2, it would follow that the provisions of that clause will not apply to r. 1. It was not brought to the notice of the learned Judge, who was sitting singly, that there was a decision to the contrary by a Bench of two Judges of the same High Court. This decision is Ram Prasad Singh v. The Benares Bank, Ltd. (2), where the learned Judges were satisfied that the words "in case of disobedience" in cl. 3 of r. 2 were wide enough to cover breaches of injunctions issued under O. XXXIX, r. 1, for which breaches no penalty is elsewhere provided. Mr. Syed Ali Khan points out that that was a case of breach of an injunction issued by a Judge of the Allahabad High Court itself, and that reference was made in that decision to the unquestionable jurisdiction of that Court to punish contempts of its own orders. Ram Prasad Singh's case (2), was, however, followed in S. Adaikhale Thevan v. Imperial Bank, Madura Branch (3), where cl. 3 of r. 2 was applied to the breach of an injunction not coming within r. 2. The drafting of the rule was characterized as somewhat inartistic (the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court had used the word 'clumsy'), but the Madras High Court considered that there was no doubt that cl 3 applies to disobedience generally of an injunction granted by the Court. These rulings do not appear to have been brought to the notice of Dalal, J. In these circumstances, I am not prepared, with all respect to adopt Dalal, J 's view or to dissent from the other rulings referred to.

The application fails and is dismissed with costs. Hearing fee, one gold mohur.

NARAIN DAS—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Hindu Law—Religious institution—Tests to determine if a religious institution is a public trust—Property passing from Guru to Chela*—Presumption —Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (XIV of* 1920*), s. 3—Members of general public worshipping at religious institution, whether persons interested.*

The fact that properties passed always from guru to chela the exclusion of blood relations affords a strong presumption of a religious institution, the members of which renounce the world. [p. 629, col. 1.]

[Case-law discussed.]

A religious or monastic institution may be a public trust for religious or charitable purposes and the question whether it is so or not is to be determined by the evidence in regard to the usage and custom of the particular institution in respect of the duties and obligations attached to the office of the mahant.

Members of the general public who worship at religious institution are persons interested in the Public Trust for the purposes of Act XIV of 1920. [p. , col. .

F. C. A. from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Gujranwala, dated May 26, 1926.

Messrs. Mukand Lal Puri, Hargopal, Bhagat Singh and Mehr Chand, Hem Raj Mahajan for Mr. Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Badri Das and J. L. Kapur, for the Respondent.

Hilton, J.—The plaintiff in this litigation, Mahant Narain Das, an Udasi Sadh of Gujranwala, made a will, which he registered on November 6, 1922. By it he bequeathed the asthan known as Baghichi Thakeran at Gujranwala and also house and shop property situated at Gujranwala and Nankana Sahib to his disciple or chela Pandit Parma Nand.

On August 28, 1923, Nihal Chand a Khatri, and Hara Mal, a Brahman, both of Gujranwala, made an application to the District Judge under s. 3 of Act XIV of 1920 alleging that the Gurdwara known as Baghichi Thakeran at Gujranwala together with shop and house property attached to it was dedicated for religious and charitable purposes of the Hindu public and that Narain Das was its trustee and asking for various reliefs contemplated by the said Act. In the course of those proceedings Narain Das denied the existence of a trust and under s. 5 (3) of the Act the District Judge ordered a stay upon his undertaking to institute, within three months, a suit for a declaration to that effect. Narain Das thereupon instituted the present suit against the aforesaid Nihal Chand and Hara Lal on April 8, 1924. On May 26, 1926, the Senior Subordinate Judge of Gujranwala passed a decree in his favour with costs declaring that the property which was the subject-matter of the dispute was not dedicated property and consequently was not liable to be made the subject of proceedings under Act XIV of 1920 and further that the defendants had no locus standi to institute such proceedings. Against this decree the defendants now appeal.

The case which Mahant Narain Das set up in his plaint was that the disputed property belonged to him as full owner, part having been acquired by himself and part having been inherited by him as the heir of his Guru, Mahant Sant Das. He also asserted his own possession. He asked that it might be declared to be his own property.

The defendants did not deny the plaintiff's possession but maintained that the property was dedicated to a public trust for religious and charitable purposes. Only two issues were framed as follows: (1) Is the property in dispute Wakf? (on defendants). (2) Are defendants worshippers of the place and have they a right to challenge the plaintiff? (on defendants).

The learned trial Judge has reached the conclusion on a consideration of the evidence that although the Asthan was always used by the public for religious purposes, no actual dedication could be inferred from its usage and other attending circumstances. The first issue being thus found against the defendants, it was held on the second issue that the defendants had established no right of access to the property which had not been proved to be a public trust. The decree which the trial Judge gave does not, however, embody any declaration that the plaintiff is the owner of the property. It merely asserts that the property is not wakf and that Act XIV of 1920 does not apply to it.

In arguing the case for the respondent-plaintiff before us Mr. Badri Das has confined himself to an attempt to prove that the plaintiff owns the property and no argument has been made that there exists any trust to which the Act of 1920 does not apply or any trust different from that which has been set up by the defendants.

Before coming to the facts of the case I will deal with an objection which was taken by Mr. Mukand Lal Puri on behalf of the appellant-defendants regarding the onus of the first issue. Such an objection had also been made in the trial Court and overruled. In my judgment the matter is not of fundamental importance as both sides produced a considerable volume of evidence, both oral and documentary, and the decision of this issue must finally be determined by the facts proved on evidence rather than by any initial presumption that may exist in favour of one party or the other. I think, however, that on the pleadings the initial onus was rightly placed on the defendants. The plaintiff had asserted possession which had not been denied. He could, therefore, claim a presumption of ownership under s. 110, Evidence Act. It was argued against this that if no evidence had been called for either side, plaintiff would have failed; but that is not the case, for if there had been no evidence on either side the plaintiff could have claimed a decree by the force of the above-mentioned presumption. It was also argued that the proceedings which had taken place under Act XIV of 1920 threw onus on to the plaintiff, but the mere fact that circumstances compelled him to take the role of plaintiff rather than that of defendant does not deprive him of the presumption that arises in his favour under s. 110, Evidence Act, owing to his possession not being denied. Thus the objection as to onus was rightly overruled by the trial Judge.

The following is a brief history of the Asthan or Gurdwara known as Baghichi Thakeran. It has always been inhabited by Udasi Sadhs and the first mahant was Baba Kulla or Kuljas whose original caste was Khatri. He died about 1800 A. D. There is some rather shadowy evidence that along with other Hindus he migrated to Guranwala from Saidnagar to escape from Muhammadan repression (Ex. P-21 P. 88-B). A street in Gujranwala town is called after the Saidnagris. Whether this is true or not, there seems no doubt that Baba Kulla took up a plot of land at Gujranwala and built a house and planted a garden whence the name Baghichi was derived. There is no satisfactory evidence as to the conditions, if any, on which he obtained this plot of land. His successor was his disciple Thakar Ram Das who had been an Arora and who died in 1845 A. D. He is stated in the plaint to have improved the building and to have practised as a physician but these matters can hardly be said to have been proved. The Samadhs of Baba Kulla and of Ram Das are to be found at the Gurdwara Baghichi.

Ram Das was succeeded by Sant Ram whose original caste was Khatri and who died in 1879. During the 34 years of the mahantship of Sant Das the property was considerably extended. An adjacent vacant plot was taken over and house and shop property at Gujranwala were acquired.

Sant Das was unfortunate in regard to his chelas. The first of these was Bishen Das, who died, as also did Ram Parkash, the chela of Bishen Das. After that Sant Das made a will, Ex. D. W. No. 1, which he registered on October 19, 1875. In this will he contemplated the possibility that he might die without a chela and he provided that in that contingency extensive powers of management should be exercised by a certain Bhai Prem Singh. This Prem Singh was a Nirmala and had already been the chela of another and could not, therefore, become the chela of Sant Das, but the will speaks of him as the sincere well-wisher of Sant Das.

After this, early in 1877, Sant Das made one Atma Ram his chela, the name of Prag Das being given to him, but after a few days Atma Ram renounced his chela-ship owing to parental opposition and returned to his own family (Ex. P-28). Finally, later in 1877, and two years before his own death, Sant Das made Narain Das, the plaintiff in this case, his chela, Narain Das being then only 12 years of age.

Prem Singh lived until 1890, but Narain Das has stated in his evidence as D. W. No. 25 that Prem Singh never came to the Baghichi after his own appointment as chela and the evidence of the defendants' own witnesses lends considerable support to the story that before Sant Das's death Prem Singh left the Baghichi and he took himself about 1875 to a dharamsala of Mool Singh (see D. W. No. 3, D. W. No. 5, D. W. No. 10). Plaintiff's witnesses go further and say hat Prem Singh was turned out by Sant Das (P. W. No. 8, P. W. No. 19, etc.). It cannot be conclusively held that there was any estrangement between the two men but the weight of the oral evidence seems to show that Prem Singh did not interfere in the management of the Baghichi during the minority of Narain Das.

Other evidence was led to show that a committee of management supervised the Baghichi affairs after Sant Das's death, but the principal witness on this point, Brij Lal, D. W. No. 10, who had offered to produce the accounts of the management failed to do so and the fact what this man witnessed a rent deed that was executed in favour of Narain Das himself in 1885 shows that any committee of management which may have functioned during Narain Das's minority was no longer in control when he became a major. I do not think that any supervision of the affairs of the Baghichi after the death of Sant Das either by Prem Singh or by a committee of management is clearly proved.

Narain Das added to the property by acquisitions at Nankana Sahib and he also built shops on the vacant plots at Gujranwala. The income during the time of Narain Das rose from Rs. 1,394 in 1905 to Rs. 7,664 in 1923 (see V. A. Nos. 987-998 at p. 139-B). Narain Das died in 1931 during the pendency of this appeal and was succeeded by his chela Pandit Parma Nand, P. W. No. 38. This man who had been brought on the record as plaintiff in place of Narain Das, was educated at Benares and elsewhere and returned to Gujranwala about 1919.

This suit was instituted on April 8, 1924, and decided in the trial Court on May 26, 1926. In the meantime the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, 1925, was passed and litigation under that Act concerning the Gurdwara Baghichi ensued between mahant Narain Das and certain Sikhs of that locality. That litigation was finally decided by an appellate judgment of a Division Bench of this Court on April 30, 1934, Sunder Singh v. Narain Das (1). That judgment decided that the Gurdwara Baghichi is not a Sikh Gurdwara and that consequently there was no jurisdiction over it under the Sikh Gurdwaras Act (see s. 16 (3) of the said Act). We have been asked to treat that judgment and also the judgment of the Tribunal, which was under appeal, as relevant evidence in the present appeal under s. 42, Evidence Act, and also to admit it as such under O. XLI, r. 27, Civil Procedure Code. It is not, however, necessary to make a formal admission of that judgment in the manner proposed. As a judgment of this Court we can refer to it to enable us to ascertain what was there decided and upon what grounds. It is conceded, however, that no evidence was produced in those proceedings which was not or could not have been produced in the suit to which this appeal relates and we have to make up our minds about such evidence and the various points at issue independently of the conclusions arrived at in that judgment. Moreover, the relevance of that judgment to the present proceedings is definitely restricted by the consideration that it was taken for granted for the purpose of proceedings under s. 8, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, that the Gurdwara is a place of worship to which worshippers have access and it was held that it was not open to Narain Das in those proceedings to plead that it was his own private property. Those judgments cannot therefore be held relevant to depreciate any evidence or argument adduced by Narain Das in the present case in support of his assertion that the Gurdwara is his private property. This being the state of affairs we have not thought it desirable to admit those judgments as formal evidence in the present case under O. XLI, r. 27, Civil Procedure Code.

The first important matter for consideration in this appeal is the presumption, if any, to be drawn from the fact that the Gurdwara Baghichi and other properties in suit have descended from Guru to Chela instead of being inherited by the blood relations of the various mahants beginning from Baba Kulla. The mahants from Baba Kulla to Parma Nand have all been celibate but they all had blood relations in their natural families, and these blood relations did not in any case succeed to the property. Thakar Das, P. W. No. 19, is a direct descendant of Baba Kulla's brother. Narain Das in his own evidence speaks of the grandsons of Ram Das' sister to whom Ram Das is said to have gifted some property which Sant Das brought back from the grandsons. Hemraj, P. W. No. 5, is a grandson of Sant Das's brother and Bishen Das, P. W. No. 31, is himself the brother of the plaintiff Narain Das. Thus blood relations have existed who might have inherited in each case, and the question is why they did not.

There is a long series of judgments of the Punjab Chief Court and subsequently of this Court in which it has been held that where property has passed to a chela by virtue of his being chela to the exclusion of natural heirs, that fact affords a presumption that the property has a religious character and was held as such by men who belonged to a religious fraternity and was not, therefore, their private property. Ram Singh v. Nihal Singh (2) and Har Devi v. Charan Das (3) are typical cases of which the latter was a case of Udasis and the judgment also speaks of > "a feeling against the secularization of property held in religious trust for the benefit of a community or of the public at large."

The trial Judge was unwilling to apply any such rule to the present case because he took the view that the chela was the only heir to these mahants. Mr. Badri Das for the respondent-plaintiff has pressed this view to its utmost and has argued that when a man becomes chela of an Udasi mahant he thereby renounces the world and thus disconnects himself from his blood relations, who from that date can no longer be said to be his heirs: consequently, it is contended, when a chela succeeds to his Guru, there is no exclusion of natural heirs, for they had already ceased to be heirs at an earlier stage when their quondam relative had renounced the world and thus only the chela could succeed to the Guru's property, whether that property were religious or secular, and if the Guru was competent to acquire secular property, such property would not change its original character by the mere process of being inherited by his chela.

This reasoning finds support from a judgment of a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court Sheo Ghulam Puri v. Shiam Lal Bhagat (4). In that case the mahants were Dasnami Goshains and were held to sever their connection with their natural families on being admitted to the order, but at the same time they were competent to acquire private property. It was held in such circumstances there was no legal presumption that particular properties were trust properties, there having been no exclusion of natural relations, since the tie of relationship had ceased to exist when the admission to the ascetic order took place. This authority would seem at first sight to clash with the rule that has been generally followed in the Punjab, but in fact the Allahabad case proceeded on the premise that the mahants were competent to acquire private property, whereas in the present case that is a point which is a subject of controversy. The rule which has been generally followed in the Punjab and which has been stated above appears to go back to the Punjab Civil Code of 1869, of which two clauses are pertient. Section 4, cl. 20:

"When any member of a family voluntarily retires from the world and enters a religious order, he loses all claim to his patrimony and any property which he may subsequently acquire will not be inherited by his blood relatives, but will belong to the institution to which he is attached"

Section 22, cl. 6:

"In religious institutions the head of the establishment administers the entire property of all kinds for the benefit of the endowment and in fulfilment of the trust * * * * Members of these institutions cannot ordinarily become possessed of private property: whatever they may acquire in the exercise of their vocation is thrown into the common stock and devoted to religious uses."

Paragraphs 30 and 89 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law (1926 edition) are in accordance with the above rules. Given these rules as a starting point it is easy to deduce conclusions as to the presumptions that should be drawn. From the first clause it follows that when a chela succeeds in preference to blood relations there is a presumption that the deceased was a man who had retired from the world and had entered a religious institution or order; and from the second clause it follows that such a man having entered such a religious order is ordinarily incompetent to hold private property and that the presumption is against the property being his private property. This presumption, however, would naturally be rebuttable and if according to the usage of any particular institution or order, it were found that a member of it could acquire private property, the reasoning in the Allahabad case would then come into play and there would be no legal presumption that any particular property was trust property rather than private property.

Applying these principles to the present base I would hold that the exclusion of blood relations from inheritance affords strong evidence that the mahants from Baba Kulla to Parma Nand have been members of a religious order who have renounced worldly affairs and that there is therefore an initial presumption against their ability to own private property. Similar monastic institutions of Bengal and Madras known at matts, have been the subject of pronouncements by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (5) and Aruna Chellam Chetty v. Venkata Chalapapathi Guruswamigal (6). The two following principles have been laid down in those authorities

"(1) The nature of the mahant's ownership is an ownership in trust for the institution, and (2) the only law of these mahants and their offices, functions and duties is to be found in custom and practice which is proved by testimony and it is the usage and custom of the particular matt which governs the conditions and incidents of tenure. As regards the first of these two propositions their Lordships further explained in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (7), that the words "trust" and "trustees" as applied to the mahant are not to be interpreted in the strict sense of the English Law. This point was further considered by a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in Nelliappa Achari v. Punnaivanam Achari (8) where after a review of the Privy Council authorities above cited the conclusion was reached that the head of a matt is a constructive trustee as contemplated by s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, and a suit against him under s. 92 is therefore maintainable. In the course of the judgment it was remarked that the head of a matt may be answerable as a trustee in the general sense for mal-administration and has to administer a trust for general pious and religious purposes in view of the duties and obligations attached to his office: if these are not merely voluntarily, that is, if the head is bound to carry them out, he must be answerable, if he does not, notwithstanding that he may have a very wide discretion as to the application of the matt funds and other properties for this purpose, if the public or a portion of them are interested in the performance of these duties and obligations which are or ought to be employed at least as to some part of them, in the maintenance of a public, religious and charitable endowment, the only way the public can interfere is by a suit under s. 92, Civil Procedure Code.

The foregoing observations with which I respectfully agree lead to the conclusion that the words "any express or constructive trust" in s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, are not confined to what may be called the English Law sense of the word "trustee." Now the wording of s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, in regard to public trusts for religious or charitable purposes is the same as the wording of Act XIV of 1920 and the above judgment is therefore directly pertinent to this case.

Another authority is Puran Atal v. Darshan Das (9) where it was held that a matt of Nanakshahi Faqirs was a public trust for religious or charitable purposes within the meaning of s. 92, Civil Procedure Code, even though the main purpose of the trust was to benefit a particular sect.

The upshot of the matter therefore is that a religious or monastic institution of this type may be a public trust for religious or charitable purposes and the question whether it is so or not is to be determined by the evidence in regard to the usage and custom of the particular institution in respect of the duties and obligations attached to the office of the mahant. The evidence in the case must, therefore, be examined with a view to ascertaining the usage and custom of this particular institution in these matters.

The first point that the evidence indicates is that no express dedication of the Gurdwara or its property by any founder and no conditions of any such express dedication have been proved. It had been tentatively pleaded by the defendants that one Bhai Gurdial Singh founded the Gurdwara Baghichi and endowed it with land in the time of Baba Kulla but there is no evidence of this. The trial Judge took the view that although it was established that the Gurdwara was always used by the public for religious purposes, no inference could be drawn from that fact that the property was wakf. As pointed out above, however, the existence of a public trust should be held to be proved if the usage and custom of the institution as appearing from the evidence indicates that duties and obligations are attached to the office of mahant, which he is bound to carry out and in which the public are interested.

The earliest documentary evidence of importance is of 1853 to 1856, (Exs. P-17, V. A. Nos. 893 to 897, E. A. No. 1). These documents show that, in 1883 katha or recitation from the Hindu sacred books was being performed regularly at the Baghichi by a Pandit named Radha Kishen. One Dilla Ram sued this Radha Kishen claiming a share of the offerings made at the time of the katha on the ground that he had a hereditary right to recite the katha. Mahant Sant Das asserted the view that there was no hereditary office and that he could get katha recited by whomsoever he pleased. He quoted an opinion of the Panches of Gurjranwala given in 1849 to this effect. The Deputy Commissioner, who decided the matter, upheld Sant Das's view. The important points are that public recitation was going on in 1853, offerings were being made by the public and Sant Das justified himself by the aid of an award made by the Panches of Gujranwala. Three years later the same Dilla Ram brought a similar claim against Sant Das himself but it met with a similar fate. What Dilla Ram said in this plaint about the functions of Sant Das must be discounted by the controversy that existed between them and so must also some of the expressions used by the Deputy Commissioner in his judgment of August 29, 1856, as these seem to have been taken from Dilla Ram's plaint.

In 1869 four Sikh descendants of Bhai Gurdial Singh wrote a document (Ex. D. W. No. 2) asking the Government to include in the Gurdwara Baghichi a plot of land which was adjacent to it and of which the signatories were the land revenue assignees. They stated in this document that not only the vacant plot but also the Gurdwara building were "solely for the benefit of the public." It appears that the Government took no action on this request at that time but the opinion of the signatories regarding the public character of the Gurdwara is relevant under s. 32 (4), Evidence Act. The same open space was eventually included in the Gurdwara five years later, in 1874 (Exs. V. A. 923, 924, 925, 929 and 930 at pp. 105 to 108 of paper book B.) The Deputy Commissioner of the time found this site to be an unsightly plot adjoining the public road and he agreed that it should be handed over to Sant Das if the latter would wall it off. Sant Das himself was unwilling to purchase it, but the citizens (who included one Muhammadan signatory) arranged the affair by persuading the Deputy Commissioner to remit the share of the price of the plot which was due to the Government "in the interest of the city." The actual proprietors of the plot were compensated out of a public fund and the muafidars waived their interest. These documents are important for the expressions which they contain about the character of the Gurdwara and the mahant:

"The house in question is very holy. The sadhu occupying it is a very good man. The citizens consider the house and sadhu to be holy and worship them. The house benefits the public. The people derive comfort from it. Travellers come and rest there."

The transaction itself however seems to have had a town-planning motive rather than to have been prompted by a desire to endow the Gurdwara.

The documents so far examined are important as evidencing the public character of the Mahant's functions and obligations from 1853 to 1874 though perhaps not conclusive on the subject. The will of mahant Sant Das made and registered in 1875 (Ex. D. W. No. 1) leaves little doubt that he regarded himself and his successors as trustees responsible for duties and obligations of a public character. When he made this will he had, as already related, no chela and he was contemplating the possibility that he might die without one. He was not however content that in such a contingency the property should pass to his blood relations but he made elaborate provision for the Gurdwara to be carried on as a public institution by Bhai Prem Singh, or failing him, by a committee of management of Hindu and Sikh citizens. Towards the beginning of the will he certainly stated that the Gurdwara and the properties attached to it belonged to him and that he was competent to alienate these properties. This however it has been plausibly argued, was a necessary prelude to the making of a will, and it is in any case conditioned by what follows.

Sant Das next set forth that he was making the will for the upkeep of the Gurdwara Baghichi with the consent of the Satsangis (congregation or companions in truth), At the end of the will it is clearly stated that the building of the Gurdwara Baghichi and the house and shop property at Gujranwala were wakf property and a place of wroship for all Hindus." The will also disclose Sant Das's solicitude that the Gurdwara and the other properties should not beceme burdened with any loan or otherwise subjected to interference by creditors. From these phrases and from the provision that his own chela, if appointed, should only have a right to spend the income of the properties, it is manifest that Sant Das regarded himself and his successors as trustees for the Hindu community in respect of these properties.

The will, moreover, indicates also the object of the trust as conceived by Sant Das, who provided that one quarter of the entire income should be devoted to katha khawani and kirtan, which are forms of public worship, one quarter to the food expenses of sadhs and chance visitors, one-quarter to the repairs and improvements of the buildings, and the remaining quarter to the expenses of the manager of the Gurdwara. It has been contended that this will created an endowment even if one did not already exist, but I think that the correct view to be derived from the wording of the will itself is that Sant Das was arranging to continue a state of affairs which he already regarded as existing, only a change in the personnel of the management being necessitated by his having at that time no chela. Support for this view is derived from the passage which describes the forms of worship then being carried on at the Gurdwara and directs their continuance:

"Amawas fairs, katha, recitation from the Granth Sahib and Kirtan shall go on in the Gurdwara as before."

Against this will, the case argued for the respondent-plaintiff was that Sant Das himself revoked the will (and the trial Judge appears to have adopted this view); secondly, that in any case it was never acted upon and that what Sant Das stated therein related merely to the future and not the existing state of affairs at the Gurdwara.

The evidence that Sant Das revoked the will is unconvincing. A story is told by some witnesses of the plaintiff (P. Ws. Nos. 5, 7, 8, 9, 19, 20 and 21) that Sant Das had made the will when he was ill and that when he recovered, he tore it up and drove Prem Singh from the Gurdwara. Some of these witnesses merely give this story as hearsay, while all those who profess to have been present at this scene can only have been boys at the time whose presence was not probable, nor, if present, would they be likely to have understood exactly what was happening or to have remembered it for fifty years. I have no hesitation in rejecting this evidence. The statements of two men Gobind Das, p. 222, and Janki Das (V. A. 753-756) made in 1891, that Sant Das revoked his will are inadmissible in evidence as these men are not proved to be dead. Moreover, these statements were made as witnesses at a time when the matter appears to have become a controversial topic.

As to the contention that the will, even if not revoked, was never acted upon, there is doubt that the appointment two years later of Narain Das as the chela and the disconnection about the same time of Prem Singh with the Gurdwara Baghichi rendered most of the provisions of the will of Sant Das abortive. There is no good reason however to hold that Narain Das inherited the Gurdwara and its properties from Sant Das otherwise than subject to the conditions and restrictions which the will of Sant Das clearly intended to impose upon their control and management.

Thus this will is a most important document in support of the appellant's case and in face of its provisions and assertions it is difficult to adopt any other view than that Sant Das regarded himself and his successors as trustees for the Hindu public of the properties in question.

The next point is whether any of the mahants have been transferring any of the properties to strangers, as from any such transfer it could be inferred that they were treating the property as their own. Acquisitions were made by all the mahants, but Narain Das admitted that those made by himself were bought from the income of the estate, which as already related has been rising steadily in recent years. Ram Das made some gifts of house property to his sister's relatives, but after Ram Das' death Sant Das appears to have bought back the house from those relatives, after an inconclusive proposal to give them another house in exchange for it. These transactions were evidently not in the same category as alienations to strangers for a consideration and may almost be regarded as an exception which proves the rule.

Sant Das made a similar gift to the son of Radha Kishen who had recited katha at the Gurdwara for over fifty years. This may reasonably be regarded as an alienation in furtherance of the general purposes of the institution.

Exhibit P. W. No. 18, purports to be a sale deed of a house executed by Sant Das in 1865. This unregistered document is not properly proved nor was it produced from proper custody and its genuineness is therefore open to question. It cannot be taken as proof of a transfer. No other alienation by Sant Das is satisfactorily proved.

Narain Das admitted that during his sixty-two years of mahantship he neither sold nor gifted any property. One property which he bought, he mortgaged in order to raise the funds to pay for the purchase, and this mortgage he subsequently paid off out of the income of the estate. The evidence accordingly cannot be said to support the view that the mahants had been alienating the properties freely as their own personal property.

Next, there are various admissions of Narain Das which require to be noticed. Ex. V. A. No. 891 is an application purporting to be made by him to the Deputy Commissioner in 1916 praying that a noisy flour mill might be removed from the vicinity of the Gurdwara. This document is not admitted to be genuine though it was produced from public records. It was written by a man who is dead, but whose hand-writing is proved by his son, P. W. No. 13. The signature of Narain Das on it is proved by D. W. No. 11 and not clearly and distinctly denied by Narain Das. I have no doubt that this is a genuine document and that Narain Das signed it. It recites that the noise of the flour mill incommoded visitors from elsewhere to the Jor Fair and also mahatamas who were accustomed to staying at the "well-known" Gurdwara by diverting their attention from prayer. This shows the public character of the Gurdwara in the time of Narain Das as late as 1916.

In 1891, Narain Das described himself in a plaint as mahant of the asthan Baghichi and in 1903 he was similarly described in a sale-deed. Other documents speak of the place as Gurdwara or Thakardwara. Such names might possibly, however, be given to private institutions, and the title of mahant to persons who are not trustees and this part of the evidence does not therefore carry the case of the appellants much farther.

For the year 1905-06 Narain Das was assessed to Rs. 28 as income-tax. This income-tax was remitted on his objection and he was not again assessed until the pendency of the present proceedings. It is contended for the appellants that the tax was remitted in 1906 on Narain Das's representation that his income was derived from wakf property. The documents have been destroyed and only oral evidence is available except for Narain Das' own accounts of 1906, which show that it was on his application that the remission was made. There are three witnesses who say that the remission was made because the property was stated to be wakf and they all had special means of knowing what they assert. Hira Nand (D. W. No. 9), was Narain Das's witness in the income-tax objection proceedings. Diwan Chand (D. W. No. 22), was income-tax clerk in 1906 and remembers the case as he was also a regular visitor of the Gurdwara. Karam Chand (C. W.) is a pleader and had seen the remission order. Against this Narain Das merely deposed that he did not remember on what grounds he had claimed exemption. I think that the above evidence adequately proves that Narain Das had represented the property to be wakf in 1906.

The learned Counsel for the appellants contended that a public kitchen, a school (pathshala) and a library are proved to be attached to the Gurdwara. There is no good evidence of the existence of a public kitchen. The school was started by Parma Nand after his return from Benares in 1919 with the help of public subscriptions. The connection of Narain Das and of the Gurdwara with it seems to have been limited to the loan of two rooms and to donations of a more or less recurring character. This school seems to have been an independent enterprise of Parma Nand and throws no light on the functions and duties of Narain Das prior to the institution of these proceedings. As to the library this also seems to have belonged to Parma Nand and it is doubtful how far it was available for public use.

The next point concerns the nature of the worship that has been taking place at the Gurdwara. There is no temple there nor any idol, though Samadhs exist. It has already been shown that public recitations of religious books (katha) took place there prior to 1853 and also in 1875. These recitations continued until about 1902 when Radha Kishen, the Pandit who had conducted them for over 50 years, and his son Vishen Sharma had died. They were then discontinued until their revival in 1919 by Parma Nand. The evidence that one Chet Ram continued them after 1902 is scanty and unconvincing. Parma Nand invited the public to his recitations by means of hand-bills. The discontinuance of katha for 17 years is a point in favour of the plaintiff and so is the fact proved by many witnesses that such recitations take place in private houses. The will of Sant Das however clearly recognised these recitations as one of the permanent objects of the institution.

The Granth Sahib was being opened and read at the Gurdwara in 1875. There is some evidence (e. g., P. W. No. 5) that Prem Singh took away the Granth Sahib with him before Sant Das' death and that many years elapsed before Narain Das again started the opening of the Granth Sahib and its reading. Narain Das however admitted that he had opened the Granth Sahib 27 or 28 years before the suit, his contention being that he kept it at his house in the same way as any other house-holder might do. This contention, however, is forcibly shaken in my opinion by the proof contained in his own account books that certain articles kept for the procession of the Granth Sahib had been stolen on Amawas day and had to be replaced. This appears to have occurred in 1901 and such a procession would be a clear indication of the public nature of the worship of the Granth Sahib at this Gurdwara. The reading of the Granth Sahib was apparently not discontinued until a few years before the institution of this suit and it is clear that either katha or reading of the Granth Sahib or both were going on at this Gurdwara from 1853 to 1922.

The accounts of Narain Das also indicate that the Amawas Fair was regularly celebrated and that Jor Mela took place on these occasions. Such entries recur regularly. That the public came is stated by witnesses and is also evident from such entries as "purchased fans for the Sangat on the occasion of Jor Mela on Amawas (May 3, 1918)." Narain Das has attempted to explain that what was done monthly on Amawas day was to hold the Sharadh of Baba Kulla. Parma Nand and other witnesses also stated this. It is not a convincing explanation as the Sharadhs of Ram Das and Sant Das are admitted by Parma Nand to be performed annually.

Against all this it is not satisfactorily proved that any subscriptions were ever made by the public towards the upkeep of the Gurdwara nor that any offerings made by the public either to the Granth Sahib or on the occasion of katha were ever taken by the mahant himself. The need for public subscriptions would not be pressing as the income of this Gurdwara from rent of shops was apparently sufficient at all times to meet the costs of repairs and also to furnish funds for new acquisitions. Offerings made at the time of katha would naturally be taken by the Pandit who recited the katha and those made to the Granth Sahib might not be very substantial and might, as Narain Das deposed, have been assigned to the ragis or singers. But the mere fact that such offerings were made indicates the attendance of the public.

To sum up the whole matter, I am of opinion that the properties passed always from guru to chela to the exclusion of blood relations affords a strong presumption of the existence of a religious institution, the members of which renounce the word; that the documents of 1853, 1856, 1869, 1874 and particularly the will of Sant Das of 1875 the absence of alienations of property by these mahants, the admissions of Narain Das and especially his representation regarding the remission of income-tax in 1906, and finally the continued performance of public worship at the Gurdwara and the holding of fairs attended by the public, prove that these mahants do not own property on their own behalf but as trustees for the Hindu public for the performance of religous worship and the feeding of travellers, and that the trust in question is a public trust within the meaning of Act XIV of 1920.

On the second issue, there is evidence of two witnesses who had been called by the plaintiff to prove documents, P. Ws. Nos. 14 and 15, who say that within their knowledge Nihal Chand, defendant, used to visit the Baghichi Gurdwara to hear katha, while some of the defendants witnesses have also deposed that the defendants are worshippers at the Gurdwara (D. Ws. Nos. 4, 6, 7, 9, 20 and 22). This matter was not seriously controverted before us by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff and I would hold on the strength of the above evidence that the defendants are persons interested in the Public Trust for the purposes of Act XIV of 1920.

For the foregoing reasons I would accept the appeal of the appellants-defendants and setting aside the judgment and decree of the Senior Sub-Judge of Gujranwala, dated May 26, 1926, I would make an order dismissing the suit of the plaintiff with costs throughout.

Messrs. P. N. Gour and Gopal Prasad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. C. De, for the Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application on behalf of Nihera Kahar who was convicted by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Buxar with Second Class Powers under s. 454 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment. The charge against him was as follows:

"That you, on or about June 30, 1934, at Dumraon, committed dwelling house trespass by entering into the house of Musammat Munwa Pasin and used as human dwelling in order to the commission of theft punishable with imprisonment and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 454 of the Indian Penal Code, etc."

The case for the prosecution is a very simple one. Musammat Munwa on the day of occurrence had gone out early in the morning at 5 A. M. to an orchard of which she had taken settlement from the owners. When she returned at 2 P. M. to her house she found the accused inside it. On seeing her he tried to conceal himself in the kitchen. Thereupon Musammat Munwa locked the door from outside and shouted "thief, thief". Some of the prosecution witnesses, including three constables belonging to an out-post close by, reached the house and the accused was taken out of the room in their presence and taken to the thana. A first information was lodged by Munwa Pasin. It may be noted here that Munwa Pasin had left the house in charge of her daughter Premia, a married woman, who came from her husband's place about six or seven months before the date of occurrence,

Her age is said to be twenty years. Premia's statement is that a little before the time the accused was found in the house, she had gone out to bring water from a neighbouring well. The trial Court found, to quote his own words,

"that there is an overwhelming evidence to connect the accused with the offence under s. 454, Indian Penal Code as he was found committing lurking house trespass by entering into the house of Musammat Munwa used as human dwelling in order to the commission of an offence."

From this it is clear that the trial Court did not feel justified in convicting the accused under s. 454, that is committing lurking house trespass with the object of committing theft as he was originally charged. But he has convicted the accused for having committed lurking house-trespass "in order to the commission of an offence."

The case for the defence was that the accused had been carrying on an intrigue with Premia and went to the house in the absence of the mother to meet Premia. A number of letters were produced for the purpose of showing that elaborate correspondence was going on between the accused on the one hand and Musammat Premia on the other. These letters, to my mind, could not be of any use to the accused. Premia denies the authorship and the boy Ramjan Mian, who was supposed to be the go-between, and has been examined on behalf of the accused, stands thoroughly discredited. Mr. Gopal Prasad for the petitioner raises a point of law and that is that when the charge indicated that the trespass was committed with the intention of committing theft, the petitioner should not have been convicted for having committed trespass with the object of committing an offence. A number of decisions have been placed before me both for and against the contention. Mr. Gopal Prasad relies upon the decision in Raghu Singh v. Emperor (1) which is based on a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Muhammad Hussein v. Emperor (2); whereas Mr. B. C. De appearing on behalf of the Crown relies chiefly upon the case of Karali Prasad Garu v. Emperor (3), and also on the decision of this Court in Jadab Mahton v. Emperor (4). I am of opinion, that the last two cases are applicable to the facts of this case. The only difference between these cases and the present case is that whereas the charge in this case was under s. 454 with the object of committing theft, in these cases the charges were under s. 457, with the object of committing theft. But apart from the decisions, s. 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code lays down that:—

"When a person is charged with an offence consisting of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constituted a complete minor offence, and such combination is proved but the remaining particulars are not proved, he may be convicted by the minor offence, though he was not charged with it .."

On this point, I am afraid, the contention of Mr. Gopal Prasad cannot succeed. But there is another point urged by Mr. Gopal Prasad with some amount of force that if the entry into the house with the intention of committing theft is not proved, what is the offence which could be the object when the accused trespassed into the house. Mr. De suggested adultery. There are no doubt a number of cases in which when a man was found inside a house under very exceptional circumstances, for example, at midnight, the presumption was raised that he was there with an intention of committing an offence whatever that offence might be. At any rate his entrance into the house was sure to cause annoyance to the inmates which brings his act within the purviews of s. 441 of the Indian Penal Code. But in this case I do not find anything on the record to indicate that the accused entered the house with the intention of committing an offence. There is no evidence to support the suggestion made by Mr. De that the intention was to commit adultery. So far as the accused knew there were no other inmates in the house except the girl when the accused entered, the mother having left the house at 5 A. M. as I have already mentioned. His subsequent conduct of trying to conceal himself when Musammat Munwa arrived does not indicate an intention to do any of the acts mentioned in s. 441 of the Indian Penal Code, the whole anxiety being to conceal himself as soon as possible. It may be that he went only to have a talk with the girl Premia and when discovered in the house, he did no like to be seen any more. That being so I do not feel satisfied that it has been proved that the intention of the accused in going to the house was to commit an offence. I would, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon the accused.

The lower Appellate Court seems to be under a misapprehension when it says that the trial Court found that the accused entered the house with the object of committing theft. To quote his words:—

"As the record stands, the circumstances in which the appellant was caught inside the house, the lower Court's conclusion that the man had committed lurking house trespass in order to commit the crime of theft."

With all respect to the lower Appellate Court I do not find where the trial Court came to that conclusion. But any how it does not affect the position of the accused because the effective portion of the lower Appellate Court's judgment is that he upheld the finding of the trial Court.

In a suit for damages brought against a Railway Company on the allegation that the plaintiff's property adjoining the Railway line was destroyed by a spark from the engine of a running train the burden of proof as to whether proper precaution had been taken to avoid emission of such sparks lay on the Railway Company and the latter would be liable if it failed to take all reasonable precaution. Secretary of State for India in Council v. Dwarka Prasad (1), relied on, Halford v. *The E. Held, that the plaintiff could not be held to be guilty of contributory negligence.

S. C. A. from the decision of the Subordinat Judge of Farrukhabad, dated June 8, 1932.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. R. N. Gurtu, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. B. Johari, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by a Railway Company against the decree of the Courts below awarding damages to the plaintiff for loss sustained by him through fire. The origin of the fire was stated to be that certain sparks from an engine of the Railway Company fell on the grass growing on the Railway banks and spreading on to the jungle of the plaintiff's adjoining land damaged some patel grass and trees. The plaintiff is the owner of village Bholanpore Chirpura and a portion of its area is situated close to the Railway line which passes over a certain portion of the land of this village. There are waste and jungle lands belonging to the plaintiff in this village and various kinds of timber and fruit trees and patel grass grow on these lands. The plaintiff's case is that on April 13, 1930, a passenger train owned by the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company was running between Cawnpore and Farrukhabad and certain sparks from the engine were responsible for the fire and the damage to the plaintiff's property. Courts below have decreed the plaintiff's suit for damages to the extent of Rs. 600 on the finding that the defendant Company was guilty of negligence.

In second appeal it is contended before me that on the findings of the lower Appellate Court no negligence, such as is actionable in law, has been established and that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. It is said that the Railway Company has a statutory power of running locomotive engines on the Cawnpore-Farrukhabad line and, therefore, they are not responsible for the consequences of the fire because

"when the Legislature has sanctioned the use of a particular means for a given purpose the sanction carries with it the consequence that the use of the means itself for that purpose is not an act for which an action can lie."

This argument, however, was modified by the concession that in case of negligence the Railway Company would not be exonerated. The question, therefore, is whether the defendant was guilty of such negligence as to entitle the plaintiff to obtain damages.

The lower Appellate Court has found that "the plaintiff's oral evidence is worthy of being relied on."

It has also discussed the defendant evidence and has come to the conclusion that

"in face of the plaintiff's clear evidence no weight can be given to the defence evidence."

It is not possible for me in second appeal to come to a different conclusion on the question of the weight to be attached to the evidence adduced by the parties. It was, however, argued by Dr. Katju that the lower Appellate Court has misread a portion of the evidence given by Ala Rakhu, a witness for the defendant, and that the finding is vitiated because the Court thinks that Ala Rakhu to a certain extent corroborates the plaintiff's evidence. Ala Rakhu in examination-in chief supported the defence case but in cross-examination stated that when he was about to start for Fatehgarh to report the matter to the Permanent-way Inspector the fire had already gone out of the Railway fencing (ag tar ke bahar pahunch chuki thi). The case of the defendant was that the fire did not have its origin within the Railway boundaries but in the land belonging to the plaintiff caused by the negligence of some of the plaintiff's servant. The lower Appellate Court, therefore, was justified in saying that the admission by Ala Rakhu to the effect that the fire had gone out of the Railway fencing suggests that the fire originated on the Railway banks. In my view there has been no misreading of the testimony of Ala Rakhu. After a review of the evidence produced by the parties the lower Appellate Court records this finding

"There was grass on the defendants' land, between the fencing on either side of the Railway line, 1 to 1½ cubit high; that that grass caught fire, owing to sparks, falling down from the Railway engine; and that that fire spread on to the plaintiff's land and burnt his patel and trees."

It is then argued that even if this finding be accepted the plaintiff has no cause of action to maintain a suit for damages. The contention is that although it may be the duty of the Railway Company to take proper precaution for the avoidance of fire due to sparks from Railway engines yet an impossible duty should not be imposed and if the Railway Company were liable for damages caused to the plaintiff's land by reason of the sparks from the engine falling on the grass on the Railway banks and then spreading on to the plaintiff's land the task of the Railway Company would be an impossible one, because it would amount to asking them to keep the banks of their line "trimmed like a lawn or altogether preventing visitation thereon." It is said that the imposition o such a liability was not intended by the Legislature which gave the Railway Company power and authority to run trains and locomotive engines.

It was held by Mukerji J. in the Secretary of State for India in Council v. Dwarka Prasad (1), in a plaintiff's suit for damages brought against a Railway Company on the allegation that his property adjoining the Railway line was destroyed by a spark from the engine of a running train the burden of proof as to whether proper precaution had been taken to avoid emission of such sparks lay on the Railway Company and the latter would be liable if it failed to take all reasonable precaution. Mr. Dey was examined in the present case by the Railway Company and he said that 10 feet of land near the Railway fencing is kept clean by the Railway Authorities and this track is known as the fire line, then again a piece of land 2 feet in width near the Railway track itself is kept clean and that all these precautions were taken in 1930 also. This would go to show that the Railway Company itself did not consider it impossible to keep about 10 feet wide land near the fencing and 2 feet wide land near the Railway track clean. It also appears in the evidence of the plaintiff and of Mr. Dey that the plaintiff had made several complaints to the Railway Authorities for damage caused to his property by the sparks from the engine and that several thekadars who had taken a theka of cutting grass from the plaintiff's land had shown their disinclination to take the theka. The attention of the authorities was pointedly drawn to the duty of cutting the tall grass inside the fencing in order to prevent damage to the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court has refused to believe Mr. Dey when the latter said that the precaution of cutting the grass had been taken in the year 1930. The learned Judge says, "Neither his oral statement nor his reports can be worthy of being given any weight". Under these circumstances I am of the opinion that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the defendant Railway Company was guilty of actionable negligence was sound in law.

Reliance, however, was placed by Dr. Katju on the case of Halford v. The E. I. R. Company (2). This case lays down that if every precaution which the nature of the case suggests has been observed then the Railway Company which has a statutory power of running locomotive engines will not be liable for damages caused to the plaintiff's property independent of negligence. Coming to the facts of that case it appears that they were entirely different from the facts of the present case. The learned Single Judge as well as the Judges who heard the Letters Patent Appeal relied greatly upon the evidence tendered by the Railway Company which was to the effect that the grass on the Railway banks was not more than a foot high and that it was not to be expected that the Railway Company would trim the grass on the banks like a lawn. In the present case it is admitted by the Railway Company that the fire line and another two feet wide line near the Railway track has to be kept clean of grass, and the finding is that the grass on the defendants' land between the fencing on either side of the Railway line was about 18 to 24 inches high. The case cited by the appellant, therefore, does not help the Railway Company. Next it was contended that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence inasmuch as some of his servants saw some live coal falling from the ash-pan of the Railway engine which ignited the grass on the Railway line and this fire in its turn by the westerly wind that was blowing spread on to the plaintiff's land. It is said that the plaintiff's servants could have managed to extinguish the fire if they had taken proper steps. According to the defendants' own witness Ala Rakhu the fire spread with great rapidity and the jungle was ablaze within a very short time, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that it was not possible for the plaintiff's servants to have averted the damage by adopting such steps as were humanly possible.

For the reasons given above there is no force in this appeal and I dismiss it with costs. Dr. Katju has asked for permission to file an appeal by way of Letters Patent saying that the question is of great importance to the Railway Company and I give him leave.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Question, whether in partition suit valuation for purposes of appeal to Privy Council should be of entire property—Whether of sufficient importance to allow appeal to Privy Council—Decision on question of impartibility of estate—Whether one affecting whole estate.

The question whether for the purpose of s. 110 of the Civil Procedure Code in the right to appeal to His Majesty in Council the valuation for the purpose of that section is to be taken of the entire property which it was sought to partition or whether it is the value of the share claimed by the plaintiff, itself is one of sufficient importance for allowing leave to appeal to the Privy Council. Muhammad Asghar v. Abida Begam (1), applied.

A decision on the question of the impartibility of an estate raised as a bar to the suit for partition is one which possibly affects the estate and if the value of the estate is above Rs. 10,000, appeal to His Majesty in Council is competent.

Application for leave to Appeal to His Majesty in Council under ss. 109, 110 and O. XLV, r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code.

Messrs. A. B. Mukharji and Nawadip Chandra Ghosh, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. S M. Mullick, P. Misra and D. C. Varma, for the Opposite Party.

Courtney Terrell, C. J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a judgment of this Court allowing an appeal from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in a suit for partition of certain property. The Subordinate Judge had given a decree for partition. That decree was reversed by this Court. The value of the property as stated by the plaintiff for the purpose of jurisdiction was Rs. 12,000 and he claimed an 8 annas interest in the property. The value placed did not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to which an appeal lay and the stamp fee payable upon the plaint was a fixed and definite amount.

There has been, as was pointed out by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Muhammad Asghar v. Abida Begam (1), a difference of opinion between the views of the various High Courts in India on the question of whether for the purpose of s. 110 of the Civil Procedure Code in the right to appeal to His Majesty in Council the valuation for the purpose of that section was to be taken of the entire property which it was sought to partition or whether it was the value of the share claimed by the plaintiff.

(1) 138 Ind. Cas. 670; 54 A 858; (1932) A L J 730; Ind. Rul. (1932) All. 481.

The respondents to this application have contended that the correct view is that under the first part of s. 110 the amount to be considered for the purpose of valuation is the share claimed by the plaintiff and therefore leave to appeal should be refused.

I agree with the view taken by the Allahabad High Court that this question itself is one of sufficient importance for allowing leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, under s. 110.

A second point has been taken by the petitioner that the decision, apart from the question of the value of the share claimed by him, affects directly or indirectly the entire property which it was sought to partition. I was a party to the decision of the High Court and took the view that the estate in question was impartible. In addition to this point I agreed with the judgment of Fazl Ali, J., who took the view that the plaintiff could not succeed in the suit for other reasons. It may be said therefore that the decision on the question of the impartibility of the estate raised as it was as a bar to the suit for partition was a decision which possibly affected the estate notwithstanding that the judgment could only take effect as res judicata between the parties to the litigation.

For both reasons, therefore, in my opinion, it is desirable that the petitioners should be given leave to appeal.

The costs of this application will abide the result of the appeal to the Privy Council.

Dhavle, J.—I agree.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondent

Judgment.—This second appeal has arisen from a suit brought by the appellant for recovery of possession of plot No. 258 with trees standing thereon. The trial Court decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court dismissed it.

It is common ground that the plaintiff owned what looked on the spot like a grove surrounded by a ditch all round. It is, however, composed of two distinct plots, No. 257 area 753 karis or one bigha 6 biswas 14 dhurs and No. 258 area 97 kari or 3 biswas 9 dhurs. There are trees all over the grove on both the plots. The plaintiff executed a sale-deed in favour of the defendent in 1925 in respect of a grove which is described in the body of the sale-deed as No. 257, area 753 karis, bounded as stated at the foot of the deed. The boundaries include not only plot No. 257 but also No. 258. The lower Appellate Court treated it as a case of ambiguity and proceeded to decide on evidence whether the sale-deed was meant to cover the entire grove, including plots No. 258, as alleged by the defendant, or only No. 257, as alleged by the plaintiff. There was oral evidence on both sides which the lower Appellate Court did not consider to be quite reliable. On the documentary evidence and certain circumstances referred to in the judgment that Court held that the plaintiff sold the entire grove, including No. 258, and that the defendant has been in possession of the entire grove ever since the date of sale. On that finding the plaintiff's suit was dismissed.

The learned Advocate for the appellant argues that this was not a case of latent ambiguity and that extrinsic evidence was not admissible. He points out that the sale-deed clearly mentions the area of the property sold besides its number and that the vendee is not entitled to any area in excess of what is mentioned in the deed. If there had been nothing else in the sale-deed, this argument would have been unaswerable, but the document must be taken as a whole and if there is inconsistency between two parts of it, there can be no doubt, whatever, that the case is one of ambiguity. The deed purports to convey plot No. 257 subject to the qualification, viz., the area enclosed within the boundaries set forth at the foot of the deed. The defendant's case was that the plaintiff showed to him on the spot the grove which was enclosed by a ditch on all sides of it, and that the parties entered into the transaction of sale in respect of the entire grove which at that time was considered to be only No. 257 with an area of 753 karis. The lower Appellate Court has found that the defendant has been in possession of the entire grove, including No. 258, ever since the date of sale. The plaintiff himself admits that he (the defendant) is in possession of No. 258, because the present suit is one for possession. The 'khatauni' of 1334 Fasli which corresponds to 1926-27, records both plots, Nos. 257 and 258, in the name of the defendant as grove-holder. In all subsequent years the same entry is found. Learned Advocate for the appellant attempted to explain away the entry in the khatauni of 1334 Fasli on the ground that plot No. 258 is shown in red ink. It does not, however, appear what significance of the entry in red ink is. He suggests that plot No. 258 was subsequently entered in the defendant's grove khata. This may be so. The fact remains that the plaintiff did not take any exception to the defendant's possession for nearly 8 years, or to the entries in the 'khatauni'. This fact is strongly relied upon by the lower Appellate Court, which refers to one or two other circumstances which, according to it, give rise to an inference in favour of the defendant.

It is conceded that the finding arrived at by the lower Appellate Court is one of fact and is supported by, at least, some evidence. The only contention which is put forward on behalf of the appellant is that the lower Appellate Court was not justified in entering into the question as to whether anything more than plot No. 257 was sold. In my opinion s. 97, Indian Evidence Act, is fully applicable. It provides that, when the language used applies partly to one set of existing facts and partly to another set of existing facts, but the whole of it does not apply correctly to either, evidence may be given to show which of the two it was meant to apply. In the present case, the language of the deed, so far as the boundaries are concerned, is indicative of the fact alleged by the defendant, namely, that the whole of the grove was sold. Another part of the deed, which refers to the number and area, is indicative of the fact alleged by the plaintiff, namely, that part only of the grove, that is to say, No. 257, was sold. In this state of things, according to the section, evidence is clearly admissible to show whether it was meant that the deed should convey the whole of the grove or only part of it. In my opinion, the lower Appellate Court was justified in admitting extrinsic evidence. As already stated, such evidence being admitted, the finding of the lower Appellate Court is one of fact and cannot be questioned in second appeal, which is accordingly dismissed, with costs.

Leave to appeal under the Letters Patent is refused.

Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act (IV of 1914), ss. 7, 8—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 100, 60—Effect—Secretary of State, if becomes simple mortgagee of property charged with payment of cess—Suit by prior mortgagee—Secretary of State not impleaded—Whether bound by proceedings—Right of redemption, if lost—Partial redemption—Integrity of mortgage—When can be said to be broken up—Omission to implead persons interested—Redemption of portion on payment of proportionate amount.

The effect of s. 8, Public Demands Recovery Act, and s. 100, Transfer of Property Act, is that for all practical purposes the Secretary of State becomes a simple mortgagee of those properties which are charged with payment of cess money under ss. 7 and 8 of the Public Demands Recovery Act. Therefore, he must be impleaded in a mortgage suit by the prior mortgagee, and when he is not so impleaded, the Secretary of State and the purchaser of the property in enforcement of that mortgage are not bound by the proceedings which take place in the prior mortgagee's suit. Nor is the sale of the property in any way binding upon them and their right of redemption remains absolutely intact. Sheo Narain Sahu v. Ram Nirekhan Ojha (1), Amirchand v. Moti Pande (2), Aziz un-nissa v. Komal Singh (3) and Raghunath Prasad v. Sadhu Saran (4), referred to.

Under ordinary circumstances a mortgage is indivisible but this indivisibility is for the protection of the mortgagee and the mortgagee by his own act can create a situation under which the integrity of the mortgage debt must be held to have broken up.

If a mortgagee omits to implead persons interested in a portion of the mortgaged property and then brings about the property to sale and purchases it himself, he is bound to allow the redemption of the portion concerned on payment of the proportionate amount.

Messrs. Manohar Lal and B. N. Sahu, for the Appellant.

Mohammad Noor, J.—The fact leading up to the present appeal are these: By a mortgage deed dated March 9, 1915, one Narayan Prasad mortgaged certain properties to one Rajendra Prasad one of the properties being Mauza Chak Pahar, Tauzi No. 7399. Later on one Bhagwan Hajam in execution of his simple money decree against him purchased the interest of Narayan Prasad in the mortgaged properties and obtained possession of them. Rajendra Prasad brought a suit against Bhagwan Hajam for a declaration that the latter's purchase was subject to the mortgage in favour of the former. That suit was decreed. Rajendra Prasad then brought a mortgage suit and in due course put the mortgaged properties to sale and purchased them on January 25, 1926. Delivery of possession was formally given to him on the June 16, 1926. Subsequently he sold five out of seven properties which he had purchased to the plaintiff by a sale deed dated August 2, 1926. One of the properties so sold was Chak Pahar the subject-matter of the present litigation. In the meantime Bhagwan Hajam who was in possession of the mortgaged properties by virtue of his purchase in execution of the simple money decree, fell into arrears of cesses and notice under s. 7, Public Demands Recovery Act, was served on him on September 26, 1923. Chak Pahar was sold in execution of that certificate and was purchased by one Angnu on March 19, 1924, but later on he transferred it to the present defendant. The plaintiffs not being able to get their names recorded in the Collectorate Register by expunging the name of the defendant who had already got his name recorded in respect of Chak Pahar, brought the present suit for confirmation of possession or for recovery of possession of the property in suit basing their title on the purchase by Rajendra Prasad in execution of the mortgage decree. On behalf of the defendant it was urged that the effect of the service of notice under s. 7, Public Demands Recovery Act, on Bhagwan Hajam was that a charge was created on his properties in favour of the Secretary of State for the arrears of cesses due to Government. The suit having been instituted in January 1924, some three months after the service of notice the Secretary of State was a necessary party to the mortgage suit and Angnu who purchased the property which was subject to the charge was not bound by the mortgage sale and the plaintiffs were not, therefore, entitled to recover possession from the defendant who had acquired the right, title and interest of Angnu in the village in suit. The first Court decreed the plaintiffs' suit, but on appeal the learned District Judge has allowed the defendant the option of redeeming all the mortgaged properties by paying up the entire mortgage dues of Rajendra Prasad. The defendant has preferred this second appeal.

The only question involved in the present appeal is the position of the defendant who bases his title upon the certificate of sale for arrears of cesses, notice of which was served upon Bhagwan on September 26, 1923. In other words, the question is whether the mortgage sale was binding upon Angnu and, therefore, upon the defendant. Section 8, Public Demands Recovery Act, runs thus:

"From and after the service of notice of any certificate under s. 7 upon a certificate-debtor—the amount due from time to time in respect of the certificate shall be a charge upon such property to which every other charge created subsequently to the service of the said notice shall be postponed."

It is clear that by the operation of law, on September 26, 1923, a charge was created on the property in dispute in favour of the Secretary of State in respect of the amount due under the certificate. Section 100, Transfer of Property Act enacts that:

"Where immovable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage the latter person is said to have a charge on the property and all the provision hereinbefore contained which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to such charge."

The effect of s. 8, Public Demands Recovery Act, and s. 100, Transfer of Property Act, is that for all practical purposes the Secretary of State became a simple mortgagee of the properties of Bhagwan Hajam including Chak Pahar. This simple mortgage was of course subject to the simple mortgage in favour of Rajendra created in 1915 and the respective rights of the two purchasers at the two mortgage sales, namely, Rajendra and Angnu must be governed by the provision of law which governs the rights of the two mortgagees, the prior and the subsequent. It is obvious that the purchaser at the certificate sale is entitled to all the rights of the puisne mortgagee at whose instance the property which he purchased was sold namely, a right to an opportunity to redeem. Now under the law, viz., O. XXXIV, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, it was incumbent upon Rajendra to implead in the mortgage suit, the Secretary of State who held a subsequent mortgage of the property in question, the mortgage having been created by the operation of law prior to the institution of the mortgage suit. This not being done the Secretary of State and Angnu who purchased the property in enforcement of that mortgage are not bound by the proceedings which took place in the suit instituted by Rajendra. Nor is the sale of the property in any way binding upon them and their right of redemption remains absolutely intact. This is the view which has been taken by this Court in a fairly large number of cases. Among them I may mention the following: Sheo Narain Sahu v. Ram Nirekhan Ojha (1), Amirchand v. Moti Pande (2), Azizunnissa v. Komal Singh (3), and Raghunath Prasad v. Sadhu Saran (4).

Now the learned District Judge has allowed the defendant the right of redemption but he has done so in respect of the entire mortgaged property by paying up the entire mortgage debt. Presumably he relied upon the doctrine of indivisibility of the mortgage debt. No doubt under ordinary circumstances a mortgage is indivisible but this indivisibility is for the protection of the mortgagee and the mortgagee by his own act can create a situation under which the integrity of the mortgage debt must be held to have broken up. One well known circumstance under which a mortgage debt is split up is when the mortgagee himself acquires the equity of redemption in respect of a portion of the mortgaged properties. In that case the persons interested in the remaining portion can insist upon redemption of that portion only by paying up the proportionate mortgage debt. The cases referred to above clearly show that if the mortgagee omits to implead persons interested in a portion of the mortgaged property and then brings about the property to sale and purchases it himself, he is bound to allow the redemption of the portion concerned on payment of the proportionate amount. In this particular case the mortgagee Rajendra omitted to implead the Secretary of State who, as I have said was a puisne mortgagee in respect of the certificate debt and purchased the mortgaged property himself. Now at the time when the purchaser in execution of the certificate sale claims redemption it is found that the equity of redemption in respect of the remaining property is vested in the mortgagee himself, the defendant, therefore, can in equity claim to be allowed to redeem that portion of the property only in which he is interested. The plaintiffs are the representatives of Rajendra and the defendant of Angnu.

In my opinion the decree of the learned District Judge must be varied by allowing the defendant to redeem the property in suit by paying up the proportionate amount due in respect of the property in suit as was ordered in the case of Balli Singh v. Bindeshwari Tewari (5). I would, therefore, allow the appeal and order the trial Court to take an account of the amount due under the mortgage of March 1915, up to June 16, 1926, the date on which Rajendra Prasad the mortgagee auction-purchaser was formally given possession of the property. Then the value of the several mortgaged properties on the date of the mortgage should be ascertained and the mortgage debt found due as above should be distributed on them proportionately and the amount due from the village in suit should thus be ascertained. Thereafter the defendant will be given three months' time to redeem the property by paying up to the plaintiffs the amount so found due in respect of the property in suit. In that event the plaintiffs suit for possession will be dismissed. If he fails to do so within the time aforesaid, the property in suit will be put up for sale. Out of the sale proceeds the mortgage debt due upon the property will be satisfied first and the amount will be paid to the plaintiffs as the representatives of the mortgagee and the balance if, any, will go towards the satisfaction of the mortgage decree if it still remains unsatisfied otherwise it will be paid to the defendant. The plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for possession as on the date of the present suit they were not entitled to possession as the sale at which they purchased was not binding upon the defendant. The only right they had was a right on failure of redemption to bring the property to sale. We understand that since the order passed by the learned District Judge the plaintiffs are in possession of the property in suit and are enjoying the usufruct thereof. We have, therefore, not directed the taking of the account of the mortgage debt for the period after June 16, 1926. Under the circumstances it is directed that the parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 500—Defamation—Essence of offence—Articles implying that girls of a college were habitually guilty of misbehaviour—All girls in college collectively and each girl individually suffer in reputation—Complaint for defamation—Maintainability of.

The essence of the offence of defamation is the publication of an imputation with the knowledge that it will harm the reputation of the person defamed.

Where certain articles published in a paper contained scandalous accusations against the girl students of a college and implied that the girls were habitually guilty of misbehaviour described in the article, the inevitable effect on the reader must be to make him believe that it is habitual with the girls of the college to behave in this way. As by the articles all the girls in the college collectvely and each girl individually suffer in reputation, an action for defamation is competent by some of them. Government Advocate, Bihar and Orissa v. Gopabandhu Das (1), distinguished.

Judgment.—This is an application for the revision of an order of the Sessions Judge of Aligarh upholding the order of conviction and sentence passed by a First Class Magistrate on the applicant under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code. The facts on which the conviction has been based are given fully in the order of the Magistrate, and the essentials have been repeated in that of the Sessions Judge. It is sufficient to state here that the applicant was admittedly responsible for two articles which were published in a paper called the University Punch, Aligarh, containing the most scandalous accusations against the girls of the Girls' Intermediate College of Aligarh. The articles are given in full both in English and Urdu in the order of the Magistrate. The first of them asserts that the girls of the college frequented broad Marris Road, green meadows and canal banks which are frequented by pleasure seeking youths every morning and evening for their solace and enjoyment, and also that Meena Bazar Exhibition was held within the precincts of the college, that university students and professors, Muslim and non-Muslim gentry of the town and gay officers visited the place after obtaining tickets for shopping with these educated Muslim harlots of the Meena Bazar. I should mention that the translation of the word "shahidan" into "harlots" has been objected to by learned Counsel for the applicant, and it is suggested that the word means no more than "beauties", unless it is connected with the word "bazar". This, however, is a very technical objection, because the implication conveyed by the word in its context is unmistakable. The second article refers to a particular case, namely that of a young girl who is said to have been found unconscious near the Girls' Intermediate College and it was added that it was widely said that she was the victim of repeated brutal assaults. The implication of the article undoubtedly is that owing to the conditions within the college such an incident was quite likely to take place in its neighbourhood.

Both the Courts have agreed that the articles are defamatory. In the lower Appellate Court a plea was taken that the person aimed at in the article was not the girls in the college, but the Honorary Secretary, and that he was not the complainant, so that the prosecution ought to fail. This was a purely technical argument and has not been pressed in this Court. The argument that has been pressed in appeal is, firstly, that the articles which contain the defamatory matter do not refer to the "boarder girls", but simply to the girls of the college. It is said that there are over 150 girls in the college of whom 75 are boarders, and of the 67 who joined in making the complaint in the present case one was a minor and her guardian subsequently withdrew from the prosecution. The argument is that if the articles are defamatory, they apply equally to any one of the girls in the college, and that no individual girl is defamed thereby, nor is the college collectively defamed. The case of Government Advocate, Bihar and Orissa v. Gopabandhu Das reported in 67 Ind. Cas. 609 (1) has been relied on by Mr. Kumuda Prasad, in which it has been remarked by a Bench of the Patna High Court that "An imputation against an association or collection of persons jointly may amount to defamation within the meaning of s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code, but it must be an imputation capable of being brought home to a particular individual or collection of individuals as such,"

and again

"the rule is that if the words used contain no reflection on a particular individual or individuals, but may equally well apply to others, although belonging to the same class, an action will not lie."

Explanation No. 2 of s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code shows that "It may amount to defamation to make an imputation concerning a company or association".

In the case before the Patna High Court the defamatory words were used in regard to two constables who were said to have committed a particular act on a particular occasion. There was nothing in the article itself to show who the two constables were. They were not even referred to in the article as being constables of a particular thana, though they were taken by the villagers to have been two constables attached to Begunia Police Station. But there is nothing to indicate which were the two in question. The facts are certainly not analogous to those of the present case. Here the defamatory articles relate to the alleged habitual conduct of the girls of the Intermediate College. Those girls may be over 150 in number and it may not have been the intention of the writer of the articles to imply that every girl in the college was guilty of this conduct. The essence of the offence of defamation, however, is the publication of an imputation with the knowledge that it will harm the reputation of the person defamed, and as these articles do beyond question imply that the girls of the college are habitually guilty of the misbehaviour described in the articles, the inevitable effect on the reader must be to make him believe that it is habitual with the girls of the college to behave in this way.

That being so, it seems quite clear that all the girls in the college collectively and each girl individually must suffer in reputation. The difference between this case and the one before the Patna High Court is obvious. In that case two constables were accused of a particular act, and it did not follow from that that all constables suffered in their individual reputation.

The view that has been taken by the Courts appears to me to be perfectly correct, and there is no reason to interfere with the orders passed. The sentence no doubt is severe, but the offence, as has been pointed out, was an extremely serious one and the applicant when on his trial made no attempt to express his regret or make any acknowledgment of the fact that he had done wrong. The application is, therefore, dismissed.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 1, Sch. II, Arts. 11, 17—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 50 (2)—Appeal from order under—Court-fee payable.

The subject-matter in appeal against an order passed under sub-r. 2 of O. XXI, r. 50, Civil Procedure Code, is the liability of the judgment-debtor for the same amount. This amount is clearly ascertainable, and it cannot, therefore, be said that the subject-matter of the appeal is one where it is not possible to estimate it at a money value. The case is governed by Sch. I, Art. 1, Court Fees Act under which the proper court-fee payable is ad valorem on the subject-matter in dispute, i. e., the amount for which the party concerned is sought to be made liable.

L. P. A. from an order of Mr. Justice Jai Lal, dated January 3, 1930.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. C. Mahajan and J. L. Kapur, for the Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The appellants obtained a money-decree against firm Dina Nath-Siri Ram of Chandni Chauk, Delhi. In execution of this decree certain house properties were attached. The respondents, Amar Nath, Brij Nath, Radhe Lal and Ram Sarup, objected that the properties belonged to them and were not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree. The decree-holder replied that the objectors were partners in the judgment-debtor firm and consequently their property could be seized in execution. On these pleadings the learned Senior Subordinate Judge treated the proceedings as being under O. XXI, r. 50 (2), Civil Procedure Code, and proceeded to try and determine the liability of the objectors as partners in the judgment debtor firm. After an elaborate inquiry he came to the conclusion that the objectors had not been proved to be partners in the firm Dina Nath-Siri Ram and therefore they or their properties were not liable for the satisfaction of the decree. He accordingly released the properties from atttachment.

The plaintiff decree-holder appealed to this Court and affixed a court-fee stamp of Rs. 4 only on the memorandum of appeal. When the appeal came up for hearing before Jai Lal, J., sitting in Single Bench, a preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the objectors-respondents that the memorandum was insufficiently stamped, the proper fee payable being ad valorem on the amount for which the appellants wanted to fix liability on them. The learned Judge upheld the objection and adjourned the hearing to enable the appellants to make good the deficiency in the court-fee. The appellant, however, failed to comply with the order within the time fixed, and consequently the learned Judge dismissed their appeal with costs.

From this judgment the decree-holders have preferred an appeal under cl. 10, Letters Patent, and on their behalf Mr. Shamair Chand has contended that the proper court-fee payable was Rs. 4 only and if that contention failed, the case would be governed by Art. 17 (vi), as it was not possible to estimate in money value the subject-matter in dispute in appeal and in that case the fee payable would be Rs. 10. In my opinion both these contentions are without force. Article 11 is obviously inapplicable for it expressly excludes from its purview appeal "from a decree or an order having the force of a decree," and it is distinctly laid down in sub-r. (3), r. 50, Order XXI, that where the liability of any person has been tried and determined under sub-r. (2) the order made thereon shall "have the same force and be subject to the same conditions as to appeal or otherwise as if it was a decree"

The wording of this rule is very wide, and there can be no manner of doubt that the word "otherwise" here means "in all other respects," as has been held in Bhutnath Ta v. Barindranath Bhatta (1). Counsel also relied on s. 47 of the Code, which is equally inapplicable. That section deals with questions which arise "between the parties to the suit" in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. Admittedly the objector-respondents were not "parties to the suit" and the order could not be said to have been passed under s. 47. It follows, therefore, that a court-fee of Rs. 4 was insufficient. The next contention is that Art. 17 governed the case. This point was raised before the learned Judge in Chambers, but appears to have been abandoned. It has, however, been urged again before us and we must give our decision on it. Article 17 applies to plaints or memoranda of Appeal in suits where it is not possible

"to estimate at a money-value the subject-matter in dispute and which is not otherwise provided for by this Act."

Now, a careful perusal of the terms of O. XXI, r. 50 (2) and (3) shows that the subject-matter in dispute in proceedings under these sub-rules is the liability of the person against whom execution is sought for payment of the decretal amount, on the ground that he was a partner in the judgment-debtor firm. The subject-matter in appeal against an order passed under sub-r. (2), therefore, is the liability of the judgment-debtor for the same amount. This amount is clearly ascertainable, and it cannot, therefore, be said that the subject-matter of the appeal is one where it is not possible to estimate it at a money value.

(1) 146 Ind. Cas. 123; 60 C 530; 37 C W N 227; A I R 1933 Cal. 546; 6 R C 178.

The case does not fall under any of the exceptions and must, therefore, be held to be governed by Art. 1, r. 1, under which the proper court-fee payable is ad valorem on the subject-matter in dispute, i. e., the amount for which the appellants wish to fix liability on the respondents. The view taken by the learned Judge in Chambers is in accord with that taken in other Courts: see Vulliappa v. Rangasawamy (2), Punjab National Bank, Ltd. v. Ranchoredas Gurdhandas (3 Bhutnath Ta v. Barindra Nath Bhatta (1). Mr. Shamair Chand pointed out that in some cases this would result in hardship on the decree-holder or the objector as ad valorem court-fee may have to be paid several times in the course of the same litigation, but the remedy lies with the Legislature or the Local Government, who have power under s. 35 to remit in whole or in part any of the fees which are payable under the Act. So far as the Courts are concerned, they have to interpret the law as it is, and cannot decline to enforce its provisions merely on argumentum ab inconvenienti. The appeal fails and I would dismiss it with costs.

ANGLO-INDIAN DRUG AND CHEMICAL CO.—PLAINTIFFS

SWASTIK OIL MILLS CO. LTD.—DEFENDANTS*

Trade-mark—Infringement—Nature of proof required of plaintiff—Reasonable probability and no proof of actual deception required—Plaintiff must establish that particular mark indicates that goods are those of plaintiff—Defendant using same number as trade-mark as plaintiff—Burden of proving and probability of deception—"Passing off"—Gist—Trade-mark, how assigned—Right to use particular trade-mark—Limitations in India and England—Combination of numerals, if can form a trade-mark—Trade-mark, if can be applied to goods which are not sold—Trade-mark, property in—If exists apart from goods.

In actions for infringement of trade-marks the plaintiff has to prove that his goods were known to the public by some distinct name, marks, badge, get-up, or appearance, and that the defendant's use or imitation of the same is likely to mislead the public into a belief that the defendant's goods are those of the plaintiff. The actual length of time during which a trade-mark is used or employed is not an important element for consideration. It must, however, have been used or employed long enough to render it probable that a reputation in the market has been acquired. [p. 644, col. 1.]

There must be a reasonable probability and not a mere possibility of deception. It is not necessary to prove that the defendants had the intention to deceive. It is also not necessary to give proof of actual instances of deception. Such evidence, namely, evidence of actual instances may often be useful to the Court, though the Court has to exercise its own judgment as to the probability of the deception. [p. 644, col. 2; p. 645, col. 1.]

Protection cannot be granted unless a plaintiff establishes that the particular mark indicates not merely a certain quality of goods but also that they are the goods of the plaintiff's manufacture. [p. 646, col. 1.]

Where the defendants have used an identical number as the plaintiff's on their goods, the burden is upon them to disprove the probability of the deception, and not upon the plaintiffs to prove it. [p. 649, col. 2.]

The gist of a passing off action is deceit, for "passing off" is one of the ways whereby the goods of one trader are sold by another in a manner calculated to deceive the purchaser into thinking that they are the goods of the former. [p. 650, col. 1.]

A trade-mark is generally transmitted in connection with the goodwill of a business, and can only be assigned in writing. [p. 643, col. 1.]

In England a trade-mark is registered not only for a particular article but for a class of goods under which that article falls, and if any one else attempted to put on the market goods which could be included in that class under another trade-mark, the Registrar might refuse to register it. In India the right to use a particular trade-mark is confined to the article to which it is affixed, but it is open to the plaintiffs to establish by proper and sufficient evidence that the particular trade-mark has been so identified and associated with the plaintiffs' products that their name would suggest itself to a purchaser on seeing it on any other product which the plaintiffs allege is a product "allied" to or of the same description. There is, however, this limitation that the acquisition of an exclusive right to a trade-mark in connection with a particular article of commerce cannot entitle the owner of that right to prohibit the use by others of such mark in connection with goods of a totally different character. Somerville v. Schembri (2), referred to. [p. 644, col. 2.]

A combination of numerals can form a trade-mark, if distinctive. [p. 645, col. 1.]

A trade-mark must be applied to goods offered for sale and not to those which are neither manufactured nor sold at the date of the suit. [p. 648 col. 1.]

There can be no property in a trade-mark apart from the goods of which it has become the symbol. [p. 648, col. 2.]

Messrs. D. N. Bahadurji and C. K. Daphtary, for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs. J. H. Vakeel and K. M. Munshi, for the Defendants.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs have been carrying on for a number of years past the business of manufacturing and selling drugs, patent medicines, hair oils, perfumery and toilet requisites in Bombay, and have filed this suit for an injunction to restrain the defendant Company from selling its bar soap under the mark "No. 777" which the plaintiffs claim as their trade-mark for their "toilet preparations." Prior to August 24, 1922, one Mulji Premji Rathod was the sole proprietor of the Kathiawar Trading Company and the Bombay Perfumery Manufacturing Company which was also carrying on business in Bombay. The Kathiawar Trading Company had been manufacturing for a number of years certain toilet preparations bearing the No. "777" which Mulji Premji had declared to be his own trade-mark. On August 24, 1922, he sold both these concerns by a deed of conveyance for the consideration mentioned in the deed along with the goodwill, the stock-in-trade, and the right to the exclusive user of the names of the two businesses and of the trade-marks, trade names and designs, including the No. "777" contained in the schedule annexed to it to one Keshavlal Vallabhji Shah, a partner in the plaintiffs' firm. In the deed of conveyance Keshavlal is described as the purchaser. The other three partners at the time were his brothers. Plaintiffs say that they carry on business in different names, including, since 1922, the Kathiawar Trading Company, and have been making and selling various toilet preparations in the name of the Kathiawar Trading Company, under the trade-mark No. "777". They further say that these preparations have acquired a wide reputation in the market and are also extensively sold under that number, and the number denotes only and exclusively their toilet preparations in the name of the Kathiawar Trading Company.

Since about February 1933, plaintiffs have been manufacturing soap called the "Keti Turkish Bath Soap." They put this soap on the market also in the name of the Kathiawar Trading Company in cartons containing twelve tablets each, each carton costing a rupee; the carton as well as each of the tablets bears the mark No. "777". Since about August 1932, the defendant Company which had been manufacturing various kinds of oil and by-products of oil began selling in the market bar soap with the name of the Company and the Swastik mark at each end on one side of the bar, and the No. "777" underneath the words "Vegetable Soap Washes Well," on the other. It is a washing soap which the defendants manufacture in bars, cubes and twins; only the bars bear the No. "777". Plaintiffs complain that the use of the said number on this bar soap is calculated to deceive purchasers into the belief that the soap was the plaintiffs' product. They say that they first came to know that the defendant Company was manufacturing bar soap bearing that number in November or December 1932. They made inquiries, and correspondence ensued between the solicitors of the parties, after which this suit was filed on May 18, 1933. Defendants deny any infringement of the trade-mark and also deny liability. They say that they were the first to put their bar soap in the market, and plaintiffs had at the time neither manufactured nor sold any soap, much less bar soap, in the name of the Kathiawar Trading Company under the mark in dispute, viz., "No. 777".

There is a preliminary point taken by the defendants which is covered by the first two issues. Defendants contend that the plaintiffs, viz., the Anglo-Indian Drug and Chemical Co., have no interest in the trade-mark "No. 777", which, according to them, is the mark of the Kathiawar Trading Company, a separate firm altogether, and that in the absence of any averment of an assignment or transfer of the said mark in favour of the plaintiffs, the suit as framed is not maintainable. There was an assignment in 1922 of the two businesses of the Kathiawar Trading Company and the Bombay Perfumery Manufacturing Company together with their goodwill, stock-in-trade, and trade-marks, by Mulji Premji in favour of Keshavlal Vallabhji, as I have stated before, but the plaintiffs have not pleaded it. They have, however, pleaded that they carry on business also in the name of the Kathiawar Trading Company and they have produced the deed of conveyance which gives to Keshavlal, one of their partners, the right inter alia to the user of the names of the two businesses and the trade-marks referred to in the schedule which mentions "No. 777." That mark was originally used in connection with a scent or perfume manufactured by the Kathiawar Trading Company, known as the "Madhukar Attar," but since then it has been used in connection with other preparations also, and the plaintiffs say that after August 1922 they became entitled by virtue of the assignment to this trade-mark and the benefit of its denotation. Defendants however contend that the Anglo-Indian Drug and Chemical Co. and the Kathiawar Trading Company were and are still two separate firms. It is however in evidence that since the date of the assignment the owners of the two firms are the same, viz., the partners in the plaintiff firm. There are partnership deeds showing who the partners in the plaintiff firm were from time to time; there is no separate deed of partnership of the Kathiawar Trading Company.

The partners at the date of the assignment in 1922 were Keshavlal Vallabhji and his three brothers. One brother retired in 1923. There is a deed of dissolution in that year, but it is not stated therein that the brothers have been doing business both in the name of the plaintiff Company and the Kathiawar Trading Company. Another brother went out of the firm in 1928, and the names of both the firms are mentioned in the deed of dissolution of that year. The remaining two brothers, Kashavlal and Parmanand, took their respective wives as partners in the business in 1931, and these four are the present partners of the plaintiff firm, though the plaintiffs' attorneys stated in one of their letters in June 1933 to the defendants' solicitors in connection with some other matter that only the two brothers were partners in the plaintiff firm. In the plaintiffs' cash book the amount of the consideration mentioned in the deed of assignment has been debited to the account of the Kathiawar Trading Company, and in one or two advertisements, the Kathiawar Trading Company have been described as the sole agents of the plaintiffs. The defendants, therefore, contend that the two firms are separate. It may be mentioned that only the plaintiff firm has been registered with the Registrar of Companies and Firms to meet the requirements of the new Partnership Act, and not the Kathiawa Trading Company. There are no doubt separate stock-books of the two firms, but there is only one book containing entries of purchase of raw products bought for manufacture in respect of both. There are also separate books for registering orders of purchases, but the amounts of the price of the goods sold are entered in the books kept in the name of the plaintiffs. There is also no separate shop of the Kathiawar Trading Company. The bills for advertisement charges of the goods put in the market in the name of both are made out only in the name of the plaintiffs. There is, therefore, evidence either way, but, considering it is a whole, I am of opinion that the two firms are now one and the same.

Defendants however further contend that the deed of conveyance stands in the name of Keshavlal Vallabhji alone, and plaintiffs cannot sue for infringement of a trade mark which has not been assigned to them by Keshavlal. A trade-mark is generally transmitted in connection with the goodwill of a business, and can only be assigned in writing. Keshavlal stated that he took the assignment for the benefit of the partnership, and since 1922 the plaintiffs have acted upon it. It was argued that Keshavlal's statement in the box could not supply the need of a written assignment. At the same time the plaintiffs have actually used the trade-mark as their own for a number of years, that is since 1922, and they are not estopped from putting it forward as such. It is not alleged that any particular representation was made to the defendants on which they have acted to their prejudice. The point is not quite free from doubt, but, taking all the facts and circumstances into consideration, I am inclined to hold that the plaintiffs have an interest in the trade-mark "No. 777" and the suit is, therefore, maintainable.

The plaintiffs claim relief in this suit on the ground that the defendants have infringed their trade-mark. What constitutes an infringement of a trade-mark is a question of fact in each case. Plaintiffs allege in the plaint that they have been manufacturing and selling various kinds of perfumery and toilet preparations and requisites in the name of their concern, the Kathiawar Trading Company under the trade-mark "No. 777," that "No. 777" means and denotes in the markets only exclusively their well-known toilet preparations and toilet requisites and that soap including bar soap is an article usually manufactured and sold in India by persons manufacturing and selling other toilet preparations, such as hair oils, perfumes, otto scents, which the plaintiffs manufacture and sell. The cause of action is contained in para. 9 of the plaint where plaintiffs say that the defendants' user of the mark "777" as a prominent and characteristic feature in connection with their bar soap is calculated to deceive and to enable other persons to deceive purchasers and others into the belief that the defendants' bar soap is soap of the plaintiffs' manufacture.

In England the law relating to trade-marks has been codified since 1875. The English statutes provide for the registration of trade-marks by owners. There is no such legislation in India which gives a statutory title to owners of trade-marks. The rules of the English common law in what are called "passing-off actions" are generally followed, and rights and liabilities in connection with trade-marks are determined by reference to the common law. In such actions the plaintiff has to prove that his goods were known to the public by some distinct name, marks, badge, get-up, or appearance, and that the defendant's use or imitation of the same is likely to mislead the public into a belief that the defendant's goods are those of the plaintiff. These cases are only instances of the application of the much wider principle of equity that the Court will always interfere by injunction to restrain an irreparable injury to a person's property. The actual length of time during which a trade-mark issued or employed is not an important element for consideration.

It must however have been used or employed long enough to render it probable that a reputation in the market has been acquired: Badische Aniline v. Tejpal (1). In order, therefore, to establish their claim to an injunction against the defendants, the plaintiffs must show that the trade-mark "No. 777" used on their toilet preparations and requisites, which are sold in the name of the Kathiawar Trading Company, is symbolical only of the plaintiffs' manufacture, and that they have acquired a wide reputation in the market. In England a trade-mark is registered not only for a particular article but for a class of goods under which that article falls, and if any one else attempted to put on the market goods which could be included in that class under another trade-mark, the Registrar might refuse to register it. In India the right to use a particular trade-mark is confined to the article to which it is affixed, but it is open to the plaintiffs to establish by proper and sufficient evidence that the particular trade-mark has been so identified and associated with the plaintiffs' products that their name would suggest itself to a purchaser on seeing it on any other product like bar soap which the plaintiffs allege is a product "allied" to or of the same description as "toilet preparations." There is however this limitation which was pointed out by the Privy Council in Somerville v. Schembri (2), that the acquisition of an exclusive right to a trade-mark in connection with a particular article of commerce cannot entitle the owner of that right to prohibit the use by others of such mark in connection with goods of a totally different character.

Plaintiffs have also to show in order to be entitled to the injunction they claim that the defendants' user of No. "777" on their bar soap is calculated to deceive the public, that is the unwary purchaser, into the belief that the purchaser is buying bar soap of the plaintiffs' manufacture. There must be a reasonable probability and not a mere possibility of deception. It is not now necessary to prove that the defendants had the intention to deceive. Originally the common law Courts insisted on proof of fraud, but the Courts of Equity intervened by granting injunctions even in cases where the use or imitation of another's trade-mark was made in ignorance, provided it was likely to mislead the public. The decisions of the Courts of Equity were accepted as part of the common law after the fusion of law and equity brought about by the Judicature Act in England. It is also not necessary to give proof of actual instances of deception, the reason being, as was pointed out by James, L. J., in Orr Ewing & Co. v. Johnston & Co. (3), and repeated by the House of Lords in Johnston v. Orr Ewing (4), that "the very life of a trade-mark depends upon the promptitude with which it is vindicated." Such evidence, namely, evidence of actual instances, may often be useful to the Court, though the Court has to exercise its own judgment as to the probability of the deception.

The trade-mark "No. 777" is a triple combination of the numeral 7. For the purposes of the Trade-Mark Acts in England "mark" includes "device, brand, heading, label ticket, name, signature, letter or numeral or any combination thereof;" and "trade-mark" means a mark "used or proposed to be used upon or in connection with goods for the purpose of indicating that they are the goods of the proprietor of such trade-mark by virtue of manufacture, selection, certification, dealing with or offering for sale."

A combination of numerals can form a trade-mark if distinctive. "No. 777" was used as a trade-mark to distinguish one or two of the preparations of the Kathiawar Trading Company in the beginning. Thereafter it was used for different hair oils and toilet preparations put by the plaintiffs on the market in the name of the Kathiawar Trading Company According to the evidence, there was a good sale of these hair oils and toilet preparations about the date of the assignment in 1922. It has since increased and is said to be of two to two and a half lakh bottles a year. A collection of the different lables of the Kathiawar Trading Company numbering over sixty and bearing the "No. 777" has been put in. These preparations are widely advertised and Keshavlal on behalf of the plaintiffs stated that they spent Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 15,000 a year on advertisements, not only in newspapers but in various forms such as posters, calendars, fans, etc. The plaintiff had, however, put numerous toilet soaps previously in the market, but none of them bore the "No. 777." Their toilet soap, viz., the "Keti Turkish Bath Soap," was first put on the market under "No. 777" in or about February 1933, but not much of it was sold before the date of the suit. Plaintiffs also began manufacturing bar soap after the suit. It is called the "Cherry Bar Soap," but no number was put upon it, as this litigation was pending.

Plaintiffs called some Bombay merchants and dealers, both wholesale and retail, and one wholesale and retail dealer who is the sole agent of the Kathiawar Trading Company in the Nizam's Dominions and has shops in Hyderabad (Deccan) and Secunderabad. Most of them said that they stocked together and sold hair oils, perfumery, toilet soaps and bath soaps that many other merchants did the same. One or two of them, however, sold only toilet soaps along with hair oils and perfumes, but not bar soap. These witnesses stated that they had been stocking the products of the Kathiawar Trading Company bearing "No. 777" for some years past, namely, hair oils and scents and perfumes, that these products were well-known to their customers and were in demand, and they did not know of any other Company which manufactured similar products under that mark. Whenever a customer wanted to buy a hair oil or perfume, and asked, for instance, for White Rose Hair Oil "No. 777" or Otto "No. 777," they always understood that he wanted hair oil or perfume of the Kathiawar Trading Company. The witness Purandas Ranchoddas, who is the sole agent of the Kathiawar Trading Company in the Nizam's Dominions, said that he bought goods of that Company bearing "No. 777' and also other Kaminia products of the plaintiffs to the extent of Rs. 15,000 to Rs. 18,000 a year in ordinary times, and goods worth about Rs. 8,000, a year in times of epidemic and that goods bearing that mark sold well in the Nizam's Dominions, the sales amounting to about Rs. 7,000 to Rs. 8,000 a year in ordinary times, and to about Rs. 4,000 to Rs. 4,500 a year in times of epidemic. The witness Maganlal Mulji who is the sale mans of Mohanlal Mahasukhlal & Co., said that his firm sold goods of the Kathiawar Trading Company bearing "No. 777" to the extent of about Rs. 2,000 a year. None of these witnesses supported his evidence by producing any books. The amount of the sales is not of such importance as the reputation of the goods, though the extent of the sale may be an index to their reputation. On the other hand, one of the defenddants' witnesses, Bhawanishankar Atmaram carrying on business in the name of B. A. & Brothers as wholesale and retail chemists in Princess Street, Bombay, stated that it was only the cocoanut oil of the Kathiawar Trading Company bearing No. 777 that was in demand. The evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses has been further supported by the numerous postcards addressed to the Kathiawar Trading Company giving orders for goods by their description together with the 'No. 777' from different parts of India. These products are also well advertised both in and outside Bombay..

The witness Motilal Desai who carries on business in the name of the Ind. Advertising Agency stated that plaintiffs' scents, hair oils and toilet soaps were widely advertised but he did not mention any goods of the Kathiawar Trading Company under the 'No. 777.' The witness Govind Limaye' however, who is in the service of B. Dattaram & Co., Advertising Agents, did state that the scents and hair oils of the Kathiawar Trading Company were largely advertised outside Bombay. The defendants produced some specimens of washing soap of the same quality as bar soap, but in the form of cubes, with the 'No. 777' on them but only one of them was put in through Mr. Chhotubhai, a partner of the defendants' attorneys' firm who purchased the same at an exhibition in the Lathi State near Junagadh for ¾ anna about the end of last year. There is no evidence when and by whom that soap was manufactured and Keshavlal Vallabhji said that he never heard or knew anything about it. A consideration of this evidence shows that the plaintiffs' toilet preparations namely, their various hair oils, scents, and perfumes, which are sold in the name of the Kathiawar Trading Company along with 'No. 777' have acquired a great reputation in the market. In para. 6 of the plaint it is alleged that the trade-mark No. 777. is "a guarantee of high quality," i. e., the high quality of the goods. It has, however, been held that protection cannot be granted unless a plaintiff establishes that the particular marks indicate not merely a certain quality of goods but also that they are the goods of the plaintiff's manufacture: Badische Aniline v. Farbenfadriken (5). The plaintiffs have alleged that the toilet preparations of the Kathiawar Trading Company under 'No. 777,' mentioned in the plaint are the sole and exclusive products of their manufacture. They have also led some evidence to support that allegation.

The infringement which the plaintiffs complain of in this suit is the user by the defendants of the mark 'No. 777' on their bar soap. The defendant Company was started in or about January 1931, and the objects for which it was established are stated in sub-cl. 5, cl. 3 of the Memorandum of Association, viz., to carry on all or any of the businesses of soap and/or candle makers, etc., and also as:

"dealers in pharmaceutical, chemical, medicinal and other preparations, or compounds, perfumery and other such articles of every such description."

They first began manufacturing oil out of oil seeds, and then took to soap. They have recently also taken to manufacture hair oil and it is open to them to make perfumes also. It seems that the Company made a loss of over a lac of rupees by the end of 1932 in the business of crushing oil seeds into oil. It is not clear when they began to manufacture their bar soap with the 'No. 777' on it but the first sale of that soap was on August 12, 1932. The soap is of the quality of a washing soap, i. e., soap used generally for washing clothes. It is made in the form of bars, cubes and twins but it is only the bar that bears the number "777." On one side of the bar there are the words "Swastik Oil Mills, Ltd. Bombay", with the Swastik mark on each side. On exactly the opposite side are the words "Vegetable Soap Washes Well," with the 'No. 777' put underneath those words. The defendants next manufactured a soap which is known as their Superfine Soap; it is sold in cartons. They call it a washing soap, but on the wrapper round the soap they recommend it for washing clothes as well as for washing the human body. Then they began manufacturing their commercial soaps or soaps used in mills. These are also in bars but the tints are somewhat different. They were manufactured six months after the bar soap bearing the 'No. 777' was manufactured. About the same time the defendants produced their Marseilles Soap and their Monopole Soap or Indiapole Soap also. The 'No. 777' has not been placed on any of their soaps except the bar soap. Keshavlal stated that they made inquiries about this soap in November or December 1932, and correspondence started about the end of the year, after which this suit was filed in May, 1933.

The principal witness on behalf of the defendants was one of their directors, Chhotabhai Shankerbhai Patel, who said that the defendant Company were not keen about the 'No. 777' as they attached more importance to the Swastik mark, and that their soaps were known in the market as soaps of the Swastik brand. He also stated that he did not know that the plaintiff's hair oils and scents and perfumes bore that number, and he explained how he came to use the same number on the defendants' bar soap. That explanation has not been consistent, for in his affidavit on the notice of motion for injunction he said that the number was used to distinguish the defendants' bar soap from their other soaps. There was, however, no other soap manufactured at the time they produced their bar soap, except that the same quality of soap was produced in the shape not only of bars but also cubes and twins, but these could be easily distinguished from one another without any number. In his evidence he stated that the defendants wanted an auspicious number, that amongst the Hindus the Nos. 1, 5, 7 and 9 were considered auspicious, that the Tata Oil Mills Company, Ltd., were ahead of the defendants with their washing soap bearing No. 501, that he wanted to avoid any combination of the numerals which include Nos. 1 and 5 so as not to come in conflict with the products of the Tata Oil Mills, that soaps usually bore numbers consisting of three numerals, and he thought of '777' without consulting his co-directors as he fancied the number and used it after making inquiries that it was not used on any other bar soap in the market. Later on he gave another explanation, viz., that the 'No. 777' was put on the soap, in order to help the unintelligent packers at the defendants' mill premises to distinguish it from their other soap whilst packing soap in wooden cases. The other varieties of their soap were, however, not manufactured in August, 1932, so that there was no chance of mixing up the bar soap, but he said that they intended manufacturing other soaps, and as he anticipated difficulties in distinguishing them, he used the 'No. 777' on the bar soap. As I have said before, his explanation has varied; at the same time the defendants have not put the same number on their Superfine Soap which was manufactured three months after the bar soap was manufactured, that is, even before the correspondence between them and the plaintiffs regarding the user of the 'No. 777' began. It is true that the 'No. 777' is shown on the picture or drawing of the soap in the defendants' price-list and also in their advertisements. The witness said that he did not attend to advertisements, but left the matter to his assistant, and the artist or engraver had brought out the 'No. 777' in the picture, though on a correct representation of the bar soap it should not have been shown, as it actually appeared on the soap on the side exactly opposite to the side of the bar on which the Swastik mark was shown. The cube form of the soap is also represented in the picture, and that too is not correct according to the model. One other fact must also be mentioned. Defendants had sold 1701 cases, i. e., 1,58,000 lbs. of their bar soap 'No. 777' in the open market before the suit was filed. Keshavlal stated that the plaintiffs raised their objection as soon as they learnt about it, and the defendants offered in correspondence to withdraw the number if they were satisfied that it had been used by the plaintiffs on their soap before. But the fact is that the plaintiffs' Keti Turkish Bath Soap under 'No. 777' was first put on the market long after that objection was raised, and the plaintiffs' bar soap was not manufactured until after the suit. There is nothing in the evidence to show that the defendants' bar soap is sold by the 'No. 777' in the market, and Mr. Patel said that out of numerous inquiries for their Swastik soap only about two referred to the defendants' bar soap under that number. There is also nothing to show that the defendants knew or had information that 'No. 777' was used by the plaintiffs for their hair oils and scents and perfumes, and although the explanation given by Mr. Patel as to how he adopted the 'No. 777' for the defendants' bar shop has been inconsistent, I cannot infer that he must have had the knowledge or information because of such explanation. There is no substance in the allegation that the number was deliberately used by the defendants on their bar soap to trade on the plaintiffs' reputation which was associated only with their toilet requisites and preparations. It is not, however, necessary for the plaintiffs to prove that the defendants had the intention to deceive, and their ignorance of the existence of the plaintiffs' trade-mark cannot save them from the injunction, if the plaintiffs can show (1) that the user of the 'No. 777' on bar soap is an infringement of a trade-mark which had been used only in connection with the particular toilet preparations mentioned above, and (2) that by such user there is a reasonable probability of deception.

It is in evidence that the plaintiffs first put their 'Keti Turkish Bath Soap' under 'No. 777' on the market in or about February, 1933. The defendants allege in their written statement that this was done with the object of creating evidence in support of a contemplated action by the plaintiffs against them. There is nothing to substantiate the allegation, except that this soap was put on the market long after the plaintiffs commenced correspondence with the defendants regarding the defendants' bar soap. The plaintiffs' bar soap known as the 'Cherry Bar Soap' was produced and put on the market after the suit. The plaintiffs thus seek to claim a right in a trade-mark in respect of a commodity which was neither manufactured nor sold by them at the date of the suit. The price list of the Kathiwar Trading Company printed in 1933, which was put in by the plaintiffs, does not mention any kind of soap at all. A trade-mark must be applied to goods offered for sale, and in Maxwell v. Hogg: Hogg Maxwell (6), Cairns, L. J., has observed (p. 314*):

"... all the definitions which have been given in this Court (meaning a Court of Equity) of the nature of the right to protection in the case of trade-marks, seems to me to be opposed to the idea that protection can be given where there has been no sale, or offering for sale, of the articles to which the name is to be attached."

The same learned Judge cites with approval a passage from Lord Westbury's judgment in M'Andrew v. Bassett (7), and goes on to state that the property in a word or name or any other trade-mark cannot be acquired until the vendible article is put upon the market, for

"no property could be acquired, except through the process of sale, or offering for sale, in the market."

No case was cited by plaintiffs' Counsel to support their claim to a right in a trade-mark in respect of an article which had not been produced, much less sold, by them in the market. In cases of infringement of trade-marks in India it is the user of the trade mark on the same kind of goods already put on the market which is complained of, e. g., the user by the defendants of No. 2051 on their black twill which had always been associated with the black twill produced by the plaintiffs in Madhavji Dharamsey Manufacturing Co. v. Central India Spinning, Weaving and Manufacturing Co. (8). Several English cases were cited by plaintiffs' Counsel. They deal, however, with the construction of sections of the English statutes under which a trade-mark is registered in connection with a class of goods, and the prohibition is confined not to the same goods but to 'the same goods or description of goods' though these decisions are useful on the principles of the law relating to infringement of trade-marks and the probability of deception. In India the action is generally limited to a particular kind of goods only, and it is for the plaintiffs to establish by their evidence that bar soap comes under the description of "toilet preparations" or is "allied" to the same in order to attract to it the benefit of a trade-mark which had been used only in connection with such preparations. In the first place, there is not even a clear averment in the plaint that bar soap comes under the description of "toilet preparations." All that is alleged is that it is an article usually manufactured and sold in India by persons manufacturing and selling such toilet preparations as the plaintiffs have been doing. Plaintiffs cannot, in law, claim property in "No. 777' in gross, for it has been held that there can be no property in a trade-mark apart from the goods of which it has become the symbol. There is no authority, at least none to which the Court has been referred, in support of a claim to a trade-mark in India in respect of an article neither manufactured nor sold by the plaintiffs, but which, they allege, is 'allied' to their "toilet preparations." The evidence on the record does not support the claim either. The only evidence is the solitary statement of Keshavlal that whenever a soap bears the "No. 777" it must mean to the purchaser that it is the product of the Kathiawar Trading Company, and that if a man bought the bar soap of the defendants bearing that number, the purchaser would take it that that soap was the produce or manufacture of the Kathiawar Trading Company, i. e., of the plaintiffs, even though the number had not been associated by the plaintiffs with any bar soap before.

That statement, has not been supported by any other witness, and I do not accept it as correct. He said he had not received any complaint that a purchaser had been deceived by that number appearing on the defendants' bar soap. It was not necessary for the plaintiffs to adduce evidence of actual instances of deception, but such evidence, if adduced, would have been useful, especially as 1701 cases, viz., about 1,58,000 lbs. of the defendants' bar soap, bearing number "777," worth about Rs. 26,000 had been sold from about August 12, 1932, up to the date of the filing of the suit. Keshavlal added that enquiries were made by merchants whether the plaintiffs produced any bar soap bearing "No. 777." The inquires were made from their salesman, Jamnadas Panachand; but neither Jamnadas nor any party alleged to have made such enquiries has been called. The evidence therefore is both meagre and insufficient, and in my opinion the plaintiffs have not proved that "No. 777" is associated with the "toilet preparations" of the Kathiawar Trading Company generally. The only toilet preparations which have acquired a reputation in the market under "No. 777" are the various hair oils, scents and perfumes, which have been referred to before, and no other.

Some evidence was led on behalf of the plaintiffs to show that shopkeepers stock hair oils, perfumes, toilet soaps, and bar soap together for purposes of sale, but two of the plaintiffs' witnesses stated that they did not stock any bar soap at all, though they did stock and sell toilet soap. It was argued that the matter should be looked at from a business and commercial point of view, and reliance was placed on a passage in Kerly on Trade Marks, Edition 6, at page 260, where it is stated that the true test is:

"Are the two sets of goods so commonly dealt in by the same trader that his customers, knowing his mark in connection with one set and seeing it upon the other, would be likely to suppose that it was used upon them also to indicate that they were his goods?"

That test is applicable in England in order to determine whether a particular article falls within the words of the section of the English Act, viz., "same goods or description of goods." For instance, in Eastman Photographic Materials Co. Ltd. v. John Griffiths Cycle Corporation Ltd. (9), it was found on the evidence that there was an intimate connection between the bicycle and camera trades; there was also an intimate connection between wines and spirits, as in In re The Australian Wine Importers, Limited (10). In another case Eno v. Dunn (11), the registration of "Dunn's Fruit Salt Trade Mark Baking Powder" was refused for baking powder by reason of a prior use of the words "Fruit Salt" for an aperient or medicinal drink. Such a test in India, where there are no similar statutory provisions, is hardly of any use. Moreover, the evidence led by the plaintiffs is not sufficient to support the contention that there is a close connection in the trade between "toilet preparations" and bar soap. As against the plaintiffs' evidence the defendants called witnesses to show that many dealers who stock hair oils, perfumery and toilet soaps, do not stock bar soap at all, just as petty merchants, like grain dealers who stock bar soap, do not stock any toilet soaps. The defendants' witnesses, Robert Jackson, Manager of Kemp & Co., Ltd., Alfred Wilkinson, Manager of Thompson and Taylor, Ltd., Chhaganlal Khothari of G. Chhaganlal & Co., Bhawanishankar Atmaram of B. A. & Brothers, and Maneklal Chaturbhuj of Maneklal & Co., all carrying on business as chemists and druggists in Bombay, said that there was a distinction in the trade between what is called "toilet soap" used for washing the body and "washing soap" used for washing clothes. A reference was also made to a statement in the Annual Statement of the Trade and Navigation of the Bombay Presidency (excluding Sind) for 1930-1931, issued in March 1932 by the Government of India Central Publication Branch, Calcutta, showing that soaps were classified, for the purposes of collecting duty on goods imported into the Presidency, into "Household and Laundry soaps in bars or tablets," "Toilet soap," and "other sorts." These witnesses stated that bar soap was a washing soap used for washing clothes: some of them also stated that amongst large masses of poor people washing soap, which is cheaper than toilet soap, was also used for washing the body. It may be said that bar soap is the poor man's toilet soap, but such user cannot by itself determine the character of the article. I have considered all the evidence, and taking it as a whole, it does not justify the conclusion that bar soap is usually manufactured and/or sold by the same merchants in India who manufacture and/or sell other toilet preparations.

Even if it be held that bar soap comes under the description of "toilet preparations," the next question is whether the user by the defendants of the number "777" on their bar soap is calculated to deceive the unwary purchaser and induce him to buy under a false impression. As the defendants have used an identical number, the burden is upon them to disprove the probability of the deception and not upon the plaintiffs to prove it: Sebastian's Law of Trade Marks, Edition 5, page 140. That number had been long associated with the toilet preparations of the Kathiawar Trading Company, namely their hair oils and their scents and perfumes which purchasers were accustomed to buy. No purchaser had ever seen plaintiffs' bar soap bearing that number, as none had been produced before the suit, so that the number could not have been associated with any other article in the market except those toilet preparations. Now the gist of a passing off action is deceit, for "passing off" is one of the ways whereby the goods of one trader are sold by another in a manner calculated to deceive the purchaser into thinking that they are the goods of the former. Can it be really said that there is a reasonable probability of deception if goods manufactured by the defendants have neither been manufactured nor sold by the plaintiffs before? The defendants' witness Mr. Patel stated that their bar soap was sold in the market as Swastik soap, though the number appeared on one side of the bar soap, and the name of the defendant Company and the two Swastik marks appeared exactly on the opposite side. It was also argued that the use of the identical number indicated an intention to deceive; but I do not agree with that contention.

There are circumstances which, in my opinion, do not point to any such intention. The wooden cases in which the soap is packed on the mill premises do not bear any number, but only show the Swastik mark prominently. The number was also in use from August 1932, and 1,701 cases had already been sold openly in the market before the date of the suit. Further, those who are the likely purchasers and consumers of bar soap, especially bar soap sold in small pieces, do not generally belong to the same class of people who purchase hair oils and perfumes. It must also be remembered that the name of the "Kathiawar Trading Company" appears along with "No. 777" on the plaintiffs' toilet preparations. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, I am of opinion that there was no reasonable probability of deception as alleged by the plaintiffs. It was argued that the use of the number on the bar soap by the defendants was only the thin end of the wedge, and that, unless restrained, they would be tempted to put the same number on their toilet soaps and their hair oils and perfumeries which they would produce in future. But the Court is not concerned with what the defendants might or might not do hereafter; the plaintiffs can always pursue their remedy as and when the occasion arises.

In my opinion it is established by the evidence that the toilet preparations of the plaintiffs' manufacture, sold in the name of the Kathiawar Trading Company, namely their various hair oils, perfumes and scents, are known under the trade-mark "No. 777," and as such have acquired a wide reputation and command an extensive sale in the market. According to the evidence, they are the products only and exclusively of the plaintiffs' manufacture, and the defendants have not claimed to use that number on any similar toilet preparation of their manufacture. It is, however, not established by the evidence that the plaintiffs have acquired an exclusive right to use the trade-mark in connection with each and every toilet preparation of their manufacture, nor does the evidence justify the conclusion that bar soap falls within the description of "toilet preparations," and that is usually manufactured and/or sold in India by persons manufacturing and selling such "toilet preparations" as the plaintiffs do. There is also no reasonable probability of deception as alleged by the plaintiffs. The defendants' user of the "No. 777" on their bar soap is therefore not an infringement of the plaintiffs' trade-mark "No. 777," and the plaintiffs are not entitled to the injunction which they claim.

In conclusion, I would like to state that defendant's Counsel intimated to the Court at the outset that the directors of the defendant Company were not keen on using the "No. 777" on their products, but as the plaintiffs alleged in their plaint that the object of the defendants was 'to trade on the reputation enjoyed by the plaintiffs' goods bearing the same "No. 777" and charged the defendants with fraud, they wished to stand on their strict rights and contest the claim. Plaintiffs also insisted on their rights, and the case was accordingly heard at some length. In the result the suit must be dismissed. I have heard Counsel on the question of the costs of the suit. This was a suit for infringement of a trade-mark, and according to my finding the plaintiffs have failed to establish the infringement. The defendants have substantially succeeded in their defence. Plaintiffs must, therefore, pay the defendants' costs of the suit. Suit dismissed with costs.

Malabar Law—Joint family—Allotment of property to descendants of some daughters to the exclusion of another daughter—Whether descendants take the property as thavazhi or as tenants-in-common—Right of member to sue for recovery of property from trespassers—Karar—Total deprivation of karnavan's powers—Notice to strangers, whether necessary.

A female governed by the Marumakkathayam Law had four daughters A, B, C and D. Under a razinamah, certain properties were allotted to the thavazhi of A, C and D and their descendants excluding B and her descendants The descendants of B claiming the property as their own mortgaged the same. The senior member of A's thavazhi instituted a suit for declaring the mortgage invalid and recovering the properties ;

Held, even if the thavazhi of A, C and D created by the razinamah was not legally constituted, the right of management under the razinamah vested in the senior male member and if the parties did not take the property under the razinamah as a thavazhi they would be tenants-in-common and the plaintiff as a tenant-in-common was entitled to sue to recover the properties as against the defendants who were trespassers. Debendra Narayan Singh v. Narendra Narayan Singh (2), referred to.

Held, further, that having regard to the nature of the exclusive right set up by the defendants to the property, it was not open to them to plead in appeal that the mortgage was binding on the larger thavazhi to which the plaintiff belonged on the ground that the amount was advanced for that thavazhi's purposes.

Quaere.—Whether, where the effect of a karar is to terminate the karnavan's authority altogether, any disposition made by him in favour of strangers who had no notice of the karar will be binding on the family. Kanna Pisharo v Kombitchan (3), referred to.

Mr. K. Kuttikrishna Menon, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. C. Sridharan, for the Respondents.

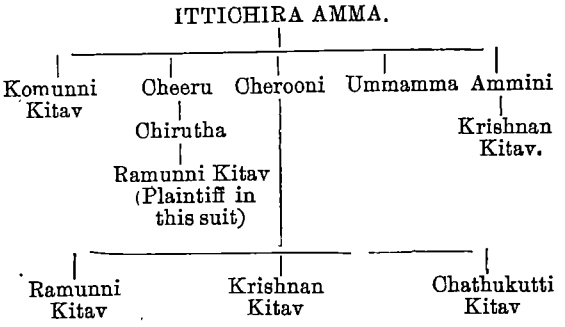
Judgment.- The plaintiff's suit was decreed in the trial Court and dismissed in the lower Appellate Court and he prefers this second appeal. The genealogy of the family has been set out in para. 9 of the trial Court's judgment and it will be convenient to repeat it here.



One further fact may be noted that of the three sons of Cherooni, Ramunni Kitav was the son by the first husband and Krishnan Kitav and Chathukutti Kitav are the sons by the second husband. The facts which led up to the suit are as follows. Krishnan Kitav and Chathukutti Kitav who are the sons of Cherooni applied to the Collector to have the registry transferred to their names. This was ordered. Komunni Kitav shown at the extreme left of the table in whose name the properties stood as the son of Ittichira Amma filed O. S. No. 344 of 1902, for a declaration that the properties belong to him and that Krishnan Kitav and Chathukutti Kitav had no right at all. That suit ended in a razinamah decree Ex. A dated November 27, 1902. Under this razinamah the plaintiff in that suit Komunni Kitav got the plaint items. During his lifetime Ramunni Kitav i. e., the present plaintiff was to have possession and pay him rent until he attained karnavanship. On this happening he was to give up possession to Krishnan Kitav and Chathukutti Kitav and as these in their turn attained karnavanship the property was to be enjoyed by the tavazhi consisting of the descendants of Chheru, Ammini and Ummamma excluding Cherooni and her descendants. Subsequently Krishnan Kitav and Chatukutti Kitav have demised the property in favour of the present 1st defendant: Vide Ex. B dated April 7, 1909. Krishnan Kitav died and Chathukutti Kitav granted a melkanom on November 15, 1921, Ex. 1, in favour of the present 2nd defendant who brought O. S. No. 344 of 1922 and obtained possession: Vide Exs. F and XII. The Appellate Court held that the present plaintiff could not in that suit contest the validity of the melkanom and that his remedy was by way of a separate suit. He has, therefore, filed the present suit. The plaintiff's case in the suit is that the properties belong to the tavazhi consisting of the descendants of Cheeru and Ummamma and that he as karnavan is entitled to be in possession and that the melkanom granted to the 2nd defendant is in contravention of the terms of the razinamah. The 2nd defendant pleaded that the properties belong to a smaller tavazhi consisting of Krishnan Kitav and Chathukutti Kitav and their mother who got the property from the 2nd husband of Cheerooni. The trial Court gave a decree for the plaintiff agreeing with the contentions raised by him. This was reversed by the lower Appellate Court on four grounds: (1) that the tavazhi created by the razinamah Ex. A is one unknown to the law, (2) that Ammini's son shown in the right hand corner of the pedigree is senior to the plaintiff and the suit should have been therefore, brought by him, (3) that the 2nd defendant had no notice of the razinamah and (4) that the melkanom is binding on the larger tavazhi because the amount was advanced to clear the debt of the tavazhi. I agree with the learned Advocate for the appellant that none of these grounds can be maintained. The plea that such a tavazhi was unknown to the law was not raised in the trial Court nor in the appeal to the lower Appellate Court. Assuming that it was competent to the lower Appellate Court to raise it and that its view is justified by the ruling in Kypreth Moithiyan Kutti v. Natukandy Puthiapurayil (1), which it quotes, it will not make any difference in this case for two reasons: (1) even if the tavazhi was not legally constituted, the right of management under the razinamah Ex. A vests in the senior male member and if the parties did not take the property under Ex. A as a tavazhi, they would be tenants-in-common and (2) any tenant-in-common can sue to recover the properties as against the trespasser: Vide Freeman on Co-tenancy, 2nd Edition, Art. 343 and Debendra Narayan Singh v. Narendra Narayan Singh (2), and the decision in S. A. No. 157 of 1930.

With regard to the second point that the suit should have been brought by Krishnan Kitav, son of Ammini, it is not in my opinion open to the lower Appellate Court to raise this question. The defence in the suit was not that this Krishnan Kitav and not the plaintiff was the proper person to bring the suit, but that the plaintiff was not a member of the tavazhi at all, nor entitled to the tavazhi property. It should be mentioned here that the witnesses in their evidence speak to three legal entities. First there is the larger tavazhi consisting of those persons shown in the tree (descendants of Ittichira) and some other members. Secondly, there is the tavazhi, to which the plaintiff is speaking, which is a special one constituted by the razi, excluding cheerunni and her descendants. This is the tavazhi which the lower Appellate Court has found to be illegal. Thirdly, there is a small tavazhi which the defendants speak to consisting of Krishnan Kitav, Chathukutti Kitav, Ramunni Kitav and Cheerunni. The 2nd defendant's case has throughout been that the property in question came to Krishnan Kitav and Chathukutti Kitav through their father. It was never their case that it belonged to a larger tavazhi, and that as such not the plaintiff but Krishnan Kitav, the son of Ammini should be the karnavan who should sue. The matter was not put in evidence nor in the First Appeal memo. It is sought here to argue that it is referred to in para. 2 of the appeal preferred to the Subordinate Judge which says:

> "Because the Court below erred in not recording any clear finding on the first issue."

But the next words are:

> "The Court below should have held that the plaintiff is not a member of Kurunghot tavazhi and he has no right to maintain the suit."

The first issue raised was "Is the plaintiff entitled to sue?" Nowhere was the contention raised that he was a member but was not the karnavan. In his evidence the plaintiff as P. W. No. 1 alluded to this Krishnan Kitav and said:

> "Ammini has a son called Krishnan Kidavu the karnavan of Marunalli tarwad. He has no right over the plaint property."

This witness was in no way cross-examined on this statement nor was any suggestion made that this Krishnan Kidavu had the right and was the proper person to bring the suit as karnavan. Therefore, in my opinion the lower Appellate Court was not justified in raising a mixed question of law and fact which was not the case of the parties. The third ground was that the 2nd defendant had no notice of the razi. That matter seems to have been alleged in the written statement: Vide para. 8 of the trial Court's judgment. But it does not seem to have been argued before the trial Court nor was any ground raised in the first appeal on this point nor objection taken that the trial Court did not consider it. The lower Appellate Court has itself found and it is quite obvious that under the razinamah Chathukutti Kitav was not a member of the tavazhi constituted by the razinamah and was deprived under that razinamah of that property and the rent. Sundara Ayyar, J. in his book, Malabar Law at p. 129, states as follows, referring to the judgment of Holloway, J. in Kanna Pisharo v. Kombitchen (3):

"If the reasoning of Holloway, J. is accepted, where there is a total prohibition against the karnavan dealing with the property his disposition will not be binding on the family, whether the lender had notice or not * * * Suppose the effect of the karar is to terminate the karnavan's authority altogether. How would it then stand? Would the analogy of s. 20°, Indian Contract Act apply and would third parties not be affected till they have notice of such termination? This would be pushing too far the analogy of agency. The karnavan is not an agent. He has authority to act by reason of his status. If he ceases to have the status, he has no longer authority to act on behalf of the family. If the analogy is pressed too far, even a decree in a suit deposing the karnavan might not be efficacious enough to terminate the agency so far as ignorant strangers are concerned."

It appears to me on perusing Kanna Pisharo v. Kombitchen (3), that it really is no help in the matter. It concerns a case where the party had no notice of the limited powers of the karnavan and I can find no remarks of Holloway, J. as to what the position would be if the karnavan had no power at all. Nevertheless, in the absence of any cases quoted to the contrary, the opinion of Sundara Ayyar, J. deserves very high respect. In the present case, however, having regard to the defence set up and the evidence of the 2nd defendant himself, it is really unnecessary to give any final opinion on this point of want of notice because the 2nd defendant entirely supported the defence case that the tavazhi to which he was lending money was the minor tavazhi of Krishnan Kitav and Chathukutti Kitav and that he lent the money on the property which they got from their father. His evidence is quite clear. He says:

"Krishnan Kitav was the karnavan of Kurungothil house. Properties belonging to Kurungothil house were given on Puthravakasom right to Krishnan Kitav and Chathukutti Kitav by their father. I paid Rs. 450 to discharge the debt due by that tavazhi."

To the same effect is the evidence of D. W. No. 2 who got the decree on Ex. II which the 2nd defendant paid off. Therefore, the 2nd defendant helped this smaller tavazhi to discharge a debt created by it and the property which he took was the property which had come from the father of Krishnan Kitav and Chathukutti Kitav. There is no question, therefore, of want of notice.

The last ground on which the lower Appellate Court based its judgment is that the melkanom is binding on the larger tavazhi because the amount advanced is clearly tavazhi family debt. That is really an astonishing conclusion in the face of the evidence of D. W. No. 1 himself and the whole defence in the suit and the evidence adduced. Exhibit I, melkanom does not profess to be executed on behalf of the tavazhi. On the other hand Chathukutti Kitav says the property is his exclusive property. The 1st and 2nd defendants have attempted to support this view and sworn to the effect that this smaller tavazhi to which they lent the money held the property as the property given on Puthravakasam right to Krishnan Kitav and Chathukutti Kitav by their father. In the face of that it is absolutely impossible to say that there is any evidence at all for holding that the melkanom was binding on the larger tavazhi. In fact it is opposed to the defendant's case. The only respondent who has contested this appeal is the 2nd defendant and in the face of his plea in the written statement that the property did not belong to the tavazhi of Cheeru and her descendants but was the property obtained by Krishnan Kitav and Chathukutti Kitav and their father; he cannot be allowed to argue in appeal that this was not so and that the evidence which he gave before the Court, especially when that evidence was the defence case, was not true. This appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the decree of the District Munsif restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926), ss. 227, 226 (2)—Co-sharer—Whether can be held accountable for profits not collected by him—Collecting co-sharer—Liability of.

There is no provision in s. 227, Agra Tenancy Act, for a co-sharer being held accountable for profits that he has not collected, and that applies in s. 226 (2) only in the case of a lambardar, the reason being that a co-sharer has no duty to collect for other co-sharers. Section 227 is not intended to convey the meaning that the collecting co-sharer is liable to share arrears rateably with co-sharers who do not collect.

S. C. A. from the decision of the Second Additional District Judge, Meerut, dated July 24, 1930.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Shastri, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by a plaintiff against a decree of the lower Appellate Court which modified the decree of the Court of first instance allowing certain sums to the plaintiff under s. 227 of Act III of 1926. There were two sets of co-sharers in the khewat in question, the plaintiff on the one hand and the two defendants on the other. The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants for rendition of accounts and his share of profits The suit was for the years 1331 to 1334 Fasli. There were certain arrears collected in the years in dispute for the period prior to 1331 Fasli. The plaintiff claims in second appeal that because the defendant Mitter Sen is the sole collecting co-sharer, and has paid profits of previous years on the basis of collection, he was bound in law to pay to the plaintiff his rateable share of the arrears of the past years realized during the years in question. The lower Appellate Court in regard to this claim states that the plaintiff in the plaint did not claim arrears for the period prior to 1331 Fasli. The claim in the plaint was limited to the years in suit and was based on the full rental of those years. There is no provision in s. 227 for a co-sharer being held accountable for profits that he has not collected and that applies in s. 226 (2) only in the case of a lambardar, the reason being that a co-sharer has no duty to collect for other co-sharers. When the amount of the plaint claim therefore was reduced by the Courts, the plaintiff put forward this claim for the collections in the years in suit for previous years. Such a claim would require an amendment of the plaint which was not made in the present case. But even if the plaint were amended, it does not appear that the plaintiff's claim is well-founded. The lower Appellate Court has held that the plaintiff could not be allowed arrears so realised by defendant co-sharers unless it was proved that it was in excess of shares, and that there is nothing to show this. Learned Counsel argued that the collecting co-sharer is liable to share these arrears rateably with co-sharers who do not collect. I do not consider that s. 227 is intended to convey such a meaning. The language of the sub-section has not been altered from the language of the previous s. 165 (1) of Act II of 1901. Under the previous section a co-sharer has been held to be liable to the extent of what he has collected beyond his own legitimate share and out of the plaintiff's share: see Angad Singh v. Zorawar Singh (1). I do not consider that there is anything wrong in the decision on this point of the lower Appellate Court The second ground of appeal stated that a reference to a copy of a decree for profits for previous years and filed in the record and the statement of account filed by the Patwari, do show that there was an excess amount realised by the defendant, and that the Court below was under some misapprehension in holding otherwise. This ground of appeal does not state in what way there was an excess realised and to what extent there was an excess. Possibly learned Counsel meant that the collections were in excess of the shares of defendants. In any case it is not the function of this Court in second appeal to re-examine the evidence and to come to conclusions of fact on such evidence. I dismiss this second appeal. The opposite party was not represented and so no costs are allowed. Leave for a Letters Patent Appeal is granted.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 18, Sch. I, Art. 10—Fraud—Mere suggestion of fraud is not enough —Nature of fraud to be proved under s. 18—Pre-emption—Sale disguised as mortgage to avoid pre-emption—Suit for pre-emption—Limitation, when commences — Purchaser with equal rights with pre-emptor associating in purchase with person with inferior rights—Whether can resist pre-emptor's claim.

Where a suit is on the face of it barred, it is for the plaintiff to prove in the first instance the circumstances which would prevent the statute from having its ordinary effect. A person, who, in such circumstances, desires to invoke the aid of s. 18, Limitation Act, must establish that there has been fraud, and that, by means of such fraud, he has been kept from the knowledge of his right to sue, or of the title whereon it is founded. Once this is established, the burden is shifted on to the other side to show that the plaintiff had knowledge of the transaction beyond the period of limitation. Such knowledge must be clear and definite knowledge of the facts constituting the particular fraud. Mere suggestions of fraud do not amount to such knowledge as is required by s. 18 of the Limitation Act. Rahimbhoy-Habibbhoy v. Charles Agnew Turner (3), Gordhan Das v. Ahmad (4), Biman Chandra Dotta v. Promotha Nath Ghose (5) and Abdul Rahman Khan v. Parshotam Das (6), referred to. Where a sale is disguised as a mortgage in order to avoid pre-emption, a suit for pre-emption can be brought within one year from the date on which the fraud is discovered.

If a purchaser having an equal right of pre-emption associates with himself in the purchase, a person with rights inferior to those of the pre-emptor, he is not entitled to resist the claim of such pre-emptor to enforce his rights even as to his share of the purchase Achhru v. Labhu (7), Tota Ram v. Kundan (8) and Kesar Singh v. Punjab Singh (9), relied on.

F. C. A. from the decree of the First Class Sub-Judge, Delhi, dated May 8, 1928.

Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—On July 27, 1911, Ram Partap mortgaged three-fourths of 66 bighas 10 biswansis in favour of Roshan and Khimman in equal shares one-third, and Nihal and Bihal in equal shares two-thirds. The amount of the mortgage was Rs. 5,000, and the mortgage could not be redeemed for ten years. Power was given to the mortgagees to plant a garden, build houses, etc., and, on redemption, the cost of these improvements, together with interest at 6 per cent. had to be paid. On September 26, 1911, he sold the remaining one-fourth of the 66 bighas 10 biswansis in favour of Shadi and Tej Ram for Rs. 1,800. On March 15, 1929, Ram Partap sold the equity of redemption of the three-fourths to Tej Ram for Rs. 10,800 of which Rs. 5,000 were left with the vendee to redeem the mortgage. There was a clause in the sale deed that the vendee had to pay whatever was found to be due to the mortgagees.

On October 9, 1920, Tej Ram gave notice to the mortgagees that he wished to redeem the mortgage on payment of Rs. 5,000 but was told by them that redemption was not possible as the mortgage transaction was in reality a sale disguised as a mortgage in order to defeat pre-emption. On July 7, 1921, he again gave notice of redemption, adding that he had redeemed Khimman's one-sixth share. Ultimately in 1921 Tej Ram instituted a suit for redemption against the mortgagees other than Khimman. The defendants pleaded that the transaction was a sale. On October 4, 1923, the suit was referred to arbitration. The arbitrators gave their award on February 13, 1924. They held that the transaction was in reality a sale and that the suit should be dismissed. Objections were taken before the Judge to this award. He upheld the award and granted a decree on May 18, 1925, in accordance therewith. Khimman's share was not incorporated in the decree as he was not sued. The Judge added that he left parties to bear their own costs as he considered that the defendants would have lost their case had there been no reference to arbitration.

Thereupon Shadi and Har Gyan instituted this suit on August 28, 1925, for pre-emption of the mortgaged land, on the ground that it was a sale which had been kept from their knowledge. They stated that they were co-sharers in the patti and were entitled to pre-empt and that the suit was within limitation by reason of s. 18, Limitation Act. The suit was decreed with costs, on payment of Rs. 5,000 by May 31, 1928, and it was also ordered that the plaintiffs should pay Rs. 6,000 as the value of improvements before taking possession. Against this decision the defendants have appealed.

Only two grounds were argued before us. The first was that the suit was barred by time. In this connection it was first urged that there was no fraud within the meaning of s. 18, Limitation Act. What was said was that the defendants were entitled to disguise their sale in the form of a mortgage and that it was open to the plaintiffs to have sued within one year of the original transaction to pre-empt the sale. It has been held in Jagdish v. Man Singh (1) and Mihan Singh v. Ishar Das (2) that a plaintiff can come into Court alleging that a mortgage is in reality a sale and that he is entitled to pre-empt the bargain. Although this is the case, this does not mean that s. 18, Limitation Act, does not apply. That section runs as follows:

"Where any person having a right to institute a suit has, by means of fraud, been kept from the knowledge of such right or of the title on which it is founded, the time limited for instituting a suit (a) against the person guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto, or (b) against any person claiming through him otherwise than in good faith and for valuable consideration, shall be computed from the time when the fraud first became known to the person injuriously affected thereby."

The mortgage in the present case certainly had all the appearance of a mortgage and there was nothing to indicate that it was a sale and therefore there can be no question that the parties acted fraudulently in giving the transaction the shape of a mortgage. The plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to compute limitation from the time when that fraud first became known to them.

The law on this question is not in doubt. Their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down in Rahimbhoy Habib Bhoy v. Charles Agnew Turner (3) that, in order to make limitation operate when a fraud has been committed by one who has obtained property thereby, it is for him to show that the injured complainant has had clear and definite knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud at a time which is too remote for the suit to be brought. The suggestion of his having been defrauded did not amount to such knowledge as was required by s. 18, Limitation Act. This burden was not discharged by proof of the facts that some hints and clues had reached the Official Assignee which might have led to such knowledge. The Chief Court of the Punjab held in Gordhan Das v. Ahmad (4) that where an original transaction is tainted by fraud it lies on the party, against whom fraud is found, to prove that the plaintiff had clear and definite knowledge of the fraud for more than the period of limitation allowed. A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Biman Chandra Datta v. Promotha Nath Ghose (5) held that where the plaintiff had been kept from knowledge by the defendant of the circumstances constituting the fraud, the plaintiff could rely upon s. 18, to escape from the bar of limitation. The true position is that, where a suit is on the face of it barred, it is for the plaintiff to prove in the first instance the circumstances which would prevent the statute from having its ordinary effect. A person, who, in such circumstances, desires to invoke the aid of s. 18 must establish that there has been fraud, and that, by means of such fraud, he has been kept from the knowledge of his right to sue, or of the title whereon it is founded. Once this is established, the burden is shifted on to the other side to show that the plaintiff had knowledge of the transaction beyond the period of limitation. Such knowledge must be clear and definite knowledge of the facts constituting the particular fraud. The same subject came before the Privy Council in a case reported as Abdul Rahman Khan v. Parshotam Das (6).

In the case before us the plaintiffs have clearly established that there was fraud and that by means of this fraud they were kept from the knowledge of their right to sue and of the title whereon this right was founded. The burden is, therefore, upon the defendants to show that the plaintiffs had knowledge of the transaction beyond the period of limitation. Such knowledge must be clear and definite knowledge of the facts constituting the particular fraud. In this case the fraud was that a sale was disguised in the form of an ordinary mortgage.

There is good evidence that the plaintiff-pre-emptors came to know that the defence set up in Tej Ram's redemption suit was that the transaction was in reality a sale. They were both present when the arbitrators were hearing evidence in the village to this effect. The contention however of Tej Ram was that the transaction was a mortgage as it certainly appeared to be. It was argued on behalf of the appellants that it must be held that the plaintiffs had knowledge of the fact that it was a sale during the arbitration proceedings in 1923 or early in 1924 and, therefore, this suit having been instituted on August 28, 1925, was barred by time. On the other side it was contended that it could not be said that the plaintiffs had knowledge that the transaction was a sale until the Court upheld the award on May 18, 1925, in which case the suit would be well within limitation. On the authorities it is clear that mere suggestions of fraud do not amount to such knowledge as is required by s. 18, Limitation Act, and that the knowledge must be clear and definite knowledge of the facts constituting the particular fraud. The Court which upheld the award did not allow costs on the ground that the award appeared to go against the merits of the case. All that the plaintiffs knew was that one side was contending that it was a sale while the other side was contending that it was a mortgage as it certainly appeared to be. The allegation that it was a sale might easily have been the usual false defence so commonly set up in this country and in our opinion, knowledge of this allegation did not amount to clear and definite knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud in question. That knowledge did not become definite and clear till the award was upheld and the suit of Tej Ram for redemption dismissed. The suit is thus within limitation.

The trial Judge held that as Nihal and Bihal also held land in the patti the plaintiffs had not a superior claim to pre-empt compared with those two persons. If Nihal and Bihal, therefore, had been the sole, purchasers the plaintiffs' suit for pre-emption must have failed. As however they associated with themselves two persons in the sale who had no right to pre-empt, namely, Roshan and Khimman, the trial Judge held that the plaintiffs were entitled to pre-empt the whole sale. There is no doubt that this is the view consistently taken by this Court. In Achhru v. Labhu (7), a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court held that, if a purchaser having an equal right to pre-emption associates with himself in the purchase a person with rights inferior to those of the pre-emptor, he is not entitled to resist the claim of such pre-emptor to enforce his rights even as to his share of the purchase.

There are many other rulings, but it is only necessary to refer to one of the latest, namely, Tota Ram v. Kundan (8). These decisions are based on another Division Bench judgment Kesar Singh v. Punjab Singh (9). It was held there that in the case of a sale to various persons, the contract of sale as regards the vendor was one and indivisible, the specification of the shares in the sale-deed being merely an arrangement among the purchasers inter se, which did not affect the vendor, who had contracted to take the purchase money for the whole land, and could not have been compelled to sell to one or other of the vendors his specified share on payment of a proportionate share of the purchase money. With great respect this seems to be the correct view. There is only one sale transaction which is indivisible and the plaintiffs are therefore, entitled to pre-empt. No other point was argued.

For the reasons given the appeal is dismissed with costs.

RAJA RAM - APPLICANT
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 288—Scope of—Evidence given before Magistrate—Whether can be utilised in support of conviction—Independent corroboration is not necessary.

Under s. 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code, evidence admitted under that section may be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act. It will not be proper to limit the use of such evidence by the proviso that unless there is clearly present, besides the evidence given before the Magistrate, evidence which will show that the evidence given before the Magistrate should be preferred to and substituted for that given before the Sessions Judge, the evidence given before the Magistrate cannot be effectively utilised in support of a conviction. Nor can it be said that evidence admitted under s. 288, Criminal Procedure Code, invariably requires some independent corroboration in the same manner as the statement of an accomplice. Emperor v. Tehal Teli (1), dissented from, Emperor v. Behari (2), relied on.

Cr. R. App. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Meerut, dated October 30, 1934.

Mr. K. D. Malaviya, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This application has been argued by Mr. Kapildev Malaviya on the ground that the trial Court and the lower Appellate Court have both given a value to two statements admitted under s. 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code to which they are not entitled by law. The facts of the case are given fully in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The principal evidence for the prosecution was that of the complainant, Suggan, who was poisoned and the two bakers Ram Chander and Khazan, who were attracted to the dharamshala by the cries of the poisoned man, and who testified to finding the present applicant Raja Ram, who is a boy of 16, in the dharamshala, together with the complainant Suggan, while the other person who had accompanied the applicant to the dharamshala ran away. The case for the prosecution was that the applicant was in league with this person who had escaped to administer poison to Suggan in order to rob him. The argument is that if the statements admitted under s. 288, Criminal Procedure Code, are ignored, there is no evidence to prove that the applicant himself had any guilty knowledge.

The case on which Mr. Malaviya has relied is that of Emperor v. Tehal Teli (1) in which it was remarked (p. 794*):

"I think therefore that the principle is quite clearly settled by this line of cases that unless there is clearly present, besides the evidence given before the Magistrate, evidence which will show that the evidence given before the Magistrate should be preferred to and substituted for that given before the Sessions Judge, the evidence given before the Magistrate cannot be effectively utilised in support of a conviction."

If the meaning of this sentence is that evidence admitted under s. 288, Criminal Procedure Code, invariably requires some independent corroboration in the same manner as the statement of an accomplice. I am with due respect not yet satisfied that the general practice of the Courts substantiates the principle laid down. Under s. 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code evidence admitted under that section may be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act of 1872, and a Bench of this Court in the case of Emperor v. Behari (2) has discussed the meaning of this section without giving any indication that it would be proper to limit the use of such evidence in the manner laid down by the Patna High Court.

It is not, however, necessary for me to come to a decision on the wider question, for in the present case it appears to be quite clear that there was other evidence on which the Court relied and which proved the guilt of the applicant in addition to the statements admitted under s. 288. The learned Judge has remarked that the two bakers Ram Chander and Khazan appeared to have altered their statements in the Sessions Court in favour of the applicant on three points:—

They said that they found the applicant sitting down, whereas one of them at any rate said in the Magistrate's Court that he was ready to run away, but was arrested.

(2) One of them, Ram Chander, was ambiguous as to whether the purse was found in the bundle or on the person of the sweeper.

(3) They said that the bundle which contained some of the poisoned sweetmeats was lying on the ground, whereas in the Magistrate's Court both had said that the bundle was in possession of the applicant.

The Appellate Court has found, however, that according to the Urdu record Khazan Singh said in the trial Court not that the bundle was lying on the ground near the applicant, but that the applicant had it in his possession while the English record of the trial Court shows that Ram Chander said that the applicant had a bundle and that crushed sweets were found in that bundle. It appears therefore that there was sufficient evidence given by these witnesses in the trial Court to corroborate the statements made before the Magistrate, though in some details their statements in the two places were not consistent. I have examined the evidence and I find that there are circumstances in the case that justified the Courts in giving preference to the statements of these two witnesses which were made in the Magistrate's Court to their statements in the Sessions Court, where the two differ, and I am, therefore, not satisfied that the Courts were wrong in relying on the statements admitted under s. 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code or that they acted illegally in convicting the applicant.

The application, therefore, fails and is dismissed.

The applicant is on bail and must surrender to his sureties.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 86—Chaukidara cannot be regarded as ground rent but is a cess—Such cess not recorded in last settlement—Whether recoverable.

Chaukidara cannot be regarded as ground rent for the houses of the raiyats but is apparently a cess When no such cess has been recorded in the last settlement, it is not recoverable under the provisions of s. 86, U. P. Land Revenue Act. Tirkha Ram v. Chhotey (1), referred to.

Mr. A. Aziz, for the Appellant.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana and H. P. Asthana, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—Second Appeal No. 1347 of 1932 has been heard with this appeal. Both these appeals are plaintiff's appeals and arise out of two suits brought by the same plaintiff against the defendants-respondents to recover arrears of ground-rent. The plaintiff brought the suits as mutwalli of the abadi in which the defendants' houses are. The defendants contended that they had never paid any ground-rent and that they were not liable to pay any. The plaintiff relied on para. 28 of the wajib-ul-arz of 1278 Fasli which is as follows: "Raiyats who have settled in the village render service according to their profession and chaukidara is also realised from them according to their status". The plaintiff claimed ground-rent from the defendants on the basis of the provision for chaukidara in this wajib-ul-arz. As has been rightly held by both the Courts below chaukidara cannot be regarded as ground-rent. On the other hand, chaukidara was assessed not to be paid by the defendants on account of the use and occupation of their houses or on account of the rent of the sites of their houses but to be paid by the raiyats on account of the salaries of the chaukidars maintained for the safety of the village. The chaukidara could not be regarded as ground-rent for the houses of the raiyats but is apparently a cess. The same point was considered in Tirkha Ram v. Chhotey (1), where the same view was taken. Section 86 of the Land Revenue Act provides that:

"A list of all cesses other than those referred to in s. 56 levied in accordance with village custom shall, if generally or especially sanctioned by the Local Government be recorded by the Settlement Officer and no cesses, not so recorded, shall be recoverable in any Civil or Revenue Court; and no such list shall be altered or added to during the currency of settlement"

After the settlement of 1278 Fasli another settlement took place but no wajib-ul-arz of it was produced. If there had been any entry of any such chaukidara cess in it as was entered in the wajib-ul-arz of 1278 Fasli, the plaintiff would certainly have produced it. As no such cess was recorded in the last settlement, it is not recoverable under the provisions of s. 86 of the Land Revenue Act.

Both the suits have been rightly dismissed by the Courts below. It is, therefore, ordered that both the appeals be dismissed with costs and the decrees of the lower Court be confirmed.

Punjab Alienation of Land Act (XIII of 1900), ss. 2 (3), 15—Trees, whether land.

Trees, whether fruit trees or otherwise, cannot be considered to be "land" within s. 2 (3), Punjab Alienation of Land Act. Reading ss. 2 (3) and 15 of the Act together the terms "land" in s. 2 (3) must be confined to the ordinary meaning of "land" especially as there is a distinction drawn in the Act itself between land and the products of the earth or land. Amir Khan v Lahori Mal (4) and Deputy Commissioner, Jhang v. Ganga Ram (5), Overruled. Jhanda Khan v. Fateh Din (1), referred to and Achhru Mal v. Maula Bakhsh (3), relied on.

Misc. S. C. A. from an order of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated December 5, 1933.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Appellant.

Young, C. J.—The point for consideration by this Full Bench is whether trees can be considered to be "land" within the definition contained in the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, s. 2 (3). We are of opinion that trees whether fruit trees or otherwise, cannot the considered to be "land" within the said definition. Sub-s. (3) reads as follows:

"The expression 'land' means land which is not occupied as the site of any building in a town or village and is occupied or let for agricultural purposes or for purposes subservient to agriculture or for pasture and includes: (a) the sites of buildings and other structures on such land..... . . "

It is unnecessary to reproduce the remaining clause of the definition as it is conceded that trees cannot come within any of them. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that on a proper construction the above portition of the sub-section would include trees. On the plain grammatical meaning of the sub-section, however, it is difficult to include trees therein. Trees are not "occupied as the site of any building in a town or village" nor can trees be "occupied or let for agricultural purposes." The inclusion of the "sites of buildings and other structures on such land" as land further confirms our view that it would have been perfectly easy if so desired for the Legislature to have included trees in this sub-section. We are further confirmed in our opinion by a consideration of s. 15 of the same Act. The definition of the "produce of land" is included in s. 15. It is as follows:—

"The produce of land means : (a) crops and other products of the earth standing or ungathered on the holding ; (b) crops and other products of the earth which have been grown on the land during the past year and have been reaped or gathered."

Trees, it is clear, would come within this explanation as "other products of the earth standing or ungathered on the holding." Reading these two sections together, we think that the term "land" in s. 2 (3) must be confined to the ordinary meaning of "land" especially as there is a distinction drawn in the Act itself between land and the products of the earth or land. We have been referred to a decision of the Chief Court of this Province contained in Jhanda Khan v. Fateh Din (1). The question for decision in that case was whether a suit in respect of land occupied as a fruit garden was a "land suit" within the definition of that term as given in the Punjab Courts Act. It was held in that case with reference to the definition of "land" as given in the Punjab Tenancy Act which is also adopted for the purpose of the Punjab Courts Act, and is identical with the definition of land as given in the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, exclusive of cls. (b) to (f) on which as stated above reliance has been placed before us, that land occupied as a fruit garden is land occupied for agricultural purposes. We see no reason to disagree with this decision but it does not really touch the point we have to decide. In the present instance we are concerned only with trees and not with the land occupied by those trees.

The opinion we hold is supported by a Full Bench decision of the Punjab Court reported in Dhani Das v. Aya Ram (2), as also by a Division Bench decision of this Court contained in Achhru Mal v. Maula Bakhsh (3). In the former case it was pointed out that trees growing on land can be sold, let or mortgaged independently of the land on which they stand and it was held that a suit for possession of a share in an orchard, (i. e., the fruit trees apart from the land (is not a suit with respect to any right or interest in land and was not, therefore, a land suit.

In Amir Khan v. Lahori Mal (4), it was held by Wilberforce, J., that standing trees were included in the definition of land given in the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. But when the same question arose before Chevis, J., in a later case he was inclined to differ from that view and, therefore, referred the case to a Division Bench. The decision of the Division Bench is reported in Achhru Mal v. Maula Bakhsh (3). In this case after reviewing the previous relevant authorities on the point, Amir Khan v. Lahori Mal (4), was dissented from and it was held that trees growing on agricultural land are not "land" within the meaning of sub-s. (3), s. 2, Punjab Alienation of Land Act. A different view has recently been taken in a Single Bench decision reported in Deputy Commissioner, Jhang v. Ganga Ram (5), but in that case Amir Khan v. Lahori Mal (4), was followed without any reference to the Division Bench ruling reported in Achhru Mal v. Maula Bakhsh (3). It appears to be conceded in Deputy Commissioner, Jhang v. Ganga Ram (5), that trees are not expressly mentioned or included in the definition of land as given in the Punjab Alienation of Land Act but it was considered that the Legislature could not have intended to permit members of agricultural tribes to sell trees apart from the land. We have, however, to interpret the definition as it stands and if the language used does not carry out the real intention of the Legislature, it is of course open to it to amend the definition. It is, however, note-worthy that the Legislature has not thought it necessary to intervene though ten years have now elapsed since : Achhru Mal v. Maula Bakhsh (3), was published.

The answer, therefore, that we give to the question put to the Full Bench is that Insolvency—Joint Hindu family firm adjudicated insolvent—Effect—All members of family, if made insolvents—Allahabad High Court Rules, Chap. XIX, r. 27—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 79, 28—Creditor obtaining decree on understanding that debtors are insolvents—Remedy—Separate execution —Legality of—Hindu Law—Joint family business—Adjudication of joint Hindu family as insolvent—Powers of Receiver—One member surrendering rights by release deed in favour of Receiver—Subsequent attachment of his share by creditor—Whether confers additional rights paramount to those of Receiver.

In the case of a firm carried on by a joint Hindu family, the effect of the adjudication of the firm as an insolvent is to make all the members of the family insolvent.

Where a creditor has obtained a decree on the understanding that he was getting a decree against certain insolvents, his exclusive remedy is to go to the Insolvency Court and get rateable shares in the assets and not to proceed separately by way of execution and claim priority as against the Official Receiver.

The right of a Hindu father to dispose of the joint Hindu family property in order to satisfy his own debts is properly within the meaning of s. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and vests in the Receiver and the Receiver is entitled to seize the entire family property and transfer it in order to satisfy the debts of the father. It is not incumbent on such a Receiver to obtain an order of the Court to execute it and attach the family property. He can straightway seize the property and sell it under a private deed, it not being incumbent upon him to take out an attachment. In these circumstances the seizure of the property by the Receiver must be taken to be tantamount to attachment of the property by him so as to get his interest crystallised in preference to any creditor who subsequently attaches the same property.

Where a member of a joint Hindu family firm which has been adjudicated insolvent surrenders his rights by a deed of release in favour of the Receiver, the subsequent attachment of his supposed interest cannot confer upon the attaching creditor any additional right which would be paramount to the rights of the Receiver.

S. C. A. from the decision of the District Judge, Agra, dated April 9, 1921.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana and B. N. Saha for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Malik, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for declaration as to the plaintiff's ownership in a certain property. Munna Lal and his three sons were carrying on an ancestral business under the name of firm Gobind Ram Munna Lal and became heavily indebted. On the application of some of the creditors the firm was declared insolvent on August 1, 1922. In the application the firm had been described as the firm Gobind Ram Munna Lal through Munna Lal Radhe Lal and Brij Mohan, and the name of Amolak Chand, the youngest son of Munna Lal was somehow omitted from the application. But it is noteworthy that it was the firm itself which was adjudicated as insolvent and not the individual members of the family.

The present defendant-appellant obtained a decree against the firm through the four persons on November 14, 1922. An objection had been taken in the suit that the defendants were insolvents and they could not be sued separately but the Court overruled that objection on the ground that a decree could be given on certain conditions and pointed out that the decree-holder would of course take the decree to the Insolvent Court and get a rateable distribution of the assets along with the other creditors. In the Insolvency Court a composition scheme was submitted and approved by the Court on May 16, 1924, to which the present appellant also agree. In accordance with the composition scheme one Ram Babu was appointed Receiver to the estate and he took charge of the entire family property including the undivided shares of all the members. In order to strengthen the position of the Receiver Amolak Chand, whose name had been left out from the application, executed a deed of release on July 10, 1924, relinquishing all claim to any share in the family property. It was after this release that the present defendant in execution of the decree got Amolak's share attached on May 14, 1925. On February 5, 1925, Ram Babu the Receiver sold the property to the present plaintiff. It was after the sale that the defendant-appellant purchased Amolak's share at auction.

We are not concerned with the result of the finding in a previous proceeding which took place in 1927 to which neither the Official Receiver nor the present respondent was a party.

The Courts below have disallowed the pleas of the defendants and have decreed the claim holding that the property validly passed to the present plaintiff in preference to the defendant.

There are several grounds on which the defendant's case must fail.

In the first place it was the firm itself which was declared insolvent and not any individual persons. Under the authority vested in this High Court by s. 79 of the Provincial Insolvency Act this Court has framed certain rules which have the same effect as if enacted in this Act. Chapter XIX, r. 27, provides that adjudication order made against a firm shall operate as if it were an adjudication order made against each of the persons who at the date of the order is a partner in the firm. If that analogy be applied to the members of a firm carried on by a joint Hindu family then the effect of the adjudication of the firm as an insolvent was to make all the members of the family insolvents.

In the second place the defendant-appellant obtained his decree on the understanding that he was getting a decree against certain insolvents and his exclusive remedy would be to go to the Insolvency Court and get rateable shares in the assets and not that he would proceed separately by way of execution and claim priority as against the Official Receiver.

In the third place the defendant himself agreed to the composition scheme and was a party to the arrangement under which the entire property was to be disposed of by the Official Receiver.

In the fourth place the Official Receiver had already taken possession of the entire estate on behalf of the creditors and had, therefore, exercised the right which had previously vested in the father to dispose of the property in payment of his debts.

It has now been held by the Full Bench in the case of Anand Prakash v. Narain Das Dori Lal (1) that the right of a Hindu father to dispose of the joint Hindu family property in order to satisfy his own debts is properly within the meaning of s. 28 of the Insolvency Act and vests in the Receiver and that the Receiver is entitled to seize the entire family property and transfer it in order to satisfy the debts of the father. Now it is not incumbent on such a Receiver to obtain an order of the Court to execute it and attach the family property. He can straightaway seize the property and sell it under a private deed it not being incumbent upon him to take on an attachment. In these circumstances if the principles of English Law are to be applied to the system under which properties are held by a Hindu family, the seizure of the property by the Receiver must be taken to be tantamount to attachment of the property by him so as to get his interest crystallised in preference to any creditor who subsequently attaches the same property. We do not think that the Receiver should be put in any worse position than if he had actually taken out an order for attachment and got the property attached though in either case he would sell it afterwards.

In the fifth place the appellant instead of going to the Insolvency Court and claiming the rateable share in the assets as had been directed in the judgment, proceeded to execute the decree independently of the Insolvency Court and attached the property contrary to the provisions of s. 28 (2) of the Insolvency Act. He had no right to take this legal proceeding independently of the Insolvency Court.

In the sixth place Amolak had already executed a deed of release in favour of the Receiver relinquishing all his interest in the property. There is nothing in the law to prevent him from surrendering his rights particularly when the firm was declared insolvent. The debts were due against the whole family and as a member of the family he was under the Rules of the High Court liable to pay such debts. The subsequent attachment of the supposed interest of Amolak by the present appellant cannot, therefore, confer upon him any additional right which would be paramount to the rights of the Receiver. We, therefore, think that the appeal has no force and we accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s 366—Object of accused to bring pressure to bear on husband of woman—Judge's direction likely to lead jury to believe that this was object of accused—Conviction under s 366—Legality of—Jury trial—Misdirection

In a case under s. 366, Penal Code, if the object of the accused was to bring pressure to bear on the husband of the woman, it cannot be said that they knew it to be likely that she would be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse.

Where it appeared by the Judge's direction to the jury, the jury were likely to be misled, that is, they were likely to believe that what they had to find was not that the woman was abducted for illicit intercourse but that she was abducted for the purpose of bringing pressure to bear on her husband, and they brought in a verdict of guilty on his understanding, the conviction under s. 366 ought not to stand.

Cr. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Bareilly, dated December 3, 1934.

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The three appellants have been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Bareilly of an offence under s. 366 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. The trial was by jury, and the appeal is made on the ground that there was a misdirectien of the jury by the learned Judge.

The three appellants and one other were charged with abducting Musammat Tulsha while she was going on her way to Khamaria with her maternal uncle Hira Lal, in order that the appellant Narain should commit illicit intercourse with her, and knowing it to be likely that she would be forced to illicit intercourse with another person by means of criminal intimidation. It has been pointed out that in the charge to the jury the learned Judge has not explained the ingredients of an offence under s. 366 of the Indian Penal Code. The first of the ingredients is the abduction of the woman, and the second is the "intention that she may be compelled or knowing it to be likely that she may be compelled . or in order that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse or knowing it to be likely that she would be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse"

i. e., the object of the abduction must be an enforcement or compulsion or seduction to illicit intercourse. At the beginning of the charge to the jury, however, the Judge said that the prosecution case was that the idea of the accused was to bring such influence to bear on the woman or her family that the burglary case which was then pending against Narain accused would be withdrawn or seriously prejudiced. This matter is again referred to a little lower down where the Judge says that the defence does not "carry any great weight if their intention was merely to force her family to withdraw the case by abducting her or to force her herself to give evidence in favour of Narain".

If this was the object of abduction, then s. 366 would not be applicable. It is true the Judge remarks

"section 366 also refers to a case in which the accused knows that it is likely that the woman will be seduced or compelled to illicit intercourse, and it is on this case that the prosecution proceeds."

I am not quite clear as to the meaning of this sentence. If the object of the accused was to bring pressure to bear on the husband then it can hardly be said that they knew it to be likely that she would be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. Putting the case at its highest, it may fairly be said that the jury were likely to be misled, that is to say, that they were likely to believe that what they had to find was not that the woman was abducted for illicit intercourse but that she was abducted for the purpose of bringing pressure to bear on her husband and if the jury brought in a verdict of guilty on this understanding, it is quite clear that the conviction under s. 366 ought not to stand.

It should be remarked that the Judge did not in his charge remind the jury that if they had any reasonable doubt about the guilt of the accused, they were to bring in a verdict of not guilty.

I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the order of conviction and sentence passed on the appellants, and direct that the case be returned to the learned Sessions Judge for re-trial. The appellants may remain on bail until further orders have been passed by the Sessions Judge.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 65, 167—Subrogation—Mortgagee advancing money to mortgagor for paying off rent decree—Whether subrogated to position of landlord—Incumbrance created by tenant of transferable holding—Whether void as regards third parties—Mortgage—Purchaser under first mortgage decree—Whether can set up first mortgage as shield in subsequent mortgagee's suit

Where money is advanced to a mortgagor to pay off a mortgage debt and the person advancing the money gets a mortgage in security of that advance he becomes entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. But where the landlord obtains a decree for rent, the charge created by the decree is a right to which the landlord alone is entitled and the person advancing money to the tenant to pay off the rents does not get the right of subrogation, as the charge obtained by the landlord is not on the same footing as that of a mortgagee.

So far as the other parties are concerned, the incumbrances which were created by the tenant in a non-transferable holding are not incumbrances which are void but which may be treated as void only as between the tenant and the landlord.

A person, who is in the rights of a first mortgagee and of the original mortgagor as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage, is entitled at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee who is not bound by the sale of the decree on which it proceeded, to set up the first mortgage as a shield. Ram Narain v. Sahadeo Singh (3), relied on.

C. A. from the Appellate decree of the District Judge, Patna, dated January 19, 1931.

Mr. G. P. Singh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Husnain, Baldeo Sahay and Chowdhuri Mathura Prasad, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of an action on a mortgage. The appellant is defendant No. 4. The principal defendant was the occupancy tenant of a certain holding. The plaintiff is a mortgagee under a mortgage obtained by him from the principal defendant No. 1. It is necessary to state the history of the case in order to appreciate the points which have arisen.

In the first place I should like to say that I am indebted to the lucid arguments of Mr. Gandhari Prasad Singh and Mr. Khurshed Husnain which have been of material assistance to me, and although the matter is of considerable importance I propose to state my conclusions at once and not to reserve my decision for the reason that the points for consideration which have been advanced in the case are now fresh in my mind. The facts are these. In December 1914, defendant No. 4, the appellant, obtained two mortgages from defendant No. 1. To prevent a confusion I propose to call defendant No. 4 the appellant, the principal defendant that is defendant No. 1, I shall describe as the mortgagor and the respondent-plaintiff I shall describe as the plaintiff.

The appellant, as I have stated, obtained two mortgages in 1914. The mortgagor was, as I stated, the occupancy tenant of the holding, and on July 29, 1921, the landlord obtained a decree for rent against the mortgagor. On May 20, 1924, the landlord purchased the holding at the execution sale arising out of the action for rent. On May 31, 1922, the plaintiff having paid off the usufructuary mortgage of the appellant of 1914 obtained a usufructuary mortgage from the mortgagor. I have stated that the landlord had purchased the holding in execution of the rent decree on May 20, 1924. Then the plaintiff in his relation to the mortgage, which is the subject-matter of this suit, comes on to the scene and he advances money to the mortgagor tenant to enable him to pay off the rent decree obtained by the landlord. As security for the money advanced, he obtained the mortgage which was sued upon in this action dated August 31, 1924. I should have stated, if I have not already done so, although I have given some indication of the fact, that of the two mortgages of the appellant of December 1914 one was a usufructuary mortgage which was redeemed in circumstances to which I have already referred, and the other was a simple mortgage which still subsisted. On May 31, 1924, the appellant obtained a decree against the mortgagor on the simple mortgage of December 1914, and on October 20, 1925, the appellant purchased the property, which was the subject-matter of the mortgage, in execution of the decree. In those circumstances the plaintiff brought his action on his mortgage which he had obtained as security for the money which he had advanced to the mortgagor tenant in 1924, the action being commenced in the year 1928. I wish to repeat one fact to which I have already made more than one reference, namely, that the plaintiff obtained his mortgage as security for advancing the money to the mortgagor tenant to enable him to pay off the debt, and in those circumstances and in this action he claimed to be subrogated to the rights of the landlord.

The learned Judge in the Court below has held that he was so entitled and has also held that he, the plaintiff, was entitled to a mortgage decree not only against his mortgagor, defendant No. 1, but also as against the appellant, defendant No. 4. In those circumstances the appellant as defendant No. 4 contends that there was no right to subrogation. It is admitted that had the plaintiff advanced the money to a mortgagor to pay off a mortgage-debt and got a mortgage in security of that advance, then he would be entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee. But it is contended that the charge which was created by the decree for rent obtained by the landlord was a right to which the landlord alone was entitled and that in those circumstances there was no right of subrogation in the plaintiff. For that there is an alternative argument, that being that under the mortgage-deed of the appellant, the appellant was liable to pay the rent of the holding. As the rent was not paid and as the rent decree resulted from the non-payment of the rent and as in effect the plaintiff has paid of the liability in respect of the rent, he, the plaintiff, is entitled to be indemnified as against the defendant on the general principle of law which is analogous to ss. 69 and 70, Contract Act. In my judgment, in the first place, s. 69 does not apply to this case and the question of indemnity is obviously a new point in the case and does not seem to me to arise in this appeal. But the other matter, the question of whether the plaintiff is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the landlord is one of some considerable difficulty. The appellant relies first upon s. 65, Bengal Tenancy Act. This section provides "that the holding of a tenant shall be liable to sale in execution of a decree for the rent thereof and the rent shall be a first charge thereon."

That has to be read with s. 148 (h) which provides:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in s. 232, Civil Procedure Code, an application for the execution of a decree for arrears obtained by a landlord shall not be made by an assignee of the decree unless the landlord's interest in the land has become and is vested in him."

Now it is said that those sections together with the decision in A. H. Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (1), clearly show that the rights given under s. 65, Bengal Tenancy Act, are peculiar to the landlord. The argument has taken a further step by a reference to the decision in Kesho Prasad Singh v. Paranjota Koer (2) which at any rate for the purposes of this Court finally decided, unless the decision is overruled by a Full Bench, that a rent decree is in no sense a mortgage-decree. This decision is important, because from what I have said it can be seen that it is contended that the effect of the advance made by the plaintiff to the tenant in the subsequent mortgage to him places the plaintiff in the position as described in the case of Ram Narain v. Sahadeo Singh (3) where the principle of subrogation was discussed and held to apply in the circumstances of that case. It will be seen therefore that the real matter which has to be determined in this case is whether the charge which the plaintiff landlord obtained is on the same footing as that of a mortgage. On the authority to which I referred a moment ago it seems to me that that question must be answered in the negative.

There is another important point to be mentioned at this stage. The landlord purchased in execution of his decree, as I have stated on May 20, 1924, but it is clear that that sale was not confirmed. I am inclined, therefore, to the view which is advanced by the learned Advocate on behalf of the appellant that in any event by reason of that fact alone it cannot be said that the plaintiff is placed in the shoes of the landlord decree holder. The argument took another turn in this way. It was contended by Mr. Khurshed Husnain that as a result of the purchase by the appellant in execution of his mortgage-decree on October 20, 1925, the mortgage became merged in the decree, and consequently the appellant was merely in the position of an owner of the property and as such the plaintiff was entitled to a mortgage-decree not only against his mortgagor but against the appellant also and as the mortgage in other words had disappeared. Another branch of the same argument was that by the purchase by the landlord in execution of the rent decree the incumbrance of the appellant had been wiped out Mr. Khurshed Husnain in this connection relies upon the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act and contends that the purchase in execution of a rent decree is a purchase free of incumbrances.

For the respondent on this point the case of Sital Chandra v. Parbati Charan (4) is relied on. The decision in that case was that a sale in execution of a rent decree did not ipso facto cancel an incumbrance and that the landlord is bound to annul the incumbrance under s. 167 as in the case of any other third party purchaser. This case, however, was explained in this Court in the decision in Sourendra Mohan Singh v. Kunjbihari Lal (5). The reasoning in that case was this: that prima facie the occupancy holding was non-transferable and that therefore so far as the landlord of a non-transferable holding is concerned, any incumbrance without his consent might be said not to exist, and it was suggested by Jwala Prasad, J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, as I understand it, that the case to which I was referring, Sital Chandra v. Parbati Charan (4), could be explained only on the assumption that the holding was transferable. But so far as the point which Mr. Khurshed Husnain raises, namely, that by reason of the execution of the rent decree the incumbrance of the appellant ceased to exist, his argument, it seems to me, cannot be supported. It is unnecessary in connection with this point, perhaps, to rely upon the decisions to which I have just referred as it is not necessary to decide the point. In my judgment, the most that need be said is that the incumbrance, as between the tenant on the one hand and the landlord on the other, is a matter which the landlord can ignore. That at any rate cannot be doubted and it cannot be said that the transaction creating the incumbrance is void; otherwise the necessity for the provisions contained in the Bengal Tenancy Act allowing third party purchasers to avoid incumbrances would not exist. If that be the true position, we have then to ascertain what is the position as between the plaintiff and the appellant in this case, who admittedly was a prior incumbrancer. It is only by holding that the plaintiff is placed in the position of the landlord who obtained a rent decree that it could be said that the plaintiff was a prior incumbrancer. If that position cannot be maintained it is clear that he must be held to be a puisne mortgagee.

For the reasons which I have advanced, it seems to me to be concluded that the plaintiff is in no better position than a person who has obtained a mortgage at a time when the prior incumbrance was already in existence and, therefore, in the position of a puisne mortgagee. Now I come to the other point which Mr. Khurshed Husnain advances to meet the position which I hold was the position on the facts and law in this case. The point which he advances is, as I have already stated, that by the purchase by the appellant in execution of his mortgage decree the mortgage merged in the decree and no longer stands in the way of the plaintiff.

The first case to which I would refer is the case of Ram Narain v. Sahadeo Singh (5). It is contended here by the learned Advocate on behalf of the appellant that the mortgage upon which he sued and in execution of which he purchased the mortgaged property being prior in date to that of the plaintiff, he was entitled to use it as a shield against the plaintiff. The case to which I have just made reference held that a person, who is in the rights of a first mortgagee and of the original mortgagor as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage, is entitled at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee who is not bound by the sale of the decree on which it proceeded, to set up the first mortgage as a shield. I refer to that case, because there was a discussion there of the leading cases on this question and which were decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the one being the case of Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (6), and the other being the case of Suki v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (7). In the latter case there was some discussion of the opinion expressed by the Judicial Committee in the former case and the question was finally decided in the words to which I have referred and read and which formed part of the judgment in Ram Narain v. Sahadeo Singh (3).

It seems to me for these reasons that the learned Judge in the Court below was wrong in holding that the plaintiff is subrogated to the rights of the landlord. Reliance was not placed upon s. 92, Transfer of Property Act. To sum up my conclusions in this matter it seems to me that the true position is that the charge which was obtained by the landlord by his rent decree was a charge, to use my former expression, peculiar to himself. That charge could not be passed on in the manner which is suggested in this case and that at any rate, so far as the other parties are concerned, the incumbrances which were created by the tenant in a non-transferable holding—and I assume this to be one—are not incumbrances which are void but which may be treated as void only as between the tenant and the landlord. A sufficient indication that they are not void as between tenants and third parties will be found in the somewhat elaborate provision of the Bengal Tenancy Act giving a right to certain persons purchasing in rent sales to annul those incumbrances. Another matter which seems to be equally clear is that by the purchase by the appellant in execution of his mortgage decree the mortgage was not for all purposes merged in the decree, that is to say, he was entitled to use the mortgage as a shield against the plaintiff.

There is one further observation which I wish to make and it is this. The learned Judge in the Court below has relied upon the case of Muhammad Musa v. Edal Singh (8), but there is a considerable difference in that case. First there is the distinction which I have already drawn from the observations which I have made, namely, first that Muhammad Musa's case (8) was a case of a mortgage and not a case of a rent decree, and secondly, the person who in that case, namely, defendant No. 17, who was in a similar position to that of the appellant in this case, had been a party to the mortgage action, and, as held by the learned Judges in that case had had a right of which he had not availed himself. In the circumstances of the case it seems to me that the judgment of the learned District Judge was wrong and must be modified to the extent that the plaintiff is not entitled to a mortgage decree against defendant No. 4. The appeal, therefore, will be allowed with costs. There will be leave to appeal.

Dr. K. N. Katju Messrs. Ladli Prasad Zutshi and Janki Prasad, for the Respondent.

Judgment.- This is a defendants' appeal and arises out of a suit brought against them by the plaintiff-respondent for possession over plot No. 196 of Abadi and Parti land described in the plaint by removal of the defendants' cattle troughs and thatch. The parties were co-sharers. A partition took place between the parties and other co-sharers in 1926. The plot in dispute was allotted to the patti of the plaintiff at the time of the partition. There was at the time of partition a Bagar "of the defendants" on the plot in dispute. The plaintiff brought this suit on the allegation that he was obstructed by the defendants when he wanted to make some constructions on the plot in dispute. The defendants contended that they had their Bagar on the plot in suit and therefore they had a right to remain in possession. The trial Court decreed the suit partly for possession over the plot except over that portion on which the defendants' chhappar stood. A cross-objection was filed by the plaintiff and an appeal by the defendants. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge allowed the cross-objection and dismissing the defendants' appeal, decreed the suit. Against this decision, this appeal has been filed by the defendants. The chief point for consideration is whether the defendants have any right of possession over the plot in suit. The defendants' case is that they had a building standing on the plot in dispute at the time of the partition and therefore they had a right to remain in possession. Section 118 of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act provides that

"If, in making a partition, it is necessary to include in the portion allotted to one co-sharer the land occupied by a dwelling house or other building in the possession of another co-sharer, the latter shall be allowed to retain it with the building thereon, on condition of his paying for it a reasonable ground rent to the co-sharer in whose portion it may be included."

In the Full Bench case of Sarup Lal v. Lala (1). It was held that

"Where a partition has been effected under the provisions of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901, and the site of the house of one co-sharer has been allotted to the share of another co-sharer, the presumption is, the owner of the house was to retain possession of the house The mere fact that ground rent has not been assessed cannot deprive the owner of the house of his right to it."

The question therefore that arises for consideration is whether the defendants had any house or building on the plot in suit or not at the time of the partition. At present no building exists on the land in dispute. There are some cattle troughs and pegs and a rotten thatch is supported on some wooden poles. This thatch cannot be called a building. The defendants led evidence to show that they had a mud-house which had a tiled roof and, when it fell down, a thatch was put. This evidence is against the defendants' own allegations in their written statement. In para. No. 9 where they describe the buildings which according to them stood at the time of the partition, they have made no mention of any tiled building. On the other hand, they have referred to the thatch which according to them still exists. If there had been any mud-walls on which the present chhappar had been resting, there is no reason as to why those mud-walls were not re-built when they fell down, nor it has been explained as to how the chhappar was made to rest on the wooden poles if formerly there were any walls. The allegations in para. 9 of the written statement coupled with those in para. 1 in the defendants' cross-objection leave no room for doubt that the defendants had no such thing as a building, on the land in dispute. They had only some cattle troughs and pegs and a thatch for the shelter of the cattle. These things cannot be called a building. The lower Court has also found that the condition of the cattle troughs and the thatch shows that they have not been in the enjoyment of the defendants since partition. The learned Additional Subordinate Judge has observed: "The broken down condition of the troughs and the rotten condition of the chhappar would show that defendant abandoned possession and enjoyment after the partition."

A heap of manure or a cattle trough is not a "dwelling house or other building" within the meaning of s. 118 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act. A co-sharer to whose share a plot of land, over which another co-sharer has made cattle troughs or stores heaps of manure, is allotted in partition is entitled to actual possession of the plot: vide Ram Kishore Misra v. Kalka Dichhit, 39 Ind. Cas. 575 (2). As already stated, as there was no building at the time of partition, the defendants have no right to remain in possession over the plot in dispute, which was admittedly allotted to the plaintiff in partition. There is no force in the appeal. It is, therefore, ordered that the appeal be dismissed with costs and the decree of the lower Court be confirmed.

Permission to file a Letters Patent Appeal is rejected.

Where in a suit for possession of a part of a village which was revenue-free, the Court in calculating the profits under s. 7 (v) (c) of the Court Fees Act, took the Fasli year and it was urged in an application for review that according to the General Clauses Act, the year to be taken was the calendar year;

(v) of s. 7, Court Fees Act, the Court was right in taking the Fasli year for sub-s. (c) where the land was revenue-free and that it could not be said that, in not applying the General Clauses Act there was any error apparent on the face of the record.

Held, also that whatever argument about deductions was to be made should have been made at the

Mr. M. L. Chaturvedi, for the Applicant.

Mr. P. M. L. Verma, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision by a plaintiff against an order refusing review. The plaintiff brought a suit for possession of a part of a village which was revenue-free and the defendant filed an objection that the court-fee was insufficient. The Court passed an order in regard to the amount of court-fee, and calculated the profits under the Court Fees Act, s. 7 (v) (c) after hearing the parties. The review asks that the Court should re-consider that order on the ground that there was an error apparent on the face of the record. In the grounds of revision it is set out that there was an error as profits had not been calculted for the next previous yaer but for a period much prior. Learned Counsel explains that the suit was brought on January 26, 1933, and that in his opinion the year to be taken was the year 1932. He bases this on the General Clauses Act, definition of "year" as calendar year. But it is stated in s. 3 that these definitions will apply "unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context." In the context of this sub-s. (v) there are sub-ss. (a) and (b) relating to land paying revenue to Government. For Government-revenue the period taken is the Fasli year. The Court, therefore, naturally took the Fasli year 1339 for sub-s. (c) where the land was revenue free. I consider that from the context the Court was correct and it cannot be said that in not applying the General Clauses Act there was any error on the face of the record. Moreover from the subject also the Court was correct because the profits in the patwari's registers are made up for the Fasli year and not for the calendar year. Learned Counsel further argued that the matters in ground No. 4 had not been considered. That was some question of deductions. Whatever argument about deductions was to be made should have been made at the time of the original order and not later on an application for review. Reference was made to Murari Rao v. Balvanth Dikshit (1). That was a case where there was an error of law apparent on perusal of the record. It cannot be said that the present order was one where there was any such error apparent. For these reasons I dismiss this application in revision with costs.

Case-law referred to.]

C. A. from an order of the First Class Sub-Judge, Ahmedabad, in C. S. No. 581 of 1927.

Messrs. M. C. Setalvad and R. W. Desai, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. N. Thakor and N. P. Desai, for the Respondent.

Murphy, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the learned First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad directing that an award, Ex. 16, made by Mr. Shivdasani on a reference to him from two arbitrators as final umpire, be filed, and that a decree should be drawn up in its terms and in accordance with certain directions made in the body of the judgment. The defendant Municipality was ordered to pay its own costs and those of the plaintiff. The dispute was between the respondent, Ravjibhai Bhailal, and the Municipality of Ahmedabad, and the only question we have to decide is whether Mr. Shivdasani, the umpire in question, was guilty of legal misconduct in the proceedings which culminated in his award. The history of these differences is as follows: It appears that in 1921 the Municipal Committee had decided to introduce a new system of scavenging into Ahmedabad City. They entered into a contract with the respondent, and what was contemplated was that there should be a system of what were called 'trailers' drawn by tractors, and that the refuse from the houses collected at certain fixed points should be carried in these trailers to the dumps, where it was to be disposed of. The system was, in the first place, tentative and applied to half the city only, but it was ultimately extended to the other half. Differences however arose apparently after the municipal elections about 1923, and these culminated in a reference to arbitration which was provided for in the agreements between the parties. Each side appointed an arbitrator, and the arbitrators chosen were Rao Saheb Dadubhai Purshottamdas Desai and Mr. Himatlal Dalsukhram Saheba. These gentlemen heard the evidence, and in the end differed from each other. Rao Saheb Desai was for awarding the contractor something over a lakh in damages, and Mr. Saheba thought that he should get nothing at all. One of the terms of the appointment was that before the arbitrators came to any decision, they should appoint an umpire, who was to decide any differences between them, and Mr. H. B. Shivdasani had been agreed on before the original proceedings began. The matter was accordingly referred to Mr. Shivdasani, and he seems to have received the papers somewhere about the middle of November 1926. He examined the papers, and hearings before him began on December 4, and the award was finally made on December 20, 1926, as the arbitrator having been unable to make his award within time had asked for an extension. Mr. Shivdasani's finding was that a sum of Rs. 54,000 was due to the contractor.

The point taken in this appeal is, as I have already mentioned, that Mr. Shivdasani was guilty of legal misconduct in the course of the arbitration proceedings. Legal misconduct has been defined in Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj Singh (1) by Mahmood, J. who quotes with approval a long passage from Russell on Arbitration, on the power and duty of an arbitrator. The passage may be summed up, I think, to this: that legal misconduct ensues where the arbitrator's procedure is so irregular as to be opposed to the principles of natural justice. In the course of the trial in the lower Court seventeen different points were urged before the learned Subordinate Judge, but in the appeal before us these have been reduced to one, or at most two. It appears that when the papers were first sent to Mr. Shivdasani in November, he found that they were in great disorder, and he could not find several of the Exhibits, which had been mentioned in the awards made by Rao Saheb Desai and Mr. Saheba. He sent for the plaintiff-contractor and, he says, asked him to sort the papers and find the exhibits which he was in need of and could not lay his hands on. The contractor accordingly came to his office, Mr. Shivdasani being at that time an Official Liquidator, and helped him in arranging the papers which had been sent by the Municipality. This is said to have occurred two or three times and the interview to have lasted about an hour and a half on each occasion. The second point taken is that Mr. Shivdasani must have made some notes as to the plaintiff's case before the trial began on December 4, and this is based on the fact that in Mr. Shivdasani's notes of the proceedings the first paragraph begins:

"Ravjibhai (which is the plaintiff), would have made practically no profit if the contract had gone on owing to the present feelings shown by the Municipality,"

The question as to what happened at the interviews between the contractor and Mr. Shivdasani on the occasion when Mr. Shivdasani says the contractor was only employed in sorting the papers of the reference, is the second item relied on by Mr. Bhagwat, who appeared as an agent for the Municipality in the proceedings, as showing that Mr. Shivdasani must have made notes of the plaintiff's case, and consequently must be held to have heard him in some way or other, and not merely to have employed him for the ministerial purpose of helping him with the exhibits. The fact that the plaintiff had been asked to help with the papers is mentioned by Mr. Shivdasani in the award which he made on December 20. What he there says is:

"I have also to put it on record that the papers when sent to me were very badly arranged and it would have been difficult for me to find my way about had not the contractor kindly volunteered to assist me to find out the various papers and exhibits."

It appears that on December 18, Mr. Bhagwat, who appears to have got on very ill with Mr. Shivdasani in the course of these proceedings, made a report to the Municipality in connection with the arbitrator's request for more time. His argument was that the arbitrator was biassed against the Municipality, and was likely to make an award adverse to them, and he therefore advised his masters that they should not agree to an extension of time, and to put an end to the proceedings by refusing the concession. This report was put before the general body, but it decided to grant the request made by the arbitrator and so impliedly refused to accept the allegation made by Mr. Bhagwat. The cause of the quarrel was that when one Mr. Gore, who was then Municipal Engineer, was being examined before Mr. Shivdasani, Mr. Bhagwat rebuked him for making what Mr. Bhagwat thought were admissions against the Municipal interests. Mr. Shivdasani mentioned this incident in his award and commented very severely on Mr. Bhagwat's conduct in trying to suppress Mr. Gore's truthful evidence. These are the main facts as to the case between Mr. Shivdasani and Mr. Bhagwat. Mr. Shivdasani was examined in the course of these proceedings, and what he said was as follows:

"Then I called Ravjibhai, plaintiff. I do not remember whether I wrote to the plaintiff or sent my clerk to fetch him. I have mentioned this in my award. I have kept no rojnama or proceedings about my work in connection with the award. I called Ravjibhai between November 20 and 25, 1926. Plaintiff came to me at my liquidation office. I asked him whether he could find out the exhibits referred to in the award and his statement. He said, yes. I called him again subsequently twice or thrice and he did so come. He came like that for about an hour and a half on every occasion. I had no other talk with plaintiff on other occasions. I was receiving the papers and plaintiff was finding the same out for me. I have kept no notes of this. This went on till the end of November. The papers were not arranged. I did not call plaintiff for that. I called him to find out the papers I wanted as I went on reading I had no talk or discussion with plaintiff about the contents of any papers."

As to the other point Mr. Shivdasani's evidence was:

"I cannot remember whether I had any points jotted down for inquiry after reading the papers. My impression is I had not. The first point noted on December 4, 1926, in Ex. 69 was the statement of plaintiff The words are in inverted commas as the words used by plaintiff himself. They are not my words dictated from any jotting of mine. Mr. Bhagwat did not say then as to from what notes or jottings I dictated the point to the shorthand writer. In fact there was no such note or jotting of mine and there was no occasion to say any such things. I was sent all the papers which were filed before the arbitrators along with their award and I had read them all."

As between Mr. Shivdasani and Mr. Bhagwat, the learned Subordinate Judge has believed Mr. Shivdasani. It is obvious from the facts I have narrated that Mr. Bhagwat was a very zealous municipal partisan, and Mr. Shivdasani seems to us to have given a simple and straight forward account of what happened in his evidence before the learned Judge. On this evidence the facts we accept are that Mr. Shivdasani had no notes of the contractor's case at the opening of the proceedings, and also that Mr. Shivdasani only employed the contractor to sort out the disorderly record, and to find the exhibits which he wanted to consult before the proceedings began.

The next point we must consider is whether this incident amounts to legal misconduct on his behalf. Mr. Setalvad, for the appellant Municiplity, has relied on a series of English cases on arbitration, and the first of these is that of Harvey v. Shelton (2). What happened in that case was the arbitrator heard one of the parties alone, and becoming satisfied with an explanation which that party gave as to an item in some accounts, accepted it as his own conclusion. The learned Judges in that case held that there had been legal misconduct on the ground that one party alone should not be permitted to satisfy the Court and enable it to come to a conclusion and must not be allowed such means of influencing the Judge. The next case relied on is that of Walker v. Frobisher (3). In this case the legal misconduct found was that the arbitrator received some evidence from one party after notice to both that he would receive no more, and it was held that he should not have done so, even though he deposed that he had not been influenced by this additional evidence. The third case is that of Dobson v Groves (4). The ratio decidendi of this case is that once the case is within the general probability that the arbitrator's mind may be biassed by something which happened at the proceedings it is within the principle, and an objection subsequently made to the award is sufficient. W. Ramsden & Co. v. Jacobs (5). Here the evidence for each side was heard separately, apparently by agreement between the parties, but the Courts held that such a procedure was wrong and contrary to natural justice it being a procedure unknown to Courts of law. The fifth case relied on was Toolsimony Dassee v. Sudevi Dassee (6). What happened there was that the defendant had not been given fair notice of the proceedings had ex parte against him, and the Court thought that the arbitrator's conduct had been hasty and improper, Finally, there is the case of Anderson v Wallace (7). Here one of the parties was asked whether he admitted or disputed certain items, and a valuer was consulted. These are the cases relied on by Mr. Setalvad for the appellant.

Mr. Thakor, who appeared for the respondent, has made out a case of what may be called ministerial acts. His contention was that the incident of calling in the plaintiff and employing him to sort the papers and to find exhibits amounted to no more than using him for the purpose of what may be called ministerial as distinguished from judicial acts, and that this principle covers the case.

The first authority relied on by Mr. Thakor was Bignall v. Gale (8). The irregularity in that case was lack of notice to one of the parties but it was held that since that person had had repeated notice, there was a fair inference that he had given up the whole business and it was held that the continuation of the proceedings in his absencewas not an irregularity. In Rolland v. Cassidy (9), a point of law which arose out of the proceedings was decided in the absence of the parties. In Buta v. Municipal Committee of Lahore (10), the arbitrator obtained the opinion of the lawyer who had drafted the agreement as to the meaning of certain clauses, and this action was held not to be legal misconduct. The next case relied on which is not in the official reports is Manindra v. Mahananda 13 Ind. Cas. 161 (11). It was held that the reception of the written statement put in by one party in the absence of the other is not a judicial act.

(11) 13 Ind. Cas. 161; 15 C L J 360.

These are the cases we have been referred to in the course of the arguments as to the limits of the doctrine of legal misconduct. The principle underlying them seems to be that where there has been an opportunity afforded to one side to get an advantage with the arbitrator over the other, either by lack of notice, or by the absence of the other side and there is even a remote possibility that the advantage so obtained may have unconsciously influenced the mind of the arbitrator the proceedings are vitiated by a breach of the principles of natural justice, and whether this is so or not must depend on questions of fact.

In the present case, we have accepted completely Mr. Shivdasani's explanation that when he sent for the plaintiff, it was only for the purpose of getting the disordered records sorted out, and certain exhibits traced and that throughout the three interviews there was no question of the plaintiff stating his case or pressing his contentions before Mr. Shivdasani. We think on the merits that all that the plaintiff did was what Mr. Shivdasani says he did and that so much is covered by the cases relied on by Mr. Thakor for the respondent for in all the cases cited by the other side it seems to us that there was an element of misconduct beyond the mere ministerial acts which are spoken of as having happened in the present case.

The next point raised by Mr. Thakor was that even if there was a technical irregularity, it would not be a ground good enough to set aside the award, since in fact it has been waived by the appellant. The waiver is worked out from the report made by Mr. Bhagwat, which I have already referred to, to the Municipality urging them not to grant a further extension of time. Mr. Thakor also stated that Mr. Bhagwat himself had waived the irregularity, for it seems he was aware of the sorting of the papers from the first day of the proceedings, and continued to attend without protest until December 18. We are not sure that Mr. Bhagwat's waiver of the irregularity would really have the effect of binding the Municipality, but there is no doubt that the fact of this irregularity, if it was one, was brought forcibly to the notice of the Municipality by Mr. Bhagwat on the 18th, that they considered it at a meeting held on the same day, and that they chose to disregard what he said and to grant further time to the arbitrator.

On this point Mr. Thakor has relied on

Cursetji Jehangir v. W. Crowder, (12), where a party aggrieved by an irregularity knew of it, but did nothing by way of protest; and on Ardesar Hormasji Wadia v. Secretary of State (13), where one arbitrator was absent throughout the proceedings before the Mamlatdar acting as Land Acquisition Officer, and his absence was never objected to, it was held that the Government could not have the award set aside on this ground as their representative the Mamlatdar had acquiesced in the absence of the third arbitrator; also on Murtaza Hussain v. Bibi Bechunnissa, (14) where the principle enunciated is that a party having taken his choice cannot afterwards be allowed to have the award set aside when he should have objected at the time. The point is put clearly in Russell on Arbitration and Award, Edn. 12, at p. 436, where the learned author observes:

"The obvious course therefore is for a party complaining of irregularity to protest against the irregularity and to continue to conduct his case in the proceedings before the arbitrator under such protest. The other alternative is to submit to the irregularity, and forgo any rights he may have to object to the award on hat ground when it is made, for he cannot lie by and then object to the award if it is against him."

Mr. Setalvad has argued that this doctrine is modified by another passage at. p. 443, where it is stated:

"There is a marked distinction between an irregularity passed over when all parties are present and an irregularity committed when the parties are not present. The latter may be incapable of being set right except by agreement of the party injured."

We think, on considering these cases, that in fact the Municipality did waive this right to protest and to have the award set aside on this ground. But as our finding is that what happened does not amount to legal misconduct, a decision on this point is not necessary to the present appeal. We think that the learned Subordinate Judge was correct in ordering the award to be filed and a decree to be drawn up in its terms, and we confirm his decree and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Macklin, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—Application for substitution and for execution—Vakalatnama accompanying it not bearing name and signature of pleader—Application, if one in accordance with law—Court not noticing defect and ordering notice—Judgment-debtor not appearing or objecting—Subsequent proceedings—Judgment-debtor, if can object that the defective application did not save limitation—Execution—Notice—Non-appearance of judgment-debtor—Order to execute—Whether operates as res judicata by implication—Res judicata.

Where an application for substitution of the names of the decree-holder's sons for execution is signed by a pleader and accompanied by a vakalatnama in which the place meant for the name of the pleader was left blank and the vakalatnama did not bear any signature of the pleader showing that he had accepted it, the application as filed is not one filed by a duly authorised person and is not in accordance with law. Muhammad Ali Khan v. Saktu (1) and Chitta v. Jafo (2), relied on.

When without noticing the defects in the vakalatnama, the Court ordered notice to issue to the judgment-debtors who did not appear to show cause or raise objections to the application for substitution of the sons of the decree-holder and the Court ordered their names to be brought on record and the execution to proceed, but the proceeding did not fructify and the execution case was struck off:

Held, that in subsequent proceedings it was open to the judgment-debtor to object that the defective application could not serve as a fresh starting point for purposes of limitation as not being in accordance with law. Mungal Pershad Dichit v. Girja Kant Lahiri (3), Dwarka Das v. Muhammad Ashfaqullah (4), Dip Prakash v. Dwarka Prasad (5) and Raja of Ramnad v. Velusami Tevar (6), distinguished.

When after notice has been issued the judgment-debtor does not appear and does not file objections, the Court is not called upon to make any further investigation into the matter, but it is its duty to order the decree to be executed. The order has to be passed automatically and there is no occasion for the Court to exercise its judgment as to the merits of any possible objection that might have been raised if the judgment-debtor had appeared. In such circumstances it is difficult to say that when the Court has no discretion in the matter, its order directing the decree to be executed is an adjudication of the dispute between the parties which operates as res judicata by implication.

L. P. A. against the judgment of Mr. Justice Bajpai, dated February 26, 1934.

Mr. Kamta Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. W. Clarke, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the decree-holder arising out of an execution proceeding. A simple money decree was passed on August 1, 1924, and an application, which was in accordance with law, was made on July 23, 1927, for execution, but had become infructuous because the decree-holder was unfortunately murdered. On June 18, 1930, an application was made on behalf of his three sons for substitution of their names and for execution of the decree. The application was signed by a pleader and was accompanied by a vakalatnama in which, however, the place meant for the name of the pleader was left blank, and the vakalatnama did not bear any signature of the pleader showing that he had accepted it. The facts were overlooked by the office, and the Court ordered notices to issue to the judgment-debtors. They did not appear to show cause or raise objections. The Court accordingly ordered that the names of the sons of the deceased decree-holder should be brought on the record in his place and that execution should proceed. The proceeding, however, did not fructify and the execution case was ultimately struck off.

On November 14, 1930, a fresh application for execution of the same decree was made and notice ordered to issue. The judgment-debtor on this occasion appeared and objected that the present application was barred by time inasmuch as the previous application of June 18, 1930, was not an application in accordance with law. The Courts below disallowed the objection on the ground that it was no longer open to the judgment-debtor to raise any such plea. In second appeal a learned Judge of this Court has come to the conclusion that the judgment-debtor is not prevented from raising this matter.

So far as the defect in the vakalatnama is concerned, the point is covered by the authorities of this Court, namely, Muhammad Ali Khan v. Saktu (1) and Chitta v Jafo (2). The application as filed had not been filed by a duly authorised person and was not in accordance with law.

The only question that remains for consideration is whether it is open to the judgment-debtor to raise this objection now when he failed to appear on the previous occasion.

Four cases have been referred to in this connection. The case of Mungal Pershad Dichit v Girja Kant Lahiri (3) was a case under the corresponding section of Act IX of 1871, but in that case as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council at p. 60, the attachment of the property in pursuance of the order in execution was continuing and the judgment-debtor had consented to such continuance. The second application was to give effect to that continuing attachment. Accordingly it was laid down that the judgment-debtor was estopped from contesting that the attachment itself was invalid because the order for attachment had been made on an application which itself had been barred by time. The case is accordingly clearly distinguishable. Similarly the case of Dwarka Das v. Mohamed Ashfaqullah (4) was a case where the Court had actually ordered the substitution of the name of the transferee of the decree-holder, and it was held that at a subsequent stage the judgment-debtor could not be allowed to say that the order directing substitution of names was invalid because no valid transfer had in fact taken place. There the judgment-debtor was impugning the validity of the order directing substitution of names itself. Again in the case of Dip Prakash v. Dwarka Prasad (5), the order passed for execution was fully carried out and the platforms which the decree-holder wanted to have demolished was actually demolished by the Amin of the Court in pursuance of the order. The judgment-debtor was therefore not allowed to come up at a later stage and claim compensation on the ground that the previous application on which the order had been made was defective.

In the case of Raja of Ramnad v. Velusami Tevar (6), when notice was issued to show cause why the applicant should not be brought on the record as an assignee of a partially executed decree, the judgment-debtors appeared, denied the assignment and objected that the right to execute the decree was barred by limitation and also questioned the liability of certain properties to attachment. objections were overruled, the assignment was recognised and the decree-holder was allowed to execute the decree and was given permission to file a fresh application for attachment, After the order had become final and attachment of some properties was made, the judgment-debtor objected that the execution was barred by time. Their Lordships of the Privy Council overruling the Indian Court held that it was no longer open to the Court subsequently to hold that execution was barred.

It is noteworthy that in the last-mentioned case the judgment-debtor had appeared and filed objections. The Court therefore had to proceed under O. XXI, r. 23 (2) and had to consider the objection and make such order as it thought fit. Its order was therefore binding on the judgment-debtor and appeared as an estoppel by judgment.

None of these cases was a case where the judgment-debtor had not appeared and the order was passed ex parte. The scheme of the provisions of O. XXI, seems to be that when an application for execution or for taking a step-in-aid of execution is made, the Court has to see prima facie, principally on the office report, whether the application is in accordance with law and not barred by time, and is not otherwise improper. In the absence of the judgment-debtor, the Court not finding any apparent defect in the application or such defect not being brought to its notice, orders notice to issue to the judgment-debtor, under r. 22 where the application is made more than three years after the date of the decree or when it is made against the legal representative of a party. In other cases notice is not even issued. Order XXI, r. 23, provides that where the person to whom notice is issued under the last preceding rule does not appear or does not show cause to the satisfaction of the Court why the decree should not be executed, the Court shall order the decree to be executed. It is, therefore, apparent that when after notice has been issued, the judgment-debtor does not appear and does not file objections, the Court is not called upon to make any further investigation into the matter, but it is its duty to order the decree to be executed. The order has to be passed automatically and there is no occasion for the Court to exercise its judgment as to the merits of any possible objection that might have been raised if the judgment-debtor had appeared. In such circumstances it is difficult to say that when the Court has no discretion in the matter, its order directing the decree to be executed is an adjudication of the dispute between the parties which operates as res judicata by implication.

If the order directing the decree to be executed were continuing and were operative and proceedings were being taken in pursuance of it, the judgment-debtor would not be allowed to go behind that order and challenge its propriety when he had not appeared. But if the proceedings some how or other terminated, it would be difficult to say that the ex parte order made by the Court at the time when the notice was issued or the necessary order which had to be made by the Court when he did not appear, operates as res judicata and must be deemed to have finally decided that the application filed before the Court had been in every way proper and valid.

In the present proceeding the judgment-debtor is not saying that the order for substitution of names made by the Court was invalid, As a matter of fact under O. XXII, r. 12, no application for substitution of names in an execution proceeding is at all necessary. There being no bar of limitation, it would have been open to the Execution Court to have the defect in the vakalatnama rectified and order substitution forthwith. But what the judgment-debtor now objects is that the defective application which had been made on June 18, 1930, cannot serve as a fresh staring point for purposes of limitation. He does not challenge the order directing substitution of names, but urges that the application on which the order was made not being in accordance with law does not save limitation. We find it difficult to hold that the judgment-debtor in this fresh proceeding is barred from raising this objection. The view taken by the learned Judge is correct.

We accordingly dismiss this appea with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 21, O. V, r. 15 (as amended by Allahabad High Court)—Due service—Pardahnashin lady—Personal service, how to be effected—Lady present in house—Summons handed over to relation—Whether due service—Ex parte decree against lady, if should be set aside.

Summons can be delivered or tendered to a pardahnashin lady even though it may not be possible for the process-server to have access to her: nor can a pardahnashin lady be considered to be a person who cannot be personally served. It is the duty of the process-server to make an attempt to find ways and means of delivering or tendering the summons to the pardahnashin lady for whom it is intended.

Where, although the lady on whom summons had to be served was not absent from the house, the process-server, without trying for means whereby personal service could be effected, handed over the summons to her husband's brother who did not inform her of it and the appeal against her was consequently dismissed ex parte;

Held, that as the process-server did not comply with the requirements of law provided in O. V, r. 15, Civil Procedure Code, as amended by the Allahabad High Court, she could not be considered to have been duly served and consequently under O. XLI, r. 21, the Court was bound to set aside the ex parte decree passed against her.

F. C. A. from an order of the First Subordinate Judge, Saharanpur, dated September 23, 1933.

Mr. M. H. Faruqi, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. K. Mukerji, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order of the learned Subordinate Judge, Saharanpur, refusing to set aside an ex parte decree passed in an appeal in which the present appellant was the respondent. That appeal arose out of a suit brought by her for a declaration that a certain property which she claimed to be hers was not liable to be sold at the instance of the opposite party in execution of a decree obtained by him against her husband. She established her claim in the trial Court which declared that the property in dispute belonged to her and not to her husband. The opposite party preferred an appeal to the lower Court (Subordinate Judge, Saharanpur) A summons was issued to the appellant, who is a pardahnashin lady. The process-server's report was to the effect that the appellant, who is a pardahnashin lady, was in the house, that she was called out but did not answer and that accordingly the summons was handed over to her husband's elder brother Mohammad Bakhsh, who affixed his thumb mark on the back of the summons. On the date fixed for the hearing of the appeal no one appeared on behalf of the respondent (the appellant in this appeal), and an ex parte decree was passed against her allowing the appeal and dismissing her suit. The appellant made an application under O. XLI, r. 21, Civil Procedure Code, for an order to set aside the ex parte decree. She filed her own affidavit swearing that Mohammad Bakhsh never informed her of the process-server having delivered a summons; nor did she otherwise come to know of the date fixed for the hearing of the appeal in which she was respondent. Mohammad Bakhsh was not examined on behalf of any party. The opposite party filed a counter-affidavit in which the appellant's allegations were traversed. It is, however, clear that a denial of the truth of her allegations by one who had no personal knowledge of the matter is not of any value. The lower Court dismissed her application on the solitary ground that:

"No reason has been shown on behalf of the appellant why her husband's own brother did not inform the appellant of the date of hearing."

That Court did not apply its mind to the question whether in the circumstances of the case service on Mohammed Bakhsh was due service. Order XLI, r. 21, provides like O. IX, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, that where an appeal is heard ex parte and the judgment is pronounced against the respondent, the latter may apply for the appeal being reheard and if the Court is satisfied:

"That the notice was not duly served or that the respondent was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the appeal was called on for hearing the Court shall re-hear the appeal."

The appellant's contention is that she was not duly served. In my opinion this contention has force. Order V, r. 15, Civil Procedure Code, as amended by this Court, permits service being effected on a male member of a family only:

"When the defendant is absent or cannot be personally served and has no agent empowered to accept the service of the summons on his behalf."

The process-server's report in this Court makes it abundantly clear that the appellant was not absent; she was inside the house. The learned Advocate for the opposite party has strenuously contended that it was a case in which the party could not be personally served. He argues that every pardahnashin lady should be considered to be a person who cannot be personally served. It is said that from her position a pardahnashin woman cannot appear before the process-server and, therefore, personal service is impossible.

The manner in which personal service is to be effected is mentioned in O. V, r. 10, which provides that:

"Service of the summons shall be made by delivering or tendering a copy thereof."

It is argued that unless a process-server can directly approach the lady to be served or rather unless the lady can appear before the process-server, it is impossible for the latter to deliver or tender the summons to her. I am unable to accept these contentions. Summons can be delivered or tendered to a pardahnashin lady even though it may not be possible for the process-server to have access to her; nor can a pardahnashin lady be considered to be a person who cannot be personally served. It is the duty of the process-server to make an attempt to find ways and means of delivering or tendering the summons to the pardahnashin lady for whom it is intended. He can very often find some one living with her or in the neighbourhood, male or female, who can take the summons to her. If the pardahnashin lady accepts service, it is personal service as contemplated by rr. 10 and 15, Civil Procedure Code. He should in ordinary cases obtain the attestation of the witness taking the summons to the pardahnashin woman concerned which should also be done in case of refusal by her to accept the summons. If the process-server cannot find any one, male or female, who can take the summons to her, it may be a case referred to in r. 15, namely, that the defendant cannot be personally served. To accept the contention of the learned Advocate for the appellant will be to deprive a pardahnashin lady of the privilege of personal service of the summons in cases to which she is a party.

Coming to the facts of the present case it is not suggested that Mohammad Bakhsh would have declined to take the summons to the appellant. Apparently he was quite willing to do what the process-server would ask him to do. He accepted service and signed it in token thereof. It is perfectly clear that if everything was fair and square in this case, the process-server, who could not be expected to know all the niceties of law regarding personal service, considered it sufficient to serve it on the male member of the appellant's family. He did not, however, comply with the requirements of law and the appellant cannot be considered to have been "duly served".

The learned Subordinate Judge was not justified in presuming that Mohammad Bakhsh informed the appellant of the visit of the process-server and of the date fixed for hearing of her case. It is not permissible to have recourse to speculation in a matter of this kind. It might well be that the opposite party, who had lost his case in the First Court, desired to have the appeal heard ex parte and arranged for a service in a manner which may not be calculated to convey information of the pendency of the appeal to her. This is, however, a pure conjecture, no better or worse than that made by the lower Court. The question whether the appellant was aware of the date fixed in her appeal and was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing in the case does not arise in view of my finding that the appellant was not duly served. Under O. XLI, r. 21, the Court is bound to set aside an ex parte decree if the respondent satisfies it that the summons was not duly served.

The result is that this appeal succeeds. It is accordingly allowed with costs. The order of the lower Appellate Court and the ex parte decree are both set aside. The appeal of the opposite party shall be reheard according to law.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT

First Civil Appeal No. 76 of 1931
September 25, 1933

FERRERS, J. C. AND RUPCHAND, A. J. C.

DEV SAMAJ COUNCIL, LAHORE—APPELLANT

AMRITLAL MOTILAL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 21, 16—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 3 (vii)—Question of jurisdiction depending upon public documents, if one of law—Quetta, if a part of British India—Suit relating immovable property in foreign country—Jurisdiction—Question of jurisdiction not raised in trial Court—Held, it cannot be raised in appeal.

Where a preliminary point, that Quetta not being in British India, the lower Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit, was raised for the first time at the final hearing of the appeal;

Held, (i) that the question of jurisdiction at issue was one of law depending upon public documents which required no proof and were presumed under s. 81, Evidence Act, to be genuine and this question could, therefore, be raised at a late stage. [p. 679, col. 2.]

(ii) Quetta did not form part of British India as defined in s. 3, General Clauses Act. [p. 680, col. 1.]

(iii) the point of jurisdiction involving the question whether a matter in dispute is within the jurisdiction of British Indian Court at all, could be raised, notwithstanding s. 21, Civil Procedure Code. Ramabhadra Raju Bahadur v. Maharaja of Jeypore (1), relied on. [ibid.]

Like Courts in England, the Courts in India have a limited jurisdiction to entertain suits relating to foreign immovable property. These Courts have power to exercise a jurisdiction in personam, in respect of foreign immovables against persons locally within their jurisdiction, in cases where there is an equity between the parties arising from contract, fraud, or trust, provided that the decision of title be not directly involved. But such an equity must be of a personal nature, i. e., there must be either a fiduciary relationship or privity of some other kind between the parties. [p. 682, col. 1.]

[Case-law discussed.]

The plaintiffs filed a suit at Shikarpur against their father and brothers who were residing at Shikarpur and the founder and trustees of Dev Samaj, who resided at Lahore. Some of the immovable property in dispute was situated in Quetta. The plaintiffs sought the following reliefs, among others, for declaration: (1) that the release-deed executed by their father and their uncle in favour of their grand-father who was dead was of no effect against the sons or grandsons, or at any rate, against the grand sons; (2) that the partition effected by the grand-father and his sons be set aside as being unfair, or, in the alternative the same be re-opened; (3) that they had subsisting share in the foreign property and (4) that the trust created by their grandfather did not affect their interest and (5) that they be awarded mesne profits of their share in such foreign property:

Held, that (1) so far as that relief went, a British Indian Court would have had jurisdiction to entertain it in personam and although a part of the property which was the subject-matter of partition was situate outside, the title to such foreign property was only incidentally and not directly in issue. [p. 683, col. 1.]

(2) The declaratory decree, if any, passed against the Dev Samaj would operate as res judicata against them in any suit filed on the strength thereof in the Quetta Court as they were not only British Indian subjects but they had voluntarily submitted to the jurisdiction of the trial Court. [p. 683, col. 2.]

(3) Since a British Indian Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit as regards some reliefs, the Dev Samaj were barred by the provisions of s. 21, Civil Procedure Code, from raising an objection in appeal as to the place in British India where this suit should have been instituted. They could not say that the suit should have been filed at Lahore and not at Shikarpur, and as some of the defendants resided Shikarpur the Shikarpur Court was competent to grant leave to the plaintiffs to continue the suit in that Court against defendants who were not residing within its jurisdiction if the plea had been raised at proper time. [p. 683, col. 2; p. 684, col. 1.]

F. C. A. from the decree of the First Class Sub-Judge, Shikarpur.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Tolasing K. Advani, Kimatrai Bhojraj, Fatehchand Assudomal, Dingomal Narainsing and Mulchand Gurnomal, for the Respondents.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by two out of five sons of one Motilal, a Bhatia, residing at Shikarpur praying for the following reliefs:

"(1) That the release-deed executed by their father and their uncle Chunilal in favour of their own father Hassomal who is now dead, and the trust-deeds executed by the said Hassomal appointing the representatives of an institution called the Dev Samaj as trustees of his property are null and void, or, in the alternative, that the said documents do not affect the rights of the plaintiffs in the joint family property of the said Hassomal and his sons and grand-sons: (2) that the partition effected by Hassomal and his sons be set aside as being unfair, or, in the alternative the same be re-opened, and the proper share of the plaintiffs in the joint family estate be partitioned and awarded to them, and (3) that the mesne profits of the shares of the plaintiffs in the property up to possession be determined and decreed in their favour."

Pending disposal of the suit, the plaintiffs prayed for interim relief and asked that the trustees be restrained from alienating the property in their possession and that a Receiver be appointed to take charge of the same. Defendant No. 1 is said to be the founder of the Dev Samaj. Defendants 2 are members of the Dev Samaj Council. All of them reside at Lahore. They were jointly sued as trustees appointed under the two trust-deeds dated July 5, 1911, and February 14, 1918, which were sought to be set aside. Defendant No. 1 denied that he was a trustee. Defendants 2 were the chief contesting defendants. They denied that the documents referred to in the plaint were void, and contended that the property dealt with by these documents was the private property of Hassomal and that the plaintiffs were entitled to no relief. The other parties to the suit were the descendants of Hassomal. In effect they supported the claim of the plaintiffs and claimed relief for themselves on the footing that the deeds referred to in to plaint were void and of no effect. Hassomal was the son of Zowkiram. The following is the tabular statement of the male descendants of Zowkiram showing when some of them were born, when some of them died and how some of them who are interested in the subject-matter of the suit are ranged as parties in the suit:

The trial Court has found as a fact that the property dealt with under these deeds was joint family property and that although Chunilal and Motilal were bound by the release-deed executed by them in favour of their father, the other co-parceners were not affected by it, and that although the trust deeds executed by Hassomal were valid so far as his interest in the property dealt with by him was concerned, the deeds did not affect the rights of the co-parceners other than Chunilal and Motilal to re-open the partition and get their share of the whole estate. The Court, accordingly, passed a preliminary decree for partition, and appointed a Commissioner and Receiver to ascertain the mesne profits due to the plaintiffs and to partition the property. It is against that decree that the representatives of the Dev Samaj Council, defendants 2 in the suit, have come to us in appeal.

Mr. Dipchand who appears for them has put in an application dated September 14, 1933, for permission to raise at this stage an additional defence on the point of jurisdiction of the lower Court to try the suit. The application is not supported by any affidavit and does not disclose the reason why no such defence was raised in the trial Court or even in the memorandum of appeal. But the learned Advocate has in the course of his arguments made no secret of the reason why this defence was not raised earlier. It appears that defendants 2 were under the impression that Quetta where a part of the property which is in trust with defendants 2 is situate, was a place within the dominions of His Majesty the King-Emperor and as it was being governed through the Governor-General of India or through an officer subordinate to the Governor-General of India, it formed part of British India as defined in s. 3, cl. (vii), General Clauses Act. They were, according to the learned Advocate, disabused of their erroneous impression in consequence of a point of jurisdiction having recently been raised in another case between different parties altogether in the Court of Small Causes of Karachi, which led to the discovery of this important defence.

This application has been objected to on several grounds. It is said: (1) that the question whether Quetta is within British India or not, is a mixed question of fact and law, and that this question cannot therefore be raised at this stage; (2) Quetta is within British India, that defendants 2 are estopped by the provisions of s. 21 of the Code from raising it; (3) that there is no law which prevents a British Indian Court from entertaining a suit which embraces property outside British India, and (4) that, in any case, the trial Court was competent to grant some of the reliefs claimed.

We are of opinion that the question of jurisdiction at issue is one of law depending upon public documents which require no proof and are presumed under s. 81, Evidence Act, to be genuine. This question can therefore be raised at the present stage. We are also of the opinion that Quetta does not form part of British India as defined in s. 3, General Clauses Act. This part of the territory has been permanently leased to the British Crown: see Imperial Gazetteer, Vol. 6, p. 227, and Aitchison's Treaties, Vol. 9, p. 399. That being so, this part of the territory is not within the dominions of His Majesty the King-Emperor, and although every function of administration is exercised by the Viceroy in virtue of the authority transferred to the British Crown under the lease, it does not comply with one of the two essentials of the definition and does not therefore form part of British India. It is what is known as an "administered area": see Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 10, para. 1021.

The third point stated above involves two different and distinct questions: (1) whether a matter in dispute is within the jurisdiction of a British Indian Court at all, and (2) whether a matter undoubtedly within the jurisdiction of a British Indian Court shall be assigned for trial to particular Courts in British India. So far as the first of these two questions is concerned, there can be no doubt that s. 21, Civil Procedure Code, does not refer to it and is no bar to such a question being raised at any stage of the proceedings. But where British Indian Courts have power to deal with the lis, s. 21, Civil Procedure Code, comes into play and operates as an estoppel. If any authority was needed in support of the first question, it will be found in Ramabhadra Raju Bahadur v. Maharaja of Jeypore (1), at p. 820* where Lord Dunedin has said:

"Some of the lands of which sale had been decreed are situate in what are known as the Agency Tracts. Now, the suit is raised in terms of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. By s. 1, sub-s. 3, the Code is, with the exception of certain sections not here in point, excluded from the scheduled districts, and by Act XXIV of 1839 the district in which the lands above referred to are situate was scheduled. The learned Judges of the Court of Appeal thought that the matter was met by s. 21 of the Code, which provides that no objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any Appellate Court unless the objection was taken in the Court of first instance, which in this case had admittedly not been done. Their Lordships cannot agree with this view. This is not an objection as to the place of suing; it is an objection going to the nullity of the order on the ground of want of jurisdiction, the order for sale is made under sections of the Code of Civil Procedure which the Code itself says are not to apply to the scheduled districts."

With regard to the question whether a British Indian Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit of this nature, the learned Advocate has argued that, according to the well recognised principles of international law, partition of property situate in foreign territory cannot be decreed, and as defendants 2 are in no way concerned with property other than that situate at Quetta, the trial Court had no jurisdiction either to order partition of such property or to appoint a Commissioner and Receiver to ascertain the mesne profits and effect partition of the Quetta property by metes and bounds or to grant any other relief claimed in the suit. Now, whatever might be said with regard to the first part of the contention of the learned Advocate, he has been unable to satisfy us that under no circumstances may a decree be passed by a British Indian Court affecting foreign property or a Commissioner or Receiver be appointed in respect of such property. The authorities cited by him are clearly distinguishable. In Doongersi Haribhoy v. Togiji (2), I declined jurisdiction to partition immovable property situate in a Native State. But in that case, the defendant who claimed the property as his own was a foreigner residing in that State and in no way amenable to the jurisdiction of any British Indian Court. The ground on which I proceeded in that case is stated at p. 48*:

"It is a fundamental principle of international jurisprudence that a sovereign of a country acting through the Courts thereof has no jurisdiction over any matters with regard to which he cannot give effective judgment or which he can render effective only by interfering with the authority of a foreign sovereign or the jurisdiction of a foreign Court; and an 'effective judgment' has been defined to mean a decree which the sovereign under whose authority it is delivered, has in fact the power to enforce against the person bound by it, and which, therefore, his Courts can, if he chooses to give them the necessary means, enforce against such person."

In Narsomal Jiwandas v. Pessumal (3), the judgment of this Court in the exercise of its High Court jurisdiction was delivered by me setting aside an order of interim attachment issued by the trial Court on property situate in foreign territory on somewhat similar grounds referred to in the above case. In Hashim Osman v. Phapubai (4) I refused to grant an injunction against a foreigner who lived outside British India and possessed no property in British India on the ground that if I issued an injunction, it would be a brutum fulmen, and no Court would issue an order which will be idle and inoperative. No such difficulties arise in the present case, as the two defendants are British Indian subjects residing at Lahore and are amenable to the jurisdiction of a British Indian Court. None of these cases turned on the provisions of ss. 16 to 21, Civil Procedure Code. Our attention has been drawn to the observations of Ranade, J., in Keshav v. Vinayak (5), at p. 31* where his Lordship has said :

"The evident object of the detailed provisions of s. 16 is to limit jurisdiction in respect of claims to immovable property to the Court within whose local jurisdiction such property may be situated, and as a rule, Indian Courts have no power to decide on rights and interests in immovable property lying outside their local jurisdiction : Prem Chand Dey v. Mohanda Debi (6), Sreenath v. Cally Dass (7) and Srimati Kamini Soondari v. Kali Prosunna (8). This same view was approved in Crisp v. Watson (9) and in Land Mortgage Bank v. Sudurudeen (10).....There is no allegation of any trust in this case such as distinguished the claim in Juggadamba v. Puddomoney (11), and in respect of which relief could be claimed in equity by constraining the conscience".

This was a case filed in the Court at Nasik to establish a right in a certain share in two "varshasans" (annual allowance) charged on the revenues of two villages in the Nizam's territory, and the High Court rightly held that as the nature of this allowance treating it as immovable property, was itself in dispute, the claim to it should be decided according to the law in force in the Nizam's Dominions. This decision was considered by a Bench consisting of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and Candy, J., in the case of Kashinath v. Anant (12). As pointed out in the later ruling, so far as the finding that the Nasik Court had no jurisdiction in that particular case is concerned, there is nothing to quarrel about. The rule which applies to a case of this kind has, as said by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, been clearly stated by Lord Cottenham in Ex parte Pollard (13) at pp. 250 and 251*, thus :

"If indeed the law of the country where the land is situate should not permit or not enable the defendant to do what the Court might otherwise think it right to decree, it would be useless and unjust to direct him to do the act; but when there is no such impediment, the Courts of this country, in the exercise of their jurisdiction over contracts made here or in administering equities between parties residing here act upon their own rules; and are not influenced by any consideration of what the effect of such contracts might be in the country where the lands are situate, or of the manner in which the Courts of such countries might deal with such equities"

If the observations of Ranade, J., are intended to lay down a rule that a British Indian Court should in no case entertain a suit in respect of foreign property, it is, with all respect, not a correct view of the law, and the case of Kashinath v. Anant (12), is an authority in support of the contrary view. In this case it was common ground that the property in dispute, viz. the income from grants of land situate in a Native State but received by the defendant within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit was filed, admittedly belonged to a common ancestor of the parties, and it was held that the title to the property not being in dispute the Court was competent to grant a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to a share therein. His Lordship, the Chief Justice, has very rightly observed that the jurisdiction of the Courts in this country is governed by and must be ascertained by the same principles as are applied by Courts of Equity in England except so far as they may be at variance with legislative enactment. These observations have been referred to with approval by Sir Norman Macleod, C. J., in Mahadeo Govind v. Ramchandra Govind (14), and he further held that there is no reason for thinking that s. 16, Civil Procedure Code, lays down any different rule of law than that prevailing in England. The equity relied upon in this last mentioned case was that, under a private award made in favour of the plaintiff in 1915, he had been awarded certain lands in a Native State and that as he had not been given possession of those lands by the defendant during the preceding two years, he was entitled to mesne profits for that period, and in holding that the Court would give effect to the equity relied upon, Sir Norman Macleod has said:

"It is not suggested that the law prevailing in Kurandwad State would not permit of the defendant being directed to pay the mesne profits of the lands to the plaintiff to whom the land belongs There appears to be an equity in favour of the plaintiff that the profits of those lands which were awarded to him in 1915 should not remain in the pockets of the defendant, and therefore there is no reason why the Belgaum Court should not have jurisdiction to administer that equity in favour of the plaintiff."

The principles on which the English Courts exercise jurisdiction in personam in respect of foreign immovables is stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 6, para. 270, thus:

"The English Courts have power to exercise a jurisdiction in personam, in respect of foreign immovables against persons locally within their jurisdiction, in cases where there is an equity between the parties arising from contract, fraud, or trust provided that the decision of title be not directly involved. But such an equity must be of a personal nature, i. e., there must be either a fiduciary relationship or privity of some other kind between the parties."

English Courts have always exercised jurisdiction in per sonam for the purpose of deciding whether there is or is not in existence a valid trust in respect of foreign immovables: see Re. Clinton v. Clinton (15), and for the purpose of giving relief against fraudulent and inequitable dealings with regard to foreign immovables: see Arglasse (Lord) v. Muschamp (16), Angus v. Angus (17), and Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 6, para, 276; and have ordered accounts of rents and profits of foreign property, see Cartwright v. Pettus Clinton (18), and in suitable cases have even appointed a Receiver of foreign property. Although the Courts have not and cannot put the Receiver in possession of foreign property, they have given effect to such orders by dealing for contempt the party who prevents possession being taken: see Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 6, para. 277.

The cases of the British South Africa Co. v. The Companhia De Macambique (19), and Deschamps v. Miller (20), to which our attention has been invited do not help defendants 2. The first case is of trespass to foreign territory. In the second case, the plaintiff, who was the only son of D and T both domiciled French subjects and married in France in 1831, claimed a a certain interest in property left by D. In 1836 D had gone to India, and in 1839 he had gone through a form of marriage with X on whom and others by a settlement made in 1865 of which the defendants were trustees, conferred interest in immovable properties in Madras. The plaintiff sought to impeach the settlement of 1865 as being contrary to the law of France, and in contravention of his rights thereunder. Parker, J. non-suited the plaintiff observing:

"The question is whether under these circumstances the Court ought to entertain jurisdiction. In my opinion the general rule is that the Court will not adjudicate on questions relating to the title to or the right to the possession of immovable property out of the jurisdiction. There are, no doubt, exceptions to the rule, but without attempting to give an exhaustive statement of those exceptions, I think it will be found that they all depend on the existence between the parties to the suit of personal obligation arising out of contract or implied contract, fiduciary relationship or fraud or other conduct which, in the view of a Court of Equity in this country, would be unconscionable, and do not depend for their existence on the law of the locus of the immovable property. Thus, in cases of trusts, specific performance of contracts, foreclosure, or redemption of mortgages, or in the case of land obtained by the defendant by fraud, or other such unconscionable conduct as I have referred to, the Court may well assume jurisdiction. But where there is no contract, no fiduciary relationship and no fraud or other unconscionable conduct giving rise to a personal obligation between the parties, and the whole question is whether or not accordings to the law of the locus the claim of title set up by one party, whether a legal or equitable claim in the sense of those words as used in English law, would be preferred to the claim of another party, I do not think the Court ought to entertain jurisdiction to decide the matter."

No question arises here of the release-deed or the trust deeds being invalid according to any foreign law governing the parties. Now, had Hassomal been alive, and had he not executed deeds of trust in favour of the second defendants, there can be no doubt that a suit filed against him and his sons in a British Indian Court for a declaration that the release-deed executed by his sons in his favour was not binding upon his grandsons would be competent, notwithstanding the fact that the whole or part of the property referred to in the deed was situate outside British India. The title of Hassomal to the foreign property is not in dispute. The main question which the Court in such a case would be called upon to decide concerning the property is whether Hassomal held the property as trustee and manager for the joint family consisting of himself and his issue, and as such whether he is accountable to his coparceners for the same, or whether the release-deed is binding upon all the coparceners. As a matter of fact a suit filed by the sons themselves for having the release-deed executed by them set aside on any equitable ground such as fraud or undue influence would equally be entertainable in a British Indian Court, and the sons have made a prayer in their defence to that effect. Paragraph 5 of the written statement filed by them is as follows:

"5. As regards paras. 9 to 11 it is submitted that the said release was the result of fraud, coercion and undue influence and was executed by these defendants under very great pressure which they were not able to bear, &c. . . . and which this Honourable Court will be pleased to set aside and ignore."

The release-deed referred to is a counterpart of the release-deed executed by Hassomal in favour of his sons in respect of the property which is in British India. Both deeds read together effect a partition. For the purpose of saving stamp, Hassomal and his sons executed separate release-deeds in favour of one another, but this device did not succeed and the parties were made to pay stamp duty in respect of one of them as a partition deed. The suit is therefore in effect a suit for setting aside a partition effected by the father by exercise of undue influence over his sons, or, in the alternative, as being unfair and as such, not binding on his grandsons who were not parties to it. That is one of the main reliefs asked for in the suit. So far as that relief goes, there can be no doubt that a British Indian Court would have had jurisdiction to entertain it as against Hassomal, although a part of the property which was the subject-matter of partition is situate outside, the title to such foreign property being only incidentally and not directly in issue: Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 6, para. 269.

Hassomal is dead. He had executed two trust-deeds in favour of defendants 2. They stand in the shoes of Hassomal and represent his estate. Both these deeds conferred and could confer upon them only such rights in the property which Hassomal had and which Hassomal could, under the Indian Law of Transfer of Property transfer. If Hassomal could be made accountable in a British Indian Court in respect of any claim over the property, which is the subject-matter of the trust, there is no reason why the trustees from him who reside in British India should not likewise be amenable to the jurisdiction of a British Indian Court, more so when the trust enjoins them to spend the rents and profits of foreign property in British India. The defendants 2 do not claim the foreign property as transferees for value and without notice so as to prevent the equities to which Hassomal was liable attaching to them. Whether a British Indian Court can decree partition by metes and bounds and separate possession of the property which is outside British India is quite a different matter; and what consequential relief in this behalf the plaintiffs, if successful, should get is a question which may well be discussed after we have heard the appeal on the merits.

For the present it is sufficient to observe that so far as the reliefs for declarations (a) that the release-deed is of no effect against the sons or grandsons or at any rate against the grandsons, (b) that they are entitled to re-open the partition, (c) that they have a subsisting share in the foreign property and (d) that the trusts created by Hassomal do not affect their interest and (2) that they be awarded mesne profits in their share in such foreign property, there can be no doubt that these reliefs may be granted by a British Indian Court and enforced in personam against the defendants. It may also be observed that the declaratory decree if any passed against the defendants No. 2 would operate as res judicata against them as they are not only British Indian subjects but they have voluntarily submitted to the jurisdiction of the trial Court: see Molony v. Gibbons (21), and Assets Co. Ltd. v. Mere Roihi (22). Such a decree would be of great use to the plaintiffs in any suit they may file on the strength of this decree in the Quetta Court. So far as these reliefs go, the prosent case falls within the decision of Kashinath v. Anant (12).

If a British Indian Court has jurisdiction to entertain this suit it goes without saying that defendants 2 are barred by the provisions of s. 21, Civil Procedure Code from raising an objection at this stage as to the place in British India where this suit should have been instituted. They cannot now say that the suit should have been filed at Lahore and not at Shikarpur. It would also appear that as a part of the cause of action in respect of the execution of the release-deed sought to be set aside and re-opening partition of property, a part of which is in Shikarpur, has arisen within the jurisdiction of the Shikarpur Court and as some of the defendants reside there, the Shikarpur Court was competent to grant leave to the plaintiffs to continue the suit in that Court against defendants who were not residing within its jurisdiction; and as defendants 2 raised no objection as to the place of suing, they are now estopped from pleading that the suit is incompetent for want of such leave. We hold, therefore, (1) that defendants 2 are not barred from raising the plea that a British Indian Court has no jurisdiction to entertain this suit or any part of it but not the plea that the suit if within the jurisdiction of a British Indian Court, should have been instituted in another part of British India and not at Shikarpur; (2) that Quetta is not within British India, and (3) that defendants 2 being British Indian subjects, the trial Court could exercise jurisdiction in personam against them and could grant the reliefs asked for except decreeing that the immovable property at Quetta be partitioned and separate possession of the plaintiffs' share therein be awarded to them. Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to any of the reliefs claimed by them and in what manner, if any, their share in the Quetta property should be secured to them, are matters which can only be decided after hearing on the merits. We order that appeal be now set down for hearing on October 6, 1933.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 4, 53—Transfer by insolvent—Transferee transferring property to third party—Receiver's application for annulment of insolvent's transfer—Third party not impleaded—Order of annulment, if binding on third party—Right to show that original transfer was made in good faith.

Where the transferee of an insolvent transfers the property to a third party and the Receiver has knowledge of it, but in a subsequent petition by the Receiver for annulment of the transfer made by the insolvent, the third party is not impleaded, he is not bound by an order of annulment made against the transferee from the insolvent. It will, therefore, be open to him to show that the original transfer by the insolvent was made in good faith and for valuable consideration and also to show that he himself acted in good faith and paid full consideration being unaware of the insolvency proceedings. S. C. A. from a decision of the First Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur, dated April 14, 1931.

Mr. A. M. Khwaja, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for partition in which a question arose as to the title of the rival claimants. On February 2, 1925, one Abdul Ghani, who was heavily in debt sold his share in the house in question to one Abdul Qaiyum. On October 19, 1926, Abdul Ghani himself applied for being adjudicated an insolvent and he was declared an insolvent on December 21, 1926. On the following day, namely, the December 22, 1926, Abdul Qaiyum sold the property to the present defendant, Saiyid Hasan. On June 25, 1927, on an application made by the Official Receiver the sale-deed of February 2, 1925, which had been executed by the insolvent in favour of Abdul Qaiyum was annulled by the Court. In that proceeding Abdul Qaiyum alone had been impleaded and did not appear; the subsequent transferee, Saiyid Hasan, was not impleaded by the Official Receiver at all. After having obtained the order of annulment the Official Receiver on August 4, 1927, transferred the property to the present plaintiff Amir Ahmad. As Amir Ahmad did not obtain possession of the house, the present suit was instituted by him on August 21, 1930, for partition and separation of his share.

The plaint was very vague and did not clearly state how Saiyid Hasan came on the scene. The written statement was in the same way vague and did not contain an express plea that Abdul Qaiyum was a bona fide transferee for value nor did it contain any express plea that the application did not lie under the Insolvency Act at all. Both the Courts below have dismissed the claim holding that inasmuch as Saiyid Hasan, the defendant, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary must be taken to have been a bona fide purchaser for good consideration his title cannot be impeached.

This view is challenged in appeal. Our attention has been drawn to a large number of cases which have a close bearing on the point arising in this case, but there is no case which can be said to be directly in point.

It seems quite clear that if a transfer made by a debtor is wholly fictitious and bogus and no interest in the property passes to the transferee, then the transfer is void ab initio and subsequent transferees can never be protected because the foundation of their title does not exist. There would be no necessity for the Official Receiver to have such a wholly ineffective, void and fictitious transfer annulled under s. 53, or s. 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. In case of dispute he can always ignore it and treat it as a nullity either in a separate suit or in a proceeding under s. 4 of the Insolvency Act.

On the other hand, if the transfer made by the debtor was not wholly fictitious and bogus but the intention of the parties was that property should in fact pass to the transferee, then the result would depend on whether the transferee was a purchaser in good faith and for valuable consideration or not. The transfer for the time being is valid, though it is voidable at the option of the Receiver, and it is discretionary with the Court to annul it under s. 53, of the Provincial Insolvency Act. But so long as the transfer has not been avoided by the Receiver and not annulled by the Court, the title vests in the transferee even though he may not have acted in good faith and might not have paid full consideration. Such a transfer can, however, be annulled, that is to say, declared to have seized to be binding on the Receiver. The annulment, however, cannot be equivalent to a declaration that it was void from the very beginning.

Reliance has been placed on some English cases, but all of them are not of much help because the language of the relevant sections in the various Bankruptcy Acts under which they arose was substantially different. But there are a large number of cases in India in which the view appears to have been expressed that s. 53 of the Insolvency Act has no application when once the transferee from the insolvent has transferred the property to a third party. See:

Jagannath Ayyangar v. Narayana Ayyangar, 52 Ind. Cas. 761 (1), Sudha v. Firm Nanakchand-Daulatram, 88 Ind. Cas. 89 (2), Ponnammai Ammal v. The District Official Receiver, Tinnevelly, 97 Ind. Cas. 918 (3), Maung Myint v. Official Assignee, 90 Ind. Cas. 969 (4) and Gobind v. Sonba (5).

This view is based on the sole circumstance that s. 53 in terms does not apply to a transferee from a transferee. No doubt the transfer that is annulled by the Court is the transfer made by such transferee as is adjudged insolvent, but it does not follow that a subsequent transferee who is a legal representative is not equally bound by the annulment.

There is one significant circumstance which does not appear to have been brought to the notice of the learned Judges who decided the above mentioned cases, and it is that if s. 54 (1) had stood by itself there would have been an equal reason for holding that it would not be applicable to a transferee from a creditor because the language of both the sections is almost similar. But there can be no doubt that the Legislature has thought otherwise and has provided in sub-s. 2 of s. 54, that the rights of any person who has acquired title through or under a creditor will not be affected if he has acted in good faith or for valuable consideration. It follows that out for this sub-section such a second transferee would not have been protected. Reading ss. 53 and 54 together, it would then seem to follow that the sections are general in their scope and if the transfer made by the insolvent has been annulled the annulment is binding on the initial transferee as well as his subsequent representative. It is noteworthy that the language of the first paragraph of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act is similar and there too there is a provision in the last paragraph that the rights of a transferee in good faith and for consideration would not be impaired.

This view finds some support from the remarks made by Vaughan Williams, J., In re Vausittart; Ex parte Brown (6). In that case the learned Judge was dealing with the plea of pawnee from the wife of the insolvent to whom he had gifted certain jewellery. The learned Judge observed:

"Of course, no question could arise at all unless it is that the respondents were persons claiming in good faith and for valuable consideration."

In that case the pawnee had taken the jewellery from the wife previous to the application for insolvency. Nevertheless the learned Judge considered that if he had not been a transferee in good faith and for valuable consideration, no question would have at all arisen.

On general principles also there seems to be no reason why, if the original transfer made by the insolvent is found to be voidable and has been annulled by the Court, the annulment should not be binding on subsequent transferees and affect their title. There is, however, one distinction. Section 54 (1) declares that the transfer made by a person unable to pay his debts to a creditor with a view of giving that creditor a preference shall be deemed fraudulent and void and shall be annulled by the Court. The provision is imperative and the Court has no option but to declare it fraudulent and void and to annul it. It was, therefore, necessary to provide in sub-s. 2 that the rights of any person who in good faith and for valuable consideration has acquired title through or under a creditor would not be affected. On the other hand, the provisions of s. 53, are not so mandatory. A transfer other than one for consideration and made in favour of a purchaser acting in good faith, is only voidable as against the Receiver and it is a matter of discretion for the Court to annul it or not. Obviously the Court would decline to exercise its discretion if the transferee were to satisfy the Court that he acted in good faith, paid full consideration and was entitled to protection on equitable grounds. It was, therefore, not necessary to add any sub-section to s. 53, corresponding to sub-s. 2 to s. 54. The question of good faith and payment of good consideration as well as that of care and precaution can all be considered by the Court itself. But as the annulment made by the Court does not date back to the original transfer and can at the very most, date back to the date of the application for insolvency, it would follow that the avoidance of a second transfer against a second transferee, who took the second transfer before the application for insolvency was made, cannot be annulled under s. 53 of the Act, but if it is either absolutely void from the very beginning or is voidable under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, it can be declared to be void or avoided either in a separate suit or in a proceeding under s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Sections 53 and 54 as laid down by the majority of the Full Bench in the case of Anwar Khan v. Muhammad Khan (7), do not deal with the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court but only lay down rules as to the manner in which evidence should be considered in certain cases arising in that Court and in no way control the provisions of s. 4. It, therefore, follows that in order to apply s. 53, the condition precedent is a finding that the transfer was otherwise than one made in good faith and for valuable consideration. That finding of fact can be arrived at only when a dispute as to title arises between two rival claimants. When property has been transferred by the transferee of an insolvent to a third party and the Receiver is aware of the transfer the dispute is really between the Receiver on the one hand and the subsequent transferee on the other and not between the Receiver and the first transferee who has no longer got any interest in the property left. In order to start a proceeding under s. 4, the application should, therefore, be by the Receiver against the person who is now claiming title to the property and an adjudication by the Court on such dispute would be final and would bar a second suit and would be binding on the parties to the proceeding. But if the Receiver chooses to proceed under s. 4, against the first transferee who has no interest left in the property and obtains an order against him either ex parte or after contest, he cannot use that order as a final adjudication of the matter in dispute as against the real claimant of the title.

Some difficulty is certainly caused by the phraseology used in s. 4 (2) under which all claimants against the debtor and all persons claiming under claimants are bound. But if the first transferee has ceased to have any interest in the property at all it is difficult to regard him as a claimant against the debtor so as to bind the second transferee. The real situation then is that the claimant is the subsequent transferee in whom the property vests for the time being and it is he and his legal representatives or persons who will claim through him afterwards who would be bound by the order. If a transfer were older than 2 years prior to the application for insolvency, the only remedy open to the Official Receiver would be to avoid the transfer if he can, in accordance with the provisions of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, and he has to establish an intent to defraud or delay creditors. The learned Counsel for the appellant has argued before us that the order of annulment is a judgment in rem and operates against the whole world and that it dates back to the initial transfer made by the insolvent. This argument is based on the insolvency jurisdiction of the Court and also on ss. 4 (2) and 28 (7) of the Act. All adjudications as between the Receiver representing the whole body of creditors on the one hand and the insolvent on the other are certainly judgments in rem and are binding on the whole world. But when a dispute as to title to property arises between the Receiver representing the creditors on the one hand and a stranger to the insolvency proceeding, the judgment would be binding on the person against whom the decision is given and not against the whole world. Section 28 (7) merely lays down that the order of adjudication shall relate back to, and take effect from, the date of the presentation of the petition. Under s. 28 (2) on the making of an order of adjudication the whole of the property of the insolvent vests in the Court of the Receiver. The result of these two sub-sections is that the vesting of the property in the Receiver dates back to the date of the application for insolvency. There is no provision in the Act under which the vesting of the property dates back to a previous transfer made by the insolvent. Indeed such a transfer stand unless it is annulled by the Court.

It, therefore, seems to follow that the Official Receiver wrongly omitted to implead Saiyid Hasan, particularly as it appears from the record that he was aware of the transfer in his favour, and that the order of annulment which he obtained against the absent Abdul Qaiyum is not binding upon the present defendant Saiyid Hasan and it is open to Saiyid Hasan to show that the original transfer in favour of Abdul Ghani was made to purchaser in good faith and for valuable consideration and that it is also open to him to show that he himself acted in good faith and paid full consideration being unaware of insolvency proceedings. As the pleadings were defective the first question has not been gone into by the Courts below, but it has been assumed as a result of the previous order of annulment passed against Abdul Qaiyum that he was not a purchaser in good faith and for valuable consideration. There is, however, a clear finding that the defendant Saiyid Hasan in the absence of evidence to the contrary must be taken to be a bona fide purchaser for good value. As s. 53 applies only to cases of transfer other than those for consideration and in good faith, the burden of proving that the transaction was not in good faith and was without consideration would lie on the Official Receiver in the insolvency proceedings. See Official Assignee of the Estate of Cheah Soo Tuan v. Khoo Saw Cheow (8), where the language of the statute was almost identical with that before us. Similarly the burden of proof would lie on the present plaintiff who claims through the Official Receiver. That burden has not been discharged. The plaintiff did not come to Court on the allegation that the transfer made by the debt or was voidable under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act and the case, therefore, has not been considered from that point of view. In our opinion the plaintiff cannot avail himself of s. 53 of the Insolvency Act when the respondent acted in good faith, and he cannot succeed without making out a case under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act which he did not put forward in the plaint. Such a claim cannot be investigated without an amendment of the plaint and without allowing him to make out a new case which he cannot be allowed to do. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

N. Appeal dismissed.

DERBYSHIRE, C. J., MUKHERJI AND COSTELLO, JJ.

RAFIQUEUDDIN AHMAD AND OTHERS—ACCUSED

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 103, 307 (3)—Search lists—Prosecution's duty to prove case with regard to different items severally—High Court, if can, under s. 307 (3), order re-trial—Criminal trial—Capital case—Evidence—Nature of—Re-trial when to be ordered—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 8, 27—Joint acts of several persons sought to be proved in order to ask Court to draw inference from such conduct—Nature of evidence necessary.

When in a case there are several search lists, in each of which several items of property are mentioned, the prosecution ought to prove their case with regard to the different items severally, and the different items of property or different groups thereof mentioned in a search list ought to be separately and consecutively numbered either by letters or figures or by some other distinguishing marks and the same numbering should be followed while recording the evidence of witnesses relating to the searches to which those search lists refer. If that procedure is adopted, there will be no difficulty on the part of the Court in appreciating the evidence that is adduced in respect of the searches. [p. 690, col 2.]

In a capital case it is important that the more important of the witnesses should be examined in such a way as would enable the Court to properly appreciate their evidence. The evidence should be led in sufficient detail and with due regard to the sequence of events, the facts which the witnesses saw or the acts which they did and also the reasons which actuated them to do the acts being narrated in an intelligent fashion. It is only by this means that a clear and consistent account of the whole thing may be presented before the Judge and the jury. [ibid]

Where joint acts of several persons are sought to be proved in order to ask the Court to draw an inference from such conduct, evidence should be led with some degree of particularity so that it may be possible for the Court to draw the necessary inference from the conduct of each one of the persons concerned in the act. The principle applies not only to evidence relevant under s. 27 but also to that under s. 8, Evidence Act Queen-Empress v Babu Lal (1) and Durlav Namasudra v. Emperor (2) relied on.[p. 691, col. 2.]

A re-trial in a criminnl case should not be ordered too lightly and should be avoided as much as possible. A re-trial certainly snould not be ordered, where it can be established that there is really no evidence to go before a jury, because to order a re-trial in such circumstances would be to put the accused to unnecessary harassment. [ibid]

Under sub-s. (3), s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code, the High Court has ample power in a case, in which there has been no proper or adequate trial, to make an order that the accused persons should be re-tried. [p. 693, col. 1]

[Case-law referred to.]

Messrs. Charu Chunder Biswas, Hari Das Gupta, Basania Kumar Mukherji and Nirmal Chunder Chuckerburty, for the Accused.

Messrs. Khundkar and Nirmal Chunder Das Gupta, for the Crown.

Mukherji, J.—The four accused persons Rafiqueuddin Ahmed, Jyotish Chandra Ghose, Jatindra Nath Ray and Bhengra alias Hasimuddin Mamud were tried by the Sessions Judge of Rangpur with the aid of a jury. The charges on which they were tried were for offences under ss. 302 and 392, Indian Penal Code, a charge of murder for having caused the death of one Gobind Ram Marwari and a charge of robbery for having stolen away some valuables and cash which were in the possession of the said Gobind Ram Marwari in the room in which he was murdered. The jury at first brought in a divided verdict of 5 to 4. The Judge thereupon asked them to retire and to see if they could be unanimous. They retired and after a deliberation for over fifteen minutes they came back and said that they were still divided, this time in the proportion of 6 to 3; six of the jurors were of opinion that the case against the accused was reasonably doubtful so that they should be held not guilty and the other three were of opinion that all the four accused persons were guilty under both the charges on which they had been tried. The learned Judge, being of opinion that the verdict of the majority of the jury was unreasonable and that the verdict of the minority should be accepted, has made this reference to this Court under the provisions of s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code.

For our present purposes, it is not necessary to recapitulate the facts of the case: they will be found set out in sufficient detail in the learned Judge's charge to the jury, and a summary thereof is also to be found in his letter of reference addressed to this Court. It will be enough to state for the purpose of the present case that the evidence adduced on behalf of the prosecution, in order to establish the charges against the accused persons, roughly speaking, falls under three heads: first, the confessions which were made by the four accused persons but were subsequently retracted by them; second, the production of some articles, which were alleged to be the proceeds of the crime, at different times and from different places, by the accused persons severally with the exception of one occasion when some articles are said to have been produced by two of them jointly; and third, the identity of foot-prints of three of the accused persons found in the room in wnich the crime was committed. After we had heard the arguments addressed to us on behalf of the Crown and while the case on behalf of two of the accused persons was being argued before us by Mr. Biswas who was appearing on their behalf, it became apparent to us that upon the present state of the record, it would not be possible for us to deal with the case on its merits with any degree of confidence. The difficulty that we felt arose out of certain defects which were noticed in the manner in which the evidence was recorded by the learned Judge and also in consequence of the mode that was adopted on behalf of the prosecution in the matter of leading the evidence that was being adduced in support of the charges. As regards the manner in which the evidence has been recorded, I propose to say a few words in order to explain the nature of the difficulty that we have experienced. The prosecution case is that the four accused persons, on one occasion two of them jointly and on other occasions some one of them severally took the Police to certain places and produced some of the articles which, according to the prosecution, were in the possession of the deceased Gobind Ram Marwari.

The searches, in the course of which these articles were produced, are evidenced by a number of search lists, out of which it will be sufficient to refer here to four, namely, Exs. 10, 11, 12 and 13. Exhibit 10 is a search list relating to the production by Jatin and Jyotish of certain articles on May 17, 1934, at 8 P. M. I may state here that the occurrence which forms the subject-matter of this case is alleged to have taken place at about 11 P. M. on the night of May 16, 1934. Exhibit 11 refers to the production of articles by Bhengra on May 17, 1934, a 9-30 P. M. Exhibit 13 describes the production of articles by Rafiqueuddin on the same night at 10 or 10-30 P. M. and Ex. 12 relates to the production by Jatin of certain articles on the morning of May 18, 1934, between 7 and 8 A. M. Evidence relating to these productions was given by the Sub-Inspector of Police who conducted the searches and was examined as witness No. 22 on behalf of the prosecution. The search witnesses examined in connection with these searches are witness No. 5, Mahatabuddin Chaudhury; witness No. 6, Fazal Karim Chaudhury; and witness No. 7, Moulvi Busirulla Ahmad. The Sub-Inspector having conducted the searches gave an account of the different searches that he had held and of the different articles that were produced by the accused persons in the course of those searches. I propose to quote here a portion of his deposition as recorded. I quote from p. 28 of the paper-book. He said this:

"At 4-30 P. M. I arrested Jatin and Jyotish who were in the cycle shop of Jyotish. I took them to the thana. I arrested Rafiq and Bhengra about 7-30 P. M. Jyotish and Jatin led us to a spot under the mango tree. Jyotish pointed out a spot. Some articles were dug up in the presence of witnesses. I made a list of them attested by witnesses. Proves Ex. 10. Then Bhengra took us to a dried pond; from inside the cavity he produced some ornaments and cash. I made out a search list which the witnesses attested. Proves Ex. 11. Then Rafiq took us to a garden near his house and produced one kherua bag. I prepared a search list which was attested by witnesses. Proves Ex. 13, 18th morning Jatin took us to a dried tank; he produced some purses and an empty tin. Proves exhibit (The number of the exhibit is left blank, but there is little doubt upon the other evidence that we have that it is Ex. 12). Jatin took us to the house of Debi Barman where he lived. From inside a suit case he produced notes valued Rs 175. He made over a lungi to me. Proves Exs. 6—23."

It will be seen that from this evidence it is not possible to ascertain which of the aforesaid exhibits were recovered in the course of which of the searches. The articles which correspond to these exhibits will be found described in a list that was prepared in the Court of Session and is printed at p. 46 of the paper-book, of the three searches witnesses to whom reference has been made above, witness No. 7, Mr. Basirullah Ahmad, has given very general evidence relating to all the searches: he has not referred to the articles that were produced in the course of the searches—at least he has not tried to identify them: but the other two witnesses, namely, No. 5, Mahatabuddin Chaudhury, and No. 6, Fazal Karim Chaudhury, are very important. When one proceeds to examine the evidence of Mahatabuddin Chaudhury as recorded one finds that after speaking about the preparation of the lists—Exs. 10, 11 and 12 and also speaking about the production of articles by Rafiqueuddin, the witness does not refer to Ex. 13, although he purports to have been a witness to the search that was held in connection with the production of articles by Rafiqueuddin, and proves only Exs. 6 to 24. It is very difficult for one to understand why, if he was speaking about the production of the articles in the course of the searches that he was speaking to, he would not refer either to Ex. 13 or to any of the other articles produced in the searches excepting articles Exs. 6 to 24. An examination of the evidence of P. W. No. 6, Fazal Karim Chaudhury, discloses a still greater confusion. At p. 16 of the paper-book he says:

"The Daroga made a list of the articles found —Proves Ex. 10—and took the articles into custody Identifies 6 and 14."

In the lists on p. 46, Exs. 6 to 14 are described in this way:

"Nima (khutis containing articles written in the search lists, Exs. 8 to 12 as in lower Court's exhibits.")

The record has been made with reference to exhibits which according to the said list were articles found not only in the course of the search evidenced by Ex. 10 but in the course of searches to which Exs. 8 to 12 of the lower Court's exhibits correspond. This clearly is a confusion which ought to have been cleared up in the course of the trial. Furthermore, I find that when the witness was speaking about Exs. 11 and 13, the record that has been made of his evidence in connection with Ex. 11 is "Proves Ex. 11 and identifies Exs. 15—18": and with regard to Ex. 13 it has been recorded, "Proves Ex. 13 and Ex. 18—24." Exhibit 18 therefore is an article which is found in the record of the evidence of this witness as referring to the search list Ex. 11 as also to the search list Ex. 13. This again is impossible.

Turning to the evidence of identification in respect of the articles, it may be observed that considerable difficulty has been felt because there is nothing to indicate which particular item of the exhibits mentioned in the list at p. 46 corresponds to which particular item in a search list. To take one instance: if the evidence of Nella Mamud (P. W. No. 8) is referred to, it will be found on p. 18 that he says that he kept two khila balas or paunchis and two murkunies as security and the record states that these are Ex. 8, Ex. 23 as well as Ex. 22. Referring now to the list on p. 46 one finds that Ex. 8 and Ex. 23 are khila balas and Ex. 22 is a pair of gold murkunies. If one turns to the search lists in connection with the searches in the course of which these articles were recovered, one finds that in Ex. 10 'a bangle' is mentioned and in Ex. 13 'a silver bangle with a clip' is mentioned. If the evidence which this witness has given as regards identification of these khila balas has to be considered as satisfactory, then one will have to assume that in respect of two items of articles which form a pair, one can properly be described as 'a bangle' and the other as 'a bangle with a clip.' It is not for the Court to be placed in such a situation that it will have to make such an assumption for the purpose of connecting the accused with the crime upon the evidence of identification which is given in this way. Four persons having stood their trial together, it is reasonable to expect that evidence should be given and recorded in such a way that it would be possible for each one of them to know what the allegation of the prosecution is as regards the articles that each of them has produced and how the prosecution has sought to prove that these articles have been identified as being articles belonging to or in the possession of the deceased at the time the crime was committed. When in a case of this nature there are several search lists, in each of which several items of property are mentioned, the prosecution ought to prove their case with regard to the different items severally, and the different items of property or different groups thereof mentioned in a search list ought to be separately and consecutively numbered either by letters or figures or by some other distinguishing marks and the same numbering should be followed while recording the evidence of witnesses relating to the searches to which those search lists refer. If that procedure is adopted, there will be no difficulty on the part of the Court in appreciating the evidence that is adduced in respect of the searches.

As regards the mode of leading evidence that was adopted in this case, I shall now say a few words, because in this respect also some important defects have been noticed by us. In a capital case of this description it is important that the more important of the witnesses should be examined in such a way as would enable the Court to properly appreciate their evidence. The evidence should be led in sufficient detail and with due regard to the sequence of events, the facts which the witnesses saw or the acts which they did and also the reasons which actuated them to do the acts being narrated in an intelligent fashion. And it is only by this means that a clear and consistent account of the whole thing may be presented before the Judge and the jury. What I notice is that with respect to some of the more important witnesses in this case, who should have been examined in much fuller detail, the minimum of evidence that would in law be sufficient to establish the charges was adduced on behalf of the prosecution, leaving it to the defence to find out by cross-examination other facts and circumstances which would either go to support or to destroy the evidence which the witnesses gave. I wish to refer here to one instance and one instance only; but in doing so I wish to guard myself against being understood as indicating either that I consider the point to be of no importance from the point of view of the defence or that it is a point which is fatal to the prosecution. Two of these witnesses, namely witness No. 5, Mahatabuddin Chaudhury and witness No. 6, Fazal Karim Chaudhury, were certainly important witnesses and their evidence is that although they were residents of places somewhat distant from the place where the thana was, they came to the thana in the early morning of May 17, 1934, and remained with the Police Inspector for a considerable time. The prosecution thought that it was sufficient for them to have from each of these witnesses a bare statement that he came to the thana early in the morning of that day and it was left to the defence to find out why or for what reason the said witnesses thought it necessary to come to the thana at all. Such statements, devoid of circumstantial details, if presented before the Court, are of little avail so far as the question of drawing any inference from them is concerned, and can afford but little help to the Court in judging their truth or otherwise. The witnesses, at least the more important witnesses in a case of this nature, should be examined in much greater detail.

Nextly, as regards the production of articles, the evidence is relevant as evidence of conduct under s. 8, Evidence Act. Under that section statements accompanying or explaining conduct are also relevant as part of the conduct itself. What we have on the record, so far as the prosecution witnesses examined on this point are concerned, is only the fact that the articles were pointed out by the accused persons. If there was any statement made by an accused person at the time of the production or just before the production of the articles, then this statement may very well go in as part of the conduct under the provisions of s. 8, Evidence Act. So far as the evidence of conduct as adduced in this case is concerned, no attention seems to have been paid to this matter and the result is that the evidence is in one sense incomplete and imperfect. Lastly, I should also refer to one other matter, and that is this. There is one instance in which two of the accused persons are said to have jointly produced some of the articles. In leading evidence with regard to this part of the case, no attention seems to have been paid to the salutary principle laid down by Straight, J., of the Allahabad High Court in Queen-Empress v. Babu Lal (1), a principle which has been reiterated by this Court so recently as in Durlav Namasudra v. Emperor (2), namely that where joint acts of several persons are sought to be proved in order to ask the Court to draw an inference from such conduct, evidence should be led with some degree of particularity so that it may be possible for the Court to draw the necessary inference from the conduct of each one of the persons concerned in the act. The principle applies not only to evidence relevant under s. 27 but also to that under s. 8, Evidence Act.

Upon this state of the record we have seriously considered the course which ought to be adopted with regard to this case. We are aware that re-trial in a criminal case should not be ordered too lightly and should be avoided as much as possible. A re-trial certainly should not be ordered where it can be established that there is really no evidence to go before a jury, because to order a re-trial in such circumstances would be to put the accused to unnecessary harassment. That, however, cannot be said to be the position here. We are also aware that in a re-trial there is always a danger of the prosecution trying to fill up the gaps in the evidence that has been adduced; but this difficulty may very well be overcome if the Judge who presides at the trial is astute enough and if the jury are properly directed. Having regard to the importance of the case and the gravity of the crime, we think we ought to order a re-trial in this case if we have got the power to make such order.

The question then arises as to whether in a case under s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code, it is within the power of this Court to make an order for re-trial. This question has been argued by Mr. Biswas appearing on behalf of two of the accused persons and it is necessary that we should express our view on it. The argument that has been addressed to us, as I understand it, is this: that although the High Court in a reference under s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code, can exercise the powers which are conferred upon a Court of appeal and which may ordinarily be exercised by a Court dealing with an appeal, the exercise of such powers is subject to the condition that it is the High Court which has got to pass the final order of acquittal or conviction; in other words, it is argued that although this Court sitting on a reference under s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code, may make orders such as are contemplated by s. 426 as regards the release of an accused person on bail or under

s. 428 as regards the calling for further evidence and so on, it is not competent to make any order which would be inconsistent with its function as a Court of appeal which has got the duty to discharge of either convicting or acquitting an accused person. This as I understand it, is the argument that has been put forward by Mr. Biswas in this connection.

Now in support of this argument a good deal of reliance has been placed upon the expression "and subject thereto" which appears in sub-s. (3) of the section and special reliance has been placed upon two words appearing in it, namely the word "and" and also the word "shall." Some difficulty no doubt is felt by reason of the use of words to which Mr. Biswas has thus referred, because the use of the words may be taken as suggesting that the provision which follows them is a mandatory provision. But his argument, if accepted, would amount to this that the words "subject thereto" should be read as being equivalent to the expression "subject nevertheless to the provision that." The sub-section may be divided for the purposes of the present argument into two portions—the first portion saying "the High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal," and the second portion saying "it shall, after considering the entire evidence" and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions "Judge and the jury, acquit or convict such accused .....;" and these two portions are joined together by the expression "and subject thereto." As I have said, to adopt this argument would be to regard the expression "and subject thereto" as being equivalent to the expression "and subject nevertheless to the provision that;" in other words, the first portion of the sub-section to which I have referred would have to be treated as being subject to the second portion—the dominating portion which directs, according to the argument, that whatever powers a Court of appeal may exercise in matters under s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code, it will eventually have to pass an order of conviction or acquittal.

I do not think that this argument is well founded. There is, I admit, a certain amount of difficulty in construing this sub-section, having regard to the words that have been used. The difficulty has been created by piecemeal amendments which s. 307, Criminal Precedure Code, has several times undergone, since its original enactment, to meet difficulties pointed out from time to time. There are certainly some difficulties: one of them, for instance, is that although the word "any" is used, there are powers which a Court of appeal possesses under s. 423 but which cannot possibly be exercised by a Court sitting on a reference under s. 307, e. g., the power to order a commitment: again cls. (a) and (b), s. 423 speak of "conviction," "acquittal" and "finding and sentence" expressions which are wholly inapposite to a case under s. 307. But notwithstanding all these difficulties, to give effect to the sub-section taken as a whole one is forced to the conclusion that the second part of the sub-section is more or less redundant and that the first part of the sub-section contains the governing provision under which the High Court is to act in a reference under s. 307.

It appears that s. 307 first came into the statute book as s. 263, Act X of 1872. Under that section there were cases in which it was held that the High Court was not competent to make an order for re-trial. Later on, the sub-section in its present form, or at least in its present form so far as this particular matter is concerned, came into being by the enactment of Act XIII of 1896. In 1899 Sir Arthur Collins, C. J., and Benson, J., in Queen-Empress v. Anga Valayan (3) at p. 18* referring to the amendment made by Act XIII of 1896 observed thus:

> "We might no doubt order a new trial by the Sessions Judge for the offence under s. 396, but that would be attended with obvious inconveniences."

So that in the opinion of the learned Judges in that case a re-trial could be ordered under the provisions of sub-s. (3), s. 307, Criminal Procedure Code, as it then stood. Since then there has been, as I understand, no case in which the power to retrial has been disputed and on the other hand, orders of re-trial have been freely and frequently made by this Court while dealing with references under s. 307 of the Code. Some of the instances in which such a re-trial has been ordered will be found in the following cases. Emperor v. Rajendra Raj (4).—This was a case in which there was a misjoinder of charges in the course of the trial that had been held. Empero

v. Nazir Ali Beg (5)—In this case the trial was vitiated by misconduct on the part of the jury. Emperor v. Profulla Kumar Mazumdar (6)—In this case a re-trial was ordered upon a new charge which the High Court thought should have been framed upon the evidence that had been adduced. Emperor v. Nani Mandal (7). —The trial in this case was held in contravention of the provisions of ss 342 and 364, Criminal Procedure Code.

Coming to more recent times there have been quite a number of cases, not reported, in which orders for re-trial have been passed from time to time by different Division Benches of this Court. I am not suggesting for a moment that because the point was not taken in any of the cases, before now the point has not to be considered, but on a question of construction of a statute the fact that it has been interpreted by the Court in a particular way for a sufficient length of time is relevant. I am of opinion that under sub-s. (3), s. 307, the High Court has ample power in a case, in which there has been no proper or adequate trial, to make an order that the accused persons should be re-tried.

On all these considerations I hold that the reference should be accepted in part, that the verdict of the jury in this case should be set aside and that the case should be sent back to be re-tried upon charges under ss. 302 and 392, Indian Penal Code. Having regard to the circumstances of the case, such re-trial should be held by some Judge other than the Sessions Judge, preferably by an Additional Judge to be deputed for the purpose. If the deputation of an Additional Judge for this purpose cannot be conveniently arranged for, the re-trial should be held by the Sessions Judge of Dinajpore.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s 3 (5) (a)—Sale of insolvent's property by Receiver, whether a sale in execution of order of Court—Whether subject to pre-emption—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 59, 68.

The sale of the property of an insolvent by the Receiver is not a sale in execution of an order of the Court within the meaning of s. 3, sub-s. (5) (a), Punjab Pre-emption Act of 1913 and consequently is subject to the right of pre-emption. Sheobaran Singh v. Kulsumunnissa (1), Sankaran v. Narasimhalu Anjanevulu (2) and Venkatachelam Chettiar v. Murugesan (3), relied on.

S. C. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated May 8, 1932.

Messrs. M. L. Puri and Mehr Chand Sud, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nawal Kishore, for the Respondents.

Judgment*.—This appeal arises out a suit for pre-emption of certain land instituted by one Gurbakhsh Singh. The vendor was a Receiver appointed in the insolvency of the owner of the land. The vendee disputed the right of the plaintiff to claim pre-emption on the ground that the sale by the Receiver was a sale in execution of an order of a Civil Court within the meaning of s. 3, sub-s. (5) (a), Punjab Pre-emption Act of 1913. Eventually the point came before two of us sitting in Division Bench. The matter appearing to be of importance and not concluded by the authority of any judgment of this Court, we requested the Chief Justice to appoint a Full Bench.

Mr. Nawal Kishore argues on behalf of the respondents that a sale by the Receiver is a sale in execution of an order of a Civil Court and, therefore, free from pre-emption. We have, therefore, to decide whether such a sale is a sale in execution of an order of a Court or not.

The Receiver is, under s. 56, Provincial Insolvency Act, appointed by the Court. By the same section the property of the insolvent vests in the Receiver. Section 59 of the same Act gives certain powers to the Receiver. One of these is the power to sell any part of the property of the insolvent. That he may do without leave of the Court. The same section gives him authority to do other things only by leave of the Court. By s. 68 any person aggrieved by the action of the Receiver has a right to apply to the Court and the Court may affirm, reverse or modify the act or decision complained of. It appears to us, therefore, that the act of the Receiver in selling the property of an insolvent cannot be said to be an act in execution of an order of the Court. If it were such an act, there would then appear to be a right of appeal to the Court from its own order. It is argued, however, that the act of an officer appointed by the Court is the act of the Court itself; that indeed the Receiver is the agent and the Court is the principal in any transaction by the Receiver. We cannot agree. It is not true to say that the act of every person appointed by a superior authority is the act of that superior authority. It depends upon the terms of the appointment and the authority given to the person appointed. The Receiver is appointed by the Court but the power of sale is conferred upon him by the Statute and not by the Court. Further, under s. 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, the whole of the property of the insolvent vests "in the Court or in a Receiver as hereinafter provided." The property vests in the Court if the Court does not appoint a Receiver, but, if a Receiver is appointed it vests in him. It appears to us, therefore, that the proper construction of all the relevant sections in the Act makes it clear that the Act does not make the sale of the property of an insolvent by the Receiver a sale in execution of an order of the Court within the meaning of s. 3, sub-s. (5) (a), Punjab Pre-emption Act of 1913.

We are confirmed in our opinion on this point by a consideration of the judgment of the Privy Council in Sheobaran Singh v. Kulzumunnisa (1). The High Court at Allahabad decided that the sale by an Official Assignee was an involuntary sale carried out against the wishes of the true owner by a Court and that, therefore, the right of pre-emption did not apply. Their Lordships of the Privy Council, however, took the opposite view, holding that the Official Assignee took the property of the bankrupt exactly as it stood when in possession of the insolvent with all its advantages and burdens. Their Lordships were not considering the Punjab Pre-emption Act; but they did decide that a sale by an Official Assignee was not a sale by the Court.

The same point arose in Sankaran v. Narasimhalu Anjanevulu (2). A Full Bench of five Judges of the Madras High Court decided (one learned Judge dissenting) that a sale by a Official Receiver in insolvency was not a transfer by operation of law or by or in execution of a decree or order of a Court. In Venkatachelam Chettiar v. Murugesan (3), a Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court decided that a sale of property by a Receiver was an act of the Receiver within s. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act.

We, therefore, answer the question referred to us as follows: The act of an Official Receiver in selling the property of an insolvent is not an act in execution of the order of a Court and is, therefore, subject to the right of pre-emption. The case will now go back to the Division Bench for disposal according to law.

A Second Class Magistrate is not competent to pass a sentence of imprisonment for breach of an order under s. 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code directing payment of maintenance. Order.—I concur in the view of the District Magistrate that a Second Class Magistrate is not competent to pass a sentence of imprisonment for breach of an order under s. 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure directing payment of maintenance. Even assuming that the words "any Magistrate" in s. 490 of the Code of Criminal Procedure have not been used with reference to the class of Magistrates referred to in ss. 488 and 489 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the power to enforce an order of maintenance does not necessarily include the power to sentence the person, against whom it was passed, to imprisonment. The order of the Second Class Magistrate, Coimbatore, dated December 8, 1933, is, therefore, set aside.

In the matter of CONTEMPT OF HIGH COURT

Contempt of Court—Held, the article amounted to gross contempt of Court.

Any act or writing tending to undermine the authority of Courts of Justice, or to influence the result of pending litigation, is a most serious offence

The gravamen of the article in question was that judgment after judgment was being given in the High Court arbitrarily, and that neither law nor facts were discussed, before judgment was delivered. It further said that it was necessary "to restore the confidence of the public that law is discussed and facts are digested before cases are disposed of." It alleged that summary justice was being administered;

Held, that there could be no doubt that the article was as gross a contempt of Court and misrepresentation of proceedings in Court as it was possible to imagine. Nothing could have been more calculated to bring the Court into contempt and to lower its authority with the general public. Re: Read and Huggonson (1), referred to Diwan Ram Lal, for the Crown.

Mr. Sleem, for the Accused.

Young, C. J.—A Division Bench of this Court, on November 7, 1934, issued a Rule nisi to Mr. S. R. Iyer, Editor, and Mr. J. C. Roy, Printer and Publisher, of a journal called "Roy's Weekly," Delhi, to show cause why they should not be committed or otherwise dealt with in accordance with law for contempt of this Court. In obedience to the Rule, both respondents have, to-day, appeared and are represented by Counsel.

In the issue of the said newspaper, dated October 8, 1934, there was published an article headed "A wayfarer's diary." There also appeared a prominent headline in the front page as follows: "Storm ahead of Lahore High Court." It is unnecessary fully to quote the said article. The gravamen of it however was that judgment after judgment was being given in this High Court arbitrarily, and that neither law nor facts were discussed, before judgment was delivered. It further said that it was necessary "to restore the confidence of the public that law is discussed and facts are digested before cases are disposed of." It alleged that summary justice was being administered. The writer of the article said that the article was based upon information received from various sections of the community.

There can be no doubt that this article is as gross a contempt of Court and misrepresentation of proceedings in Court as it is possible to imagine. Nothing could have been more calculated to bring this Court into contempt and to lower its authority with the general public. It is difficult to believe that any responsible person could have given such information to the writer of the article. As said by Lord Hardwicke, Lord Chancellor, in Re Read and Huggonson (1),

"Nothing is more incumbent upon Courts of Justice than to preserve their proceedings from being misrepresented."

Mr. Sleem, who appears on behalf of the two respondents, has filed affidavits by them. The printer of the article says that he had not read the article, and that he regrets very much that the article and the headline in question should have appeared in the paper. The editor admits that he is the author of the article and the headline complained of, and goes on to say that in writing the article and the headline in question, he was misled by the information he received. He too regrets the writing of the article and withdraws it. He denies the intention to bring the Hon'ble Judges and this Hon'ble Court or the administration of justice and authority of law into disrespect and contempt. He realizes that the language used by him was improper and liable to convey the impression that he intended to scandalise this Hon'ble Court, though that was not his intention. He finally deeply regrets the publication and tenders his sincere and unqualified apology.

As it is now some years since any action has been taken by this Court for contempt, and as both respondents apologise and withdraw, and the writer of the article acknowledges that he was misled, I think it is open to this Court to treat the offence on this occasion, leniently. This, however, must not be taken as a precedent. In future this Court will treat severely anything savouring of contempt of Court, and I consider it only right that this warning should be given to the public in this Province. There are far too many attempts by the public to interfere with the Court and Judges in the discharge of their duty of administering justice, both as regards pending cases and attacks upon Judges themselves. It is primarily the duty of this Court to see that this ceases. Any act or writing tending to undermine the authority of Courts of Justice, or to influence the result of pending litigation, is a most serious offence. I hope this warning will be sufficient to check this practice.

Taking this view of the matter, I am of opinion that the ends of justice will be satisfied in this case by discharging the Rule against the printer, and by ordering the Editor to pay Rs. 150, the costs of the Government Advocate.

Addison, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 15—Applicability — Inquiry as to unsoundness of mind—Nature of—Decree in favour of plaintiff who brings suit on behalf of person alleged to be of unsound mind—No inquiry as to unsoundness of mind—Lower Appellate Court directing inquiry by trial Court—Held, that such inquiry should be held by lower Appellate Court.

In order that O. XXXII, r. 15, Civil Procedure Code, should be applicable in the case of a person who has not been adjudged to be of unsound mind the words of the rule require something more than a finding after an inquiry that a person is of unsound mind it should be found on enquiry that by reason of unsoundness of mind or mental infirmity, the person is incapable of protecting his rights as a plaintiff or as a defendant.

Plaintiff brought a suit on behalf of a person alleged to be of a unsound mind. The trial Court, without inquiring as to the unsoundness of mind as required by O. XXXII, r. 15, Civil Procedure Code, passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal by the defendant, the lower Appellate Court passed an order directing the trial Court to hold an inquiry:

Held, that the enquiry under r. 15, O. XXXII, should have been held by the Appellate Court itself because the enquiry was not likely to be a lengthy or a protracted one. On the result of such enquiry if such unsoundness of mind as is required by the rule has been made out, the Court would hold that the trial that was held in the Court of first instance, was in order, and it would be necessary for the lower Appellate Court to dispose of the appeal on merits. If, on the other hand, it came to the conclusion that such unsoundness of mind as is contemplated by the rule has not been made out, it will have to be held that the plaint that was presented was not in order and as a necessary consequence of such a finding it would have to be held further that the proceedings that followed were not proceedings taken in accordance with law and consequently the decree that was passed in the suit would have to be held a nullity.

C. A. from a appellate order of the Additional Sub-Judge, Chittagong, dated March 9, 1933.

Mr. Nripenura Chandra Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The substance of the contention that has been urged on behalf of the appellant in this appeal relates to the question whether there should now be an enquiry such as is contemplated by r. 15, O. XXXII of the Code. The learned Judge was of opinion that inasmuch as there has been no adjudication of the question of soundness of mind of the plaintiff who has not been adjudged to be of unsound mind, there must be an enquiry for the purpose of determining whether by reason of unsoundness of mind or mental infirmity, the said plaintiff was incapable of protecting his interests as plaintiff. It is true that there is some evidence in the shape of statements that are to be found on the record which would indicate that it was the case of the defendants as well as that the aforesaid person was of unsound mind. But the words of the rule require something more, namely that it should be found on enquiry that by reason of unsoundness of mind or mental infirmity the person is incapable of protecting his rights as a plaintiff or as a defendant. Such a finding will have to be arrived at and it must be arrived at upon an enquiry properly held. This disposes of the main contention that has been urged in support of this appeal. But even though that contention is disposed of against the appellant, the question that arises further is what should be the order which should be made in this case. We think it is not necessary that the enquiry in this case should be held by the trial Court and we are of opinion that the directions which the learned Subordinate Judge had given as regards the course to be adopted on the completion of enquiry are not correct. We are of opinion that the enquiry under r. 15, O. XXXII should be held by the learned Subordinate Judge himself. In our opinion, such an enquiry should be held by the learned Subordinate Judge himself because we do not apprehend that the enquiry is likely to be a lengthy or a protracted one.

We are further of opinion that if on the result of such enquiry the learned Judge thinks that such unsoundness of mind as is required by the rule has been made out, he will hold that the trial that was held in the Court of first instance, although there was no express order appointing Narendra Lall Bhattacharyya, father of the plaintiff, as his next friend was in order, and in that case it will be necessary for the learned Judge to go into the merits of appeal in order to dispose of it, If, on the other hand, he comes to be of opinion that such unsoundness of mind as is contemplated by the rule has not been made out, it will have to be held that the plaint that was presented was not in order and as a necssary consequence of such a finding, it will have to be held further that the proceeding that followed were not proceedings taken in accordance with law and consequently the decree that was passed in the suit will have to be held as a nullity. In the latter event, it will, of course, be open to the representatives of the alleged lunatic to institute a fresh suit, subject, of course, to any just exception as to limitation or otherwise that may be taken thereof. Costs of this appeal will abide the result, hearing fee two gold mohurs.

Per *Mehta, A. J. If subsequently that interpretation is found fault with by a Full Bench, so that the very act which at one time was not looked upon as an offence is to be regarded as an offence, the altered interpretation should not have a restrospective effect as if the subject should have anticipated the second decision of the High Court. Ferrers, J. C.—In the Court of the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, on August 14, 1934, Kodumal, son of Ochiram was charged with purchasing half of two return tickets and attempting to travel therewith. Kodumal admitted that he purchased both the third class and intermediate half tickets and produced the same at the gates to get into the train and travel with these tickets. He did not, however, plead guilty. By the prosecution it was supposed that the acts which Kodumal had admitted were punishable by s. 144 of the Act 9 of 1890. The learned Magistrate did not, however, take this view. His judgment is brief. He says:

"In view of the Sind Court ruling Devkisandas v. Emperor (1), I acquit the accused under s. 245, Criminal Procedure Code."

The Government was dissatisfied with this conclusion. It considered that the ruling of the High Court in Devkishindas v. Emperor, (1), requires to be re-considered. Accordingly it directed the Public Prosecutor for Sind, to lodge an appeal against the order of acquittal under s. 417, Criminal Procedure Code. A reference to the case on which the learned Magistrate relies shows that this Court has committed itself to the following proposition:

"Section 114, Railways Act, does not apply to the purchasers or transferees of tickets, the transferors alone being punishable under that section."

This doctrine may justify the learned Magistrate, but we agree with the executive Government in thinking that it requires re-consideration. The judgment contains these words:

(1) 112 Ind. Cas. 771; A I R 1928 Sind 191; 30 Cr. L J 3; 23 S L R 39.

"It is to be noticed that in some commentaries on the Railways Act the word purchase in s 114 is written 'purchases.' This has apparently led to the erroneous view that the section renders punishable both vendors and purchasers."

The learned Judges who delievered this judgment probably had before them the fifth edition of the Unrepealed General Acts of the Governor-General-in-Council. That edition certainly does show the word "purchase" instead "purchases." This appears to be a mere typographical error. Under s. 78, Evidence Act, the proper method of proving an Act is the Gazette of India. If there is a conflict between the publication in the Gazette and any other copies of the Act printed by the Superintendent of Government Printing, preference should be given to that in the Gazette of India: Subramania Aiyar v. Shanmugam Chettiar (2). Now, the Act was originally published in Gazette of India on March 22, 1890. We find that the word in question appears in the form of "purchases" and not "purchase." In this form, it was repeated in various editions and the error does not appear to have crept in until the edition of 1928. That it is a typographical error does not admit of any reasonable doubt. It is only by some force that the word "purchase" can be made to bear any sense whatever; and that sense is in conflict with the latter part of the section which, in any case, imposes an "additional" fine upon the purchaser of such a return ticket. The matter is too plain to require any prolonged discussion. We are all of opinion that the decision in Devkisandas v. Emperor (1), rests upon mere typographical error and requires correction. We think that s. 114, Railways Act, does apply to purchasers and transferees of tickets and not to the transferors alone. This disposes of the only question of law. The facts are admitted by the offender.

One of the Judges composing this Full Bench is of opinion that the offence might be dealt with under s. 562, Criminal Procedure Code, and the offender discharged after due admonition. This view does not commend itself to the majority of the Bench. It is not alleged that the offender knew the ruling in Devkisandas's case (1) and was misled by it. Moreover, he did not merely purchase these two tickets. With one of them to attempted to travel. This would be an offence on any reading of the section.

Such offences are easy to commit but not easy to detect. When detection has been successfully effected, we do not think an offender should go scot-free, even if he has not been convicted before. Our order will therefore be, that Kodumal is convicted of an offence punishable under s. 114, Railways Act, and the sentence upon him is a fine of Rs. 5. Out of this fine, if recovered, in accordance with s. 115, Railways Act, Rs. 4-6-0 being the value of the single fare will be paid to the Railway Administration.

Mehta, A. J. C.—On the question of the interpretation of s. 114, Railwas Act, IX of 1890, I am in perfect agreement with the judgment just dictated by the learned Judicial Commissioner. With the final order I regret, however, I cannot agree on principle; although the fact of my differing will not make any difference to the accused because the majority of this Bench is in favour of recording a conviction and inflicting a fine.

I am of the opinion that when a particular penal section of a statute like the Indian Railways Act has been interpreted in a particular way in favour of a subject by a Division Bench of a High Court, the subject has a right to say that he has not committed any offence, that he had no guilty intention whatsoever in doing an act in the belief that the interpretation was correct. If subsequently that interpretation is found fault with by a Full Bench, so that the very act which at one time was not looked upon as an offence is to be regarded as an offence, the altered interpretation should not have a retrospective effect as-if the subject should have anticipated the second decision of the High Court.

I think this is a fit case in which even if a technical conviction is recorded, the accused should have the benefit of s. 562 (1) (A), Criminal Procedure Code. His plea was that he did what according to a decision of this Court was not an offence. The trial Court upheld the plea. On the Railway Company's insistence, the accused actually puchased a fresh ticket and travelled under that ticket. So that he has caused no wrongful gain or wrongful loss to anybody. I do not understand why the Railway Company should get the fare twice over. There is thus no necessity for the imposition of a fine by way of penalty.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 10—Absolute condition or limitation—Property given to son by father on condition that the son will not alienate during father's lifetime—Condition, if void—Hindu Law—Family arrangement.

Where a Hindu father by way of family arrangement gives certain property to one of his sons but imposes the condition that the son will not alienate some of the said property during the lifetime of the father, the condition is not void under s. 10, Transfer of Property Act, the condition not being absolute. Muhammad Raza v. Abbas Bandi Bibi (1), followed

Judgment.—Took Chand had four sons. Ram Kishen is his son by his first wife, while Daulat Ram, Pokhar Das and Vir Bhan are his issues by the second wife. On January 16, 1932, Took Chand executed Ex. P-1 in favour of Ram Kishen, defendant No. 1. In this document he mentions that Ram Kishen had separated from him some time ago and had been carrying on a shop on his own account and that, as Ram Kishen is desirous of getting his proportionate share in the immovable property, such property may be given to him whereupon he shall relinquish all his claims to the rest of the property. Under these circumstances he was given two houses on account of his relationship as the son of the executor subject to the condition that, so far as house No. 1 was concerned, he was entitled to mortgage or sell it for the purpose of carrying on his shop; but as regards house No. 2 he was not to mortgage or sell or transfer it in any shape or form, and if Ram Kishen transferred the house No. 2, then the executant (the father) would be entitled to recover it by having recourse to formal legal proceedings. It further recited that the restriction as regards transfer has been imposed because Ram Kishen is a spendthrift. By acting under Ex. P-1 Ram Kishen would be enabled to maintain himself and his children on the income of this property. Neither the executant nor his other sons, who lived with him jointly, nor his wife shall have any connection with this property except in the manner stated above. After the death of the executant the obligee shall have the right to transfer the property in house No. 2 in any way he liked.

It would thus appear that the two houses were given to Ram Kishen by his father under Ex. P-1. He was given full power of disposition over house No. 1, but as regards house No. 2, he was prohibited from transferring it during the life-time of his father. Ram Kishen did not keep it very long after this document had been executed in his favour and on December 14, 1932, transferred this house by way of exchange to Radha Kishen. Thereupon on March 14, 1933, the present suit was brought by Took Chand and his three minor sons for possession of a house detailed in the plaint. A number of issues were framed but Issue No. 6 alone needs mention. It runs as follows:—

"Is the condition in restraint of alienation void?"

The trial Court decreed the plaintiffs' suit. Defendant No. 2 went up in appeal and the lower Appellate Court having found that the condition as regards restraint on alienation was not binding upon Ram Kishen, has dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs have come up to this Court in second appeal.

The case was fully and ably argued by the learned Counsel for the parties and a number of cases were cited. Most of these cases were helpful in a way, but they depended naturally upon the interpretation of the particular documents which were before the Courts for consideration, and which had to be considered in order to determine the legal effect of the restraint which was sought to be placed upon the donees of the proprietary title. In the present case we are concerned with the case of Hindus who are governed by the Mitakshara law which has been modified in the Punjab to this extent that during the lifetime of the father his sons cannot enforce a partition. Took Chand's first wife was dead and he had married a second wife with whom he had a second family. Under these circumstances Ram Kishan would naturally be isolated, while Took Chand and his younger children with his wife would form a separate group. As the document shows Ram Kishen demanded his proper share in the family property. The father could have easily refused it and Ram Kishen could not have enforced his right by bringing a suit for partition. Ram Kishen is stated to be a man of extravagant habits. In view of these circumstances the father wanted to accommodate Ram Kishen to this extent that in his lifetime he gave him a part of his property. Over a portion of it the father gave him absolute power of disposition, but as regards the other moiety, he stipulated that in his lifetime he should not make any transfer of it, although after his death he would be free to do whatever he liked. It was a family arrangement and the mutual differences were composed by Ram Kishen, the eldest son, being given a part of the property, on relinquishing all his interests in the remainder of the property which was left with the father and his minor sons by his second wife.

In deciding this case the principle of law, as embodied in s. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act, must be borne in mind. It lays down that:

"Where property is transferred subject to a condition or limitation, absolutely restraining the transferee or any person claiming under him from parting with or disposing of his interest in the property, the condition of limitation is void..."

Now in the present case the house No. 2 was transferred completely to Ram Kishen in the sense that neither the father nor his children by his 2nd wife had any interest left in it. But the condition which was sought to be imposed was not absolute, it extended only to the life time of the father after which Ram Kishen would be free to dispose of the property in any manner he liked. It is impossible to define the word 'absolutely' which occurs in s. 10 in a manner which would apply to every possible case that might arise, but the word should be construed in a reasonable manner. The mere fact that in the present case the son, who has obtained a considerable advantage as a result of the family arrangement, is merely asked not to alienate a part of the property during the lifetime of the father, cannot be said to be an absolute restraint upon his powers as a transferee of the house No. 1.

In Muhammad Raza v. Abbas Bandi Bibi (1), the subject is fully discussed by their Lordships of the Privy Council and the provisions of s. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act, have been considered. In that case there was a compromise under which a lady was given an estate of inheritance which was nevertheless saddled with the restraint that she was not to alienate the property to a stranger, which meant outside the family. The lady did make an alienation in favour of strangers. On the death of the lady her heirs brought a suit for setting aside the alienation made by her in favour of the outsiders. It was argued on behalf of the defendants that the gift in favour of the lady of the estate was complete and that the restriction imposed upon her was void and should be disregarded. This contention was repelled and their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that:

"In this case the restriction was not absolute but partial; it forbids only alienation to strangers."

I quote the following passage from the judgment of their Lordships:—

"Judging the matter upon abstract grounds, their Lordships would have thought that, where a person had been allowed to take property upon the express agreement that it shall not be alienated outside the family, those who seek to make title, through a direct branch of this agreement, could hardly support their claim by an appeal to those high-sounding principles of justice equity and good conscience and it must be remembered in this connection that family arrangements are specially favoured in Courts of Equity."

Referring to the provisions of law, enunciated in s. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act, their Lordships further observed that, in view of the terms of the section, it would be impossible to assert that such an agreement, as they were considering was contrary to justice, equity and good conscience. Their Lordships accordingly treating the document as a compromise agreement held that the provision contained in it restricting the lady from transferring the property outside the family cannot be treated otherwise than as being binding upon her.

In the present case, too, as already mentioned, the restraint is not an absolute one and as between the father on the one side and Ram Kishen on the other, it must be held binding on Ram Kishen. This being so, I would allow the appeal, set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court on Issue No. 6, and remand the case to the trial Court for decision of the case on the merits. Costs here and hereafter would abide the result.

P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 86, if applies*

Under s. 7, U. P. Local Rates Act, the superior proprietor has a legal right to recover the cesses from his lessees or under-proprietors. A lease under which the superior proprietor undertook to pay the old chaukidari and patwari rates that were then recoverable from landlords does not take away that right. Nor does an order of the Settlement Commissioner that the defendants-pukhtadars (lessees) were not liable for cesses take away the legal rights conferred upon the plaintiff who is the superior proprietor to recover the local cesses imposed by the Local Government under the U. P. Local Rates Act. Section 86, U P. Land Revenue Act has no applicability to the case. Pirthipal Singh v. Hari Saran Das (1), referred to

S. R. A. against an order of the District Judge of Rae Bareli, dated July 18, 1932.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Appellant.

Judgment.—These are three connected appeals filed by the plaintiff from the judgment and decree passed by the learned District Judge of Rae Bareli, dated July 18, 1932, confirming the judgment and decree of the Court of Thakur Birendra Bikram Singh, Assistant Collector of Rae Bareli, who dismissed the plaintiff's claim for cesses.

The plaintiff Syed Mohammad Agha has now come up in Second Appeal. The sole point for determination in these appeals is whether the plaintiff, who is the superior proprietor of the village, is entitled to claim cesses from the defendants-respondents, who are lessees holding under-proprietary rights in the land in suit. The trial Court held that the defendants were not liable to pay any cesses in view of the stipulation made by them or their predecessors-in-interest in the lease of May 28, 1878. The learned District Judge in appeal upheld the finding of the trial Court on this point by making a reference to the order of the Settlement Commissioner, dated March 25, 1931, in which that officer held that the defendants-pukhtadars were not liable for cesses. The learned District Judge found that by this order of the Settlement Commissioner, the very foundation of the plaintiff's claim for recovery of cesses was taken away from him and that the lease also provided that whatever taxes besides revenue were to be paid would be borne not by the lessees but by the lessor. I have heard the learned Counsel of both parties at some length. In my opinion these three connected appeals must succeed. Under s. 7 of Act I of 1914 (The U. P. Local Rates Act), the superior proprietor has a legal right to recover the cesses from his lessees or under-proprietors. The agreement or lease of May 28, 1878, upon which reliance is placed on behalf of the defendants-respondents cannot support their contention. In that lease the superior proprietor undertook to pay the old chaukidari and patwari rates that were then recoverable from landlords. A similar contention to that advanced before me on behalf of the defendants was raised in Pirthipal Singh v. Hari Saran Das (1). One of the contentions of the appellants in that case was that as there was no proof that at the time of the commencement of Act I of 1914 he was liable for the payment of any rates payable under the U. P. Local and Rural Police Rates Act of 1906, the decision of the lower Court was wrong and it was urged that if he paid anything at all he paid it under an agreement of the year 1866. This contention on behalf of the appellant was rejected by this Court in that case. Reference has also been made to a ruling of this Court reported in Har Narain Das v. Gajraj Singh (2), but the point decided in that case was different from the one that falls to be decided in the present appeals. In my opinion the decision of the learned District Judge cannot be upheld for the simple reason that the decision of the Settlement Commissioner upon which the lower Court relies cannot take away the legal rights conferred upon the plaintiff-appellant, who is the superior proprietor of the village, to recover the local cesses imposed by the Local Government under Act I of 1914. The agreement of 1878 upon which reliance is placed by the defendants-respondent also does not take away the plaintiff-appellant's right to sue for recovery of local cesses due to him and imposed under Act I of 1914. Section 86 of the Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) to which my attention has been invited by the learned Counsel for the respondents has also no applicability in the present case. In my opinion the plaintiff zamindar has a legal right under Act I of 1914 to recover the cesses from his lessees.

I accordingly allow these appeals, modify the judgments and decrees of the lower Courts and decree also the plaintiff's claim for cesses with costs throughout.

Lort-Williams, J.—This appeal arises out of a title suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant after his Miscellaneous Case under O. XXI, r. 97, Civil Procedure Code, was dismissed. The only point raised before us is upon the question of limitation. The petition under O. XXI was filed on May 14, 1925. On August 15, 1925, the order sheet shows that the opposite party was ready, but the petitioner prayed for time to produce evidence and one Sheikh Habib, a Civil Court peon, was examined on behalf of the opposite party and discharged. The case was then adjourned until September 5, for hearing. On September 5, the opposite party was ready, but the petitioner again prayed for time to produce evidence and it was ordered that the case be put up on September 12, for hearing. On September 12 the order sheet reads as follows:

"The petition of the auction-purchaser as regards Lot No. 15 is not opposed. A. P. adduces no evidence as regards Lot No. 17 claimed by the O. P. Mahendra N. Raj. Ordered the petition be allowed as regards Lot No. 16 and the A. P. be put in possession of the same. The petition is disallowed as regards Lot No. 17. The opposite party will get costs with Pleader's fee Rs. 4."

This order was signed by the Pleaders of the parties, Mr. G. P. Roy and Mr. D. Banerjee. The learned Advocate for the appellant has argued that this proceeding was not an investigation such as is contemplated by O. XXI, rr. 97, 98 and 99, Civil Procedure Code, and he has referred us to several cases in which a distinction was drawn between a proceeding under these sections which was dismissed for default and one in which an order was made after investigation. He has argued further that if there has been no such investigation, then the order made must have been on default, that such an order is not one which is contemplated by Art. 11-A, Limitation Act, and therefore he is not restricted to the 12 months, mentioned in that article during which he must institute his suit. His argument seems to amount to this, that because the auction-purchaser adduced no evidence with regard to Lot No. 17, and because his petition as regards Lot No. 16 was not opposed, therefore there was no inquiry or investigation by the Court within the meanings of those sections and, in effect, the order was passed in default of appearance. I am at a loss to understand how this argument can be justified. To begin with, one witness was called and examined by the opposite party and was discharged. Further, with regard to Lot No. 16, the opposite party raised no opposition and therefore it was wholly unnecessary to hear evidence with regard to that lot. As regards Lot No. 17, the auction-purchaser himself told the Court that he did not wish to adduce evidence. Yet the learned Advocate says that unless the Court demands evidence in such circumstances, it cannot be held to be an investigation within the meaning of the section. All that I need say is that, in my opinion, in the circumstances to which I have referred, there was clearly an investigation or an inquiry by the Court and an order made thereon. The learned Advocate sought to show by the form of the order sheet itself that his client was not present but the statement that the auction-purchaser adduced no evidence clearly means that he was present, either himself or by his Pleader, and either he or his Pleader told the Court that he did not desire to adduce evidence with regard to Lot No. 17. There is no substance in the contentions raised by the learned Advocate and this appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

M. C. Ghose, J.—Having regard to the case of Sardari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (1), there is, in my opinion, no doubt that there was sufficient investigation in this case so as to bring it under Art. 11-A, Limitation Act. I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BURMA
V. S. U. R. FIRM, RANGOON

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s 13—Fresh promissory notes issued by debtor for sum due under old note and interest thereon—Interest under old note treated as received by creditor, and making corresponding entries in accounts—Held, there was material for Income Tax Officer for assessing such interest to income-tax.

Where the assessees have elected to treat the interest due under the original loans as having been received and paid on the execution and delivery of the fresh promissory notes by the debtors, and the interest is entered as having been received both in the interest account and in the personal accounts of the respective debtors, and the creditors accepting the obligations of the debtors under the fresh promissory notes in substitution for the old debts and the interest due thereon, and in past years were content that the interest accruing in this manner should be assessed to income tax, in these circumstances it cannot be held that there were no materials before the Income Tax Officer which would justify him in concluding that these sums represented interest liable to assessment, which the assessee has regarded as being liquidated by delivery of fresh promissory note.

[Case-law referred to.]

In such cases if the assessees want to escape assessment for such interest, they should so adjust their accounts as to make it clear that the acceptance of a fresh promissory note is not taken as effecting payment of the interest due under the old loan.

C. R. from the Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma.

Mr. A. Eggar, for the Commissioner of Income-Tax.

Mr. K. C. Bose, for the Assessee.

Page, C. J.—This case raises an interesting question but when the facts are understood, in my opinion, it, presents no difficulty. The question propounded is:

"Whether there was material on which the Income-tax officer could conclude that the assessees' method of accounting was the mercantile or accrued method in respect of the sum of Rs. 23,373 interest from non-Chettyar debtors shown in the assessees' accounts as received and taxed in the assessment."

Now, in Mian Feroz Shah v. Commissioner of Income-Tax, Punjab (1) (at p. 692*) Lord Blanesburgh delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee, observed:

'Too much emphasis has, they think, throughout the case been attached to the use by income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner of the term 'mercantile system.' The finding of both in its essential substance was that the appellant's system of accounting, by whatever name called, required the inclusion in his accounts of 1925-1927 of the Rs. 90,618 referred to and the only question open to judicial determination is whether there was any evidence before these officers upon which they might so find."

These observations apply with equal force to the present case and the real question that falls for determination is:

"Whether there were materials before the income-tax officer upon which he could find that the sum of Rs. 23,373 was interest upon loans that had accrued to the assessees in the accounting year, and as such was assesseable to income-tax for the year 1933-1934."

The material facts are set out in the revised case stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax as follows:

"The assessees' actual method of accounting for transactions with non-Chettyar is as follows: So long as the original pro-note or document is in force only cash receipts from the debtor are shown in the accounts; but when this pro-note or document is cancelled and a fresh one executed of the principal of the loan and the interest accured on it, the principal and the interest are shown in the accounts as paid by the debtor. And it is only logical that the interest should be shown as paid by him since it now ranks as principal earning interest whereas the original pro-note only bore simple not compound interest In respect, therefore, of loans to non-Chettyars, for which fresh pro-notes or documents are taken, the assessees abandon the cash method and follow the mercantile method of accounting. For many years all Chettyars have been assessed without question on these sums of interest included in their pro-note or document and shown in their accounts as received. This practice was according to the provisions of s. 12 as understood by this department. Accordingly when the income-tax officer came to make the assessees' assessment for 1933-1934 and found that they had omitted to include in their return Rs. 23,373, which represented interest for which fresh pro-note had been taken from non-Chettyar debtors and which was shown in their accounts as received, he included the amount in the assessment. His order was upheld on appeal."

The Income-tax Officer in his assessment order stated:

"In the present case, however, the assessees according to the custom of the Chettyar community to which he belongs has always been treating interest included in the fresh pro-note or mortgage bond taken in a settlement of account to cover outstanding principal and interest as realised and there has been no objection thereto for the last so many years. Further the amount is shown in the assessees' book as interest realized both in the interest account and in the accounts of the debtors. This method of accounting has been regularly employed by the assessee as well as other members of his community and under s. 13 I am bound to compute income, profits and gains in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed by the asseesee, and to allow the asseseees to exclude the sum of Rs. 23,373-9-0 would be allowing him to change the methed of accounting hitherto adopted and thereby not properly deduce the income, profits and gains therefrom. It is also to be noted that the debtors in giving fresh pro-notes for the principal and interest already due have capitalized the amount due to the assessee and thereby undertaken to pay interest on the capitalized amounts and that a fresh contract has been entered in place of the old."

The case for the Crown is that the assessees, in order to postpone payment of income-tax until a reduction is made in the rate at which the tax is levied are wrongfully claiming that this sum of Rs. 23,373 is not income that accrued during the accounting year but represents unpaid interest due to them for the repayment of which they have received fresh promissory notes from their debtors as security. Now, it is well settled that a debt may be repaid in kind as well as in bullion: Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Bishop (2), Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar & Orissa (3) and Commissioner of Income Tax, Bihar & Orissa v. Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga (4). In Gresham Life Assurance Society v. Bishop (2), Lord Lindley observed:

"My Lords, I agree with the Court of Appeal that a sum of money may be received in more ways than one, e. g., by the transfer of coin or a negotiable instrument or other document which represents and produces coin and is treated as such by business men. Even a settlement in account may be equivalent to a receipt of a sum of money although no money may pass; and I am not myself prepared to say that what amongst business men is equivalent to a receipt of sum of money is not a receipt within the meaning of the statute which your Lordships have to interpret. But to constitute a receipt of anything, there must be a person to receive and a person from whom he receives, and something received by the former from the latter, and in this case that something must be a sum of money. A mere entry in an account which does not represent such a transaction does not prove any receipt, whatever else it may be worth."

And in Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. P. L. S. M. Firm (5), I had occasion to refer to the following observations of Lord Macmillan when delivering the judgment of the Board in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar & Orissa v. Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga (4):

"What the officer is directed to compute is not the assessees' receipts but the assessees' income, and in dubio what the assessee himself chooses to treat as income may well be taken to be income and to arise when he so chooses to treat it," and I added:

"although book entries purporting to relate to the receipt of income are not necessarily conclusive as to the quantum of the income to which they purport to refer, for the real income, profits and gains that have accrued during each accounting year are in every case to be determined by the income-tax officer as a matter of fact."

In the present case the assessees have elected to treat the interest due under the original loans as having been received and paid on the execution and delivery of the fresh promissory notes by the debtors, and the interest is entered as having been received both in the interest account and in the personal accounts of the respective debtors; and the creditors accepting the obligations of the debtors under the fresh promissory notes in substitution for the old debts and the interest due thereon, and in past years being content that the interest accruing in this manner should be assessed to income-tax. In these circumstances I am unable to hold that there were no materials before the income-tax officer which would justify him concluding that these sums, amounting in all to Rs. 23,373, represented interest liable to assessment in the year 1933-1934.

The assessees rely upon two judgments recently delivered by the Judicial Committee in Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-Tax, Bihar & Orissa (3) and Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar & Orissa v. Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga (4), but, in my opinion, both these cases, are clearly distinguishable, and afford no assistance to the assessees. In Raghunandan Prasad Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar & Orissa (3) the assessees kept their accounts on a cash basis and did not regard the interest under the old mortgage as having been liquidated by the execution and delivery to them of the new mortgage, and further, in their books of account the assessees in that case did not treat the interest under the old loan as having been received or paid. In Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar & Orissa v. Maharajadhiraj of Darbhanga (4):

"there was an arrangement affecting the whole indebtedness whereby certain assets were accepted in part satisfaction and promissory notes were taken for the balance,"

there was no continuous or open account, and in that case the general rule, therefore, prevailed that the giving of the promissory notes did not amount to payment, the promissory notes being merely conditional payment of the debts. In the present case, however, in my opinion, there is material to justify the conclusion that the assessees regarded the delivery of the fresh promissory notes as amounting to a liquidation of assessees' claim for interest, and the sum of Rs. 23,373 was treated by the assessees both in the interest account book and the books relating to the account of the respective debtors as being interest that had been received by the assessees from their debtors. The remedy for the difficulty in which the assessees find themselves in the present case lies with the assessees themselves; for I see no reason why in the future they should not so adjust their accounts as to make it clear that the acceptance of a fresh promissory note is not taken as effecting payment of the interest due under the old loan.

In the circumstances obtaining in the present case, however, I would answer the question as amended in the affirmative. The assessees will pay the costs of the Commissioner's Advocates fee, 10 gold mohurs.

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, MADRAS

P. R. A. L. M. MUTHUKARUPAN CHETTIAR—RESPONDENT

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 4 (2)—Firm—Retirement of one partner—Account taken of capital and profits—Share of retiring partner paid to him—Amount paid, if assessable as profits.

Where the assessee, a partner of a firm, retired from that firm, an account was taken of the capital and of the profits and the assessee was given his share and he went out of the firm with it:

Held, that upon the retirement of the assessee from the partnership, the partnership was dissolved as between all the other members and hence there must be deemed to have been an ascertainment of the shares of all the partners and distribution of the partnership assets. The fact that the other partners continued in business together did not affect the question their doing so being merely in the capacity on a new firm, the legal position being that the old firm had ceased to exist. As the retirement brought about a dissolution of the firm and as on such dissolution the capital and profits of the firm became consolidated, no portion of the amount received by the retiring partner could be assessed to income-tax as profits. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Siddha Gowdar & Sons (1) and Inland Revenue Commissioner v. Burrell (2), followed.

Messrs. K. Rajah Ayyar and V. Ramaswami Ayyar, for the Assessee.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Commissioner of Income-tax.

Beasley, C. J.—The question referred to us is whether on the facts of this case the sum of Rs. 38,305 is a receipt of capital or of profit assessable under s. 4 (2), Income-Tax Act. The petitioner was a partner in the S. P. K. A. A. M. Firm in Colombo. He retired from that firm and an account was taken of the capital and of the profits, etc., and the petitioner was given his share and went out of the firm with it. His contention is that his retirement from the firm brought about a dissolution of the firm and that on such a dissolution the profits and capital, etc., of the firm became consolidated into capital for distribution amongst the partners. He, therefore, contends that the sum in question cannot be assessed to income-tax as profits following the decision in Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Siddha Gowdar & Sons (1), in which the decision in Inland Revenue Commissioner

v. Burrell (2), was applied. The Commissioner of Income-tax contests this position and contends that the principal of the latter decision cannot be applied to the case of a partnership which is not a corporate body. That argument of course proceeds to the length of saying that the decision in Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Siddha Gowdar & Sons (1), was incorrect. I may here observe, however, that in that case it was put in the forefront of the Income-tax Commissioner's case that the principle laid down in Inland Revenue Commissioner v. Burrell (2), should be extended to the case of a partnership in India; and if the facts of this case are similar to the facts in that case, then as I see no reason for thinking that that case was incorrectly decided it must be applied. He seeks also to distinguish this case from that because he says that there was no stoppage of business or final dissolution of partnership accompanied by a distribution of assets.

This view completely ignores the provisions of s. 253 (7), Contract Act, which provides that in the absence of any contract to the contrary if from any cause whatsoever any member of a partnership ceases to be so, the partnership is dissolved as between all the other members. The legal position, therefore, is that upon the retirement of the petitioner from the partnership, the partnership was dissolved as between all the other members. It follows, therefore, that there must be deemed to have been an ascertainment of the shares of all the partners and indeed there certainly was one with regard to the petitioner and distribution of the partnership assets. It does not in the least degree, in my opinion, affect this question that the other partners continued in business together. Their doing so was merely in the capacity of partners in a new firm, the legal position clearly being that the old firm had ceased to exist. This case is not at all similar to another case relied upon by the Commissioner of Income-tax, viz., Arunachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income tax, Madras (3). There what was being considered was a partition of a Hindu joint family. In my view, totally different considerations apply to such a case as that. For the reasons I have already stated, the answer to the question referred must be that upon the facts of this case the sum of Rs. 38,305 is a receipt of capital and not of profit. The assessee will be allowed Rs. 250 costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 23, s. 9—Acquittal of plaintiff—Suit for damages for malicious prosecution—Limitation, when commences—Application for revision—Fresh period for bringing suit—Whether begins to accrue

So far as the first portion of Art. 23 of the Limitation Act is concerned, the limitation for filing a suit for compensation for malicious prosecution is one year from the date when the plaintiff is acquitted. The fact that the defendant files an application for revision against the order of acquittal obtained by the plaintiff in his favour does not enable the latter to assert that though time had once begun to run against him from the date of the order of his acquittal, yet, as he had to contest the application for revision filed against the order of acquittal, a fresh period of limitation for bringing his suit for damages began to accrue to him.

S. C. A. against an order of the Additional Sub-Judge, Unao, dated February 28, 1933.

Mr. L. S. Misra, for the Appellnat.

Mr. P. N. Chaudhri, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal from an appellate judgment and decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Unao dated February 28, 1933, confirming the judgment and decree passed by the Munsif of Purwa, in Unao, dated August 30, 1932.

The facts out of which this appeal arises are briefly as follows:—

On September 25, 1930, Sheo Narain, defendant-respondent, filed a complaint under s. 325 of the Indian Penal Code against Shankar Prasad, the plaintiff-appellant. The case was tried in the Court of the Honorary Magistrate of Unao District, Lala Triloki Nath, exercising Second class magisterial powers, and on September 23, 1930, the Honorary Magistrate acquitted Shankar Prasad. An application for revision was filed by Shiv Narain in the Court of the District Magistrate of Unao against the order of acquittal. The learned District Magistrate dismissed the application for revision on March 7, 1932. A second application for revision against the order of the District Magistrate and of the trial Court was filed in this Court and was dismissed on June 23, 1931. Shankar Prasad then filed the present suit for damages for malicious prosecution on March 3, 1932. A preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the defendant Sheo Narain that the suit was time-barred under Art. 23 of the Indian Limitation Act. The trial Court upheld the preliminary objection and dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground of its being time-barred. On appeal the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Unao agreed with the Munsif and upheld his decision and dismissed the appeal. Dissatisfied with the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff has filed this second appeal.

I have heard the learned Counsel of both parties at great length. The sole point for determination in this appeal is as to when did time begin to run against the plaintiff Shankar Prasad, who has filed this suit for damages for malicious prosecution.

Article 23 of the Indian Limitation Act clearly lays down that the period of limitation for a suit for compensation for malicious prosecution is one year from the date when the plaintiff is acquitted or the prosecution is otherwise terminated. It is clear that, as Shankar Prasad was acquitted by the order of the Honorary Magistrate dated December 23, 1930, and the present suit for damages was not filed until March 3, 1932, it is beyond one year from the date of the order of acquittal.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff appellant has, however, argued that the cause of action to the plaintiff in the present case accrued on June 23, 1932, when this Court dismissed the application for revision filed by Sheo Narain against the order of the District Magistrate. In support of his contention the learned Counsel has relied upon certain observations made by two learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in Madan Mohan Singh v. Ram Sundar Singh (1). He has also relied upon a ruling of the Madras High Court reported in Tangutri Sriramulu v. Virasilingam Garu 57 Ind. Cas. 635 (2) in which the learned Judges held that time commenced to run against the plaintiff from the date of the High Court's order dismissing the application for revision and that the second part of Art. 23 of Sch. I of the Indian Limitation Act was not necessarily excluded where there had been an order of acquittal.

On the other hand the learned Counsel for the defendant-respondent invited my attention to a decision of the Bombay High Court reported in Purshottam Vithaldas Shet v. Ravji Hari Athavale (3) in which it was held that under Art. 23 of the Indian Limitation Act the period of limitation for a suit for damages for malicious prosecution commenced to run from the date of acquittal or from the date of discharge and that proceedings taken in revision to get the order of discharge set aside did not suspend the cause of action. The same view was held in Narayan v. Seshayya (4) in which it was held that time began to run against the plaintiff from the date of the order of his acquittal.

For the purposes of deciding this appeal it is unnecessary for me to discuss the conflict of views between the Bombay and the Allahabad High Courts and to decide which view I was prepared to adhere to. So far as a case of acquittal is concerned, the three High Courts of Madras, Bombay and Allahabad are agreed that in a case where the prosecution of the plaintiff ended in an acquittal, the language of Art. 23 of Sch. I of the Indian Limitation Act left no room for argument, as it provided specifically that limitation was to run, from the date of the order of acquittal. The question whether the second part of Art. 23 of Sch. I of the Indian Limitation Act was not necessarily excluded where there had been an acquittal is a question which I need not discuss in the present appeal.

Section 9 of the Indian Limitation Act lays down that where once time has begin to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it, and the fact that the defendant Sheo Narain filed an application for revision against the order of acquittal obtained by the plaintiff Shankar Prasad in his favour does not enable the latter to assert that though time had once begun to run against him from the date of the order of his acquittal, yet, as he had to contest the application for revision filed against the order of acquittal, a fresh period of limitation for bringing his suit for damages began to accrue to him.

The question as to when the prosecution of the plaintiff Shankar Prasad finally terminated in the present case does not really arise, because the language of Art. 23 of Sch. I of the Indian Limitation Act is very clear and explicit on this point, and so far as the first portion of Art. 23 of the Act is concerned, all the High Courts are in agreement that the limitation for filing a suit for compensation for malicious prosecution is one year from the date when the plaintiff is acquitted.

I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the lower Courts were perfectly correct in holding that the plaintiff's suit was time-barred. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Conversion—Hindu convert to Christianity—Marriage with a Christian lady—Husband and wife ceasing to live together as such—Reconversion of husband to Hinduism—Marriage with a convert to Hinduism—Validity of this marriage—Evidence—Death Register—Statement in, if evidence of religion of parties.

A person who was a Hindu by birth became a Christian and married a Christian woman but subsequently he and his wife ceased to live as husband and wife. He then reconverted himself to Hinduism and married a woman who was a convert to Hinduism:

Held, that in view of the fact that no particular expiatory ceremonies were observed among the community to which the parties belonged and the absence of any particular ceremonies being prescribed for them by the smriti writers nor the performance of any Homas enjoined on them, it was necessary to look to the sense of the community and it was of particular significance that the community was prepared to receive him and the second wife as man and wife and their issue as legitimate. Emperor v Lazar (7), distinguished, Muthuswami Mudaliar v. Masilamani (1), Morarji v. Administrator General of Madras (4), Kamavathi v. Digbijai Singh (5) and Abraham v. Abraham (6), referred to.

It is safe to rely upon statements in death registers only with reference to the fact of death and the date of death. As for the description therein of the religion of the deceased, it is doubtful if that statement is admissible, as the statement is not made by him and the statement made by some unknown person as to his religion can carry very little weight.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a litigation between rival transferees from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and from defendants Nos. 5 and 6, respectively, of properties belonging to one Vedanayaga, deceased. It is common ground that by birth he was a Hindu and that later in life he became a Christian and married defendant No. 1 who was admittedly a Christian. Defendant No. 2 is the issue of that marriage. Sometime after the marriage, defendant No. 1 would appear to have gone over to Colombo and whatever the reason for the estrangement may be, both the Courts below seem to think that thereafter Vedanayaga and defendant No. 1 did not live as husband and wife. The next stage in the story is that Vedanayaga married defendant No. 5.

The evidence is conflicting, as to the religion of Vedanayaga at the time of the marriage with defendant No. 5 and at the time of his death. The materials are very scanty and it is not perhaps too strong an observation to make if I say that in view of what would appear from the evidence in the case as to the prevalence of unions amongst members of this community without much regard to their religious beliefs and opinions, and in view of the facts referred to in the judgment of this Court in Muthuswami Mudaliar v. Masilamani (1) their re-conversion to Hinduism is probably quite as simple a matter as their original conversion from Hinduism. The learned Judge also points out that the evidence shows that many of the acts of the members of this group are dubious partaking to some extent of Christian habits and to some extent of Hindu habits. In these circumstances the learned Subordinate Judge has drawn the inference that Vedanayaga must have become a Hindu at the time of his marriage with defendant No. 5 because it would appear in the evidence that the marriage was celebrated in the Hindu form though the rituals seem to have been quite simple. There is no doubt that the community treated Vedanayaga and defendant No. 5 as husband and wife and their issue as legitimate. It is stated by some of the plaintiff's witnesses that several acts of Vedanayaga subsequent to the marriage with defendant No. 5 should show that he continued a Christian. But the learned Subordinate Judge has refused to attach importance to this statement. There is a statement in the death register (Ex. D) describing him as a Christian. But it was certainly not his statement and we are not in a position to say who made that statement. I very much doubt if that statement is admissible at all. It is at best safe to rely upon these registers only with reference to the fact of death and the date of death. In a case where there is so much of conflicting evidence as to the religion of this man, a statement made by some unknown person that he was a Christian can carry very little weight. Under these circumstances I see no reason to differ from the view of the learned Subordinate Judge that Vedanayaga and defendant No. 5 must be regarded as having become Hindus at the time they were married.

Mr. Swaminathier referred to certain authorities in the course of his arguments and it is perhaps just as well that I make a brief reference to them. The observation that he relied on at p. 324* in Skinner v. Orde (2), does not carry one very far. Their Lordships of the Privy Council merely refer with a kind of approval to the doubt entertained by the High Court. But the observations of the High Court extracted at p. 314* show that the High Court put the matter only from what they speak of as the 'Christian' point of view. They were there dealing with the question of guardianship of the child which had been born and bred up a Christian and the claim before the Court was by their mother who had since married or claimed to have married another Christian after both of them had embraced Muhammadanism. No doubt in the case in Administrator-General of Madras v Anandachari (3), and in the judgment of Anantakrishna Ayyar, J. in T. O. S. No. 9 of 1932 reference is made to the necessity of expiatory ceremonies for reconversion to Hinduism, but in both those cases the alleged reconversion was into the Brahmin community of Hindus and it may be possible to suggest that certain Vedic rites would have been adopted in such a case. The language used in Administrator-General of Madras v. Anandachari (3), merely refers to the expiatory ceremonies enjoined by the practice of the community in question: and with reference to the class of people we are now concerned, with no suggestion has anywhere been made in the course of the evidence that any particular expiatory ceremonies are observed amongst them. No particular ceremonies are prescribed for them by the Smriti writers nor have they got to perform any Homas. One has therefore only to look to the sense of the community and from that point of view it is of particular significance that the community was prepared to receive Vedanayaga and defendant No. 5 as man and wife and their issue as legitimate. In the case in Morarji v. Administrator-General of Madras (4), Venkatasubba Rao, J., no doubt refers to the several facts proved in that case and relies upon them as establishing the conversion of an Englishwoman to Hinduism; but it is not right to treat this observation as laying down that all those facts must be proved to exist before the Court can give a finding in favour of the conversion to Hinduism. In Kamavathi v. Digbijai Singh (5), their Lordships held that if a Hindu who becomes a convert to Christianity, lives and dies a Christian, it is not open to him to retain the Hindu Law of Succession. This settles a conflict of decisions in India as to the effect of the provisions of the Succession Act on the principles which were recognised by the earlier decision in Abraham v. Abraham (6). It has nothing to do with the question of reconversion.

Mr. Swaminatha Ayyar finally relied on the observations in Emperor v. Lazar (7), at p. 552*, where, after holding that a Christian who has a Christian wife will be guilty of bigamy if he marries a Hindu wife even according to Hindu rites, the learned Judges add obiter: "it would make no difference if he had renounced the Christian religion." The question of the effect of reconversion did not arise for decision in that case and as pointed out by the learned Judges there is a decision of Holloway and Inns, JJ., to the contrary in proceedings dated November 8, 1866, Emperor v. Lazar (7). The view taken in the decision in Reference by S. J. of Guntur (8), has been followed in Emperor v. Antony (9), and in Criminal Revision Case No. 608 of 1930 and is in accord with a recent decision of the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Maharam (10).

In the view taken by the lower Appellate Court that both Vedanayaga and defendant No. 5 should be taken to have embraced Hinduism, the further point raised by Mr. Swaminatha Iyer, that even if Vedanayaga had become a Hindu, a marriage between him as a Hindu and defendant No. 5 as a Christian will be void by reason of s. 4 of Act XV of 1872 does not arise for consideration.

Accepting the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of the religion of the parties, I hold that his legal conclusion was right and dismiss the second appeal. The point is not free from doubt or difficulty and I would, therefore, make no order as to costs of this second appeal.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision Petition No. 385 of 1934
August 6, 1934
GUHA, J.

R. C. CURTIES—ACCUSED—PETITIONER
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Bengal Motor Vehicle Tax Act (V of 1932), ss. 9, 12—Person paying tax must obtain delivery of token—Non-exhibition of token in cars by such person, whether an offence—Rules 10, 12, 13 under the Act, whether ultra vires of Local Government.

It is for the person paying the tax to obtain delivery of the token at the time when the tax was paid to the Taxing Officer under the Bengal Motor Vehclies Tax Act, 1932. So far as the Taxing Officer is concerned, the requirements of the law are fulfilled if he does anything which has the effect of putting the token in the possession of the person paying the tax or of any person authorised by him. It is not intended by the provisions of the Statute and the Rules framed under the statute, which are not in any way ultra vires, that the Taxing Officer is to send the token to the person paying the tax. Consequently, the failure on the part of a person to exhibit the token on the car resulting from his not obtaining delivery of the same from the Taxing Officer after tax had been paid, is an offence under the law.

There is nothing contained in rr. 10, 12 and 13 of the Rules under Bengal Motor Vehicles Tax Act which is ultra vires of the Local Government, having regard to ss. 9 and 12, Bengal Motor Vehicles Tax Act, 1932, by which it is clearly intended that delivery of the token has to be obtained, and the token exhibited on the car, in the manner provided by the Rules.

Cr. R. P. from a decree of the Additional Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta.

Messrs. N. K. Bose and Sudhangsu Sekhar Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Probodh Ch. Chatterjee, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner was tried before, the Additional Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, for having committed an offence on account of contravention of Rules 12 and 13, Bengal Motor Vehicles Tax Rules, 1933, in not exhibiting the token as enjoined by those rules on a motor car. The Magistrate found him guilty of breach of rr. 12 and 13 and sentenced the petitioner to pay a fine of Rs. 10. According to the Magistrate, there was, on the evidence, an omission on the part of the petitioner, and a neglect of obvious duty in not demanding the token from the person by whom tax was paid on the petitioner's behalf, and which tax was accepted by the Taxing Officer; the petitioner should have demanded the token from the person who paid the tax on his behalf, within a reasonable time and exhibited the same on the car as required by the Rules. On the findings arrived at by the Magistrate, the delivery of the token was not taken, after payment of tax; and the token was not exhibited on the car in question as required by the Rules.

This Rule was isued by this Court, calling upon the Chief Presidencey Magistrate, Calcutta, to show cause why the conviction of and sentence passed upon the petitioner should not be set aside. The grounds urged in support of the Rule were that the Magistrate was wrong in law in holding that a person is guilty of breach of rr. 12 and 13 even where no tcken has been delivered to him, on payment of the tax, and that even if the Magistrate's interpretation of r. 12 and 13 were correct, they would be ultra vires of the Local Government, having regard to ss. 9 and 12, Bengal Motor Vehicles Tax Act, 1932. The decision of the question arising for consideration in the case, therefore, depends mainly, if not solely, upon the interpretation to be put on the.

words "shall deliver" as used in s. 9 of the Act and r. 10 of the Rules framed by the Local Government. Was there any duty cast upon the person paying tax to obtain delivery of the token, which the Taxing Officer is required to deliver? There is no question that the person paying the tax is entitled to get a receipt as also a token from the Taxing Officer, as soon as payment has been made. Delivery of the token might be made by doing anything which had the effect of putting the same in the possession of the person paying the tax, or of any person authorised by him to receive delivery. In the case before me, the person paying the tax did not obtain delivery of the token at the time when the tax was paid, resulting in the fact that delivery of the token was not and could not be made by the Taxing Officer. The token not having been obtained, its delivery not having been taken, it could not be, and was not exhibited on the car as required by rr. 12 and 13.

In my judgment it was for the person paying the tax to obtain delivery of the token, at the time when tax was paid to the Taxing Officer under the Bengal Motor Vehicles Tax Act, 1932. So far as the Taxing Officer was concerned, the requirements of the law were fulfilled if he did anything which had the effect of putting the token in the possession of the person paying the tax or of any person authorised by him. It was not intended by the provisions of the statute and the Rules framed under the statute, which were not in any way ultra vires, that the Taxing Officer was to send the token to the person paying the tax. I am clearly of opinion as already indicated above, that there is nothing contained in rr. 10, 12 and 13 of the Rules which is ultra vires of the Local Government, having regard to ss. 9 and 12, Bengal Motor Vehicles Tax Act, 1932, by which it is clearly intended that delivery of the token has to be obtained, and the token exhibited on the car, in the manner provided by the Rules. In the above view of the questions arising for consideration in the case before me, the failure on the part of the petitioner to exhibit the token on the car resulting from his not obtaining delivery of the same from the Taxing Officer after tax had been paid, was an offence under the law, and the petitioner was rightly convicted by the Magistrate for breach of rr. 12 and 13, Bengal Motor Vehicles Tax Rules, 1933. The Rule is discharged. The conviction of the petitioner and the sentence passed on him are affirmed.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Original Civil Jurisdiction Suit No. 1365 of 1932

August 28, 1933

KANIA, J.

POPAT VIRJI—PLAINTIFF

DAMODAR JAIRAM—DEFENDANTS

Hindu Law—Widow—Family business—Widow carrying on business as husband's heir—Business debt—Reversioners, if liable to pay from inherited assets—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 13, O XXXII, r. 3—Foreign judgment—Court dealing with it, if can inquire, whether decision is right or wrong—Guardian ad litem appointed by Court—Decree against minor—Onus of proof that he was not properly represented—Person executing document for minor—Whether he can be valid guardian in suit, is not pure question of law—Foreign judgment against minor—Minor not represented by proper guardian—Suit in British India on that judgment—Held, there was no cause of action on foreign judgment against minor—No decree against assets of minor.

If a Hindu widow, as an heir, carries on business which she has inherited as an asset, and in doing that business incurs a proper trade debt, which might assume the form of passing a promissory note or hundi, the creditor can recover the money from the assets inherited by the reversioners after the death of the widow. Sakerbhai v. Maganlall (4), Hanumanpersad Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (5) and Raghunathji-Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (6), referred to. [p. 714, col. 2.]

It is not open to the Court trying a suit on a foreign judgment to decide whether the decision of the foreign Court on the materials put before it was right or not. The duty of the Court is merely to see that the foreign Court had applied its mind to the facts and the law on the point. Jacobson v. Frachon (1), Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (2) and Pemberton v. Hughes (3), referred to. [p. 713, col. 2.]

Where the defendant is a minor, it is the duty of the Court not only to appoint a guardian, but to satisfy itself that the proposed guardian was a fit and proper person to represent the minor in the suit, to put in a proper defence, and generally to act in the interest of the minor and if the Court gives judgment against the minor, the onus is on the minor to prove that he was not properly represented in the former suit. Ramchandra Das v. Joti Prasad (7) and Bibi Walian v. Banke Behari (8), followed.

When a person has executed a document or entered into a transaction on behalf of a minor, the question, whether that person can be validly appointed a guardian, in a suit brought against the minor on the document or transaction in question, is not a pure question of law but is one of fact, and for the decision thereof no hard and fast rule of law can be laid down. There is nothing either in the Civil Procedure Code or in the authorities to lay down that such a person cannot be appointed a guardian and under proper circumstances he can be validly appointed a guardian of the minor in such a suit. Venkatasomeswara Rao v. Lakshmanaswami (10), followed. [p. 716, col. 1]

A person, having conflicting interest with that of minor was appointed guardian ad litem in a suit in a foreign Court. That Court decided the suit against the minor; upon this decision the plaintiff brought an action in British India:

Held, that since the foreign Court had not followed the rules and procedure prescribed in O XXXII, Civil Procedure Code or the rules of natural justice, and the minor was not properly represented in the suit, the appointment being prejudicial to the defence of the minor in the foreign suit, the decree passed in that suit against the minor was not binding on the minor and did not avail the plaintiff;

Held, also that the plaintiff had not filed the suit on the original cause of action but on the foreign judgment alone and as the foreign judgment was pronounced without the minor being represented in the foreign Court, there was no cause of action on the foreign judgment against the minor and the suit against him must fail.

Held, further, that no decree against the assets of the minor would be conclusive under s. 13, Civil Procedure Code, where the minor had no opportunity to defend the action in which that decree was passed. Grant v. Easton (13), referred to.

Messrs. M. P. Amin and T. K. Thanawala, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Lalji Gokaldas and M. C. Setalvad, for the Defendants.

Judgment.—This is a suit on a foreign judgment. Several years ago one Damodar Jairam started doing business at Zanzibar. On his death his son Keshavji carried on the business in the same name. When Keshavji died in 1901, he left behind him that business at Zanzibar and several immovable properties at Zanzibar, Bombay and Cutch. His widow Zaverbai obtained letters of administration at Zanzibar and at Bombay in 1903, and continued the business at Zanzibar. Keshavji left no issue. Zaverbai resided ordinarily in Bombay and carried on the business at Zanzibar through managers whom she gave powers-of-attorney. In 1912, her brother Mulji Mathuradas was appointed the manager of the business and held a general power-of-attorney from her. In 1918, Mulji, on behalf of the firm of Damodar Jairam, entered into different partnerships with the plaintiff, Jumma Cassum and others. The business done by the firm of Damodar Jairam and the plaintiff in partnership was also done in the name of Damodar Jairam. The business was to purchase and sell piece-goods.

In August 1918, Mulji, on behalf of the firm of Damodar Jairam, passed a promissory note in favour of Cassum Jumma & Co. for Rs. 15,625. Cassum Jumma & Co. endorsed over that note to the plaintiff, who in his turn endorsed it over to the Standard Bank of South Africa at Zanzibar. When the note was presented to the firm of Damodar Jairam for payment, the manager of the firm, i. e., Mulji, gave a cheque upon the Standard Bank of South Africa for the amount of the note but that cheque was dishonoured. The note was therefore returned by the Bank to the plaintiff. In may 1919, Mulji was replaced by Devji Lalji as the manager of the business of Damodar Jairam at Zanzibar. Defendant No. 2 (Haridas Keshavji) was adopted to the deceased Keshavji by Zaverbai in about October 1919. As such adopted son, he became the owner of the properties of Keshavji including the said business at Zanzibar. The plaintiff filed Suit No. 2870 of 1921 in the Court at Zanzibar to recover the amount due under the promissory note as the holder in due course. To that suit he had made the firm of Damodar Jairam, defendant No 2 (Haridas Keshavji, the adopted son), and the partners of the firm of Cassum Jumma & Co., party defendants. On behalf of the firm of Damodar Jairam, Zaverbai was served with the summons and she filed a written statement though Devji Lalji. In that written statement she stated that she had carried on the business in the name of Damodar Jairam till lately, but Mulji had no authority to trade in partnership or pass the promissory note. When that suit was filed, Chhabildas, the natural father of defendant No. 2 (Haridas), was appointed a guardian ad litem of defendant No. 2 and as such guardian he filed his written statement (Ex. 3).

In that written statement it was contended on behalf of the minor defendant No. 2 that Zaverbai was not entitled to carry on business other than that of managing the immovable properties and Saraffi and commission agency business on a small scale as was done by Keshavji during his life-time. It was further contended that the managers appointed by Zaverbai had launched into new ventures which were unauthorised and not binding on the firm or the minor. It was further alleged that neither Zaverbai nor Mulji had authority to carry on the business which gave rise to the liability under the promissory note and it was denied that the debt alleged to be due to the plaintiff was a trade debt of the ancestral Hindu family firm as claimed by the plaintiff. While Mulji was in charge of the business at Zanzibar, it appears that he had opened an accoun with the Standard Bank of South Africa. That account was largely overdrawn and the Bank held certain securities of the firm of Damodar Jairam. The Bank filed a suit against the firm and that litigation went on between 1921 and 1928. In that suit Mulji gave evidence on behalf of the firm. That suit was ultimately settled in 1928 by the firm of Damodar Jairam admitting liability for a sum of three lacs of rupees. In November 1928, Mulji Mathuradas was substituted in the place of Chhabildas in the Zanzibar suit and he adopted the same written statement on behalf of the minor. On July 21, 1931, the suit reached hearing and the Court passed an ex parte decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in terms contained in its judgment and decree (Exs. A and B). The present suit is filed on the judgment and decree in that suit. The defendants contest the conclusiveness of that judgment on the grounds contained in the various issues raised on their behalf. I think that the facts and evidence in connection with this suit and the Zanzibar suit should be considered in three compartments: (1) as to what transpired in respect of the promissory note on which the claim was made in the Zanzibar Court till defendant No. 2 was adopted; (2) from the filing of the Zanzibar suit till the date when Mulji Mathuradas was appointed guardian ad litem of defendant No. 2 in that suit; and (3) from that day till the judgment was pronounced at Zanzibar. I think that events should be considered from this point of view because as regards the first portion, the suit was filed at Zanzibar and the rival contentions of the parties were put before the Court there. If the appointment of Mulji as guardian was good, the decision of the Zanzibar Court would be on the merits, and, in my opinion, it is not open to the defendants now to contend in this suit that the claim put forth on behalf of the plaintiff at Zanzibar was not sustainable or that the Zanzibar Court had come to a wrong conclusion in respect of the disputes between the parties. This point is made clear in Jacobson v. Frachon (1). That decision shows that although according to the opinion of the Court in which the suit was filed on a foreign judgment, the appointment of a particular person as referee was undesirable and the report made by such a referee was "an uncandid production of a biased and prejudiced mind; it was not open to the Court trying the suit on a foreign judgment to decide whether the decision of the foreign Court on the materials put before it was right or not. The duty of the Court was merely to see that the foreign Court had applied its mind to the facts and the law on the point. The accepted proposition of law in this connection, as stated by Lord Coleridge, C. J., in Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (2) is as follows (page 302*):

" ..... that the Courts of this country in dealing with a foreign judgment will not inquire whether the foreign Court pronounced a judgment correct in point of law, or right and accurate in point of fact."

In the same case Brett, L. J. observed as follows (p. 307*).

" ..... it is immaterial to consider whether it (i. e. the judgment of the foreign Court) was erroneous by reason of a wrong appreciation of the evidence or of the law, or by reason of frauds perpetrated on the Courts by witnesses other than the plaintiff and her husband: the only manner in which that foreign judgment can be rendered ineffective upon the ground of fraud, is by proving that it was obtained by the fraud of the plaintiff, who now relies upon it."

Again in Pemberton v. Hughes (3) Lord Lindley, M. R., stated as follows (p. 790†).

"If a judgment is pronounced by a foreign Court over persons within its jurisdiction and in a matter with which it is competent to deal, Engligh Courts never investigate the propriety of the proceedings in the foreign Court, unless they offend against English views of substantial justice."

It is therefore not open to the parties to inquire in this suit whether the decision of the Zanzibar Court was mistaken. It would be open only to inquire whether the Court was misled or imposed upon. For these reasons I do not think that, except on the ground that the Court was imposed upon, the facts and evidence leading to the execution of the promissory note, on which the Zanzibar suit was based, are relevant to be considered in this suit. I shall first deal with the case of fraud and collusion alleged in the written statement. Apart from the documents exhibited, the defendants have sought to support this contention by calling Mulji Mathuradas to give evidence. Taking the evidence as a whole, I think that the defendants' attempt to establish a case of fraud and collusion has entirely failed. That ground for challenging the judgment of the Zanzibar Court is therefore not available to the defendants.

As regards the contention that the decision was not on merits and was against the law in British India, I think that the defendants' contention must fail. After obtaining letters of administration Zaverbai must be considered to have fully administered the estate, within 12 years at the latest, and thereafter her management of the estate was as the heir of Keshavji and not as the administratrix. The evidence does not show that in 1918, when the promissory note on which the Zanzibar suit was filed was executed, anything had remained to be administered in the estate of Keshavji. The statements contained in the pleadings filed in the Zanzibar Court suggest that Zaverbai was doing business on her own account as the heir. In any event the evidence on record does not show that in 1918 Zaverbai was conducting the business in the name of Damodar Jairam as administratrix of the estate of Keshavji. I therefore think that the first contention of the defendants in this connection must fail. As regards the right of Zaverbai to do business as an heir, there appears to be no doubt on the point. In 1918, Zaverbai, as the widow, was undoubtedly the heir of Keshavji. The business which was started several years ago in the name of Damodar Jairam was continued in the same name by Keshavji and was further continued by Zaverbai. The only question which can arise would be whether the debts contracted by Zaverbai as such heir would be binding on the estate. In Sakerbhai v. Maganlall (4) it was held that trade debts properly incurred by a Hindu widow, on the credit of the assets of the business to which she had succeeded as the heir of her husband, are recoverable after her death out of the assets of the business, as against the reversioners who have succeeded thereto, in the absence of a specific charge. Jenkins, C. J., reviewed the previous decisions on the point and summarised the result as follows (p. 215*):

"These authorities, then establish the following propositions: first, that in Hindu Law a business is a distinct heritable asset; second that a manager can contract debts for the purposes of the business and that even in the absence of a specific charge they are recoverable from the assets of the business; and third, that a widow can under circumstances contract a debt for the purpose of a family business to which she has succeeded, and by specific charge make it payable out of assets of the business even as against the reversioners."

"If a widow can, under appropriate circumstances execute as security for a debt of this class a mortgage which after her death will be binding on the reversioners, why cannot the assets of the business in the hands of the reversioners be made liable in the absence of a specific charge? I limit my inquiry to the assets of the business as that will admittedly suffice for the purposes of the case out of which this reference arises."

After considering the decisions of the other High Courts the Full Bench came to the conclusion mentioned above. In support of this conclusion strong reliance was placed on the fact that in this presidency a widow could apply the movable assets of the business as she pleased during her lifetime, and it was, therefore, incongruous to hold that she could not borrow, on the credit of the same assets, as to make them liable for the debts. The observations of the Privy Council in Hanoumanparsaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (5), in respect of the power of a manager a joint Hindu samily to borrow money and the binding nature of such debts on the other members of the family have been held to be equally applicable to the case of a widow carrying on the business of her deceased husband as an heir after his death.

Having regard to these decisions, it is clear that if a widow, as an heir, carries on business which she has inherited as an asset, and in doing that business incurs a proper trade debt, the creditor could recover the money from the assets inherited by the reversioners after the death of the widow. The decision in Sakerbhai v. Maganlall (4), was limited to the assets of the business because, as observed by Jenkins, C. J., the necessity for deciding the question whether the creditors could recover the debt from the general assets inherited by the reversioners did not arise in that case as the assets of the business were sufficient to satisfy the particular debt. In principal, however, I do not find any distinction between the trade assets inherited by the reversioners and the other assets inherited by them on the death of the widow. The power of the widow in this presidency to deal with the movable property is not limited to any particular movable property and, therefore, in my opinion, that decision lays down the general proposition as I have mentioned above. In the present case on the adoption of defendant No. 2, the widow would cease to be the heir of the deceased, and in such circumstances I do not see any reason why the observations of the Privy Council in Hanoumanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (5), should not be applied.

The only question which then remains to be considered is whether Zaverbai, while conducting the business, had the authority to pass the promissory note on which the Zanzibar suit was filed. In this connection the decision in Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (6), is useful. Chandavarkar, J., who was a party to the Full Bench decision in Sakerbhai v. Maganlall (4), in delivering the judgment in that case, held that where a family carried on business, the member who managed it for the family, had an implied authority to contract debts for its purposes, and the creditor was not bound to inquire into the purpose of the debt in order to bind the whole family thereby, because that power was necessary for the very existence of the family. In that case the Court had to consider whether a hundi passed by the manager of the family, which carried on the joint family business, was binding on the members of the joint family. The hundis were signed by the manager in the name of the firm. Having regard to the series of authorities which applied the same principles to the debts incurred by the manager of a joint family and a widow, I think, that if a widow, as the heir of her deceased husband, carries on his business and for the purposes of the business incurs a trade debt, which might assume the shape of passing a promissory note or a hundi, the reversioners would be bound to pay the debt out of the assets inherited by them. This appears to be the law in British India. When the Zanzibar suit was heard by that Court, the plaintiff gave evidence and deposed that the business was ancestral and was carried on by Zaverbai through Mulji and the note was properly passed as a trade debt. On a consideration of the evidence led before the Court, judgment was pronounced against the defendants. Under the circumstances, I am unable to hold that the Zanzibar Court had failed to recognize the law in British India or that its judgment is against the law in British India.

(6) 2 Ind. Cas. 173; 34 B. 72; 11 Bom. L. R 255.

The principal ground on which the defendants contest their liability is that defendant No. 2 was not represented in the Zanzibar Court at all, although on the record Mulji was the guardian ad litem of defendant No. 2 in that suit. It is urged that the Court should never have appointed Mulji as the guardian under the circumstances of the case, as the interest of Mulji was adverse to the interest of the minor. In the alternative it is urged that the Court failed to observe the rules of natural justice in appointing Mulji as the gurdian ad litem of defendant No. 2 and failed to observe the procedure prescribed in that respect in the Civil Procedure Code. As the present suit is filed on the judgment of the Zanzibar Court, the onus is on the defendants to prove the various allegations made by them in this connection.

Where the defendant is a minor, it is the duty of the Court not only to appoint a guardian, but to satisfy itself that the proposed guardian was a fit and proper person to represent the minor in the suit, to put in a proper defence, and generally to act in the interest of the minor: Ramchandra Das v. Joti Prasad (7). In this connection strong reliance is put on behalf of the plaintiff on the decision in Bibi Walian v. Banki Behari (8). In that suit one T in 1873 executed a mortgage in favour of C to secure a sum of money. In 1881 Z the son of C, brought a suit to recover the money due under the mortgage. T being then dead, G, his major son, and M, as mother and guardian of the four minor sons, were made defendants. In October 1881, C obtained an ex parte decree under which the mortgaged properties were put up for sale and ultimately purchased by the decree-holder, who was put in possession in January 1883. In 1895, three of the younger sons of T. who were described as minors in the first suit filed another suit against the representatives of the original plaintiffs. In that suit they alleged that T had borrowed money for immoral purposes and the decree was obtained fraudulently by T in collusion with adult son of C and that the proceedins in execution and sale were equally fraudulent. It was further alleged that in the first suit no guardian ad litem was duly appointed for the plaintiffs in the second suit. It was prayed, inter alia that the auction sale, so far as the plaintiffs were concerned, be declared to have been held in an illegal way and the plaintiffs be put in possession of the property. The defendants denied the allegations of the plaintiffs, and one of the issues was, whether the plaintiffs were properly represented in the first suit and execution proceedings, and, if not, whether they were void on that ground. It was found as a fact that the plaintiffs' mother had appeared throughout the proceedings in the first suit as guardian. It was also found that no order appointing the mother as guardian was drawn up.

On an examination of the proceedings, however, it was found that the Court admitted the plaint in which the mother was described as a guardian and she was so described in the decree and also in the application for execution. The Subordinate Judge who tried the second suit held that, although no formal order appointing the mother as guardian was drawn up, the Court must be deemed to have sanctioned the appointment and the want of the formal order was at most an irregularity which could not invalidate the proceedings in the absence of proof of prejudice to the plaintiffs. On appeal, the High Court held that it was necessary that the Court should see that a proper guardian was appointed to protect the interests of the minors. Section 443 of the Code of 1882 (corresponding to O. XXXII, r. 3) was imperative upon this point; the Court, after satisfying itself on the fact of the minority, was bound to appoint a proper person to act on behalf of the minors in the conduct of the case. These observations were approved by the Privy Council. Their Lordships emphasized that the Courts should strictly follow the rules contained in the sections as to the appointment on a guardian ad litem.

The High Court considered that the absence of the order, appointing the mother as guardian, was fatal and they reversed the decision of the trial Court. Their Lordships of the Privy Council did not agree with that conclusion. They observed that the defects of procedure alleged in that case were at the most irregularities and would not have furnished grounds for reversing the decree, in the former suit, if they had been raised upon appeal in that suit. Having regard to the fact that the minor's interest was in fact continuously safeguarded by the mother, the absence of an order was not considered fatal. Again in Munnu Lal v. Ghulam Abbas (9), it was pointed out that no affidavit as required by s. 456 of the Code of 1882 (corresponding to O. XXXII, r. 3 (3) of the Code of 1908) was filed. It did not appear whether in fact there was an affidavit or not but assuming that there was no such affidavit, their Lordships thought it impossible to hold that the infants were not properly represented. The learned trial Judge had appointed a guardian ad litem the order was on record and their Lordships held that it must be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that everything was regularly and properly done.

Relying on these decisions it is contended by the plaintiff in this suit, that, unless the evidence led on behalf of the defendant shows otherwise the Court must presume that the Zanzibar Court had done everything regularly and properly in connection with the representation of defendant No. 2 in the Zanzibar suit. I do not think this proposition can be disputed. The question, therefore, is whether on the documents and evidence, the defendants had succeeded in showing that the minor was not represented in the Zanzibar suit. As observed in the Full Bench decision of Venkatasomeswara Rao v. Lakshmanaswami (10), when a person has executed a document or entered into a transaction on behalf of a minor, the question whether that person can be validly appointed a guardian, in a suit brought against the minor on the document or transaction in question is not a pure question of law but is one of fact, and for the decision thereof no hard and fast rule of law could be laid down. It was held that there was nothing either in the Civil Procedure Code or in the authorities to lay down that such a person could not be appointed a guardian, and under proper circumstances, he can be validly appointed a guardian of the minor in such a suit. I respectfully agree with that decision.

In cases, where, for instance, a document executed by a person on behalf of a minor was alleged to be a forgery or was alleged to have been obtained from that person by coercion or undue influence in the absence of any other conflict of interest, the person executing the document would be the best person to represent the minor as guardian in a suit filed on the document against the minor. It is, however, clear that this rule cannot apply under all circumstances. This is only an illustration of a case showing the circumstances under which the same person may be a proper person to act as such guardian. (His Lordship then discussed the facts and concluded that Mulji was neither a fit and proper person to be appointed guardian in the Zanzibar suit or after his appointment he represented the minor in the Zanzibar suit). In this connection the decision in Rashid-un-nisa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (11), is helpful. In that case a suit was filed by the minor for a declaration that two decrees and three sales in execution, affecting her share in her father's estate, were invalid as she was not properly represented in those proceedings. It was found that the minor's married sister was appointed her guardian ad litem in one of the proceedings while in the other two the person who was really the plaintiff was appointed her guardian.

Under the Code of 1882 a married woman was not qualified to be appointed a guardian and, therefore, in the first proceeding it was held that the minor was not represented at all. In the other two proceedings it was considered that the minor was never a party, in the proper sense of the term, to the suit in which the decrees were passed and the decrees were therefore, of no effect. The position of Mulji in the present case having regard to the allegations contained in the written statement of the minor appears to be very near the position of the person who represented the minor in that case. This point again came to be considered recently by the Calcutta High Court in Abdul Karim v. Thakurdas Thakur (12). In that suit the defendants were described as A, widow of B and C a minor, by his mother and certificated guardian, the said first defendant A. There was no appointment of the guardian ad litem for the minor. The evidence showed that the Court passed an ex parte decree as the defendants did not appear. In delivering the judgment Rankin, C. J., reviewed all the authorities. He found that the defendants' Pleader had gone to the house where the defendants lived but did not succeed in having any conversation with the mother. The minor told him on behalf of the mother that the claim was true, that they had had the money and they really could not dispute the debt. Even after considering those instructions as having been given by the mother, was held that the decree was not binding on the minor, because in law the minor was not represented in the suit. It was further held that it was necessary to strictly observe the provisions contained in O. XXXII, in connection with the appointment of a guardian ad litem.

Having regard to the decision mentioned above, and having regard to the facts which are clear from the documents, I have no doubt that the minor's interest was in conflict with the interest of Mulji in the Zanzibar suit, and Mulji was not a fit person to be appointed a guardian. The documents do not show that in appointing Mulji as a trustee of the minor in the Zanzibar suit the Court had followed the rules and procedure prescribed in O. XXXII, or the rules of natural justice. I am, therefore, unable to hold that the minor was properly represented in the suit in the Zanzibar Court. Having regard to the attitute adopted by Mulji, I think the appointment has been prejudicial to the defence of the minor in the Zanzibar suit, I therefore think that the decree passed in the Zanzibar suit against the minor is not binding on the minor and does not avail the plaintiff. In the Zanzibar suit the present third defendant was not a party. Inasmuch as the present suit is filed on the judgment of the Zanzibar Court, this suit against the third defendant must therefore fail. Having regard to the judgment which I have just delivered, the suit against the second defendant must also fail. On behalf of the plaintiff it is urged that, although by reason of that judgment the second defendant may not be considered as represented in the Zanzibar suit and therefore the judgment in the Zanzibar suit may not be treated as conclusive according to s. 13, the plaintiff is still entitled to go into the merits of the case and now prove his claim against the second defendant. In this connection no authority is cited on behalf of the plaintiff. On the other hand, I find in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 6 (Edition 2), at p. 525, the following passage :

"Since the foreign judgment constitutes a simple contract debt only, there is no merger of the original cause of action and it is therefore open to the plaintiff to sue either on the foreign judgment or on the original cause of action on which it is based unless the foreign judgment has been satisfied."

(12) 113 Ind. Cas. 843; A I R 1928 Cal. 844; 55 C 241; 32 C W N 665.

In Grant v. Easton (13), it was held that the plaintiff might sue in England upon the original cause of action, if actionable there, or upon the judgment of the foreign Court or upon both, and such debt might be a subject of a special endorsement. The plaintiff has not filed the suit on the original cause of action as is obvious from the plaint. He has sued on the foreign judgment alone As in my opinion the foreign judgment was pronounced without the second defendant being represented in the Zanzibar Court, there is no cause of action on the foreign judgment against the second defendant, the suit against the second defendant must fail. It is urged on behalf of the plaintiff that inasmuch as the Zanzibar Court had passed a decree against the firm of Damodar Jairam, which firm was also defendant No. 1 in the Zanzibar suit, the decree against the firm must hold good. It is pointed out that the summons in the Zanzibar suit was served on Zaverbai and also on Haridas, the minor. If such service was proper, the firm, as such, was served, and if, therefore, the firm failed to appear at the hearing, the decree should not be set aside as against the firm. I am unable to accept this argument. The judgment of the Zanzibar Court is for the sum mentioned in the decree to be recovered out of the family estate of Damodar Jairam in the hands of Haridas Keshavji Damodar.

In the plaint in the Zanzibar suit the plaintiff alleged that Haridas, as the adopted son of Keshavji, had inherited the estate of Keshavji including the said business of which and of the said estate he had taken possession. It is, therefore, clear that the plaintiff was aware that at the date of the suit Haridas was the sole representative of the firm and was in the sole possession of the business and assets of the firm. If Haridas was not properly represented in the Zanzibar suit, no decree against the assets of the firm in his hands or against him as representing the firm would be conclusive under s. 13 of the Code. The fact that the summons in the Zanzibar suit was served on Zaverbai on behalf of defendant No. 1 firm does not avail the plaintiff because, having regard to para. 10 of the plaint in the Zanzibar suit, the plaintiff was aware that the business was transferred to Haridas. If therefore it was sought to make Haridas or the assets in his hands liable, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to serve the summons on Haridas, and, having regard to the fact that he was a minor, to see that he was properly represented. As that was not done, it is obvious that in so far as Haridas was connected with the firm or the assets of the firm, the decree cannot bind those assets. The effect of accepting the plaintiff's contention would be in fact to nullify the judgment just delivered by me. According to the plaintiff, although the decree against the second defendant would not be available, the decree against the firm of Damodar Jairam must hold good. Therefore the plaintiff would, if that contention was upheld, get a decree against the firm of Damodar Jairam in this suit and execute it against the assets of that firm, including the assets in the hands of the minor. I do not think that such a construction could or should be put on the judgment of the Zanzibar Court if Haridas was not represented in the Zanzibar suit at all. It is significant that no decree is passed against Zaverbai in the Zanzibar suit. It is also clear that no decree is passed against the assets of the firm in the hands of Zaverbai. The effect of the Zanzibar decree, therefore, could only be that the assets in the hands of the minor should be utilised in payment of the decree of the Zanzibar Court. If the minor had no opportunity to defend the action in which such a decree was passed, that decree could not be held binding on the minor and therefore the plaintiff's contention must fail. The result is that the suit will be dismissed.

The defendants in their written statement had formulated grave charges of fraud and collusion which they have entirely failed to substantiate. Their contention that the judgment of the Zanzibar Court was pronounced against the law of British India has also failed. The whole of the oral evidence led on behalf of the defendants has not been helpful at all in establishing the charges made by the defendants. Under the circumstances, I think that the fair order for costs would be that the plaintiff should pay the defendants half the costs of the suit.

Easement—Prescription - Immemorial user—Court, whether can infer grant—Grant.

It is open to the Court to infer a grant from immemorial user alone, when such user is open, as of right, and without interruption Pakala Venkenna G Swetachalapati Ramakrishna Ranga Rao Bahadur v. Guru (1), explained.

C. A. from appellate a decree of the Sub-Judge, Burdwan, dated June 19, 1930.

Messrs. Bireswar Bagchi, Gopendra Nath Das and Byomkes Basu, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Pyari Mohon Chatterjee, Bankim Chandra Roy and Dwjendra Nath Dutt for the Respondents

Jack, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of plaintiffs right to irrigate their lands ka (1) and ka (2) of the plaint, from the tank described in schedule kha, by easement and prescription and as an ancient grant and also for an order of permanent injunction restraining the defendants from putting obstruction and further for compensation for loss caused by the defendants not allowing the plaintiffs to irrigate their lands from the tank. The trial Court decreed the suit in part against the contesting defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and ex parte against the rest, allowing the plaintiff to irrigate ka (2) land from the tank. This appeal is by the defendants as regards ka (1) land for which also the plaintiffs suit was decreed by the Court of Appeal below. The lower appellate Court held that the plaintiffs were entitled to irrigate the land ka (1) in consequence of a grant from the landlord to be inferred from immemorial user, the finding being that the land ka (1) is being irrigated from the disputed tank from time immemorial.

This appeal is argued on the ground that to prove a lost grant something more than immemorial user must be proved, viz., it must be shown that there is no other source of irrigation of that land whereas in fact, in this particular case there is another tank Nutanpukur situated very close to the plaintiffs' land and from which also they are accustomed to irrigate the land. Dattapukur from which they claim to irrigate is much further away. Further it is mentioned that the plaintiffs have not shown that they used the water of this tank as of right and there is no finding to this effect. In support of the theory that something further than immemorial user must be shown, the case of Pakala Venkenna v. Swetachalapati Ramakrishna Ranga Rao Bahadur Guru (1), was cited but that case is no authority for this proposition. There it was held that where it was established that from a long period second crop was grown and the necessary water for it could not be had in ordinary years without erecting a dam, such long continued user thus proved is sufficient to raise a presumption of a lawful origin of the right to do so in the nature of an arrangement between the parties. That is an example of how immemorial user may be proved indirectly, but it is still immemorial user from which the grant is referred; of course if long continued use may be explained in some other way than by a grant, the grant will not generally be inferred. But there is plenty of authority for holding that it is open to the Court to infer a grant from immemorial user alonewhen such user is even, as of right, and without interruption. In this case the finding is that this tank was re-excavated in 1322 by the defendants with whom it was settled in 1322 and the plaintiffs took water from the tank to irrigate their land both before and after this settlement and re-excavation. The fact that the plaintiffs took water after the re-excavation goes to confirm the inference that probably there was an original grant from the landlord allowed for at the settlement. It has been pointed out by the lower Appellate Court that the patta by which the defendants received settlement has not been produced. It is suggested that the use may have been permissive but that does not seem very probable inasmuch as apparently there is no necessity for using the water of this tank as the closer tank could have been used. But the fact that there was no necessity does not of course show that there was no original grant.

For the defendants-appellants no alternative explanation of the immemorial user has been offered. They maintain that there was no such immemorial user but on that point we are bound by the finding of fact arrived at by the Court below. The learned Subordinate Judge relied upon the statement of P. W. No. 1 who spoke of user for forty years at least. His age is sixty-eight and he says that from the time he reached understanding he remembers that the tank was so used. Another contention raised by the appellants is that by the re-excavation the user has been interrupted but that does not appear to have been the case because both before and after the excavation, the tank was so used and it appears that there is a channel leading from the tank up to the field though it is said that the channel was originally constructed for inflow of water from the fields to the tank.

Then it is suggested that inasmuch as on the plaintiffs' land there is a pathway used by the public which is to be cut in order to irrigate from this tank, the public should have been made parties in this case as their right of way has been interfered with. But it has been found that this will not interfere with the right of the public to use the pathway and in any case the way is not a public way but rather one used by the public with the permission of the owner of the land. It is contended by the appellants that the existence of the original grants can only be presumed when there is no other way of explaining the facts. The question whether there was any other way of explaining the facts is an important one for consideration when considering whether the inference of a grant can be drawn from immemorial user. But in this case no other way of explaining the facts has been suggested. The existence of another tank closer to the land than the tank in question of course disproves any right of use by necessity. A point has been raised as to non-joinder of the daughter of the sister of the plaintiffs as a party. But it has been found that the plaintiffs sister gave up her right on receiving Rs. 150, therefore her daughter was not a necessary party.

Finally, a point was raised as to the extent of the use of the water which was allowed. The Court of Appeal below finds that the depth of the tank before excavation was four cubits. In 1332 the depth of the tank was increased from four cubits to nine cubits by re-excavation. The original user was based upon the tank when it was four cubits deep. The right which is now given by the decree of the lower Appellate Court is to take water from the tank when the depth of the tank at its centre is five cubits. That means the tank being now in consequence of the re-excavation nine cubits deep, the plaintiffs have the right to use four cubits depth of water. Originally of course if the depth had been reduced by four cubits, there would have been no water in the tank. Therefore on behalf of the appellant it is contended that the plaintiffs should not be entitled to take water from the tank so as to increase the burden on the subservient tenement. We think that there is some force in this contention. In these circumstances it will be right to allow the plaintiffs to take water from the tank at any time when its depth is six cubits or more at the centre but not otherwise. With this modification this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Nag, J.—I agree.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 160 (d), 85—Under-raiyati created in contravention of s. 85—Occupancy right by custom, if protected interest under s. 160 (d)—Practice—New point—Point of law—No additional evidence necessary—Whether can be raised in second appeal

A right of occupancy existing by custom is not a "protected interest" within the meaning of s. 160 (d), Bengal Tenancy Act, when the under-raiyati is created in contravention of the provisions of s 85. Kamini Sundari Bewa v. Nepal Mondal (1).

Where a point was one of law and no additional evidence was necessary nor was it necessary to make assumptions before the point could be decided:

Held, that it could be raised in second appeal.

A. against the decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, Jessore, dated March 26, 1931.

Messrs. Hemendra Chandra Sen and Satendra Chandra Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. Joy Gopal Ghose, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal is by the plaintiffs. They instituted the suit in order to recover khas possession of the land after service of notice under s. 167, Bengal Tenency Act. They had purchased a certain raiyati interest. The defendant is holding an under-raiyati. His case was that he had a right of occupancy by custom and in this he is supported by the Record of Rights. The plaintiffs denied the existence of any such custom but both the Courts have held that they failed to rebut the presumption that the Record of Rights was correct.

Mr. Sen has contended that such a right, i. e., a right of occupancy existing by custom is not a "protected interest" within the meaning of s. 190 (d), Bengal Tenancy Act, when the under-raiyati was created in contravention of the provisions of s. 85. This contention is supported by the decision of Mitter, J., in the case reported as Kamini Sundari Bewa v. Nepal Mondal (1) and that decision has been approved by a Division Bench in Sonatan Dafadar v. Daulat Gazi (2). On behalf of the respondent it is argued that this point cannot be taken for the first time in this Court. Of course, if it were necessary to take evidence or to make assumptions in favour of the appellants before the point could be decided it would not be possible for the appellants to raise it here for the first time. But the lease itself is already on the record and it contravenes the provisions of s. 85. As the point is a point of law, it can be taken in this Court.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of both the lower Courts dismissing the plaintiff's claim for khas possession are set aside and they will be given a decree for khas possession. The appellants will get their costs in this Court. As the respondent did not appear in the lower Appellate Court, there will be no order as to costs in that Court. The respondent asks for leave to appeal. This is refused.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 19, 20—Document denying and repudiating liability to pay, whether sufficient to extend limitation—Written statement cannot be called in aid for purpose of s. 20.

Whether a particular document or letter amounts to an acknowledgment of liability or not within the meaning of s. 19, Limitation Act, must depend upon the terms thereof. Under the Indian statute there need not be a promise to pay, but the document in question must, on a fair reading, amount to an admission of liability, absolute or conditional, and in the latter case the condition must be fulfilled. But where the letter or the document relied upon expressly states that there is no liability, and the liability is in fact denied and repudiated, limitation cannot be said to be extended under s. 19 of the Limitation Act. Maniram v. Seth Rupchand (1), referred to.

A written statement filed in the suit itself cannot be called in aid for the purposes of s. 20 of the Limitation Act. When the plaintiff institutes the suit beyond the period of limitation prescribed in the Schedule to the Limitation Act, he has to state in his plaint the reasons why the suit is still within time. If there is no such statement the Court has to dismiss the suit. A suit must be tried on the cause of action as laid in the plaint and any inherent defect of the said nature in the plaint cannot be supplied by a written statement in the suit.

C. R. from the decree of the Sub-Judge, (Small Cause Court Judge), Asansol, (Burdwan), dated February 23, 1934.

Messrs. Bankim Chandra Mukherji and Nirmal Kumar Sen for Mr. Santimony Mazumdar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Gopendra Nath Das, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The defendant has obtained this Rule under s. 25 Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and the only point pressed on his behalf is that the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation. The plaintiff agreed to supply to the defendant 2000 pieces of sal wood sleepers at his colliery and on September 9, 1930, delivered the same. The defendant paid to the plaintiff some money which I am told amounted Rs. 250. The suit was filed on September 11, 1933, just two days after the period of limitation. Apart from the question of limitation the case of the defendant is that out of the 2000 pieces of sleepers 800 pieces were bad and had been rejected. For the purpose of getting over the bar of limitation the plaintiff relied upon a letter written by the defendant to the plaintiff on September 12, 1930, which is in these terms:

"Dear Sirs,

We are in receipt of your letter No. nil of 7-9-30 and noted the contents thereof.

In reply we beg to inform you that asper amicable settlement between you and ourselves about 800 pieces of the sleepers purchased from you are lying rejected near our siding of our above colliery. Please therefore, arrange to remove them at your earliest convenience and thereafter adjusting the account let us hear about your dues if any.

Please note and do the needful."

The 800 pieces of sleepers mentioned in this letter were, however, not removed by the plaintiff and his suit includes the price of these which forms the substantial part of his claim. The letter in answer to which this letter was sent has not been produced. The learned Small Cause Court Judge relied upon this letter as an acknowledgment of liability and has decreed the suit. In my opinion it cannot be regarded as an acknowledgment of liability in respect of the 800 pieces of sleepers but is an acknowledgment of liability in respect of the balance of the price that may be due on the accounts for the remaining 1200 pieces. Whether a particular document or letter amounts to an acknowledgment of liability or not within the meaning of s. 19, Limitation Act, must depend upon the terms thereof and other decisions cannot often be helpful. It is quite true that under the Indian statute there need not be a promise to pay but the document in question must on a fair reading amount to an admission of liability absolute or conditional, and in the latter case the condition must be fulfilled: see Maniram v. Seth Rupchand (1). But where the letter or the document relied upon expressly states that there is no liability and the liability is in fact denied and repudiated I do not see on what principle it can be said that limitation is extended under s. 19 of the Act. In the letter in question the defendant stated that he was under no liability for the price of the 800 pieces of rejected sleepers. I would accordingly hold that the claim of the plaintiff for the price thereof is barred by time, but the last part of the letter amounts to an acknowledgment of liability in respect of the balance of the price for the accepted 1200 pieces according to the principle laid down in Maniram v. Seth Rupchand (1).

Mr. Dass has sought to support the decree of the lower Court on another ground. He says that the defendant paid Rs. 250 on the basis of the contract, and although at the time when that payment was made there was no writing in the hand of or signed by the defendant the fact that the defendant recited the payment in his written statement in the suit which was signed by him brings the case within s. 20, Limitation Act. I do not see my way to give effect to the said contention. The defendant has maintained in his written statement that the said payment was towards the payment of the price of the 1200 accepted pieces and his written statement cannot be dissected in the manner suggested by the opposite party. Besides I am of opinion that a written statement filed in the suit itself cannot be called in aid for the purposes of s. 20 of the Act. When the plaintiff institutes the suit beyond the period of limitation prescribed in the schedule to the Limitation Act, he has to state in his plaint the reasons why the suit is still within time. If there is no such statement the Court has to dismiss the suit. Further a suit must be tried on the cause of action as laid in the plaint and any inherent defect of the said nature in the plaint cannot be supplied by a written statement in the suit. For these reasons I overrule the said contention and make the Rule absolute in part and dismiss the claim of the plaintiff in respect of the price claimed for the 800 pieces of rejected sleepers. The Advocates of parties are agreed that the decree should be for Rs. 19-1-0 which is made up of Rs. 14 and interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum from September 9, 1930, to the date of suit. The decree of the lower Court is modified accordingly. The parties will bear proportionate costs in the Court below but I make no order for costs in the Rule.

BAKHSHI SINGH AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

BACHAN SINGH—RESPONDENT

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 65—Mortgage of insolvent's property by Receiver set aside and adjudication annulled—Mortgagor, when entitled to possession.

A mortgage was effected of the insolvent's property by the Receiver and it was set aside by the District Judge and the adjudication was annulled. The mortgagor subsequently brought a suit against the mortgagee for possession :

Held, that until he was re-paid the sum advanced on the security of the land the mortgagee was entitled to remain in possession. Labh Singh v. Jamnu (1), relied on.

S. C. A. from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Ferozepore, dated May 12, 1934.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

Judgment—This judgment will dispose of Second Appals Nos. 1081 of 1934 and 147 of 1933, which have arisen out of the same case. The facts as stated by the learned District Judge in the order appealed against in the first mentioned appeal are as follows:

In 1922 one Gurmukh Singh was adjudicated an insolvent. A Receiver was appointed who, in 1926, mortgaged some of the land of the insolvent in favour of Gurdit Singh and others for Rs. 3,600. Possession of the property was delivered to the mortgagees, but the mortgage was set aside by the Additional District Judge in 1927. In 1928 the trial Court annulled the order of adjudication because the insolvent had not applied for discharge, but under s. 37 of the Act, he ordered that the insolvent's property should vest in the Official Receiver. Gurmukh Singh brought a suit for recovery of possesion of the property mortgaged, but it was dismissed on a preliminary point in 1929. In 1932 he died and his son then brought the present suit for possession of the land against the mortgagees. The trial Court decreed the suit and the learned Additional District Judge dismissed the appeal. He overruled the contention that the mortgagees should be allowed to retain possession of the mortgaged land until the sum of Rs. 3,600 was paid to them. The mortgagees have preferred this second appeal through Dr. Nand Lal, who relies on s. 65, Contract Act, as interpreted in Labh Singh v. Jamnu, (1). Section 65, Contract Act, runs:

"When an agreement is discovered to be void or when a contract becomes void, any person who has received any advantage under such agreement or contract is bound to restore it, or to make compensation for it, to the person from whom he received it."

Accordingly the Full Bench held that where an occupancy tenant has alienated the occupancy tenancy without the consent in writing of the landlord and the alienation has been set aside at the instance of the landlord the mortgagee is entitled to sue the mortgagor for refund of the mortgage money. The principle governs this case and I hold that the mortgagees are entitled to recover their mortgage money Rs. 3,600 before they are dispossessed. I therefore set aside the decree of the learned Additional District Judge and dismiss the suit holding that the mortgagees are entitled to remain in possession until they are repaid by the mortgagor the sum advanced on the security of the land. The mortgagor respondent is to pay the appellants' costs throughout.

The other appeal is now very simle. After the Official Receiver got the mortgage money of Rs. 3,600 he distributed it among nine creditors of the insolvent who were paid pro rata in March 1931. When the mortgage was set aside, the Sub-Judge in June 1932, directed the creditors to repay this money in order to satisfy the claim of the mortgagees. The creditors appealed and their appeal was accepted by the lower Court. They have come up here in order to have the judgment of the first Court restored. As I have held that the mortgagees are entitled to retain possession until the mortgage money is repaid to them by the mortgagor it is now unnecessary to hold that the creditors ought to repay what they have received. The appeal is therefore rejected. I may add that when giving the order it would have been very difficult, and it would now be impossible to enforce it in view of the fact that some of the creditors must have died and other gone away and all spent the money which they had received. There will be no order as to costs in this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Ex parte finding that execution application is not time-barred—Notice to judgment-debtor—Both parties absent—Application dismissed—Another execution application—Judgment-debtor, if estopped from raising objection that first application is not within time—Execution—Estoppel.

An execution application was prima facie time-barrred but on the evidence of the decree-holder an ex parte finding that it was not time-barred was recorded. After this, notice was sent to the judgment-debtor to show cause why the execution should not be proceeded with against him, and both parties being absent on the fixed, date the execution application was dismissed. The decree-holder filed a second application whereupon the question of limitation of the firstapplication was taken by the judgment-debtor:

Held, that the ex parte order which had been recorded against the judgment-debtor and which was to the effect that the application for execution was prima facie within time could not be taken to operate as res judicata or by way of estoppel or on any principle analogous to it.

C. A. from appellate order of the Special Sub-Judge, Assam Valley Districts, dated March 31, 1933.

Mr. Nagendra Kumar Dutt, for the Appellant.

Judgment.—This appeal must be allowed. The judgment-debtor is the appellant in this appeal. He objected to the execution that was being taken against him on the ground that the execution was barred by limitation. The facts necessary to be stated are that on the second occasion when the decree was sought to be executed the application for execution was filed on September 1, 1931 a date which was prima facie 13 days beyond three years from the date on which the first application for execution was disposed of. On receipt of this application for execution the executing Court made an order on the decree-holders asking them to show that the application was not barred by limitation. On the date fixed for the aforesaid purpose one of the decree-holders was examined and the Court recorded an order that "limitation had been prima facie proved," obviously meaning that the application was not barred by limitation. At the same time the Court issued notice to the judgment-debtor to show cause why the execution should not be proceeded with against him and he fixed the case for November 28, 1931. On the date last mentioned an order was recorded in the order-sheet which shows that the notice which had been issued on the judgment-debtor had been served but the judgment-debtor did not appear and that the decree-holders also were absent and had taken no steps.

The Court on those facts made an order dismissing the second application for execution. The present execution case was then started by filing an application on January 9, 1932. On the facts stated above the judgment debtor's contention was that the second application for execution had been filed beyond the period of limitation which would be allowable under the law. The Courts below have concurrently overruled this objection holding that by reason of the order which the executing Court had made on the second application the plea that the second application was barred by limitation is no longer open to the judgment-debtor. We are of opinion that this view of the Courts below cannot possibly be supported. The finding that a prima facie case had been made out showing that the application for execution was not time-barred was a finding arrived at ex parte. It was after that finding that notice was served on the judgment-debtors. But neither of the parties thereafter came to Court and got any decision on the question of limitation which arose. The ex parte order which had been recorded against the judgment-debtor and which was to the effect that the application for execution was prima facie within time cannot, in our opinion, be taken to operate as res judicata or by way of estoppel or on any principle analogous to it.

The result is the question whether the second application for execution was within time or not is a question which can be raised by the judgment-debtor even on the present application. The appeal is accordingly allowed and the decisions of the Subordinate Judge and of the Munsif are set aside and the case is sent back to the Court of first instance so that the parties may now be given an opportunity to produce such evidence as they may desire to do, in support of their respective contentions as regards the second application for execution being time-barred or within time. Costs of this appeal, hearing fee being assessed at two gold mohurs, will abide the result.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 438—Reference—When can be made to High Court—No question of law involved—Reference to be rejected.

A reference can only be made to the High Court if after accepting loyally the finding of facts arrived at by the trial Magistrate some question of law arises which necessitates interference with the order passed by the trial Court. When no question of law is involved the reference is to be rejected.

Cr. R. made by the Sessions Judge of Hardoi under s. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. H. K. Ghosh, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. M. Talha, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a reference made by the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi under s. 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure recommending that the conviction and fine imposed upon the accused Mr. B. A. Peters be set aside. The learned Sessions Judge has written a most elaborate order in making his reference to this Court, but he has failed to realise the cardinal and fundamental principle that a reference can only be made to the High Court if after accepting loyally the findings of facts arrived at by the trial Magistrate some question of law arises which necessitates interference with the order passed by the trial Court. In the present case the trial of the accused was summary under s. 260 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and there is no record of the evidence of the witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution, but the trial Magistrate in a very full judgment has given his reasons for finding the accused guilty of an offence under s. 120 of the Railways Act, and in his explanation submitted to the learned Sessions Judge he has made still more clear what he held as proved in the present case. Upon the facts found proved by the learned Magistrate the conviction of the accused is perfectly legal and justifiable. The contention that the findings of facts arrived at by the trial Magistrate are incorrect cannot for a moment be allowed by me in this reference. There is no question of law involved in this reference. The conviction of the accused Mr. Peters is fully justified upon the findings of the trial Magistrate. I accordingly reject this reference and direct that the file of the case be returned to the Court concerned.

SADHAN CHANDRA DEY— DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT

Execution—Decree for khas possession of certain plot—Whether can be changed in execution—Decree-holder getting symbolical possession—No objection—Subsequent application for execution for actual possession—Competency.

Where a decree is given for khas possession of a certain plot, it cannot be changed at the time of execution.

Where in execution of a decree, the decree-holder gets possession and there is no objection, a second application for execution of same decree on the ground that in the former application the decree-holder has obtained only symbolical possession, is not competent.

Mr. Sudhir Kumar Khastagir, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Shagirath Chandra Das and Jajneswar Mandal, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal in our opinion, must succeed. The decree in the present case was one for possession of a plot of land which was described therein as settlement plot No. 612, consisting of one bigha and odd of land, and tank lying within certain boundaries. It was executed as a decree for khas possession. The writ issued was in accordance with O. XXI, r. 35 and that writ being executed, a receipt was given on behalf of the decree-holder stating that possession to the exclusion of others had been received. No objection to the delivery of possession was taken either by the decree-holder or by anybody else and the Court made the following order :

"Possession delivered on May 10, 1931. No objection put in. No other steps taken. Order that the execution case is dismissed on part satisfaction."

Part satisfaction was recorded because the decree as to costs was yet unrealised. Thereafter the present execution has been started by the decree-holder in respect of the same decree, and the substance of his case is that he now wants to have khas possession of the decretal lands by ousting the judgment-debtors because as he alleges, on the previous occasion only symbolical possession was asked for by oversight, that it was only such possession that was given and that in the previous petition for execution the decretal land had been wrongly described as dag No. 612 in the place of dag No. 577. The Courts below have ordered the execution to proceed. The allegations on which the present case is founded are not true ; the decree was in respect of dag No. 612, the writ issued was for khas possession and it was khas possession that was delivered. To let the present petition proceed would be clearly to go behind the decree, and to allow the decree-holder to execute the decree a second time for getting the same kind of possession that he has admitted he got. If dag No. 612 and not No. 577 was the correct number of the dag or if only symbolical possession was what was delivered, his remedy does not lie in a second execution, whatever other remedy if any he may have. The appeal is allowed, and the orders of the Courts below being set aside it is ordered that the execution petition be dismissed with costs in all the Courts, hearing fee in this Court being assessed at one gold mohur.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 438—Reference to High Court—When can be made—Question of law—Necessity of—Reference contrary to findings of facts of trial Court—Legality of.

The High Court will not accept any reference or revision which involves no question of law. The Sessions Judge should not, therefore, make any reference to the High Court or submit any application for revision of any order contrary to the findings of facts arrived at by the trial Court.

Where in an application for maintenance the trying Magistrate finds that the husband was residing within his jurisdiction it must be accepted as correct and it is not open to the Sessions Judge to hold anything to the contrary.

Cr. Ref. made by the Sessions Judge of Rae Bareli.

Mr. S. M. Ahmad, for the Applicant.

Judgment.—This is a reference made by the learned Sessions Judge of Rae Bareli under s. 438, of the Code of Criminal Procedure. An order for maintenance was passed under s. 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by Khan Bahadur Mirza Ali Sajjad Husain, Magistrate of the first class in the District of Rae Bareli, directing Dulare to pay a maintenance of Rs. 4 a month to his wife Musammat Sundaria. The learned Sessions Judge has held that this order for maintenance was passed by the trying Magistrate without jurisdiction inasmuch as Dulare was residing in Bahlolpur in the District of Fatehpur and was not living within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of Rae Bareli. The learned trying Magistrate in his explanation, which he has submitted to the Sessions Judge, pointed out that he understood that Dulare was living with his wife Musammat Sundaria in Dalmau within the Jurisdiction of the Magistrate and that the expression "mujh muddaiya ka kul zewar chhin kar chala gaya" in deposition of the complainant clearly indicated to his mind that Dulare was living with his wife in Dalmau and left her and not that Musammat Sundaria was living apart from her husband. In this matter the opinion of the trying Magistrate and what he understood the parties to say must be accepted as correct, and if the husband was residing within the jurisdiction of the trying Magistrate, then no question of the illegality of the order passed by the learned Magistrate can arise. In this connection I would invite the attention of the learned Sessions Judge to the well settled rule on this point, that he must not make any reference to this Court or submit any application for revision of any order contrary to the findings of facts arrived at by the trial Court. No reference or revision can be accepted by this Court which involves no question of law. In the present case the learned trying Magistrate upon his interpretation of the evidence of the complainant held that Dulare, the husband of Musammat Sundaria, was living within his jurisdiction and it is not open to the learned Sessions Judge to hold anything to the contrary. I see no reason to interfere with the order of the learned trying Magistrate and I reject this reference and direct that the file of the case be returned to the Court concerned.

Decree—Two conflicting decrees—Which prevails

In case of conflicting decrees the later one must prevail The reason for this is that the previous decree cannot be looked into and must be held to have been discharged by the later decree. Dambar Singh v. Munawar Ali Khan (1), Amar Singh v. Gobind Ram (2) and Rajani Kumar Mitra v. Ajmaddin Bhuiya (3), referred to.

The judgment-debtors objected to the execution on the ground that in a previous case the District Judge had held that the assignment in favour of the opposite party was null and void. The lower Court, however, followed the earlier decision of his predecessor, which held that the assignment was good, on the ground that he was bound by the previous order of his own Court. The order of his predecessor was passed on October 5, 1925, whilst the order of the District Judge, on appeal was passed on July 16, 1926, when the matter was in issue in another case:

Held, that the later order i. e., of the District Judge must prevail.

November 5, 1932, in execution case, arising out of Civil Suit No. 12 of 1919, of the order of the Second Additional District Judge, Amraoti, dated January 28, 1920.

Mr. J. R. Mudholkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The appellants, who are judgment-debtors, appealed against the order of the Second Additional District Judge, Amraoti, allowing execution against them to proceed at the instance of the respondent, who is an assignee of the decree. The appellants objected to the execution on the ground that in Civil Appeal No. 20 of 1925 the District Judge has held that the assignment in favour of the respondent was null and void. The lower Court, however, has followed the earlier decision of his predecessor, which held that the assignment was good, and has further held that he was bound by the previous order of his own Court. It may be noted that the order of the Second Additional District Judge was passed on October 5, 1925, whilst the order of the District Judge, Amraoti, on appeal was passed on July 16, 1926, when the matter was in issue in another case.

It is clear that the view taken by the lower Court is wrong and that in case of conflicting decrees the latter must prevail. The reason for this is that the previous decree cannot be looked into and must be held to have been discharged by the later decree. In this view I would refer to the following authorities: Dambar Singh v. Munawar Ali Khan (1), Amar Singh v. Gobind Ram (2) and Rajani Kumar Mitra v. Ajmaddin Bhuiya (3). I would also refer to Mulla's Commentary on s. 11, in the Code of Civil Procedure, 10th Edition, at p. 91.

The order of the lower Court, is, therefore, set aside and instead it is directed that the application of the respondent to execute the decree in Civil Suit No. 12 of 1919 in the Court of the Second Additional District Judge, Amraoti, be dismissed with costs. Costs of this appeal will be borne by the respondent. I fix pleader's fees at Rs. 25.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Lower Court's decree modified by High Court—Liability of appellant reduced as a result—High Court decree, if one of affirmance.

Where as a result of the High Court decree which modifies the decree of the lower Court, the liability of the appellant under the decree is reduced to a certain extent, the decree of the High Court is not one of affirmance. Anna Purna Bai v. Ruprao (3) and Homeswar Singh v. Kameshwar Singh Bahadur (4), relied on, Raja Sree Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (1) and Narendra Lal v. Gopendra Lal (2), referred to

P. C. A. for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Privy Council.

Messrs. Beagram and Ambika Pada Choudhury, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. S. M. Bose and Pramatha Nath Mitter, for the Opposite Parties.

Mitter, J.—This is an application of the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company, Limited, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. It appears that a suit was brought against them by the plaintiffs now respondents to recover a sum of Rs. 1,66,493 odd on account of the price of the work done by the plaintiffs as members of a joint Mitakshara family for a certain construction known as Amda-Jamda branch of the said railway. That suit was decreed in part by the trial Court. There were appeals and cross-appeals against this decision to this Court. As a result of the appeal by the Railway Company the decree against them was reduced to a certain extent. The contention of the Railway Company is that they are not at all liable for any amount claimed in the suit, and so the Railway Company is not satisfied with the reduction of the claim against them by this Court.

The decree of this Court is more (in) their favour than the decree made by the Court of first instance. The company have accordingly applied for leave. One of the points for consideration which arises is as to whether the High Court judgment is to be regarded as a judgment of affirmance seeing that the decision reducing the amount of claim against them to a certain extent was really a decision of affirmance of the judgment of the Court below with reference to the amount claimed less the amount ultimately decreed by the High Court against the company. The question really arose in view of a previous decision of this Court in Raja Sree Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (1) where it was held in circumstances somewhat similar to the present that the decree was really a decree of affirmance and leave could not be granted unless a substantial question of law arose with regard to the application. That case has been considered by Sir George Rankin, C. J., in Narendra Lal v. Gopendra Lal (2). The facts in Raja Sree Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (1) were that the lower Court Judge gave an award of compensation and the High Court increased that amount. The applicant desired that the said amount might be still further increased, and it was held that the two Courts were at one on the only matter which was going to the Privy Council viz., whether beyond the amount awarded by the High Court the applicant had any claim. As has been pointed out by Sir George Rankin, C. J.

"that case is the origin of the doctrine that the language of s 110 of the Code is to be construed with reference to the subject-matter in appeal to the Privy Council."

The reasoning of that case is that a decree which merely dismisses the appeal or confirms the decree of the immediate Court below is not the only decree of affirmance for the purposes of an appeal to the Privy Council. It has been held in a later decision of the Privy Council in Anna Purna Bai v. Ruprao (3) that the rule which originated in the doctrine which we have just enunciated in the case of Raja Sree Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (1) was erroneous. In view of this decision of the Privy Council we are of opinion that the decree of this Court is not a decree of affirmance. Other authorities have been cited before us to which reference may be made. We have been referred to a decision of the Patna High Court of Chief Justice Sir Courtney-Terrell in Homeswar Singh v. Kameshwar Singh Bahadur (4) where the same view was taken. The learned Chief Justice made this pertinent observation which may be usefully quoted here:

"It is immaterial whether the efect of the modification is in favour of the appellant or adds to his detriment that is the effect of the wording of the section. Had the legislature chosen to lay down a criterion of the right of appeal depending upon whether the appellant would suffer by the modification or not, it would have said so."

(3) 86 Ind. Cas. 504; A I R 1925 P C 60; 51 I A 319; 51 C 969 (P C).
(4) 144 Ind. Cas. 320; A I R 1933 Pat. 262; Ind. Rul. (1933) Pat. 235.

Reliance has been placed on behalf of the appellants on the case of Annapurna with reference to the observations of the Judicial Committee to which reference has already been made. In this view the judgment of the High Court is not a judgment of affirmance and there is no dispute with regard to the value of the appeal to His Majesty in Council. So we are bound to grant certificate that the case fulfils the requirements of s. 110, Civil Procedure Code. The certificate is accordingly granted.

The total amounted to Rs. 5,256-2-0, but the appellants remitted Rs. 6-2-0. The defendants pleaded that the appellants were not entitled to any amount by way of damages or even to the refund of the money alleged to have been paid by way of advance or to the price of empty bags, as they themselves had been responsible for the breach of contract. The Senior Subordinate Judge dismissed their suit in toto; and burdened them with special costs of Rs. 200 in addition to the ordinary costs of the suit. From this decision an appeal has been preferred to the extent of special costs and Rs. 800 only calculated in the following manner: (a) Rs. 400 which were paid to the defendants as advance, (b) Rs. 153 as the price of 612 empty bags, and (c) Rs. 247 by way of damages for the defendant's breach of contract in failing to deliver 612 bags of bran.

We may say at once that the appeal as regards the last item of Rs. 247 is not competent, as this sum was never claimed in the Court below. We are also clear that the appellants are entitled to a sum of Rs. 153 as the price of the empty bags that were admittedly delivered to the defendants by the appellants. We are, however, not inclined to allow the refund of Rs. 400 as we are satisfied that it was the appellants who were guilty of the breach of contract and the money had not been deposited as an advance in the technical sense of the term. The learned Counsel for the appellants has relied on Pasumarti Seethanna v. Thammandra Yasikalappa (1), and Manepalli Satyanarayanamurthi v. Kakaraparthi Krishna Murthi (2), in support of his argument that this sum is legally refundable. In Pasumarti Seethanna v. Thammandra Yasikalappa (1), there was, as in the present case, no definite written contract and the learned Judge followed with approval the following observations made in Habib Ullah v. Arman Dewan (3):

"The deposit, if nothing more is said about it is according to the ordinary interpretation of business men, a security for the completion of the purchase so that in the event of the contract being performed, it must be brought into account, and if the contract is not performed by the payer, it is forfeited to the payee."

"In Manepalli Satyanarayanamurthi v. Kakaraparthi Krishna Murthi (2), it was no doubt observed by a Bench of the Madras High Court that it is never the practice in mercantile contracts to hold that whatever be the damage suffered or not suffered, the seller is to be entitled to keep the deposit, but the facts of that case were different from those of the present case and the remarks made by the learned Judges do not in any way support the contention raised by the appellant's Counsel before us. In Manepalli Satyanarayanamurthi v. Kakaraparthi Krishna Murthi (2), again, a case from Madras, the learned Judge remarked that, in sales of goods it is not customary to give money paid in advance, the peculiar characteristic of a deposit, and that it would be hazardous to infer that when a vendor accepts what he calls 'advance' he is taking a deposit clothed with all the implications which that term has acquired in the West throught the course of European civilization."

They considered it safer to rely on the findings of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge that as the so-called advance was treated as part payment of purchase money in the account books of the defendants, it was not a deposit in the strict sense of the word.

We, therefore, consider that these authorities do not help the appellants. As against this it was laid down by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Roshan Lal v. Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. (4), that when a plaintiff repudiated the contract into which he had entered with the defendants, he would not be entitled to recover that portion of the earnest money which he had paid. The law on the subject has been very carefully reviewed by Pollock and Mulla in the Treatise on the Indian Sale of Goods Act, (p. 45, 1933 Edition), and is in accord with the pinciple enunciated above. In these circumstances, while accepting the appeal to the extent of allowing the appellants a sum of Rs. 153 with proportionate costs, we dismiss the appeal otherwise and allow the respondents their costs of the appeal on the balance.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s 109 (a), (b)—Cl. (a), meaning and effect of—Person found with house-breaking implements near wealthy man's house—Admission of object of being there—Person, if can be dealt with under cls. (a) and (b)—"A satisfactory account of himself,' meaning of—Simply avoiding Police or taking unfrequented route—Whether by itself ground for action under s. 109—Words 'is taking' in cl. (a), significance of.

Section 109, cl. (a), Criminal Procedure Code, does not mean that the man is taking precautions to conceal the fact of his being present within the local limits of such Magistrate; but it means that he is taking precautions to conceal his presence and that the concealment is to be within the local limits of such Magistrate [p. 731, col. 2.]

If a man be found by the Police with implements of house-breaking lurking near the house of a wealthy man thereby indicating that he is about to commit burglary there and when challenged by the Police he admits the object of his being there, he can be dealt with under cls. (a)and (b). [p. 732, col. 2.]

" A satisfactory account of himself " does not necessarily mean that he should give his correct name and address or even the object of his being present at night, but that he should satisfy the authorities by explaining the suspicious circumstances appearing against him. Simply avoiding the Police by a bad character or taking an unfrequented route is by itself no ground for action under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code. It may be that in some cases simply not giving an explanation may not be enough, for instance, an apparently respectable person returning from the house of his mistress very late at night is using unfrequented streets and avoiding being seen. He cannot come under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code: Each case must be decided on its own facts. Emperor v. Phuchai (6) followed. [p. 733, col. 1.]

In s. 109, cl. (a), the words 'is taking' mean 'has taken' or 'has been taking'. [p 732, col. 2]

Cr. Ref. from a letter of the Deputy Commissioner, Sambalpur, dated September 29, 1934.

Mr. B. C. De, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference made by the Deputy Commissioner of Sambalpur under s. 438, Criminal Procedure Code, recommending that the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Bargarh discharging Bishi Sahara, Dileshwar Binjhal, Manjhi Ganda, Bhikari Sahu and Banshi Ganda from a proceeding under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code, be set aside and further inquiry ordered.

The facts as stated by the learned Deputy Commissioner and disclosed from the judgment of the learned Sub-Divisional Officer are these. The officer in charge of the Bargarh Police Station got information at 6-30 P. M., of June 21, 1934, that some persons of suspected character of village Khuntpali abour 6 to 7 miles off were about to commit burglary in the town of Bargarh on that night. The officer with several men picketted a place by the side of a temple near a tank in the outskirt of the town of Bargarh. At about 11 P. M., they noticed some persons inside the compound of the temple. On being challenged these persons began to run away after scaling the wall of the compound of the temple. The Police Officer chased them, and eventually three persons were arrested at a distance of about 15 paces from the place. There was a scuffle in which two other persons, who had run away, also joined. They are said to have received lathi injuries from the constable. The Police also found house-breaking instrument called sendhkati, a bottle of liquor and two lathis on a platform inside the compound of the temple. The three arrested persons were taken to the Police Station, and on some information supplied by them accused Bhikari Sahu and Banshi Ganda were also arrested. It is said that they had marks of lathi upon their person which were bleeding. These five persons, namely, the three persons who were arrested on the spot and the two who were arrested later on were proceeded against under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code. After completing the inquiry the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate discharged them, as in his opinion the circumstances disclosed did not warrant the accused persons being bound down under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate has relied upon the following decisions:

Emperor v. Himayatullah (1), Reshu Kabiraj v. Emperor (2), Gohra Badia v. Emperor (3), Gajan Chandra De v. Emperor (4) and Emperor v. Bhairon (5). In my opinion the view taken by the learned Sub-Divisional Officer is not correct. The two Allahabad cases relied upon by him, namely, Emperor v. Himayatullah (1) and Emperor v. Bhairon (5), were overruled by a Full Bench of that Court in Emperor v. Puchai (6). This was not brought to the notice of the learned Sub-Divisional Officer. I shall come to this case in a moment, but before I do so, I wish to examine the three Calcutta cases relied upon by him. The first is that of Reshu Kabiraj v. Emperor (2). In this case the fact that Reshu Kabiraj, who was a dealer in cocaine was found at about midnight in a lane in the town of Raghunathganj in association with two others who had in their possession house-breaking implements; that on being discovered he fled and that when arrested he remained silent and that the explanation offered to the Magistrate of his presence at the time and place in question was found to be false. It was urged on his behalf that sub-cl. (a), s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code did not apply as the accused's presence or residence within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate was well-known and that there was no attempt on his part to conceal the same and that the petitioner's attempt to conceal his presence at a particular spot and at a particular time even if it were with the object of assisting in the commission of house-breaking did not bring him within the mischief of the clause. It was also urged that sub-cl. (b) also did not apply as the accused's name, address and profession were known and his possession of means has been found. It must, therefore, be taken that he gave a satisfactory account of himself within the meaning of cl. (b). It was further urged that the accused having been charged only under sub-s. (a), sub-s. (b), could not be invoked to bind him down. Unfortunately there is no discussion in the judgment of their Lordships of the points taken before them. Teunon, J., only said:

"On the whole though speaking for myself with some hesitation we have arrived at the conclusion that the facts found do not bring the petitioner within either clause of s. 109 of the Code."

Shamsul Hoda, J., agreed and added that the cl. (a), s. 109 refers to a continuous act of concealment. He was also of opinion that the provisions of s. 109 (a) could not apply to the case of a person brought under arrest, as it cannot be said of such a person that he is taking precautions to conceal his presence. This case was also expressly dissented from in the Full Bench case of Allahabad referred to above and also in this Court. Another case referred to by the learned Magistrate is Gobra Badia v. Emperor (3). Two points seem to have been decided in it. One is that if a man gives his correct name and address when questioned by the Police the mere fact that he did not give a satisfactory account of what he was doing at the time of his arrest cannot justify an action under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code. The second point is the same which was decided in the two earlier cases of the Calcutta High Court, namely, that of Reshu Kabiraj v. Emperor (2) and Piru v. Emperor (7). The next case is that of Gajan Chandra De v. Emperor (4), there also following the cases of Reshu Kabiraj v. Emperor (2), it was held that in order to bring a man within the purview of cl. (a), s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code, there must be a continuous act of concealment by him.

Now, from the cases relied upon by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate the following propositions may be deduced. (1) That cl. (a), s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code, only applies when a man takes precautions to conceal the fact of his being present within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, and not when he takes precautions only to conceal himself and the act of concealment takes place within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. (2) That the act of concealment must be continuous. (3) That cl. (a) does not apply when a man is brought under arrest as he is not taking precaution to conceal his presence. (4) That cl. (b) does not apply when a man gives his correct name and address, but is unable to explain the reason of his being present at a particular time and place. The second and third propositions have been dissented from in this Court and all of them by the majority of the Judges in the Full Bench case of the Allahabad High Court. In Rambirich Ahir v. Emperor (8), Sir Dawson Miller, C. J., after referring to the case of Reshu Kabiraj v. Emperor (2), and the case of Piru v. Emperor (7), which followed it, observed:

"I am not prepared to go so far as to limit the application of the clause to cases where a person has not been brought under arrest. A reference to s. 55 of the Act shows that an officer in charge of a Police Station may arrest any person found taking precautions to conceal his presence within the local limits of such station under circumstances which afford reason to believe that he is taking such precautions with a view to committing a cognizable offence, or any person who has no ostensible means of subsistence, or who cannot give a satisfactory account of himself. If it is to be held that after he is once arrested and brought before the Magistrate no action can be taken under s. 109 (a) on the ground that the arrested person is no longer taking precautions to conceal his presence, there would appear to be little object in allowing him to be arrested at all, for the only manner in which he can be dealt with is under s. 109, and a large proportion of the cases dealt with under that section are cases where the person has already been arrested. Nor am I prepared to say that it must in all such cases be proved that the accused has followed a continuous course of conduct in taking precautions to conceal his presence, I consider however that a person, whether he be of good or bad character, who merely shows a disinclination for the society of the Police and endeavours to avoid them by running away on their approach, cannot be said to come within the mischief aimed at in cl. (a) . . . . . It is perhaps impossible, it is certainly undesirable, to lay down any general principles as to the conditions which would bring a case within the purview of the clause, for the circumstances which may arise are so multiple and various; but I think it may be said that there must be some definite attempt at concealment by taking precautions with that object in view, whether it be by disguise, or otherwise, indicating a desire to hide the fact that the accused if present within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The clause is one which should be used with proper discretion and was never intended to apply to a person merely found talking at night time with bad characters in a place which is open to the public."

This case also, which has been referred to by the learned Deputy Commissioner, does not seem to have been brought to the notice of the learned Sub-Divisional Officer. It was followed by James, J., in Sukhan Ahir v. Emperor (9), and it was held that a continuous act of concealment is not necessary.

I now take up the Full Bench case of Emperor v. Puchai (6). The facts of that case were almost exactly similar to the facts before me. Unfortunately the learned Judges were sharply divided. Banerji, J., who was a party to the decision in Emperor v. Himayatullah (1), adhered to his former view. Sulaiman, Ag. C. J., was of opinion that cl. (a) applied, and not cl. (b). Boys, J., was of opinion, that cl. (b) was applicable, and not cl. (a). Kendall, J., was of opinion that both clauses of s. 109 were applicable, while Weir, J., was of opinion, that cl. (a) undoubtedly applied, but perhaps cl. (b) was also applicable. I do not propose to discuss the grounds of the learned Judges for holding the different views they expressed. It is sufficient to say that I adopt the view of Sulaiman, Actg. C. J., and Kendall and Weir, JJ, and I am of opinion, that cl. (a) is applicable to the facts as disclosed in this case. I also agree with Boys and Kendall, JJ. and hold that cl. (b) will also apply to the circumstances as disclosed in this case. Section 109 authorizes a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate and Sub-Divisional Magistrate to take action when he is informed :

"(a) that any person is taking precautions to conceal his presence within the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction, and that there is reason to believe that such person is taking such precautions with a view to to committing any offence, or (b) that there is within such limits a person who has no ostensible means of subsistence or who cannot give a satisfactory account of himself."

Sulaiman, Actg. C. J, has pointed out with which I entirely agree, that cl. (a), does not mean that the man is taking precautions to conceal the fact of his being present within the local limits of such Magistrate ; but it means that he is taking precautions to conceal his presence and that the concealment is to be within the local limits of such Magistrate. He has pointed out that the ordinary rule of grammar is that an adverb of place should refer to the nearest verb, and not to the one more remote. He observes :

"To say that the expression 'within the local limits of such Magistrate's jurisdiction' is a part of the predicate 'to conceal his presence' is, I would say with great respect, using ambiguous language, inasmuch as it does not clearly bring out, the point which causes a difference of opinion, namely, whether the expression is an adjectival clause qualifying the noun 'presence' or an adverb of place modifying the verb 'to conceal.' If it is the former, it would mean concealing the fact of his being present inside the jurisdiction, while if it is the latter, it would mean that the act of concealing his presence must be within the jurisdiction. The former construction narrows considerably the scope of the sub section, for which there seems to be no justification. In ordinary grammar an expression indicating a place is treated as an adverb of place of modifying the nearest verb in the sentence, and not as an adjective qualifying a substantive noun"

He has also pointed out that the words "is taking" in the clause though unhappy mean "has taken" or "has been taking," as Sir Dawson Miller, C. J., in Rambirich Ahir v. Emperor (8), has pointed out otherwise no action can be taken against a man after he has been arrested, and the arrest itself will become futile. Coming to cl. (b), can it be held that if a man be found by the Police with implements of house-breaking lurking near the house of a wealthy man, thereby indicating that he is about to commit burglary there and when challenged by the Police he admits the object of his being there, no action can be taken against him. Section 55 of the Code, also uses almost the same language as s. 109 and if the latter section is not applicable in order to bind him down, the former is also not applicable to authorize the Police to arrest him. Assuming, however, that he can be arrested under s. 54, cl. (b), for being in possession of house-breaking implement, there is no law under which he can be dealt with after the arrest. No section of the Penal Code is applicable to him. The result will be that though the legislature provided for the arrest of such a man, no provision has been made for dealing with him after such arrest. I fail to understand how the Police can prevent such a person from repeating the act night after night. It will lead to this situation that if a man is timid and does not tell his real object or his correct name or address, he is liable to be dealt with under s. 109; but if he be audacious and tells that he is a thief and was there to commit burglary, he should be left off free to persue his design with impunity. All these points of law have been considered by the several learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court, and I respectfully agree with their conclusions. In my opinion, such a man is liable to be dealt with under s. 109 and he comes under both the clauses. "A satisfactory account of himself" does not necessarily mean that he should give his correct name and address or even the object of his being present at night, but that he should satisfy the authorities by explaining the suspicious circumstances appearing against him. I agree with those learned Judges who have held that simply avoiding the Police by a bad character or taking an unfrequented route is by itself no ground for action under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code. It may be that in some cases simply not giving an explanation may not be enough, for instance, an apparently respectable person returning from the house of his mistress very late at night is using unfrequented streets and avoiding being seen. He cannot come under s. 109, Criminal Procedure Code. Each case must be decided on its own facts.

The result is that I accept the reference, set aside the order of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bargarh and direct that the proceeding against the accused under s. 109, be revived and disposed of according to law on merits. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate has expressed doubts about the truth of the evidence of sons of the witnesses and has also said that evidence against two of the accused, is weak. I have not considered the evidence. No doubt, the learned Magistrate will consider this at the time of the passing of the order. If the learned Magistrate, who has passed the order, is still the Sub-Divisional Officer at Bargarh, he will dispose of the case after such hearing as may be necessary, otherwise the case will be re-heard by his successor. As some interval will elapse between the incident which is the basis of the proceeding and the final disposal of the case, it will be for the Magistrate in case he orders the furnishing of security to decide what should be the period for which it should be required.

SUNDAR ALI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

NUR MAMUD AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Appeal—One of defendants-respondents dying pending appeal—Suit if instituted without him would have been proper—Legal representative not brought on record in appeal—Appeal, if competent—Landlord and tenant—Tenancy, proof of—Suit by tenant against trespasser—Proof, whether sufficient if tenant proves that landlord received rent from him.

Where the suit would have been quite all right even if it had been instituted by the plaintiffs against the contesting defendants without impleading the deceased defendant-respondent as a defendant and there is no apprehension of there being any inconsistent decree if the appeal were to be allowed, the appeal does not become incompetent by not bringing on record the legal representative of the deceased on his death pending the appeal.

A tenancy can be proved by documentary or oral evidence.

In a suit for possession by a tenant against a trespasser in order to succeed, the plaintiff is not bound to prove the terms of the tenancy. If he can simply prove that the landlord had accepted rent from them, that would be quite sufficient for the purpose of maintaining a suit against the trespasser.

C. A. from the appellate decree of the Sub-Judge, Fifth Court, Dacca, dated April 27, 1931.

Mr. Bijan Kumar Mukherjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. Phani Bhusan Chakravarti, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of the defendants and arises out of a suit for possession. The plaintiffs' case is that the land in suit belonged to pro forma defendant No. 23 who had let it out to them. It is on the basis of this tenancy that the plaintiffs have instituted the suit for possession. The defendants in their written statement challenged the title of the plaintiffs and they further set up a right to use the land for the purpose of steeping jute, etc., a right in the nature of an easement. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiffs had not been able to establish their tenancy under defendant No. 23 and also found that the contesting defendents had not been able to substantiate their claim of easement as against the landlord. In this view of the matter, it negatived the claim of the principal defendants and also dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the basis that they had no title. An appeal was preferred by the plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court found that the plaintiffs had establishsd their tenancy right and accordingly decreed the suit with a direction for ascertainment by the Court of first instance of mesne profits. Before the lower Appellate Court it seems that the defendants did not re-agitate their claim to easement rights. Against the judgment and decree of the lower Appellale Court, the defendants have preferred this appeal.

While the appeal was pending here, pro forma defendant No. 23 died and no attempt was made to bring on record his legal representatives. Mr. Chakravarty who appears for the respondents accordingly urges before me a preliminary point, namely that the appeal is incompetent by reason of the death of defendant No. 23 and that the plaintiffs did not bring on record his legal representatives. I do not think that there is any substance in this preliminary objection. The suit would have been quite all right even if it had been instituted by the plaintiffs against the contesting defendants without impleading this person as a defendant. There is no apprehension of there being any inconsistent decree if the appeal were to be allowed by me, on the ground that no decree had been made either in favour or against the pro forma defendant No. 23 and could not have been made, having regard to the frame of the suit. It is for these reasons that I overrule the preliminary objection. To come back to the merits: for the purpose of proving the tenancy, the plaintiffs produced before the Court a document which is called a Hukumnama. Both the Courts below have come to the conclusion that that document is not simply an order for delivery of possession to the defendants by the landlord but is a present demise. Both the Courts below, therefore, have ruled that document out of evidence on the ground that it is not registered. The lower Appellate Court however has held that there is oral evidence to support the tenancy which the plaintiffs obtained from the pro forma defendant No. 23. In the first place, the pro forma defendant No. 23 filed his written statement admitting the tenancy. Secondly, there is oral evidence which has been believed by the lower Appellate Court in support of the tenancy of the plaintiffs. Dr. Mukherjee who appears for the appellants urges that this oral evidence is not admissible at all. A tenancy can be proved by documentary or oral evidence. It is a suit by the plaintiffs against a trespasser and in order to succeed the plaintiffs are not bound or are required to prove the terms of the tenancy which they obtained from the pro forma defendant No. 23. If they could simply prove that defendant No. 23 had accepted rent from them, that would have been quite sufficient for the purpose of maintaining a suit against the defendant who is a trespasser. In these circumstances, I hold that the lower Appellate Court is right in holding that the plaintiffs had established their tenancy right under defendant No. 23 by the evidence which I hold is admissible in law. The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 41—Final order in earlier insolvency proceedings—Judgment in rem—Whether can be disturbed by subsequent applications—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 4, 52—Execution sale —Judgment-debtor adjudicated insolvent—Insolvency proceedings—Court refusing to set aside sale—Subsequent application by insolvent and another creditor to set aside sale—Maintainability.

Under s. 41, Evidence Act, a final judgment, order or decree of a competent Court in insolvency proceedings has the effect of a judgment in rem and cannot be disturbed by subsequent applications even if not between the same parties.

In certain execution proceedings the property of the judgment-debtor was put up for sale and sold. The debtor was declared insolvent. In the proceedings in insolvency taken by the Receiver under s. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, the Court found that no fraud was committed in respect of the sale. Subsequently, some year after confirmation of the sale, an application was made by the insolvent together with another creditor and they asked under s. 4 or the Act for a declaration that the very sale, which had been the subject of the earlier decision by the Judge in insolvency on the application of the Re ceiver, was invalid, and again raised the question of the jurisdiction of the Court under s. 52 of the Insolvency Act. The sale was held to be illegal and without jurisdiction :

Held, that the matter had been already decided in the earlier application and that decision being a judgment in rem could not be disturbed by subsequent applications even if not between the same parties

Held, also that the Receiver not having taken any steps to appeal from the order in the earlier proceedings, it was not right, having taken that definite attitude and taken advantage of that attitude, that the auction-purchaser should be prejudiced either on behalf of the insolvent or on behalf of the creditors by an attempt to set aside the sale which took place so long ago and when a previous attempt to set aside the sale had failed.

C. A. from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya, dated February 4, 1935.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, B. K. Prasad and K. N. Varma, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Manohar Lal, S. N. Bose and R. K. Prasad, for the Respondents.

Courtney Terrell, C. J.—On August 12, 1931 a sale was held in execution of a decree which had been obtained by one Ramlochan Ram against a firm called Ramcharan Ram Kardhan Ram and a certain property of the judgment-debtors was put up for sale and sold. Later on the judgmedt-debtor was declared insolvent. The application for insolvency had been made on June 13, 1931, and the petition was admitted on July 9, 1931, an interim Receiver being appoined on August 5, 1931 but not being clothed with power to take possession of any of the properties. The Receiver took proceedings under s. 4 of the Insolvency Act, applying for possession of the properties which had in fact been sold on the ground that the sale had been effected without jurisdiction and asking that the sale be annulled. But on August 3, 1934, the Judge in insolvency held that the sale was perfectly valid and refused the application. After the date of the sale which as I have said took place on August 12, 1931, power was given to the receiver to take possession of the insolvent's property, the power being given by the order of the Judge in insolvency on September 28, 1931. On November 28, 1931, the order for adjudication was made. The Judge in the proceedings taken by the Receiver under s. 4 dealt with the allegations by the Receiver that the sale was attended with circumstances of fraud and he found that there had been no fraud in fact committed.

As to the point taken by the Receiver that the sale had taken place in the Executing Court without jurisdiction, it was contended on behalf of the Receiver that under s. 52 of the Insolvency Act inasmuch as the Court had notice of the insolvency petition, it should thereupon have stayed the proceedings for sale and should have directed that the property should have been delivered over to the Receiver. The learned Judge expressly declined to deal with this part of the argument on behalf the Receiver and refused the application which was then made.

The present application, with the decision of which we are now concerned, was made on August 10, 1934, some years after the sale had been confirmed; furthermore long after the Receiver had taken course of being vested with the sale proceeds. It was made by the insolvent together with another creditor and they asked under s. 4 of the Act for a declaration that the very sale, which had been the subject of the earlier decision by the Judge in insolvency on the application of the Receiver, was invlaid, and again raised the question of the jurisdiction of the Court under s. 52 of he Insolvency Act. The argument which was urged before the District Judge and which found favour with him was that the sale in execution was illegal and without jurisdiction.

Now the question of the proper construction of s. 52 is said to be attended with some difficulty inasmuch as different High Courts have taken different views and I do not propose to express any opinion on it. My reason for rejecting the application and for holding that the learned District Judge was wrong in his decision, in effect to set aside the sale in the execution proceedings, is that the matter had already been decided in the earlier application under s. 4. The proceedings in that earlier application were taken by the Receiver. Under s. 41 of the Evidence Act which deals amongst other things with judgments in insolvency proceedings, it is laid down that a final judgment, order or decree of a competent Court in such matters, as was in this case the judgment in the earlier case, has the effect of a judgment in rem and it cannot be disturbed by subsequent applications even if not between the same parties. Moreover, it is to be noticed that the Receiver took no steps as he might have done to appeal from the order which was made against him in the earlier proceedings and that for some years the purchaser has been left in possession of the property, and in the earlier proceedings in 1931 there was an order that the interim Receiver should take possession of the sale properties. It is not right having taken that definite attitude and taken advantage of that attitude that the auction-purchaser should be prejudiced either on behalf of the insolvent or on behalf of the creditors by an attempt to set aside the sale which took place so long ago and when a previous attempt to set aside this sale had failed.

The appeal will accordingly be allowed with costs in so far as the sale to the appellant is concerned.

The order for costs will be against the respondent No. 1 and the estate.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT
Full Bench

Criminal Appeal No. 280 of 1934
February 18, 1935

FERRERS, J. C., RUPCHAND AND HAVELIWALA, A. J. C.

SHAHU AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 419, 421, 561-A, 369—Order dismissing appeal filed under s. 419—Whether final—When can be set aside—Whether conditions under s. 421 have been fulfilled, is a question of fact—Interference by High Court—Dismissal of appeal summarily in exercise of powers under s. 421—Whether judgment—Compliance with s. 421—Appellant or his pleader, if must be heard—Criminal Trial—Review—Case decided by Court of competent jurisdiction—Same Court, whether by same Judge or another, cannot review it.

An order passed under s. 421, Criminal Procedure Code, dismissing an appeal filed under s 419, Criminal Procedure Code is prima facie final.

Such an order cannot be vacated under s. 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code unless it is proved that either of the conditions precedent to the passing of the order as laid down by s 421 has not been fulfilled and this is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each case. The burden of proving that either of the conditions has not been complied with, lies heavily on the person challenging the finality of the order.

Where it is proved that either of the conditions precedent has not been complied with, the High Court has power to interfere under s. 561-A and in such a case it is immaterial whether the Bench which is called upon to interfere is composed of the same or different Judges. Where there is no proof that either of the conditions have not been complied with, the High Court, whether the Bench is composed of the same or other Judges, has no power to interfere.

(Case law reviewed.)

There is no dismissal of a criminal appeal for default of appearance by a party as in a civil case and therefore when an appeal is summarily dismissed deliberately and openly by a Court of competent jurisdiction in the apparent exercise of the powers vested in it under s. 421, Criminal Procedure Code, it is prima facie, a judgment within the meaning of s. 369, Criminal Procedure Code. Damu Ganpati v. Sridhar (1), referred to.

Section 421, Criminal Procedure Code, does not require that the appellant or his pleader shall be heard before the appeal is decided, but all that it requires is that a sufficient opportunity should be afforded to them of being heard. If a sufficient opportunity of being heard is afforded to either of them, the neglect of the appellant or his pleader who is his agent debars him from claiming a second hearing.

Under s. 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code, inherent powers in that behalf may be exercised by the High Court and not by a Court of inferior jurisdiction.

A Court of competent jurisdiction may decide a case rightly or wrongly; and it is not open to the same Judges much less to other Judges of co-ordinate jurisdiction to review that decision

Mr. M. Aslam, for the Appellants.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, for the Crown.

Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C.—To a certain extent there is a divergence of judicial opinion with regard to the powers of a High Court to rehear an appeal which has been summarily dismissed without hearing the appellant (except when he is in jail) or his Counsel if he has any; and it is in consequence of this, that the learned Judicial Commissioner has referred the following three points of law to the Full Bench.

1. Whether an order under s. 421, Criminal Procedure Code dismissing an appeal filed under s. 419, Criminal Procedure Code is final ? 2. Can it be vacated under s 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code? 3. If so, can this be done by a Divisional Bench other than that which passed the original order ?"

The order of summary dismissal which has given rise to the present reference was passed by a Bench of this Court consisting of the learned Judicial Commissioner and Mr. O'Sullivan, acting Additional Judicial Commissioner. Mr. O'Sullivan's period of office is over and a Bench differently constituted is required to rehear the appeal. Now, an order of summary dismissal under s. 421, Criminal Procedure Code may not only be passed by a High Court, but by a Court of Appeal which is not a High Court. And there can be no question that where an order purporting to be an order under s. 421, Criminal Procedure Code, has been passed by a Court of Appeal which is not a High Court, the right of the appellant to have it set aside or reviewed is not by resort to that Court, but to a higher Court, whether it be by way of appeal or revision however wrong such order may be. This is clear from the provisions of s. 369, Criminal Procedure Code, as amended by s. 101 of Act XVIII of 1923, which limits the power of a Court to review its own orders except under certain circumstances.

There is no definition of judgment in the Criminal Procedure Code. In the Law Dictionary by Morley and Whitelay, "judgment" is said to mean "sentence or order of the Court in a civil or criminal proceedings." In Damu Ganpati v. Sridhar (1), at p. 127*, it is said that a judgment means expression of opinion of the Judge in a trial arrived at after due consideration of the evidence. There is no dismissal of a criminal appeal for default of appearance by a party as in a civil case and, therefore, when an appeal is summarily dismissed deliberately and openly by a Court of competent jurisdiction in the apparent exercise of the powers vested in it under s. 421, Criminal Procedure Code, it is prima facie a judgment within the meaning of the rule laid down in the Calcutta case and within the meaning of s. 369, Criminal Procedure Code.

In view of the provisions of s. 369 an order so passed may not be reviewed by the Court which passed it, unless empowered to do so by any provision in the Criminal Procedure Code, or by any other law for the time being in force, or in the case of a Chartered High Court (which this Court is not) by the Letters Patent of such High Court. There is no provision in the Code or in any other law for the time being in force empowering a Court to review an order of summary dismissal. It is, however, argued and not without considerable force that as this Court is a High Court within the meaning of s. 3, cl. 23, General Clauses Act X of 1897, it has inherent jurisdiction to interfere when the interests of justice so require not only with the orders of Courts subordinate to it, but with its own orders.

It is argued that although the inherent powers of Criminal Courts had an uncertain career in the past, the Amending Act of 1923 has given legislative sanction to the exercise of such powers by adding s. 561-A to the present Code. Our attention has been invited to several decided cases where High Courts have either reviewed or refused to review orders of summary dismissals of appeals. But before we refer to some of them, it will be profitable to refer to the pertinent sections of the Code in issue. Section 421 imposes two distinct conditions which must be fulfilled before a Court of competent jurisdiction summarily dismisses an appeal. The first condition is, that the Court must apply its mind to the merits of the case and come to a conclusion that the order appealed against is one which should not be disturbed. For that purpose the Court may send for the record of the lower Court if it thinks fit to do so; but it is not bound to do so. The Court cannot refuse to apply its mind to the merits of the case as appearing from the judgment of the lower Court or the record if it has been sent for merely and solely because the appellant or his advocate has failed to appear.

The second condition is, that where an appeal has been presented to the Court under s. 419 and not under s. 420 of the Code, that is to say, where the appeal has not been presented by an appellant who is in jail, or where the appellant whether in jail or not is represented by a Pleader, the Court is bound to afford to the appellant or if he is represented, to his Pleader a reasonable opportunity of being heard. If both these conditions are fulfilled, the order passed by a Divisional Bench of the High Court is a perfectly valid order, and cannot be reviewed either by the same Bench or by another Bench of the same Court whether it be a Divisional Bench or a Full Bench. In such a case it is difficult to see how the interests of justice require that the litigation which has been properly brought to its termination should be re-opened. A Court of competent jurisdiction may decide a case rightly or wrongly; and it is not open to the same Judges much less to other Judges of co-ordinate jurisdiction to review that decision.

Even in civil cases the powers of review are limited; and Courts whether such Courts come within the definition of High Courts or not, have no power whether inherent or otherwise to review their judgments on the ground that such judgments were wrongly decided; much less can the Courts claim to review criminal judgments on similar grounds. But it is different where either of the conditions mentioned above is not fulfilled. In that case the judgment given by the Court is prima facie defective and may be reviewed ex debito justitiæ. On the other hand, if both conditions have been duly complied with, cadit quaestio, the judgment must stand and neither the same Bench nor a differently constituted Bench is competent to go behind it. Whether both or either of these conditions are fulfilled in any particular case or not, are questions of fact and their decision must depend upon the facts of that case. But generally speaking, where an appeal has been summarily dismissed there is a presumption in favour of the first condition having been complied with. The Judges of a High Court may fairly be presumed to know the provisions of s. 421, of the Code; and merely because they have noted in their order that the party or his pleader is absent at the hearing or that they summarily dismiss an appeal in the absence of the appellant or his pleader, is no criterion for holding that they have not applied their minds to the merits of the case unless there is an admission in that behalf by the Judge or Judges who have passed the order.

(1) 21 C 121.

With regard to the second condition again, if timely notice has been given to a party or his pleader to be present at the hearing, it goes without saying that the party or his pleader as the case may be was afforded a reasonable opportunity of being heard; and if he is absent, there is a prima facie presumption against him that he failed to appear without a reasonable cause. In that case the burden is on him to prove that notwithstanding the fact that he had timely notice, other circumstances supervened which made it impossible for him to appear when the appeal was called on for hearing, and that the failure on his part to appear was not due to his own neglect or default. In this connection it is sufficient to observe that s. 421 does not require that the appellant or his pleader shall be heard before the appeal is decided, but all that it requires is that a sufficient opportunity should be afforded to them of being heard. If a sufficient opportunity of being heard is afforded to either of them, the neglect of the appellant or his pleader who is his agent debars him from claiming a second hearing.

Now, I am in a position to refer to the case law on the point, and if it is carefully analysed in the light of the above observations, it would appear that the divergence in most of these cases is more apparent than real. The earliest case on the point is the case of Queen-Empress v. Godal Raout (2). In that case the only point in issue before the Full Bench was, whether the High Court, had power to review its own judgment which had been passed on the merits. There Counsel for the appellant had been heard before the appeal was dismissed and an application for review was made on the ground that the decision arrived at by the Court was wrong in law. Sir Barnes Peacock propounded the question before the Court at p. 64* in the following words:

"But we are speaking of cases where the judgment has been recorded and the Court is called upon to grant a review of its judgment for the purpose of showing that it ought to have come to a different conclusion either upon the facts or upon the law."

In answering the above question in the negative the learned Chief Justice has said:

"The learned Counsel has pointed out that the consequences would be monstrous if this power or review were not given. But the same argument would apply to trials in the Courts in England. Suppose a jury should find a party guilty. There would be no appeal or writ of error, nor could the prisoner tender a bill of exceptions. The only mode of remedying the evil would be by appealing to the mercy of the Crown. So in the present case, if it should be discovered that the Court has come to a wrong conclusion either upon a matter of fact or upon a matter of law, the case may be brought to the notice of the Executive Government, either for the purpose of mitigating the sentence or of pardoning the offender, as the case may require. There would be no end to cases of this kind, after the Court has duly recorded its judgment, the matter is to be re-opened on the ground that the Court has come to an erroneous conclusion . . . . . It appears to us that it was the intention of the legislature that the Crown should not exercise the power of reviewing its own judgment in criminal cases. In civil cases where such a power was intended to be given it was conferred by express words in the Civil Procedure Code."

These observations stand good and unchallenged by any subsequent ruling upto this day, and not only that, but they have received legislative sanction by the introduction of the provisions of s. 369 in the Acts passed subsequent to Act XX of 1861, which was then in force. In Proceedings 7th November 1873 (3) on a reference made by a District Magistrate whether he had power to set aside an order of summary dismissal passed by him without hearing the Pleader of the appellant who was absent, under s. 278, Crimina

(2) 5 W R 61 Cr.

Procedure Code, then in force, the Madras High Court held that where an adequate excuse had been made for the Pleader's non-appearance, it was open to the Appellate Court to rehear the appeal on its merits. The High Court, however, added a rider that such a power should be sparingly used. Now, it goes without saying that in view of the express provisions of s. 369 and 561-A of the present Code, which expressly prohibit a review of judgment except under certain circumstances and limit the inherent jurisdiction of the Courts in criminal matters only to a High Court, this ruling no longer applies to a Court other than a High Court; and that with regard to the review by a High Court, it depends upon "adequate excuse", whatever be the meaning of that expression, being made out by the party concerned to the satisfaction of the Court.

In Queen-Empress v. Mahomed Yashin (4), it was pointed out that an order of summary dismissal of an appeal without calling for the record and proceedings of the case was a final order and not subject to review. The argument turned on the provisions of ss. 280 and 285 of the Code, then in force which were differently worded than the corresponding provisions of the present Code and this is apparent from the bare reading of the old sections which are as follows:

"Section 280—The Appellate Court after perusing the proceedings of the lower Court and after hearing the appellant, his Counsel or agent, if they appear and the Public Prosecutor, Government Pleader or other officer empowered by Government or by the Magistrate of the District in that behalf, if he appears, may alter or reverse the finding and sentence or order of such Court, and may if it sees reason to do so, enhance any punishment that has been awarded; provided that if the appeal is from the sentence of a Magistrate of any class, the Appellate Court shall not inflict a greater punishment than might have been inflicted by a Magistrate of the First Class. Section 285, Judgment sentences and orders passed by an Appellate Court upon appeal shall be final, except in the cases provided for in ss. 272 and 297."

In Ranga Rao v. Emperor (5), it was held that the High Court has no power to review an order made by it in the exercise of its Criminal Revisional Jurisdiction even when the revision petition has been "dismissed for default." But a careful reading of the judgment makes it abundantly clear that the order was based on the assumption that the "dismissal for default" was a dismissal by the Court after applying its mind on the merits and not a dismissal without regard to the merits merely and solely because the applicant had not appeared. This is clear from the following observations made by the Court with regard to the case reported in Proceedings 7th November, 1873 (3).

"We have no doubt that this is correct, for the language of s. 421 requires a reasonable opportunity to be given and if such reasonable opportunity is not given the Court has no jurisdiction to dismiss the appeal. He also relies on some unreported cases of the High Court of Calcutta. In our opinion in cases of Criminal Revision no distinction can be made between an order passed without hearing the petitioner and one in which he is heard. It must be borne in mind that the revisional power of the High Court is exercised at its own discretion. No petitioner has a right to be heard and the High Court is not compelled to interfere with a judgment brought to its notice unless it so thinks fit"

The order complained against was an order passed in revision and not on appeal, and the applicant and his pleader had no right to be heard. In Kanhammad Haji v. Emperor (6), the appeal was from jail and after due notice to the prisoner, it was disposed of during the vacation period by a Single Judge. An application for review to two Judges was dismissed. One of the points urged before the Bench was that as the appellant had no reasoable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal, there was no bar to a rehearing. This argument was negatived by both the Judges: one of the Judges Devadoss, J., however, had made the following observations at p. 432* which are obiter dicta:

"The only way of reconciling the conflicting decision on this point is to hold that when a criminal appeal or criminal revision petition is dismissed for default of appearance, there is no decision on the merits and therefore there is no proper disposal of it according to law and the Court may re-hear it. The order of dismissal for default of appearance in such cases is no judgment at all and the order is tantamount to an adjournment of the case till some one appears and moves the Court to hear him. With due respect to the learned Judges who decided in Ranga Rao v. Emperor (5), I think that the High Court, though it is not bound to hear the practitioner in support of a criminal revision petition, is not entitled to dismiss it for default of appearance but could only dispose of it on the merits."

These observations again lay stress upon the fact that the Court is not entitled to dismiss an appeal or revision application merely for default of appearance as is done in civil cases, but the dismissal should be on the merits of the case. As pointed out above where a Judge dismisses an appeal or application summarily he is presumed to have applied his mind to the merits of the case and where there is nothing to rebut this presumption, there can, in my opinion, be no review, on the simple ground that a party or his pleader had not been heard although a sufficient opportunity was afforded to them. In Raju v. Emperor (7), a revision petition of Raju and Sadan two of the prisoners was rejected by Agha Haidar, J. A similar revision petition by two other prisoners in the same case was allowed by Zafar Ali, J., and their sentence reduced. An application for review was then made by Raju and Sadan and the application was rightly dismissed. In delivering the judgment of the Court, Fforde, J., has inter alia said:

"This (s. 369) does not affect any powers inherent in the Court, as there never has been an inherent power in the High Court to alter or review its own judgment in a criminal case once it has been pronounced and signed except in cases where it was passed without jurisdiction or in default of appearance without an adjudication on the merits. With this view all the Courts in India are in accord, and it is not disputed that this was the law prior to the addition of s. 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Act of 1923."

The learned Judge has further said:

"The concluding words of the section, or otherwise to secure the ends of justice, can only mean that such other inherent power as the Court possess is likewise preserved. The High Court is not given nor did it ever possess an unrestricted and undefined power to make any order which, it might please to consider was in the interests of justice. Its inherent powers are as much controlled by principle and precedent as are its express powers by statute."

Now, the Code does not make any provision for the procedure which is to be adopted by an aggrieved party when the High Court dismisses an appeal without due compliance with the provisions of s. 421. An appeal to the Privy Council even if competent is a far-cry, and it would appear that the inherent powers of the High Court to interfere in such cases are not controlled either by any express provision of the law or by precedent. In civil matters even Courts of inferior jurisdiction have exercised their inherent powers under s. 151 in redressing grievances of a like nature. The latest case on that point is Nelakanti Sundara Sivarao Sammanji v. Gangamma (8), where it is said at p. 67*

"There is no specific provision in the Civil Procedure Code, which prescribes the procedure to be followed by a Court when it discovers that judgment has been pronounced by it under the mistaken belief that both parties had been fully heard, and in the absence of such specific provision, the Court must necessarily have recourse to its inherent powers in order to remedy the mistake. It is a duty which the Court has to perform exdebito justitiae in order to satisfy its judicial conscience. It is with the object of enabling Courts to perform their duties in contingencies of this kind, i. e., when their mistakes have led to injustice, that their inherent powers are preserved intact by s. 151, Civil Procedure Code."

Of course I need hardly repeat that under the Criminal Procedure Code, inherent powers in that behalf may be exercised by the High Court and not by a Court of inferior jurisdiction. In Dahu Raut v. Emperor (9), the point at issue was whether it was competent for the High Court to reduce the sentence of imprisonment without notice to the Crown, after summarily dismissing the appeal of the prisoner. This point was answered in the affirmative. As the orders complained against were passed with jurisdiction the dictum of Lort-Williams, J., is perfectly correct. This decision has therefore no direct bearing upon the point in issue in the present case. The learned Judicial Commissioner has in his referring judgment relied upon the head-note of this case which is based upon the following observations of Mcnair, J., at p. 166*

"With great respect I am entirely in agreement with the view that was expressed by the Lahore High Court in Raju v Emperor (7) that s. 561-A in no way adds to the powers of the High Court. It merely declares that such inherent powers as the Court may possess shall not be deemed to be limited or affected by anything contained in the Code, The inherent powers of the Court do not include the power to revise an order which has been made in the criminal appellate jurisdiction."

There is nothing to quarrel with these observations except to point out that the last words mean and can only mean that the order complained against has been made after due compliance with conditions precedent to the passing of a valid order as prescribed by the Code. In this case reliance has been placed on the Full Bench case of In re Gibbons (10). But that case again does not touch the first or second points, but only the third part submitted for our consideration. In that case the Divisional Bench of the High Court had after a due hearing reversed the verdict of acquittal and convicted the petitioner of the offence with which he was charged, and an application was then made for a review. Section 369 of the Code, then in force was differently worded and provided that:

"No Court other than a High Court when it has signed its judgment shall alter or review the same except as provided in s. 395 or to correct a clerical error."

Whatever doubt which might have existed at the time about the powers of a High Court to review its judgement has been set at rest by the subsequent amendment of s. 369 of the Code. The order which was the subject-matter of review was passed in accordance with law. That being so, it was rightly held that neither the Judges other than those who passed the order sought to be reviewed nor even the same Judges who passed the order can review it. There can be no question about the soundness of the principles laid down in the above Full Bench case, so far as it goes. I am now in a position to give my findings upon the points submitted to us for our, opinion.

First point.—An order passed under s. 421, dismissing an appeal filed under s. 419, is prima facie final.

Second point.—Such an order cannot be vacated under s. 561-A unless it is proved that either of the conditions precedent to the passing of the order as laid down by s. 421 has not been fulfilled and this is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each case. The burden of proving that either of the conditions has not been complied with, lies heavily on the person challenging the finality of the order.

Third point.—Where it is proved that either of the conditions precedent has not been complied with, the High Court has power to interfere under s. 561-A and in such a case it is immaterial whether the Bench which is called upon to interfere is composed of the same or different Judges. Where there is no proof that either of the conditions have not been complied with the High Court whether the Bench is composed of the same or other Judges has no power to interfere.

Ferrers, J. C., agreed with the above judgment).

Haveliwala, A. J. C.—The questions referred to the Full Bench are: (1) Whether an order under s. 421, Criminal Procedure Code, dismissing an appeal filed under s. 419, Criminal Procedure Code, is final. (2) Can it be vacated under s. 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code? (3) If so, can this be done by a Divisional Bench other than that which passed the original order?

Now, the facts of this case and the points, of law arising therefrom are fully mentioned by me in my referring judgment and I do not wish to recapitulate them again. We have heard the arguments and I have discovered nothing afresh to enable me to change my view both as to the facts and the law which I have expressed in that judgment and I am convinced more than ever that the view taken by me with regard to this question is correct. Mr. Partabrai, the learned Public Prosecutor, was good enough to point out the case of Kunji Lal v. Emperor (11), which lays down that there never has been an inherent power in the High Court to alter or review its own judgment in a criminal case once it has been pronounced and signed except in cases where it was passed without jurisdiction or in default of appearance without an adjudication on the merits.

I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother Rupchand and I agree with him that, under s. 421, Criminal Procedure Code, whether a reasonable opportunity was given or not is a question of fact depending on the facts of each particular case. If once the Court is convinced that no reasonable opportunity was given while dismissing the appeal under s. 421, Criminal Procedure Code, that is to say, the order of dismissal passed under the section was passed not in compliance with the proviso to that sectiton, then that order would be a mere nullity inasmuch as it was passed without jurisdiction. I am supported in this view by a ruling of the Lahore High Court in Muhammad Sadiq v. Emperor (12), in which it has been held that where an appeal has been dismissed without the appellant or his pleader being given a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same, the order dismissing the appeal must be held to have been passed without jurisdiction and the Court has inherent power to make an order that the appeal should be reheard after giving the appellant or his Counsel a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same.

If the order of dismissal is a nullity, it follows that it can be vacated under s. 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code. I am Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 386—Salary not yet drawn by salary earner—Whether can be attached—'Movable property,' meaning of.

The expression 'movable property' as used in s. 386, Criminal Procedure Code does not include salary not yet drawn by a salary earner. Consequently a Magistrate acting under s. 386, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot attach salary, which the salary-earner has not only not drawn, but has not even yet earned. The warrant can issue only after the salary has come into the salary-earner's possession or into that of the bailiff in his behalf.

Cr. R. App. from an order of the First Additional Magistrate, Rangoon, in Criminal Miscellaneous No. 341 of 1933.

Mr. B. Win, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. K. Chatterjee, for the Respondent.

Order.—This is a review of the order of the First Additional Magistrate of Rangoon in his Criminal Miscellaneous Proceedings No. 341 of 1933, directing the issue of a warrant for the attachment of the salary of the applicant, who is employed in the establishment of the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon, and for the remittance of the sum attached in payment of arrears of maintenance which he has been ordered to pay to his wife and child. The amount in arrears was Rs. 351-8-0, and the warrant was issued on June 19, 1933. Since that date the sum of Rs. 280-7-0 has been seized in three monthly instalments under the authority of this warrant from the applicant's pay and remitted to the First Additional Magistrate's Court. The warrant is addressed to the Registrar of the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon, and the seizures and remittances have been made under his orders. On October 14, 1933 this Court stayed further execution of the warrant, pending disposal of this review. Under the provisions of s. 488, sub-s. (3), Criminal Procedure Code, if any person ordered to pay maintenance, fails without sufficient cause to comply with the order,

"the Magistrate may, for every breach of the order, issue a warrant for levying the amount due in the manner hereinbefore provided for levying fines."

The manner in which a warrant for levying fines may be issued is set out in s. 386, Criminal Procedure Code, which provides that in taking action for the recovery of a fine,

"the Court may : (a) issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to the offender : (b) issue a warrant to the Collector of the District, authorizing him to realize the amount by execution, according to civil process against the movable or immovable property, or both, of the defaulter.'

Evidently, the warrant in question has been issued under cl. (a). The question to be decided is whether "movable property" can be held to include salary not yet drawn from the treasury for or by the person who is entitled to it. Section 4 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, provides that "all words and expressions used herein and defined in the Penal Code, and not hereinbefore defined, shall be deemed to have the meanings respectively attributed to them by that Code".

The expression "movable property" is not "hereinbefore defined," but it is defined in the Penal Code. That definition is as follows (s. 22) :

"The words 'movable property' are intended to include corporeal property of every description except land and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything which is attached to the earth"

"Corporeal property" is property which may be perceived by the senses. On this definition it is clear that a Magistrate, acting under s. 386, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot attach salary, which the salary-earner has not only not drawn, but has not even yet earned. The warrant could issue only after the salary had come into the salary-earner's possession or into that of the bailiff in his behalf. My attention has been drawn to the decision of a Full Bench of the High Court of Judicature at Madras in Appalamma v. Yellayya (1) and No. 505 of 1896 Perianayagam v. Krishna Chetti where it was held that the opening words of sub-s. (1), s. 4, Criminal Procedure Code, covered sub-s. (2) of that section, and therefore that words and expressions used in the Criminal Procedure Code,

"and defined in the Penal Code and not hereinbefore defined, shall be deemed to have the meanings respectively attributed to them by that Code," unless a different intention appears from the subject or context. I do not think that it is necessary to go into this question now, because from the subject matter and the context I cannot see that the expression "movable property" as used in s. 386, Criminal Procedure Code, could be held to include salary not yet drawn by a salary-earner. There is certainly nothing in the section which shows that the expression was intended to include such salary. If salary has not yet been drawn from the Treasury, it does not yet belong to the salary-earner nor is there any sense in directing the attachment and "sale" of such salary.

The Magistrate's warrant should have been so worded as to make it clear that only money actually belonging to the defaulter was to be attached. There is no doubt, however, he intended it to be executed in the same manner in which a prohibitory order under O. XXI, r. 48, Civil Procedure Code, is executed. For these reasons I hold that the Magistrate's order directing the issue of the warrant of attachment of the applicant's salary was irregular and I direct that the warrant be cancelled.

THE BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LTD., IN LIQUIDATION AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Assignment—Mortgagee Bank going into liquidation—Agreement between Bank and purchasing Trust—Agreement not completed—Non-registration—Suit on mortgage by Bank—Maintainability—Appeal—Privy Council—Practice—Defence raised in trial but not taken in High Court—Whether can be raised before Privy Council.

The defendant mortgagor executed a deed of simple mortgage in favour of a Bank, the deed containing a covenant on the mortgagor's part for payment of the mortgage-debt with compound interest. In default of payment, the mortgagee Bank had the ordinary right of proceeding by Court sale to realise its security. The Bank went into liquidation and in 1923 the Liquidator filed a suit on the mortgage. In 1917, an agreement was entered into between the Bank and a concern known as the Trust of India, the purpose of the agreement being to make it possible to come to an arrangement with the other creditors of the Bank so that by the appropriation and realisation of certain assets for their benefit, with the consent of the trustees for the debenture stock, all claims against the Bank would be got rid of, and subsequently in due course the Bank would be dissolved. The mortgage-debt was included in such assets, but the agreement was not registered under the Transfer of Property, nor was the transfer completed. It was contended that all interest had passed into the Trust and the Bank had no right to sue:

Held, that the transfer of this mortgage-debt was effective as between the transferor and the transferees; but as there was no completion of the agreement and the transfer of the agreement was of no effect by reason of non-registration, any proceedings to recover the debt brought against the mortgagor must be, not in the name of the transferee, but in that of the transferor. Consequently, the Bank rightly sued to recover the mortgage-debt. The transaction as between the transferor (the Bank) and the transferee may be taken to be complete although there was no completion and no legal assignment or transfer of the assets included in the agreement and not legally transferred by virtue of the agreement itself. Imperial Bank of India v. Bengal National Bank (1), explained and applied. [p. 747, col. 2.]

Held, also as the mortgagor had not raised in the High Court the defence as to her disability on the ground of her being a pardahnashin lady, a defence which she raised in the trial Court, leave could not be granted to re-open that question before the Privy Council. Dhanukdhari Singh v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (2), referred to. [p. 748, col. 1.]

When an application is made to raise a defence not raised in the High Court though taken in the trial Court, it cannot be said that in no case could such leave be granted The Board, acting under the Prerogative, must never abrogate their duty to tender to His Majesty in such a matter any advice which the nature of the case seems, in justice, to be called for. But the circumstances in which such an application will be entertained are necessarily exceptional. Apart from special circumstances there is no distinction in principle between the position of an appellant who abandons in the High Court a ground of appeal of which he had given notice and the position of a respondent in the High Court who does not raise a point in his favour which was open to him without notice. It is quite true that it would be open to the Board on proper terms to refer to the High Court the question for their consideration. But even that the Board would not do except under special circumstances. [p. 748, col. 2.]

Lord Blanesburgh.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Allahabad, in a mortgagee Bank's suit to realise its security. In decreeing the suit the Court reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut, who had dismissed it. The suit was commenced on December 8, 1923. The mortgage had been granted, on December 8, 1911, by a Mrs. Fanny Skinner, to the Bank of Upper India, Limited. The deed was in the ordinary form of a simple mortgage with a covenant on the part of the mortgagor for payment of the mortgage-debt with compound interest at the rate of 7 per cent.

per annum. In default of payment, the mortgagee Bank had the ordinary right of proceeding by Court sale to realise its security.

The property comprised in the mortgage included, among other items, a one-eighth undivided share of the mortgagor in the village of Siswal and a one-tenth similar interest in the village of Badopal. The mortgagor's brother, the second appellant, another brother and her sister were the co-sharers with her in these villages. The further relevant facts with reference to them will be alluded to later. The Bank of Upper India was in 1911 still a going concern. Subsequently it went into liquidation, and the suit when brought in 1923 was commenced by the Bank acting through its Liquidator. Fanny Skinner, the mortgagor, was then still alive, but she has died since the decree of the High Court was made and her interests are now represented by the two first appellants, who are her heirs. To the suit as brought there was at first only one substantial defence put forward by Fanny Skinner. It was that she was a purdanasheen lady; that the mortgage had been procured from her by her brother (not the second appellant), whom she had entrusted with her power-of-attorney, that he had by means thereof obtained in her name from the Bank an advance of 15,000 rupees; that no part of that advance was ever received by her; that in point of fact she had not desired to go into the transaction at all, and that there was insufficient compliance with the formalities and conditions requisite before a mortgage executed by a purdanasheen lady can be enforced against her. That was, in the first instance, the only substantial defence Fanny Skinner put forward to the suit. Subsequently, and in the course of the proceedings, on her statement that the fact had only just come to the knowledge of her legal advisers, she was allowed to put forward a further defence, to the effect that the plaintiff Bank was not entitled to sue by reason of the fact that there had been in 1917 an arrangement come to between the Bank by that time in liquidation and its creditors by virtue of which the whole of the assets of the Bank had been transferred to a purchasing company, the Trust of India, Limited: that all interest in this mortgage-debt had passed to the Trust, so that the Bank had no longer any right to sue in respect of it. Accordingly the following further issue was settled for decision: Were the assets of the Upper India Bank transferred to the Trust of India, Limited; if so, is the plaintiff entitled to bring the present suit?

There was a separate defence put forward by the mortgagor's brother hereinafter referred to as the second appellant. He had since the date of the mortgage acquired in severalty the entire village of Siswal. In that character he and twenty-two purchasers from him were made defendants to the suit as persons interested, subject to the mortgage in the one-eighth undivided share of the village included therein. His separate defence was that after the date of the mortgage of her undivided interest in the two villages by Fanny Skinner there had been a partition between the co-sharers, with the result that Siswal, had passed to the brothers as representing their several interests in the entirety, while the second village, Badopal, had passed to the mortgagor and her sister. Since that partition the second appellant had acquired his brother's entire interest in the village, Siswal. Accordingly, his contention was that as a result two things had happened: The first that the sisters had no longer any interest in Siswal, and the second, that he now owned the entire village in severalty and owned it free from any charge or any interest therein created by the mortgage-deed in suit. If any decree was made for the realisation of the Bank's security, that decree should exclude entirely from its operation any interest whatever in the village Siswal.

On that record the suit came on for trial and the Subordinate Judge dealt with the three defences in this way: With regard to the mortgagor's defence which may be called the defence of disability, he held that the lady knew all about the transaction and that the evidence satisfied him that she was in all respects bound by it. He rejected that defence. The second defence, however, he held to be well founded. He was of opinion that the Bank had no right to sue. He came to the conclusion that under the arrangement made in 1917 all the assets of the Bank included in the sale had in truth and in fact passed to the Trust of India, and that no right of action remained in the Bank in respect of any of these assets. Accordingly, as in his judgment the mortgage-debt in suit was one of the assets of the Bank included in the sale or transfer, it followed that the suit failed. He dismissed it.

With regard to the separate defence put forward by the second appellant, the Subordinate Judge expressed the opinion not of course necessary to his actual decision that it was mistaken in point of law as no charge which attached to the mortgagor's undivided interest in Siswal at the date of the mortgage could be affected by any subsequent transaction in relation to that interest to which the mortgagee Bank was no party.

The Bank appealed to the High Court and there the argument was directed exclusively to the issue whether the appellant, the Bank, through its Liquidator, had any right to sue. Upon that issue the High Court came to the conclusion, differing in this from the Subordinate Judge, that the right to sue in respect of this mortgage-debt remained with the Bank unaffected by the arrangement just stated. No other question was raised before the High Court. The mortgagor did not there revive what has been called the disability defence. It was agreed before their Lordships that she was perfectly entitled to do so had she been so minded, although she had given no notice of cross-appeal. But the question was not raised by her at all. She confined her answer to the appeal solely to her contention that the Bank had no right of suit. With regard to the second appellant, he went one step further in the direction of abandoning his separate defence.

He did not appear on the appeal at all. The question therefore whether his village Siswal was or was not any longer included in the security was never brought into discussion. In the result the High Court came to the conclusion on the only question presented to it for consideration, that the Bank through its Liquidator had a clear right to sue as mortgagee, and the Court made a decree in its favour in the ordinary form, including among the property to be sold the undivided interests in both villages covered by the mortgage, a decree which so far as the undivided interest in the village Siswal is concerned, may, if left, be final so far as the second appellant and those claiming under him are concerned, although he was not actually present before the Court when it was made. From the decree of the High Court, the mortgagor's representatives, the mortgagor having died in the meantime, presented an appeal to His Majesty in Council, and their main contention has been that the Subordinate Judge was right in his view that the Bank had no right to sue and they maintained that contention through Mr. Dunne in a very careful and interesting argument. That is the first point which their Lordships have to determine. It depends, first of all, upon the construction of the agreement, which in England would be called an agreement of reconstruction and arrangement, under and by virtue of which this particular asset was agreed to be transferred to the Trust of India, Limited, by the Bank. The agreement contains one or two provisions to which it is desirable to refer. It is dated July 16, 1917. It is a very carefully and elaborately drawn document and it sets forth in its recitals the whole history of the transaction to which it gives effect. The Bank of Upper India had in the liquidation issued to some of its creditors in respect of their claims against it certain debenture stock secured by a trust deed. The purpose of the agreement was to make it possible to come to an arrangement with the other creditors of the Bank so that by the appropriation and realisation of certain assets for their benefit, with the consent of the trustees for the debenture stock, all claims against the Bank would be got rid of, and subsequently in due course the Bank would be dissolved. The way in which all this was done was as follows: Special resolutions were passed authorising the execution by the Liquidator of the Bank of the agreement of sale to the Trust of India now in question. The agreement was thereafter duly executed and no question is raised as to its complete validity according to its tenor. The only question to be determined now is its effect so far as the transfer of this particular mortgage-debt from the Bank to the Trust is concerned. That the mortgage-debt was included in the agreement cannot, their Lordships think, be questioned. Among the assets so included are those in para. 1 of the agreement as "all the book and other debts due to the Bank in connection with the said business and the full benefit of all securities for such debts."

The terms of sale are important. It is provided that the Trust is to make payment by means of a transfer of certain shares of its own and of certain other shares of another company of which apparently it was possessed, and is further to indemnify the Bank against all its debts and liabilities of every kind. There is a special provision with regard to completion not unimportant. It is found in para. 7, which is as follows:

"The purchase shall be completed on July 16, 1917, or on such other date as the parties hereunto shall mutually agree at Meerut and the Trust shall thereupon cause to be allotted issued or transferred the said share and fixed deposit receipts forming the consideration for the said sale and the Bank and its Liquidators and the trustees and all other necessary parties (if any) shall at the expense of the Trust execute and do all such assurances and things for vesting the said premises on the Trust or as the Trust shall direct and giving to it the full benefit of this agreement as shall be reasonably required."

Then para. 8 says this:

"The possession of the said premises shall be retained by the Bank and its Liquidators up to the said July 16, 1917, and in the meantime they shall carry on the said business in the same manner as heretofore so as to maintain the same as a going concern and they shall as from July 1, 1917, be deemed to have been and to be carrying on such business on behalf of the Trust and shall account and be entitled to be indemnified accordingly."

Apparently it happened in this case, as it has happened in so many others, that this agreement was executed on a date subsequent to that on which the draftsman supposed that it would be executed. In terms the purchase was to be completed on the very day of its execution the July 16, 1917, and the business was to be carried on by the Bank up to the date of the agreement as from a previous date, July 1. All that, however, is unimportant in regard to the transaction with which their Lordships have to deal. Quite obviously, the completion might take place at a date than the date of the agreement, as is amply enough provided for by the agreement itself, and on completion all those things would have to be done which are therein stated,—the consideration would have to be paid and satisfied, the formal transfers would have to be executed, and so on. Nothing of that kind took place. There never was in that sense any completion at all, nor was this agreement registered under the Transfer of Property Act. Accordingly, and their Lordships think this is common ground—the agreement as a transfer of the security was of no effect by reason of non-registration, and so far as appears, this particular asset has never found its way into the legal ownership of the Trust at all, or, putting it in another way, it has never passed out of the ownership of the Bank so as to deprive the Bank of any right that it had before to sue in respect of it. On such grounds as these, the High Court came to the conclusion that the right to sue had not passed from the Bank and that the Bank was, therefore, entitled to maintain the suit. But they came to that conclusion, as Mr. Dunne pointed out, by reason of the view they took that there was no possibility of treating the agreement as an assignment to the Trust of the benefit of Fanny Skinner's covenant to pay, apart from the security given to provide for payment. Accordingly, so it was contended, the reasoning of the High Court was not apt to meet all the facts of the case. While Counsel had to agree, and in fact it became part of his case, that there had been no legal transfer of the security, he contended on the authority of a decision of this Board, which will be referred to in a moment, that the transfer of the unsecured debt had been completed and that in respect of that unsecured debt no one could sue except the Trust, so that the effect of the transfer of the unsecured debt to the Trust, a transfer, complete and effective without registration—had been to deprive the Bank of any right whatever to take any step in respect of the security although on that footing it still remained in it. That was Mr. Dunne's contention. Their Lordships will only say before meeting it otherwise that it would, if sound, produce a very remarkable result, namely, that so far as the transaction of transfer is concerned, the mortgagor, unless the transferor and transferee could agree, was released so far as the security was concerned from all liability whatever, for the mortgagee after transfer of the debt could take no steps in relation to the security. That is truly an extraordinary result, and their Lordships would hesitate long before they came to the conclusion that it was one necessarily involved in the transaction. But it was said that such was the effect of a judgment of this Board in a case to which allusion has already been made; namely, the case of Imperial Bank of India v. Bengal National Bank (1). The judgment was given on May 21, 1931, that is to say, after the decree of the High Court in this case. There two debentures had been issued to the Imperial Bank of India by the Bengal National Bank, which had later gone into liquidation. The debentures charged by way of a floating charge all the assets whatsoever of the Bengal Bank. These consisted largely of loans and advances that had been made by that Bank to customers secured in many instances by the deposit of the title deeds of immovable property. The debentures had neither of them been registered under the Indian Registration Act, 1908, though both had been duly registered pursuant to s. 109 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913. It was contended in these circumstances that the debenture holders, the Imperial Bank, as a result of liquidation, were entitled to no remedy whatsoever, direct or indirect, against the immovable property that had been pledged to the Bengal Bank. It was with such a case that their Lordships dealt in a judgment delivered by Lord Atkin. It was admitted there by the Imperial Bank, without its having been argued, that they had no charge upon the immovable property of the Bengal Bank. The Board accepted and acted upon the admission but they definitely refrained from holding that in the case of a company it was necessarily true, that a debenture charging immovable property and registered under the Companies Act must, in order to have complete effect be registered also under the Registration Act. While not indicating any view one way or the other on that point, their Lordships treated the case as one in which it must, as between the parties, be assumed that the debentures created no charge upon any portion of the immovable property of the Bengal Bank whether its interest therein was by way of deposit of deeds or otherwise. Therefore, that was a case of what might be called a clean debt owing to the Bengal Bank and unsecured so far as immovable property was concerned, being included in the debenture charge; and the question was whether the charge upon that clean debt operated to give to the Imperial Bank, as debenture holders, the right themselves to sue the debtors for payment. On this, it was held that the debentures did not constitute actionable claims which by virtue of the Act in that behalf could be sued upon after due notice of transfer had been given to the debtor. The claims had to be placed in an entirely different category; and the category to which Lord Atkin relegated them was this: The claims were such as might be made by the debenture holders against the Bengal Bank; but so far as any recourse might be competent to them in respect of any security taken by the Bengal Bank in respect of any of the debts, the debenture-holders must enforce such security in the name of the Bengal Bank and not otherwise, and if any difficulty arose, the Bengal Bank would be required on proper terms to lend its name as plaintiff in any proceedings that might be necessary. This case, therefore, when examined, instead of supporting the view for which it was cited by Mr. Dunne, appears to destroy it, because Lord Atkin clearly states that, if any proceedings are taken for the purpose of vindicating the rights of the holder of such a debenture as was there in question, these must be taken not in the name of the transferee, the debenture-holder, but in the name of the original creditor, the Bengal Bank. Applying that case, which need not be gone into in more detail, to the present the result is this, as it appears to their Lordships: The transfer of this mortgage debt was effective as between the transferor and the transferees. But any proceedings to recover the debt brought against the mortgagor must be, not in the name of the transferee, but in that of the transferor. Accordingly, what was here done by the Bank of Upper India in suing in its own name to recover this mortgage debt was rightly done. It was, indeed, the only course that could have been appropriately adopted. The decree in its favour cannot be disturbed on this ground. But it must not be taken to be the view of their Lordships that there would not be other difficulties in the way of the contention put forward by the first appellants that the Bank has no title to sue. As has been said, there has been no completion of this agreement in any sense whatever; it remains just where it was so far as any substantive legal assignment are concerned, although, no doubt, one may at this distance of time almost assume that the consideration has been paid and satisfied. Their Lordships can have no doubt that the debts of the Bank have been satisfied or discharged, and that the transaction as between the transferor and transferee may be taken to be complete. But this has only been by mutual arrangement and acceptance by the transferees of less than they were entitled to; it remains that there has been no completion in any legal sense of the word and no legal assignment or transfer of the assets included in the agreement and not legally transferred by virtue of the agreement itself. When learned Counsel for the appellants were asked what was the moment of time at which, in their view of this transaction, the debt passed to the Trust so that the Bank remained with no interest to sue in respect of it, the first answer made was that it passed from the moment of execution of the agreement; an answer which meant that the whole interest in the property agreed to be transferred passed before any part of the purchase price has been paid. This answer was not pressed. Then it was suggested by Mr. Hyam that, if that was not so, the whole interest certainly passed when all this property had been beneficially transferred and had become vested in that sense in the purchasing Trust. To which there was made these answers. First, there was no evidence at all as to when that stage was reached, if it ever has been reached, and secondly, if that stage ever has been reached, it would be very important on this question of right to sue to know what the terms were on which the transfer was effected. The High Court in their judgment have said that there was an arrangement as between the Bank and the Trust under which the right to recover these outstanding debts was to remain vested in the Bank, although when recovered, the proceeds would be handed over to the Trust. But whether that be the fact or not, there is no evidence of any transaction which would justify the conclusion that this purchase had been completed in accordance with the terms of the agreement, and, therefore, the result is that for this reason also the suit was properly brought.

Two subordinate questions already foreshadowed in the course of this judgment must now be dealt with.

The first is that the appellants having stated that they had not in the High Court again raised the disability defence, asked leave to re-open that question. Their Lordships were not disposed to grant any such leave in this case; it appears to be one which comes within the general view of the Board as expounded by Lord Robertson in the case of Dhanukdhari Singh v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (2). Their Lordships do not think that the Board in that case intended to lay it down that in no case could such leave be granted. The Board, acting under the Prerogative, must never abrogate their duty to tender to His Majesty in such a matter any advice which the nature of the case seems, in justice, to be called for. But the circumstances in which such an application will be entertained are necessarily exceptional.

Mr. Dunne contended that in the case before the Board in Dhanukdhari Singh v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (2), the question which the appellants then desired to raise was one which they might have raised as appellants in the High Court. Indeed, it was included in their notice of appeal to the High Court, but was not raised by them there. In the present case, however, the point which the appellants desire to revive was one which would only have been open to them as respondents in the High Court and not as appellants. Their Lordships, however, apart from special circumstances which have not been shown to exist here can see no distinction in principle between the position of an appellant who abandons in the High Court a ground of appeal of which he had given notice and the position of a respondent in the High Court who does not raise a point in his favour which was open to him without notice. It is quite true that it would be open to the Board on proper terms to refer to the High Court this question for their consideration. But even that the Board would not do except under special circumstances. These do not exist in this case, the real truth being that here the appellants before the High Court were content to rely on a technical point, altogether abandoning the defence of substance which had failed in the Court below. Now, having failed on that technical point, they ask as a last resort to set up again their abandoned defence of substance. That consideration shows how little is the warrant here for interfering with the usual practice of the Board in such matters. Accordingly, the application made to re-open their disability defence either before their Lordships or in the High Court is one that cannot be acceded to.

The other matter that has to be dealt with is that raised by the second appellant with reference to the inclusion in the decree of the village Siswal. He desires that he may be permitted to establish, if he can, at the proper time that by virtue and as a result of the partition effected as already stated, and of the subsequent transactions, he is now the registered owner of this village in its entirety, subject to the rights which he has created in it but discharged from the respondent's security. He seeks to establish that this village is now excluded altogether from the security which is held by the Bank, and that no sale of property directed for the purpose of realising that security should be permitted to touch or affect his village, and he relies for the success of that contention which he desires to put forward on the case of Mohammad Afzal Khan v. Abdul Rahman (3), the head-note, which quite clearly expresses the judgment, being this:

"Where one of two or more co-sharers mortgages his undivided share in some of the properties held jointly, the mortgagee takes the security subject to the right of the other co sharers to enforce a partition and thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty. If the mortgage, therefore, is followed by a partition and the mortgaged properties are allotted to a co-sharer or co-sharers other than the mortgagor, they take the allotted properties, in the absence of fraud, free from the mortgage, and the mortgagee can proceed only against the properties allotted to the mortgagor in substitution for his undivided share."

When Mr. Parikh, on behalf of the second appellant, asked to have the decree amended in that respect, so as to discharge his village from this security altogether, it was, of course, objected by Mr. DeGruyther, on behalf of the respondents, that Mr. Parikh was no longer in a position to raise this point by reason of the fact that he had abandoned it in the High Court, secondly, it was contended by Mr. DeGruyther that there was no material upon which any decision in the second appellant's favour could be made, and thirdly, he contended that the application was unnecessary because the point would be open to Mr. Parikh in execution proceedings, when an application would have to be made to the Court for directions for sale. It would then be open to the second appellant to come forward and claim that his village be excluded from the property to be sold. But, when it was made plain that Mr. Parikh's client was a party to the proceedings in which the decree of the High Court was made, and that an undivided share in Siswal was thereby stated to be within the security, it became clear that it would be difficult, if not impossible, for the second appellant successfully to apply that the one-eighth share in the village should be excluded from the sale. It was then agreed that there should be inserted in the advice which their Lordships would humbly tender to His Majesty a recommendation that a provision should be made in the Order in Council to the effect that notwithstanding the terms of the decree of the High Court at Allahabad of the December 3, 1928, it was to be open to the second appellant in any execution proceedings thereunder to establish, if he could, that no undivided or other interest in the village Siswal is any longer comprised in the mortgage of December 8, 1911. Had this agreement not been reached it would not have been possible for their Lordships to make any order either in favour of or against the second appellant on this head, if only for the reason that the circumstances in relation to the alleged partition are not really known to them.

In these circumstances, their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be dismissed. The appellants must pay the costs. There will be inserted in the advice which they will so tender a recommendation to the effect just stated with reference to the claim put forward by Mr. Parikh on behalf of his client.

Provident Funds Act (XIX of 1925), ss. 4, 5 (2)—Nominee holding certificate, whether entitled to preference to another having obtained prior certificate.

The effect of s. 4, Provident Funds Act, is that in a competition between two persons it is the nominee who holds a certificate who is entitled to the money. Where, therefore, a widow holds a succession certificate in respect of assets of her deceased husband but subsequently a nominee of her husband obtains a succession certificate for the provident fund amount, the latter is entitled to the money and the former's certificate is no bar.

C. A. from original order of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated March 31, 1932.

Messrs. Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta and Paresh Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.

Judgment.—The question in this case is what is the true meaning of s. 5, sub-s. (2), Provident Funds Act (XIX of 1925). The appellant applied in the Court of the District Judge of Chittagong for a Succession Certificate in respect of a debt in favour of a deceased person recoverable from the A. B. Railway Co., Ltd. The debt was an amount of Provident Fund money due to the deceased, in respect of which the appellant was the nominee. The respondent as widow of the deceased had, prior to the said application, obtained a Succession Certificate in respect of the assets of the deceased from the Court of the District Judge of Trichinopoly. The appellant's application has been refused by the learned Judge on the ground that the certificate previously obtained by the respondent affords a bar. The question turns on the meaning of sub-s. (2) of s. 5, Provident Funds Act (XIX of 1925). The relevant words of the sub-section are:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Succession Certificate Act, 1889 . . . . . any such person (i. e., a nominee) shall, on the death of the subscriber or depositor, be entitled to the grant of a certificate under that Act . . . . entitling him to receive payment, etc."

Does it mean only this that the nomination will entitle the nominee to a certificate without any proof of his right thereto such as an applicant for a certificate has otherwise to establish (vide s. 373, Succession Act XXXIX of 1925)? Or, does it go further and mean that other provisions of the Act which may afford as a bar will also be oprative. The matter is one of first impression and it is not easy to see what exactly was the intention of the Legislature. But it appears that there is no provision in the Act laying down that no certificate shall be granted in respect of assets for which a previous certificate has been obtained. Section 385, Succession Act, merely says that a certificate subsequently granted would be invalid under certain circumstances. Moreover, the effect of s. 4, Provident Funds Act, is that in a competition between two persons it is the nominee who holds a certificate who is entitled to the money. We therefore think it would be reasonable to hold that the former meaning should be attributed to the subsection in question. The result is that, in our judgment, the appeal should be allowed and the order complained of being set aside, the case will go back to the Court below, and that the application for certificate, if it is otherwise in order, should be granted. No order as to costs.

Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act (Beng Act III of 1913), s. 20—Liability to pay cess—Nature of—Whether attaches to estate of proprietor—Hindu widow's estate sold under the Act—Reversion, if passes to purchaser.

The liability to pay cess is a mere personal liability which does not attach to the estate of the proprietor who has to pay it. Consequently, the sale of a Hindu widow's estate under the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act conveys only the widow's estate to the purchaser and not the reversion. Shekaat Hussein v. Sasi Kar (1), Jiban Krishna Roy v. Brojo Lal Sen (2) and Baijun Doobey v. Brijbhookan Lal (3), relied on.

C. A. from a decision of the Sub-Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated February 28, 1929.

Messrs. S. C. Mazumdar, B. P. Sinha, S. N. Roy, K. P. Jayaswal and B. B. Saran, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. M. Mullick, A. B. Mukharjee, and H. P. Sinha, for the Respondents.

James, J.—The suit out of which these appeals arise was instituted by Musammat Ramjhari Kuer as daughter and heir of the late Musammat Uma Kuer in order to set aside several alienations made by or on behalf of Musammat Uma Kuer while she was in possession of the widow's estate. The plaintiff has joined in one suit alienations made to different persons; but she ought to have been required at the outset to sever her different causes of action. One result of the joinder has been that the unsuccessful defendants have been treated as jointly and severally liable for a larger amount of costs than would ordinarily be justified by the value of their interest, while the litigation has been unduly prolonged owing to the necessity from time to time of substitution, as one or other among the unwieldy mass of defendants died. The suit was in part decreed and in part dismissed by the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff has appealed from that portion of his decision which is in favour of Sheonarain Singh and other defendants, while two sets of defendants have appealed from so much of the decision as sets aside the alienations made to them. (After dealing with the Appeals Nos. 108 and 174, His Lordship proceeded). I now come to Appeal No. 111. In 1908, Musammat Uma Kuer fell into arrears in payment of public cesses, which resulted in the issue of certificates and the sale of a portion of the estate under the Public Demands Recovery Act. The plaintiff sued for recovery of this property and her prayer has been allowed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that nothing beyond the right, title and interest of Musammat Uma Kuer passed by the sale which must be interpreted as meaning that the purchaser acquired nothing more than Musammat Uma Kuer's life interest in the property.

Mr. S. N. Roy, on behalf of the appellants, who have purchased this property from the original auction-purcharser, argues that the sale, treated as a sale of the reversion, has been ratified by the plaintiff; and that in any event the sale for arrears of public cesses should be regarded as a sale of the property in respect of which the arrears were due, so that the whole interest, the life estate and the reversion should be held to have passed by it. There was litigation over this Court sale which began in the time of Musammat Uma Kuer and concluded after her death. Harinarain, the purchaser of the property with which we were concerned in Appeal No. 174, found after he had acquired a one anna share from the lady that she had mortgaged a two annas share which included the property conveyed to him; and he was faced with the necessity of losing his property or paying off the mortgage. He paid off the mortgage when the property was brought to sale by the mortgagee and he then sued Paltan Singh and Musammat Ramjhari Kuer, the present plaintiff, for contribution. The one anna share, part of which had already been transferred by the Court sale, had been sold after the Court sale to one Paltan Singh who according to Harinarain was a mere farzidar for Musammat Uma Kuer. Musammat Ramjhari Kuer by her written statement in that litigation attacked the whole transaction of purchase by Harinarain, but she subsequently prayed that she might be exempted from the suit on the ground that Paltan Singh was not a farzidar and that he was the person liable, if any was liable.

It is suggested that this recognition by Musammat Ramjhari Kuer of the rights of Paltan Singh makes it impossible for her now to claim any title in herself to the one anna share; but Mr. S. M. Mullick on behalf of the respondents points out that the transfer by Musammat Uma Kuer was valid during her lifetime and that all that Musammat Ramjhari Kuer was seeking to do was to shift the liability to pay of this mortgage debt from herself to the assignee of Musammat Uma Kuer's life estate. Musammat Ramjhari Kuer was not questioned on this matter when she gave evidence and the petition is too vague and general in its terms to be treated as an admission of anything beyond the fact that Musammat Uma Kuer had purported to transfer the one anna share to Paltan Singh. The purchaser Abhilak Thakur from whom the present appellants derived title was also a party to that litigation; but there is no admission anywhere by the plaintiff of any rights acquired by him. Paltan Singh had alreday sued the puchaser Abhilak Thakur for a declaration that the sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act was bad. In that litigation Musammat Uma Kuer was originally named as a defendant: but she subsequently transferred to the category of plaintiffs. After her death the present plaintiff was substituted; but there is nothing to indicate that she took any part in the litigation. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court; and Paltan Singh appealed to the District Judge, and to the High Court, in each case making Musammat Ramjhari Kuer a respondent.

The suit failed; but, as I have said, there is nothing to indicate that Musammat Ramjhari Kuer took any part in the litigation or that she made any admission of anybody's rights. Mr. S. M. Mullick on behalf of the respondent supports the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that nothing, but the life interest of the widow passed by the Court sale. Mr. S. N. Roy, suggests that the sale must be set aside before the purchaser can be ousted; but in this case as the matter stands at present, the respondent is not attacking the sale itself, but is merely asking that proper effect may be given to it. Mr. S. M. Mullick now concedes that the sale was a perfectly valid sale and that title passed by it; but he argues that the only title which passed was title to the life interest of Musammat Uma Kuer. He does not, therefore, seek to set aside the sale, but to enforce it in such a manner that it should have its legal effect and no more. Mr. S. M. Mullik cites first the decision in Shekaat Hossein v. Sasi Kar (1), in which it was held that cess due under the Bengal Cess Act of 1880 is only a personal debt and cannot be recovered from the property on which it is assessed, when such property belongs to a third person who may not be recorded as the proprietor in the Collector's land registers: that is to say, the estate of which the debtor is recorded as the proprietor is not itself burdened with the liability to cess, which is a personal liability, though of course if the person from whom cess is being recovered is the owner of the estate, the estate may be sold like any other property for the debt of its owner. Mr. S. M. Mullick then proceeds to demonstrate that a sale of a widow's estate in execution for a personal debt of the widow will convey nothing more than the limited interest which the widow acquired on her husband's death. In Jiban Krishna Roy v. Brojo Lal Sen (2), a tenure held by a limited owner was brought to sale for arrears of rent accruing after her father's death.

The Judicial Committee held that the liability for rent should be regarded as the personal liability of the debtor and should not be regarded as attaching to the reversion. Again in Baijun Doobey v. Brijbhookan Lal (3), where a widow's estate had been sold in execution of a personal decree against her, it was held by the Judicial Committee that it was only the widow's estate that passed to the purchaser. Therefore it appears that if the liability to pay cess is a mere personal liability, not attaching to the estate of the proprietor who has to pay it, the sale of the widow's estate under the Public Demands Recovery Act, conveyed only the widow's estate to the purchaser and not the reversion. In the Public Demands Recovery Act as amended in 1914, s. 26 makes it clear that nothing passes by the sale beyond the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and this would appear to be a correct view of the law as it stood before the amendment of the Act in 1914, as has been held by the learned Subordinate Judge. It is suggested that when Musammat Uma Kuer purported to transfer the one anna share to Paltan Singh after the Court sale, she could not, on the hypothesis that her life interest had already been sold, have intended to convey to Paltan Singh anything, but the reversion and Musammat Ramjhari Kuer has no locus standi to contest the Court sale. But we do not know what was actually conveyed to Paltan; and indeed it would appear to be more likely that what was conveyed was the right to contest the validity of the sale, and that Musammat Uma Kuer had no idea of distinguishing between her life interest and the reversion. In any view of the matter, since Paltan Singh's family are parties to the present suit and they make no claim, it cannot be said that the plaintiff is disqualified from claiming to recover this property.

I would affirm this part of the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs. For the purpose of assessment of costs in this Court and in the Court below the hearing fee of Rs. 100 will be taken as the hearing fee. The appeals are thus dismissed except that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be amended so far as it describes the amount of costs to which each party is entitled and which each party is liable to pay.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Suit based on adjustment of partnership accounts signed by father only—Sons, liability of—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 1—Appeal against personal liability only—Court-fee payable.

Under Hindu Law, in a suit based on an adjustment of a partnership where the father alone has signed the deed, the sons are not personally liable but their liability extends to the extent of their share in the joint family property.

An appeal merely against the personal liability of the appellants can be filed on a court-fee of Rs. 10 only.

F. C. A. from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Delhi, dated March 12, 1928.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Naual Kishore, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff Lal Chand sued Bhondu Mal and his two sons, Bulaqi Das and Shimbhu Dayal, for Rs. 72,937-10-0 and he obtained a decree for that amount with future interest with costs against these defendants. The two sons of Bhondu Mal, Bulaqi Das and Shimbhu Dayal, have been allowed to appeal in forma pauperis against this decree.

Though the appeal is to the effect that the appellants are not in any way liable, Counsel appearing on their behalf has rightly confined his arguments to ground No. 2 which is to the effect that it should have been held that the appellants are not personally liable. This is correct. The suit was based on an adjustment of a partnership which took place on July 4, 1924 when a deed was written. This deed was signed by Bhondu Mal, the father of the appellants, and under it he is undoubtedly personally liable for the sum fixed in it, namely, Rs. 62,223-4-6. The remaining sum of Rs. 10,714-5-6 is interest. The appellants were not parties to the deed. The suit is based on this acknowledgment only and though there is no doubt that it was rightly held that Bhondo Mal is personally liable, it cannot be held that his sons are so liable. They are of course liable to the extent of the joint family property. In these circumstances the appeal must be accepted to this extent that it be declared that defendants Nos. 2 and 3, i. e., the appellants are not personally liable for the amount of the decree.

As the appeal is frivolous to the extent that it attacks the whole decree, the plaintiff-respondent cannot be held liable for the whole of the court-fee in appeal. The appellants, if they had appealed merely against their personal liability could have done so on a court-fee of Rs. 10. Under O. XXXIII, rr. 10 and 11, Civil Procedure Code, we therefore direct that the amount of the court-fee on appeal should be calculated. The plaintiff-respondent shall pay Rs. 10 of the court-fee and the appellants shall pay the rest of it themselves. There will be no other order as to the costs of the appeal.

N. Appeal accepted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s 428—Sessions Judge hearing appeal from decision of Assistant Sessions Judge in trial with aid of assessors—Additional evidence, recording of—Legality—Such evidence, if admissible—Sessions Judge forming opinion as to guilt of accused on such evidence—Re-hearing—Transfer to another Judge—Necessity of—Criminal trial—Government Pleader not producing certain eye-witness—Appellate Court if can summon him.

It is only when the Court of Session is sitting to hear an appeal from a judgment of a Magistrate has it got power under s. 428 of the Criminal Procedure Code to record additional evidence itself, or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate, and it is only the High Court, which is the Appellate Court of the Court of Session, that can, under s. 428 of the Code, direct a Court of Session or a Magistrate to record additional evidence in a case pending before it in appeal. The Sessions Judge is not justified by the provisions of s. 428, Criminal Procedure Code, in recording additional evidence while deciding an appeal against the judgment of the Assistant Sessions Judge who tried the case with the aid of assessors. Such evidence is not legally admissible and the accused cannot legally be convicted upon that evidence. Queen-Empress v. Ram Lal (1) and Emperor v. Jaisook (2), referred to, Emperor v. Laxman Ramshet (1) distinguished.

When once a Sessions Judge has formed an opinion as to the guilt of the accused upon the additional evidence recorded by him, it is desirable that a re-hearing of the appeal is not made before the same Judge. An application for transfer to another Court, should, in the circumstances, be granted.

It is true that it is the duty of the prosecution to produce before the Court all eye-witnesses of the occurrence, but if the Government Pleader takes upon himself the responsibility of not producing a certain eye-witness, then it is not the duty of the Appellate Court to fill up the gap in the prosecution evidence by summoning that witness.

Cr. R. App. against the order of the Sessions Judge, Hardoi, dated October 10, 1934.

Dr. J. N. Misra and Mr. Raghubar Dayal, for the Applicants.

Mr. H. K. Ghosh, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application for revision under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, against an appellate judgment of the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi upholding the judgment of the Assistant Sessions Judge of the same place, convicting the applicants of offences under ss. 147 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentencing each of them to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

At the outset an interesting question of law was raised on behalf of the applicants by their learned Counsel, who has argued that the learned Sessions Judge should not have, while hearing the appeal against the judgment of the Assistant Sessions Judge of Hardoi recorded additional evidence as that was not only illegal but was clearly tantamount to giving the prosecution an opportunity to fill up the gaps which had been left in the prosecution evidence for no valid reason.

The first question for determination in this application for revision is, therefore, whether the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi was legally authorised to record additional evidence in hearing an appeal from a judgment of an Assistant Sessions Judge who tried the case with the aid of assessors. The learned Assistant Government Advocate has relied upon the provisions of s. 428 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in defence of the action of the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi. Section 428 of the Code runs as follows:—

"In dealing with any appeal under this Chapter the Appellate Court, if it thinks additional evidence to be necessary, shall record its reasons and may either take such evidence itself or direct it be taken by a Magistrate, or, when the Appellate Court is a High Court, by a Court of Session or by a Magistrate."

It is clear from the very language of s. 428 that only when the Court of Session is sitting to hear an appeal from a judgment of a Magistrate has it got power under s. 428 of the Code to record additional evidence itself, or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate, and it is only the High Court, which is the appellate Court of the Court of Session, that can under s. 428 of the Code, direct a Court of Session or a Magistrate, to record additional evidence in a case pending before it in appeal.

I have heard the learned Counsel for the applicants as also the learned Assistant Government Advocate at great length and have carefully considered the question of law involved in the plea raised on behalf of the applicants, and it seems to me on mature consideration that the action of the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi in recording additional evidence while deciding this appeal against the judgment of the Assistant Sessions Judge was not legally justified by the provisions of s. 428 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

In Queen-Empress v. Ram Lal (1), it was held by two learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court that where in a trial for murder conducted with the aid of assessors the Court of Session relied upon a statement by the deceased and the evidence necessary to prove such statement was not recorded until after the close of the trial and the discharge of the assessors, that this procedure of the Sessions Judge amount to a material irregularity which was not covered by s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In this ruling a reference was made to s. 268 of the Code which provides that all trials before a Court of Session shall be either by jury or with the aid of assessors, and that the evidence recorded by the Sessions Judge after the opinion of the assessors had been recorded and they had been discharged was in fact evidence recorded coram non judice. The learned Judges in the course of their judgment made the following observation:—

"In only one instance is a Court of Session authorised to record evidence in the absence of jury or assessors and that is when additional evidence is called for by the Appellate Court (vide s. 428, Criminal Procedure Code)".

The Appellate Court of the Court of Session is the High Court, and the view taken by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court seems to be correct, because sub-s. 2 of s. 309 makes it quite clear that once the opinion on the assessors has been recorded in cases tried by the Court of Session with the aid of assessors, the Judge has got nothing else to do but to give judgment. This was the view laid down by the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Ryves of the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Jaisook (2). In this case it was held that where a Sessions Judge is trying a case with the aid of assessors, it is the Judge plus the assessors who constitute the Court and not the Judge alone, and that where a Sessions Judge recorded evidence after the assessors had been discharged, it was held that this was a material irregularity which vitiated the trial and the learned Judges observed that the case of Queen-Empress v. Ram Lal (1), was a distinct authority for the very salutory proposition that evidence must not be taken by a Sessions Judge unless that Sessions Judge has the assessors sitting with him.

It has been argued by the learned Assistant Government Advocate that if it is open to the High Court as an Appellate Court, to direct the Court of Session or a Magistrate to record additional evidence under s. 428 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, then it is equally open to the Court of Session as an Appellate Court to record additional evidence under s. 428 of the said Code. The fallacy in this reasoning lies in the cool assumption that the Court of Session has got the same powers under s. 428 of the Code as are vested in the High Court but a careful perusal of s. 428 itself will show that section contemplates that the Court of Session has got the right to take additional evidence itself or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate when there is an appeal before it from a decision of a Magistrate of the first class, but no such power is vested in the Court of Session when the Court of Session hears an appeal from a subordinate Court of Session which has decided the case with the aid of jurors or assessors.

(1) 15 A 136; A W N 1899, 50

The learned Assistant Government Advocate invited my attention to a ruling reported in Zamir Uddin v. Emperor (3), decided by the Patna High Court in which it was held that the High Court had power to direct the Sessions Judge to re-hear an appeal after obtaining additional evidence. As I have said above, the powers of the High Court are far greater than those of the Court of Session hearing an appeal against a decision of an Assistant Sessions Judge. I have also been referred to a ruling of the Bombay High Court reported in Emperor v. Laxman Ramshet (4). That, however, was a case decided by a Magistrate and the appeal was heard by the Sessions Judge. The powers of the Court of Session to have additional evidence recorded under s. 428 of the Code are co-extensive with those of the High Court, but only in case the Court of Session is hearing an appeal from a decision of a Magistrate, and not in a case where the Court of Session is hearing an appeal from a decision of an Assistant Sessions Judge with the aid of assessors. It is only when the Appellate Court is a High Court that additional evidence can be taken by a Court of Session when it is directed to do so by the Appellate Court. This is clear from the observation made in Queen-Empress v. Ram Lal (1).

For the reasons given above, I am clarly of opinion that the evidence recorded by the learned Sessions Judge in appeal is not legally admissible and the accused-applicants cannot legally be convicted upon that evidence.

The learned Counsel for the applicants has further contended that apart from the question of the legality or otherwise of the order of the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi directing the taking of additional evidence, there were no valid grounds even for recording that evidence. Durjan was a prosecution witness and he was present in Court but was discharged by the learned Government Pleader when the case was being tried in the Court of the Assistant Sessions Judge of Hardoi. It is true that it is the duty of the prosecution to produce before the Court all eye-witnesses of the occurrence, but if the Government Pleader takes upon himself the responsibility of not producing a certain eye-witness, then it is not the duty of the Appellate Court to fill up the gap in the prosecution evidence by summoning that witness. The learned Counsel for the applicants also complains that a very improper use of the Police diaries has been made in this case by the learned Sessions Judge sitting in appeal against the decision of the learned Assistant Sessions Judge. There is a sub-stratum of truth in this complaint also but I need not enlarge upon it, as in my opinion the appeal should have been heard and decided only upon the evidence recorded by the Assistant Sessions Judge in the presence of the assessors.

In the circumstances of this case, I must, therefore, allow this revision, set aside the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi, dated October 10, 1934, and direct that the appeal of the applicants filed in the Court of the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi against the judgment of the learned Assistant Sessions Judge of that place be heard de novo and decided only upon the evidence which was before the Assistant Sessions Judge and the assessors when the judgment was pronounced by the trial Court.

I have been asked by the learned Counsel for the applicants to have the hearing of the appeal transferred to the Court of another Sessions Judge who has not formed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of his clients. It seems to me that, in the circumstances of this case, this is a very proper request, although it is opposed by the learned Assistant Government Advocate, who has contended that such a procedure would cast an undeserved reflection upon the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi. In my opinion the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi would himself be the first to request that he might be relieved of the duty of deciding this appeal afresh, when once he has formed an opinion as to the guilt of the accused upon the additional evidence recorded by him. I, therefore, transfer the hearing of the appeal of the accused-applicants from the Court of the Sessions Judge

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 123, 95, 65—Mere unexpressed intention to dedicate—Effect—Subsequent transfer, whether invalidated—Subrogation—Interest to be paid to co-mortgagor—Discretion of Court—Co-mortgagor, if can enforce terms of mortgage bond on subrogation—Redemption of portion of mortgage—Charge, when accrues.

A mere unexpressed intention to dedicate certain property cannot have the effect of a formal dedication so as to invalidate the transfer of that property to a third person made after the idea had been formed in the mind of the transferor. Although it may be true that in spite of the provisions of s 123, Transfer of Property Act, such a dedication may be effective without an instrument in writing, there must be a real dedication whereby the property is completely given away and the owner completely divests himself of his ownership. Harihar Prasad v. Sri Gurugranth Sahib (1), followed. [p. 758, col. 1.]

The effect of the old s. 95, Transfer of Property Act, was not to place the person claiming to enforce the charge completely in the position of the mortgagee in such a manner that he could enforce the terms of the mortgage deed against those mortgagors who had not borne their share in the redemption. The question of what interest should be payable to the co-mortgagor paying the debts, on what amount, and from what date, is one at the discretion of the Court; and the plaintiff is not entitled to claim as a matter of right that interest should be calculated at the rate specified in the bond. The limited right of subrogation created by s. 95, Transfer of Property Act, must not be treated as if in fact it entitled the co-mortgagor to enforce the terms of the mortgage bond. Digambar Das v. Harendra Narayan Pande (3), relied on.

A charge created by redemption of a mortgage by the holder of a portion of a mortgaged property, does not accrue until payment of the whole mortgage debt.

C. A. from the original decree of the Sub-Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated July 25, 1929.

Messrs. S. N. Ray, B. N. Ray, for Mr. G. P. Sahi, for the Appellants.

Government Pleader, for the Respondents.

James, J.—On June 1, 1913, Babu Ganesh Prasad Narain Sahi borrowed Rs. 30,000 on a mortgage of certain property. On July 16, 1914, he made a settlement of the whole of his property, including that which had been mortgaged in the previous year. Certain property was dedicated to the deities of a temple at his own home, and certain other property was dedicated to a temple at Benares, the settlor constituting himself the shebait of both of these endowments and making provision that this office should descend to any sons who might be born to him. The rest of the property of which he was then in possession was settled on his second wife, Musammat Saraswati Kuer for life with remainder to his expected male issue, in default of male issue, to the religious endowment in his own village which was already endowed by the settlement. The estate thus settled on Musammat Saraswati Kuer was made subject to certain charges which provided for allowances to the settlor himself, to his mother, to his first wife, and to his daughter, providing also for an annual subscription to a school. Certain property was also definitely charged for the payment of Government revenue, and for the costs of repairs to the family house. At some time after executing this document, Ganesh Prasad Narain Sahi married a third wife, by whom he had a son who is now the shebait of the endowments which have been mentioned above. After the death of Ganesh Prasad the Court of Wards took charge of the property of Musammat Saraswati and in due course the mortgage of 1913 was redeemed by the Court. The suit with which we are concerned was then instituted in order to enforce the charge on the endowed property, which had been created by the operation of s 95, Transfer of Property Act, (as the section stood before the recent amendment), when the mortgage was redeemed by Saraswati Kuer. It was alleged by the defendant that the dedicated property was not liable on the ground that the dedication had been actually made before the execution of the mortgage, but on this point the decision of the Subordinate Judge was in favour of the plaintiff. It was also suggested that Musammat Saraswati Kuer stood in some way or other in the shoes of the mortgagor, so that the redemption of the mortgage on her behalf was equivalent to redemption by the mortgagor himself which would create no charge on any property not then in his possession. It was also suggested that the suit was barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge ascertained the value of the dedicated property from the road cess returns, from which it appears that the value is something less than that stated in the plaint. But on the valuation as he found, he decreed the plaintiff's suit, allowing interest at six per cent. on the amount paid for redemption treating the plaintiff as being entitled to interest on the instalments paid from the date of the first instalment. The defendant appeals from that decision.

Mr. S. N. Ray on behalf of the appellant suggests in the first place that the deed of July 16, 1914, constituted Musammat Saraswati Kuer a trustee of the mortgagor, so that the redemption on her behalf should be regarded as payment by the mortgagor of a personal debt which he had undertaken to pay. He argues in the second place that the dedicated property had been dedicated before the execution of the mortgage, so that it could not be properly hypothecated by Ganesh Prasad Narain Sahi, and no charge on it could be created when the mortgage was redeemed by the holder of another portion of the mortgaged property. He argues also that the suit should be regarded as barred by limitation; and that in any event interest ought not to have been awarded on the amount decreed for any period antecedent to the date of the institution of the suit. On behalf of the plaintiff a cross-objection has been preferred, claiming interest from the date of the payment of the first instalment at the rate specified in the mortgage bond.

The deed of gift, or settlement, of July 16, 1914, conveyed a portion of the mortgaged property to Srimati Saraswati Kuer for life with remainder to any sons which might be born to the settlor. The deed recites that the property has been given to Saraswati Kuer who is placed in possession and occupation thereof instead of Ganesh Prasad Narain Sahi; she is to remove his name from the Government registers and substitute her name; but Mr. S. N. Ray suggests that the directions that the property shall be charged for certain purposes amount to such directions regarding the expenditure of the income as to take Saraswati Kuer out of the category of a life tenant and to make her merely a trustee or managing agent for Ganesh Prasad Narain Sahi. No such inference can be drawn from the charges created for the maintenance of other members of the family, or for payment of the Government demands. For the rest the deed directs that:

> "the pay of the servants shall be disbursed out of the balance of the income of the said properties left after payment of the aforesaid annual and monthly amounts and Government demands; and the balance then left shall be spent by her in meeting her personal and diet expenses and in performing necessary ceremonies in connection with my family which should not also be extravagant and improper."

Mr. S. N. Ray suggests that by these provisions Ganesh Prasad Narain Sahi assumes complete control of the income of the property of which he makes a settlement, and that in consequence Saraswati Kuer should be regarded as in some way or other standing in his shoes. But this deed can in my judgment be read as nothing more than a deed creating a tenancy for life, subject to certain charges which are specified. The direction that the lady's living expenses, and expenses to be incurred on account of ceremonies to be performed in connection with the family should not be extravagant or improper is from the legal point of view mere surplusage, and expression of the desire of the donor which could not be enforced, which does not in any way limit the powers of Saraswati Kuer in dealing with the income. No right to alienation is given by the deed but Saraswati Kuer is made a tenant for life; and subject to the charges created, she has complete discretion as to how she will deal with the income. Indeed where the donor has entered into such details in the expression of his intentions regarding the expenditure of the income of the property, the omission of any mention of the mortgage deed would imply that he did not intend that this portion of the property should be charged with the whole of that debt. However, that may be, the property is not so charged by the deed, and it cannot be said that by this deed Saraswati Kuer is made in any sense the trustee of the donor.

On the question of fact some attempt was made to prove at the trial that there had been a formal dedication before the date of the mortgage, by the evidence of two witnesses on behalf of the defendant; but it was proved by the evidence of Lachmi Tewari on behalf of the plaintiff that this oral dedication had been made in October 1913, after the date of the mortgage. The learned Subordinate Judge has believed the evidence of Lachmi Tewari in preference to that of the evidence given on behalf of the defendant; and his view of the effect of this evidence must be accepted. In the deed of gift there is vague mention of the fact that the donor had already dedicated mentally the property which he formally dedicates by the deed; but although the provisions of s. 123, Transfer of Property Act, may have been somewhat modified by judicial decisions, (whittling them down, in our opinion, in a manner not contemplated when the Act was made law), it could never have been suggested that a mere unexpressed intention to dedicate certain property would have the effect of a formal dedication, so as to invalidate the transfer of that property to a third person made after the idea had been formed in the mind of the transferor. Indeed, although it may be true that in spite of the provisions of s. 123, Transfer Property Act, such a dedication may be effective without an instrument in writing, there must be a real dedication, whereby the property is completely given away and the owner completely divests himself of his ownership, Harihar Prasad v. Sri Gurugranth Sahib (1).

The position thus is, that Ganesh Prasad Narain Sahi mortgaged this property, part of which he subsequently dedicated for the two endowments, and part of which he subsequently settled on his family. The whole mortgage, has been redeemed by the tenant for life of the settled estate; and by the provisions of s. 95, Transfer of Property Act (as it stood before the amendment made in 1929), a charge has been created on the mortgaged property in possession of the trustees of the endowments for their proportionate share of the mortgage debt. Mr. S. N. Ray has drawn attention to the fact that there was formerly some difference of opinion as to the effect of s. 95, Transfer of Property Act; but I need here refer only to the decision in Malik Ahmed Wali Khan v. Shamsi Jahan Begam (2); decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on March 21, 1905.

The mortgage debt was satisfied by two payments, the first on January 8, 1921, and the second on April 1, 1926. The payment on January 8, 1921, may have given cause of action for a claim to contribution from the trustees of the endowment. Mr. S. N. Ray suggests that as no suit was instituted within three years from the recovery of this sum the claim should be regarded as barred by limitation. But the suit with which we are here concerned is definitely a suit to enforce the charge created by the redemption of the mortgage by the holder of a portion of the mortgaged property; and the right to enforce such a charge did not accrue until the whole mortgage debt had been paid off. It certainly cannot be held that limitation affecting the right to enforce the charge, began to run before the right had accrued; and the plaintiff was entitled to institute the suit at any time within twelve years after April 1, 1926.

In preparing his decree the Subordidate Judge has allowed interest on the amount which the defendant would have paid in 1921 when the first instalment was paid if he had then borne his proportionate share. Mr. S. N. Ray argues that no liability to pay interest on the amount paid by the co-mortgagor should be held to accrue until the whole amount of the mortgage debt is paid off, pointing out that the payment of the first instalment was in effect only payment of a portion of the plaintiff's own share of the mortgage debt. The learned Government Pleader on behalf of the plaintiff respondent asks for interest at the rate specified in the bond from the date of the first instalment. It appears to be clear that the effect of the old s. 95, Transfer of Property Act, was not to place the person claiming to enforce the charge completely in the position of the mortgagee in such a manner that he could enforce the terms of the mortgage deed against those mortgagors who had not borne their share in the redemption. He obtained a charge on the property but the question of what interest should be payable to the co-mortgagor paying the debts, on what amount, and from what date, is one at the discretion of the Court: and the plaintiff is not entitled to claim as a matter of right that interest should be calculated at the rate specified in the bond Digamber Das v. Harendra Narayan Pande, 5 Ind. Cas. 165 (3). The limited right of subrogation created by s. 95, Transfer of Property Act, must not be treated as if in fact it entitled the co-mortgagor to enforce the terms of the mortgage bond and in the present case I consider that interest should be allowed at the rate of six per cent. per annum only from the date at which the plaintiff became entitled to the charge which is now to be enforced.

I would accordingly amend the decree of the Subordinate Judge by disallowing interest for the period from January 28, 1921, to April 1, 1926. In other respects I would affirm the decision of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal with costs. Hearing fee in this Court may be assessed at Rs. 250. The cross-objection is dismissed.

Execution—Execution Court, when can refuse to execute decree—Decree a nullity—Whether sufficient ground—Decree in terms of compromise against persons, proceedings against whom were ex parte —Question of want of jurisdiction or of decree being nullity if arises.

An execution Court can refuse to execute a decree, on the ground of its being a nullity in the sense of its not being a decree at all in the eye of law either for want of inherent jurisdiction to pass it or for any other reason. [p. 762, col. 2.]

[Case-law discussed.]

M, B and T executed a mortgage deed in favour of S. Subsequently B alone executed a deed of further charge in favour of S who brought a suit for sale on the mortgage and the deed of further charge and impleaded V, J and C as subsequent mortgagees. The parties entered into a compromise and a preliminary decree for sale was passed in terms of it. S then made an application for a final decree for sale against the six defendants. Though all defendants were served, B alone appeared and as no objection was raised by him, a final decree was passed. Subsequently, V made an application to have the final decree set aside as he had not been served with notice of the application for final decree being passed. Notice of this application was issued to the decree-holder alone, but when the application came up for disposal, two of the other judgment-debtors, C and J also appeared besides the applicant and the decree-holder. The Judge was wrongly informed that the other judgment-debtors had been served, although as a matter of fact no notice had been sent to them. He, therefore, made a note in the proceedings that the other judgment-debtors were absent, though served, and proceeded ex parte against them. The application was granted and the final decree set aside. The same day, February 22, 1930, the plaintiff S and the three defendants who were present filed a fresh compromise, in which some variation was made as regards the order in which some portions of the mortgaged property were to be sold according to the terms of the first compromise. A final decree for sale was prepared in terms of the new compromise. Then S made an application for execution of the last-mentioned decree against all the judgment-debtors. Two of the mortgagors, objected to the execution on the ground that they were not bound by the decree as they were not parties to it:

Held, that the final decree passed on February 22, 1930, was not a nullity as against M, B and T, as the case was not one of the Court passing a decree against the mortgagors on the basis of a compromise to which they were not parties but merely one of a decree being passed in terms of the compromise against persons, proceedings against whom were ex parte. The defect was no more than one of an irregular exercise or improper assumption of jurisdiction. The mortgagors might have their remedy by means of proper proceedings against the irregularity complained of, but they could not in the circumstances treat the decree as a nullity. [p. 762, col. 2]

Ex. D. A. against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, dated August 9, 1933.

Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

King, C. J. and Zia-ul-Hasan, J.—(November 2, 1934).—As the questions raised in these appeals are of great importance and involve the interpretation of the Full Bench case of this Court in Ram Narain v. Sura Narain (1), we refer the following questions of law to a Full Bench—

(1) Whether an execution Court can refuse to execute a decree only on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass it or whether it can refuse on the ground of the nullity of the decree for any other reason?

(2) Whether the final decree passed by the Court on February 22, 1930, in the present case is a nullity as against the respondents Nos. 1 to 3?

(3) If the answer to question No. 2 is in the affirmative, can the decree-holder proceed against the property of Jagannath, respondent No. 5?

Messrs. Mohammad Ayub and Daya Kishan Seth, for the Appellant.

Messrs. H. Husain and Makund Behari Lal, for the Respondents.

Judgment of the Full Bench

Srivastava, J.—(March 5, 1935.)—The facts of the case which has given rise to this reference are that on March 25, 1901, Makrand Singh, Bharat Singh and Thakur Din Singh, respondents Nos. 1 to 3, (1) 147 Ind. Cas 1209; 11 O W N 169; A I R 1934 Oudh 75, 6 R O 368; 9 Luck 435.

executed a mortgage-deed in favour of the appellant Sheo Behari Lal. On June 15, 1915, Bharat Singh alone executed a deed of further charge in favour of the mortgagee. Sheo Behari Lal brought a suit for sale on the basis of the aforesaid mortgage and the deed of further charge and impleaded therein also Shiam Behari Vaish and Jagannath, respondents Nos. 4 and 5 and one Chandika as subsequent mortgagees. On December 18, 1926, the parties entered into a compromise and a preliminary decree for sale was passed in terms of it. On December 14, 1929, Sheo Behari Lal made an application for a final decree for sale against the six defendants. All the defendants were served with notice of this application but Bharat Singh alone appeared, and as no objection was raised by him, a final decree for sale was passed on January 11, 1930. On February 8, 1930, Shiam Behari made an application to have the final decree set aside on the ground that he had not been served with notice of the application for the final decree being passed. Notice of this application was issued to the decree-holder alone, but on February 22, 1930, when the application came up for disposal, two of the other judgment-debtors, namely Chandika and Jagannath also appeared besides the applicant Shiam Behari and the decree-holder Sheo Behari Lal. The learned Subordinate Judge was wrongly informed that the other judgment-debtors had been served, although as a matter of fact no notice had been sent to them. He, therefore, made a note in the proceedings that the other judgment-debtors were absent, though served, and proceeded ex parte against them. After hearing the arguments of the parties present, the Subordinate Judge granted the application of Shiam Behari and set aside the final decree, which was passed on January 11, 1930, and proceeded to re-hear the application of Sheo Behari Lal for the passing of a final decree for sale. The same day the plaintiff Sheo Behari and the three defendnts who were present filed a fresh compromise, in which some variation was made as regards the order in which some portions of the mortgaged property were to be sold according to the terms of the first compromise. A final decree for sale was prepared in terms of the new compromise. On February 20, 1933, Sheo Behari Lal made an application for execution of the last-mentioned decree against all the judgment-debtors. Two of the mortgagors, Makrand Singh and Bharat Singh, objected to the execution on the ground that they were not bound by the decree dated February 22, 1930, as they were no parties to it. They also pleaded that the said decree was fraudulent and collusive and that the application for execution was barred by time. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the decree dated February 22, 1930, was not binding on the objectors as they were no parties to the second compromise. He accordingly ordered the names of the three mortgagors, who had not signed the second compromise, to be struck off from the array of the judgment-debtors and ordered execution to proceed only against the three subsequent mortgagees who had entered into the compromise. The decree-holder, Sheo Behari Lal and one of the puisne mortgagees, Jagannath, preferred appeals against the order of the Subordinate Judge to this Court inter alia, on the ground that the mortgagors, respondents Nos. 1 to 3, could not challenge the final decree dated February 22, 1930, in execution proceedings. The Divisional Bench, which heard the appeal, being of opinion that the questions raised in the appeals were of great importance and involved interpretation of the Full Bench decision of this Court in Ram Narain v. Suraj Narain (1), referred the following questions of law to a Full Bench:—

(1) Whether an execution Court can refuse to execute a decree only on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass it or whether it can refuse on the ground of the nullity of the decree for any other reason?

(2) Whether the final decree passed by the Court on February 22, 1930, in the present case is a nullity as against the respondents Nos. 1 to 3?

(3) If the answer to question No. 2, is in the affirmative, can the decree-holder proceed against the property of Jagannath, respondent No. 5?

The main question propounded before the Full Bench as regards the circumstances in which an execution Court can question the validity of the decree is one of considerable difficulty which has given rise to a sharp conflict of opinion in the different High Courts in the country. The question came up for consideration not long ago before a Full Bench of this Court of which I was a member in Ram Narain v. Suraj Narain (1). The conclusion reached by me in that case was that the decree in question passed by the Munsif was a mere nullity because he lacked inherent jurisdiction to take cognizance of the matter and that in such a case the executing Court could refuse to execute it. I took care to add that I confined my decision to this ground. I am glad to avail myself of this opportunity to explain my position a little more fully. A decretal Court may be lacking in jurisdiction, territorial, pecuniary, personal or inherent to pass the decree. It is only when the lack of jurisdiction is such as to make the decree coram non judice, a mere nothing or what is not a decree at all in the eye of law, that it can be treated as a mere nullity and disregarded by the execution Court. Although such cases must, if at all, be very rare, yet if in any case it can be shown that a decree passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction was a nullity in the sense just stated by me, then I think it must be governed by the same principle and the execution Court ought to be able to disregard such decree also.

Section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code provides that a defect of want of territorial jurisdiction will not be entertained by any appellate or revisional Court, unless the objection was taken at the earliest possible opportunity and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice. It shows that the defect of lack of territorial jurisdiction, if any objection as regards it has not been taken as provided by that section, must be deemed to be cured for all purposes. It seems to follow that the execution Court cannot entertain such an objection in the execution proceedings. Similarly s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887) shows that a plea as regards lack of pecuniary jurisdiction can also be waived. Thus in my opinion a defect in the territorial or pecuniary jurisdiction, such as can be cured by s. 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure or s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, does not make the decree ab initio void and a nullity, so as to justify the execution Court going behind it. As regards the personal jurisdiction the most familiar instance is that of a case in which a decree is passed against a dead person. In such a case it needs no argument to say that the decree is not a decree at all in the eye of the law, and can be disregarded as a nullity on account of absolute lack both of personal and inherent jurisdiction, by any Court before which it is presented. I refrain from expressing any opinion as regards another class of cases in which the question of personal jurisdiction sometimes arises, namely the case of decrees against persons under a legal disability, as it is not necessary for me to do so in the present case. Cases of lack of inherent jurisdiction may be illustrated by the case of Rabindranath Chakrabarti v. Jnanendra Mohan (2), which was confirmed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Jnanendra Mohan v. Rabindra Nath (3), a case under the Indian Arbitration Act in which the Statute did not give the Court any jurisdiction to pass a decree but authorised it only to order the award to be filed, and by the case, which formed the subject of reference to the Full Bench of this Court in Ram Narain v. Suraj Narain (1), in which a final decree for sale was passed by the Munsif of Bilgram, although the suit had been instituted and a preliminary decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi and the case had never been transferred to the Munsif's Court.

In support of my view I might also point out that the Legislature in enacting O. XXI, r. 7, of the Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908) has omitted the words "or of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it" which found place in the corresponding s. 225 of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882). This omission appears to be a deliberate one and clearly manifests the intention that an execution Court is not to be allowed to question the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree. But as I have said before, a case in which the decree is an absolute nullity for lack of inherent jurisdiction to pass it, appears to stand on a different footing. Such a decree has no existence in law and can be ignored altogether. The view which I have expressed above appears to me to be the only reasonable view of the matter, because an execution Court is merely a hand-maid or a servant of the Court which passed the decree, and it would be opposed to sound principles to allow a servant to question the authority of the master, except of course in cases where the decree or order can be treated as non-existent or a mere nothing. I do not think it necessary to discuss the case law bearing on the subject because of the great divergence in the views expressed by the various High Courts and because it has been reviewed at length in the leading judgment in our Full Bench decision in Ram Narain v. Suraj Narain (1).

Turning now to the facts of the present case, the question is whether the decree dated February 22, 1930, can be regarded as an absolute nullity for any lack of inherent jurisdiction in the Court which passed it. It has properly been conceded by the learned Counsel for the respondents that there was no lack of inherent jurisdiction in the Subordinate Judge to pass the decree. It is, however, contended strongly that a compromise decree stands on the same footing as a contract, and as the mortgagors-respondents were no parties to the compromise, therefore, the compromise was absolutely void as against them and the decree passed on it is, therefore, to be treated as a mere nullity. No doubt there is ample authority for the proposition that a compromise decree is a creature of the agreement and merely carries out the terms of the agreement embodied in the compromise Amrita Sundari Debi v. Seraj-ud-Din Ahmad (4), but I am of opinion that even though the principle may be conceded, it cannot help the respondents in the present case. The decree in question is a subsisting decree and was passed by a duly constituted Court in a suit to which all the respondents were parties. The compromise in question was arrived at between the mortgagee plaintiff and the puisne mortgagees. The mortgagor though not parties to the compromise were properly parties to the litigation. No notice of the application for setting aside the previous decree was served on them, but the Court acted under the impression that they had been served with notice and, therefore, decided to proceed ex parte against them. It is not denied that if the order for ex parte proceedings had been regularly made, it would have been competent for the Court to pass a decree against the absent mortgagors on the same terms as were agreed to by the parties which were present in their compromise. It seems to me that there is no difference in principle between a case like the present one and a case in which a Court passes an order for ex parte proceedings, where the service has not been properly made. In either case it seems to me that there is no lack of jurisdiction in the Court passing the decree, but they are cases merely of an irregular exercise of jurisdiction. In other words, the view I take of the proceedings dated February 22, of the Subordinate Judge is that he did not treat the compromise as binding upon the mortgagors-respondents inspite of their not being parties to it, but merely passed a decree ex parte against them in the same terms as were embodied in the compromise entered into by other parties. Although the ordinary practice is to send notice to the mortgagors when an application is made for a final decree for sale, yet it should be noted that O. XXXIV, r. 5, does not prescribe such a notice being sent. It was so held also by the Allahabad High Court in a case of foreclosure, Mahadeo Pande v. Somnath Pande (5). Obviously the mortgagee had as against the mortgagors a right to sell the whole and every portion of the mortgaged property. By means of the compromise the puisne mortgagees, who were interested only in certain portions of the mortgaged property agreed to portions of the mortgaged property being sold in a particular order which was agreed between them and the decree-holder. If the proceedings ex parte had been regularly taken against the mortgagors no legitimate exception could, under the circumstances, have been taken against the Court passing an ex parte decree against the mortgagors in terms of the compromise made by the other parties. The case, therefore, in my opinion is not one of the Court passing a decree against the mortgagors on the basis of a compromise to which they were not parties but merely one of a decree being passed in terms of the compromise against persons, proceedings against whom were ex parte. In this view of the matter no question of want of jurisdiction or of the decree being a nullity arises. The defect is no more than one of an irregular exercise or improper assumption of jurisdiction. The mortgagors may have their remedy by means of proper proceedings against the irregularity complained of, but they cannot in the circumstances treat the decree as a nullity.

For the above reasons my answers to the questions referred to the Full Bench are as follows:

(1) That an execution Court can refuse to execute a decree on the ground of its being a nullity in the sense of its not being a decree at all in the eye of law either for want of inherent jurisdiction to pass it or for any other reason.

(2) The final decree passed on February 22, 1930, is not a nullity as against the respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

(5) 97 Ind. Cas. 211; 43 A 823; 21 A L J 914; A I R 1926 All. 757.

(3) In view of the answer given to question No. 2, this question does not arise.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Second Civil Appeal No. 196 of 1929
March 2, 1934
N. J. WADIA, J.

SECRETARY OF STATE—APPELLANT
versus
RAJARAM PARASHRAM DESHPANDE
—RESPONDENT

Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (III of 1874), s 15—Sanad to inamdar by which holder agreed to pay fixed annual judi in lieu of service—Judi arrived at after deducting assessment on shet-sanadis lands—Discontinuance of service of shet-sanadis and full assessment imposed—Held, grant to shet-sanadis was kadim—Inamdar, if estopped from contending that it was not kadim—Estoppel—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Question, whether sanadi inam lands are kadim or jadid is one of law—Inam.

In 1902 a sanad was granted to the inamdar under s. 15, Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (III of 1874), by which the holders agreed to pay to Government a fixed annual judi in lieu of service. There were certain lands granted as inam in the village for shet-sanadi service. The judi was arrived at after deducting the assessment of certain lands including the shet-sanadi lands, which were held in inam by village servants. In 1920 Government ordered a discontinuance of the service of shet-sanadis and imposed full assessments on the lands. The respondent contended that the sanadi inam lands had been given by his ancestors to the sanadis for the performance of Police duties, that they were jadid inams, and that he, and not the Government, was entitled to receive the full assessment which had been imposed on the lands after the discontinuance of service. Government contended that the sanadi lands were kadim inams and not jadid and that the inamdar was not entitled to the full assessment levied on the lands;

Held, the agreement between the parties evidenced by the sanad was based upon the assumption that the sanadi inam lands were kadim inam and the assessment of judi was made on that assumption, and that the respondent was not entitled to the assessment. The respondent inamdar had by his conduct led Government to believe that he accepted this assumption. By giving Government this impression and allowing them to act upon it, he obtained the benefit of a lower judi in perpetuity. The fact which he led Government to believe and act upon was that he agreed to the sanadi inam lands being treated as kadim inam and hence he could not now be allowed to contend that they are not kadim. [p. 768, col. 1.]

The question whether the sanadi inam lands were kadim inam or jadid inam is one, the determination of which depends on the legal effect of certain facts which have been proved by the evidence in the case. Consequently, it is a question of law, into which the High Court is entitled to go, in second appeal. [p. 764, col. 2.]

S. C. A. from the decision of the District Judge, Satara, in Appeal No. 398 of 1927.

Mr. B. G. Rao, for the Appellant.

Messrs. H. C. Coyajee and J. G. Rele, for the Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—Respondent No. 1, Rajaram Parashram Deshpande is the inamdar of the village of Padamale in the Tasgaon Taluka of the Satara District. The village was originally granted to his ancestors in Deshpande inam by the Mahratta Government in the year 1739 the inam being a grant of the soil of the village and conferring full proprietary rights exclusive of hakdars and inamdars. The inam was continued by the British Government. In 1902 a sanad was granted to the inamdar under s. 15, Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (Bom. III of 1874), by which the holders agreed to pay to Government a fixed annual judi in lieu of service. There were certain lands granted as inam in the village for shet-sanadi service. In 1920 Government ordered a discontinuance of the service of shet-sanadis and imposed full assessments on the lands. The respondent contended that the sanadi inam lands had been given by his ancestors to the sanadis for the performance of Police duties that they were jadid inams and that he and not the Government was entitled to receive the full assessment which had been imposed on the lands after the discontinuance of service. Government contended that the sanadi lands were kadim inams and not jadid and that the inamdar was not entitled to the full assessment levied on the lands. The respondent inamdar thereupon gave a notice to Government in accordance with the provisions of s. 80, Civil Procedure Code, and filed a suit for a declaration that he was entitled to the assessment on the lands for an injunction restraining the Secretary of State from recovering the assessment and for recovering from him Rs. 300 in respect of the assessment wrongfully recovered by him for five years.

The Assistant Judge of Satara by whom the suit was tired dismissed it on the ground that the shet-sanadi lands were kadim inam lands and not jadid and that the plaintiff inamdar was estopped by his conduct from contending that the inams were jadid. On appeal the District Judge of Satara held that the shet sanadi lands were jadid inam and not kadim and that the plaintiff was not estopped from contending that they were not kadim inams. He, therefore, decreed the plaintiff's suit with costs. Against this decree Government have filed the present appeal.

The issues for determination are whether the grant of lands to the shet sanadis was a kadim or a jadid inam and whether respondent No. 1 was estopped from contending that the grant was not a kadim inam. On Issue No. 1 the lower Appellate Court had found that the grant was a jadid inam. Mr. Coyajee for respondent No. 1 contends that the finding is one of fact and that this Court is, therefore, precluded in second appeal from going behind the finding. Questions of law and of fact are not always easy to disentangle. In the present case the contention raised on behalf of the Secretary of State that the shet-sanadi inam was a kadim inam was based on certain documents, viz., the sanad (Ex. 21) granted to the inamdar by the British Government in 1902, the tharavbands of the village for the yeer 1856-57 1861-62 and 1863-64 (Exs. 56, 57 and 58) and the entries relating to this village in the Register of Alienated Villages (Ex. 71). The sanad (Ex. 21) mentions the assessment on which the judi for the village was fixed. The preamble refers to the entries relating to the village in the Government accounts of the year 1886-87 and says that as the holders of the village have agreed to pay to Government a fixed annual sum in lieu of service it is declared that the said lands and cash allowances shall be continued hereditary by the British Government on condition that the holders and their heirs shall continue faithful subjects of the British Government and shall pay certain fixed yearly dues mentioned in the sanad.

In consideration of the fulfilment of these conditions, the lands and cash allowances were to be continued to them by Government without demand of service and without increase of land tax over the fixed amounts. The judi of Rs. 821-10-0 which was fixed for the village of Padamale was the amount shown in the Alienation Register of 1886-87, a copy of which has been produced (Ex. 71). This document shows that in arriving at the amount of Rs. 821-10-0, a sum of 568-4-0, which was the assessment on an area of 83 bighas, 19¼ pands which was granted in inam to Patils Kulkarnis and other village servants (including shet sanadis), was deducted from the total assessment of the village and one fourth of the balance of assessment so arrived at was fixed as the judi. The fact that the judi has been so arrived at, after deducting the assessment of certain lands including the shet sanadi lands which were held in inam by village servants is not disputed. The question, therefore, whether the sanadi inam lands are kadim inam or jadid inam is not entirely one of fact. The decision depends upon the right construction to be put upon the sanad (Ex. 21) and the village accounts as shown in the Alienation Register (Ex. 71) to which the preamble of the sanad refers and upon which the calculation of the judi was based. The question is not whether the sanad and the accounts prove that the shet-sanadi inam lands were kadim or jadid but what is the legal inference to be drawn from the fact proved by these two documents viz., that the assessment of the sanadi inam lands was deducted from the total assessment of the village for arriving at the figure on which judi was calculated. This is a question of the proper inference to be drawn from a certain fact which had been proved, and such a question is, in my opinion one more of law than of fact. In Dhanna Mal v. Moti Sagar (1), where the question in issue was whether a certain tenancy was a permanent one or not, their Lordships of the Privy Council said (p. 185*):

"It is clear, however, that the proper effect of a proved fact is a question of law and the question whether a tenancy is permanent or precarious seems to them in a case like the present to be a legal inference from facts and not itself a question of fact."

The question of the interpretation of s. 109, Civil Procedure Code, was again considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Wali Muhammad v. Muhammad Baksh (2). Their Lordships said (p. 91†)

"No doubt questions of law and fact are often difficult to disentangle but the following propositions are clearly established;

1. There is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of erroneous finding of facts, however, gross the error may seem to be; ... ...

(2) The proper legal effect of a proved fact is essentially a question of law but the question whether a fact has been proved when evidence for and against has been properly admitted is necessarily a pure question of fact. (3) Where the question to be decided is one of fact, it does not involve an issue of law merely because documents which were not instruments of title or otherwise the direct foundations of rights but were really historical materials, have to be construed for the purpose of deciding the question ....."

Mr. Coyajee has contended that the present case comes within the third proposition laid down above. According to him the question whether the sanadi inam lands were kadim inam or jadid inam was one of fact and it does not become a question of law merely because documents like the tharavbands and the Alienation Register, which are not in themselves instruments of title, have to be referred to and construed for the purpose of arriving at a finding I am unable to accept this reasoning. The question appears to me essentially to be one of the proper inference to be drawn from certain facts which are proved by these documents and by the sanad itself, viz., the amount of the judi and the manner in which that amount has been arrived at. If so, the case falls under the second proposition laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council. It is a question of the proper legal effect of a proved fact, and as such is a question of law.

In another case, Amiruddi Gazi v. Makhan Lal (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the finding of the District Judge, based upon the documents, as to whether the particular property in suit passed to the auction-purchaser, was not, in the true legal sense, a finding of fact at all and was not therefore final. As the whole of the relevant evidence in the matter was documentary, and the documents themselves constituted the foundation of the rights claimed by the plaintiffs, the right construction of these documents was a question of law which the High Court was not precluded from considering in second appeal. The question, whether the sandi inam lands were kadim inam or jadid inam, is one the determination of which depends on the legal effect of certain facts which have been proved by the evidence in this case. It is, therefore, a question of law and this Court is entitled in second appeal to go into it.

Coming now to the evidence, the case for the appellant is based on certain entries in the three tharavbands (Exs. 56, 57 and 58), the Alienation Register (Ex. 71) and the sanad (Ex. 21). The first of the tharavbands of the year 1856-57 has been signed by one of the inamdars and the other two tharavbands of the years 1861-62 and 1863-64 are signed only by the village officers and do not bear the signatures of any of the inamdars. The genuineness of the tharavbands has, however, not been disputed. The tharavbands of the years 1856-57 (Ex. 56) shows that a sum of Rs. 551 was deducted from the assessment due to the inamdars on account of "inam lands with other persons". Under this heading were included the service inam lands held by the Patils, Kulkarnis, chougulas and shet-sanadis. The shet-sanadi lands were shown in the names of three persons, each holding three bighas, their total assessment being Rs. 54-9-8. In the tharavbands of 1861-62 (Ex. 57) and of 1862-63 (Ex. 58) the same land measuring nine bighas and assessed at Rs. 54-9-8 are clearly shown under the heading of

"Kadim inam lands as settled in accordance with the certificate received from Meherban Assistant Revenue Commissioner Saheb Bahadur."

The tharavband of the year 1861-62 contains a separate heading

"Details in respect of persons enjoying inams granted out of Jadid by the Inamdars of the Village."

Under this heading various persons are shown; but the shet-sanadi inam lands do not appear here. It is clear from these entries in the three tharavbands that from as early as 1856-57 the shet-sanadi lands were definitely shown in the Village Accounts as kadim inam lands. The Register of Alienated Villages for the year 1886-87 (Ex. 71) shows the sanadi inam lands measuring nine bighas under the heading of "Village servants useful to Government" and under the heading "Duration of tenure", the remark against them is "So long as services required by Government." The register also shows that the judi of Rs. 821-10-0 fixed for the village was arrived at after deducting from the total assessment of the village the assessment on the inam lands granted to various village servants useful to the community and to Government, including shet-sanadis. These documents establish clearly that the shet-sanadi lands have been treated in the village records and in the fixing of judi at the time of the issue of the sanad of 1902 as kadim inam lands.

The plaintiff inamdar relied on four documents (Exs. 52, 50, 51 and 66) as showing that the lands were Jadid and not Kadim inam. Ex. 52 is a copy of the accounts of the village of the year 1833 produced before the Inam Commissioner by the plaintiff's ancestor in 1852. This statement refers to four bighas of land as sanadi pyady.

Mr. Coyajee for respondents No. 1 has frankly admitted that this document does not really throw much light on the question. The learned District Judge in dealing withit says that it appears that four bighas of land mentioned as sanadi pyady in it had reverted to the inamdars. I find nothing whatever in the document itself or in the other evidence to support this inference. The document at least shows that even as early as 1833 there were some sanadi inam lands. Whether they were Kadim or Jadid inam does not appear from it.

The next two documents (Exs. 50 and 51) are statements made on behalf of the three inamdars of the village by their Mukhtyars before the Inam Commissioner in 1852. They give details of the kadim inam lands of the village. In the list of such lands the shet-sanadi inams are not mentioned. They also give a list of the Jadid inam lands given by them and their ancestors subsequent to the grant of the village to them. In this list nine bighas are shown as shet-sanadi inams in the names of the same three persons who are mentioned in the tharavband of 1856-57. Exhibit 66 is an extract from a Barnishi Register which shows that in 1861 the Settlement Officer, Southern Division, wrote to the Collector of Belgaum to say that the descriptive roll of the lands of Padamale village prior to its being granted in inam was not to be found in his office, but that in a written statement submitted to him by the inamdar the kadim lands of the village were mentioned in detail. He enclosed with his letter a copy of this statement. The copy so sent was a copy of Ex. 51. He recommended that the lands mentioned in the list as kadim should be treated as kadim.

All that these documents produced by the inamdar show is that in 1852 the inamdars made statements before the Settlement Officer in which they showed the shet-sanadi inam lands as jadid, and that the Settlement Officer recommended to the Collector in 1861 that this statement should be accepted. It is clear, however, from the tharavbands of 1861-62 and 1862-63 that the recommendation of the Settlement Officer was not accepted, and that under express orders from the Assistant Commissioner the sanadi inam lands were treated as kadim. In their statement (Ex. 50) made before the settlement officer in 1852, the inamdars had shown certain other inams also as jadid, viz., Rs. 52-15-9 Dharmadaya Sarva inam and Rs. 56-4-0 sarva inam to Piraji bin Appaji Patil. In the tharavband of 1861-62 these inams are shown as jadid. The learned District Judge says in connection with this that as two out of the three inams claimed as jadid by the inamdars were treated as jadid in the tharavband, there was no reason to suppose that the inamdar's statement that the inam to the shet-sanadis was also jadid was not correct. The inference appears to me to be absolutely unwarranted. The fact that the inamdar's claims with regard to two of the jadid inams were accepted, and that with regard to the shet-sanadi inams specific orders were passed by the Assistant Commissioner directing that they should be entered as kadim inams, in spite of the recommendation of the Settlement Officer in 1861 that the lands should be treated as jadid, would, on the contrary, warrant the inferenee that the treatment of the shet-sanadi lands as kadim was the result of an inquiry in which the inamdar's claim was overruled. The two tharavbands of the years 1861-62 and 1862-63 prove clearly that the lands were treated as kadim inam lands. The same fact appears from the Alienation Register of 1886-87, and it is on the basis that the shet-sanadi inam lands were kadim that their assessment was deducted from the total assessment of the village when calculating the judi which was fixed in the sanad granted to the inamdar in 1902. Mere statements made by the inamdar's ancestors in 1852 which were clearly not admitted by the Revenue Authorities, cannot be of any use in proving that the sanadi inam lands were jadid. The entry of these lands as kadim in the village records of 1861-62 and 1862-63 was evidently acquiesced in by the inamdars and was taken as the basis of the settlement arrived at by the inamdars and the Government in 1902 when the sanad was issued.

It has been argued that as the tharavbands of the years 1861-62 and 1862-63 do not bear the signatures of any of the inamdars, it cannot be assumed that they were aware of the entries made. It appears to me that the facts of the case cannot justify one in holding that the inamdars could possibly have remained ignorant of the entries made in the accounts of their own village. These entries were not made in one year only. They appear in the two tharavbands and in the Alienation Register. The question of the nature of these inams must again have been considered by both the inamdars and the Revenue Authorities in 1902, when the commutation of the watan was effected and the sanad (Ex. 21) was granted. The commutation has been made under s. 15, Hereditary Offices Act (Bom. III of 1874). Under that section the Collector may, with the consent of the holder of a watan, given in writing, relieve him and his heirs and successors in perpetuity of their liability to perform service upon such conditions, whether consistent with the provisions of the Act or not, as may be agreed upon by the Collector and such holder. Clause 3 of the section provides that every settlement made or confirmed under this section shall be binding upon both Government and the holder of the watan and his heirs and successors. The sanad must therefore have been issued with the full consent of the inamdars, and after a full consideration of the details relating to the inam since both parties knew that they were binding themselves permanently by the terms of the commutation agreement.

In my opinion, therefore, the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the shet-sanadi inams were jadid and not Kadim is not a correct inference from the facts proved by the documents which have been adduced in evidence by the parties. The tharavbands and the Alienation Register prove satisfactorily that the shet-sanadi lands were kadim inam lands and that in working out the judi which was permanently fixed in the sanad of 1902 these lands were treated as Kadim. The next question is whether the respondent inamdar was estopped from contending that the lands were not Kadim inam. I have already referred to the fact that the judi which was fixed in 1902, and which by the terms of the sanad was permanently fixed, was the judi shown as due from the inamdar in the Alienation Register of 1886-87. In calculating that judi the assessment of the shet-sanadi inam lands was deducted from the total assessment of the village. The inamdars accepted the settlement by which the assessment of the sanadi inam lands was deducted to their benefit for the purpose of fixing the judi. I am unable to agree with the view taken by the learned District Judge that it would be unfair to the inamdar to assume that the shet-sanadi inam was treated as kadim inam to the knowledge of the inamdar in the offer and acceptance of the Gordon Settlement.

The commutation was based on the consent of the inamdars given in writing, and it is, I think, a legitimate presumption to make that both sides were fully aware of the basis upon which the settlement was arrived at especially when, as in this case, we find that the facts which were accepted as the basis of the settlement had been mentioned in the accounts of the village for forty years prior to the settlement. The respondent inamdar by entering into this settlement obtained the benefit of a lower amount of judi in perpetuity. That amount, which was one-fourth of assessment of the village, was fixed on the assumption that the inamdar was not entitled to the assessment of the shet-sanadi inam lands. By now claiming the assessment of these lands the inamdar is trying to increase the assessment to which he is entitled without giving up the benefit of the lower judi which has been fixed once and for all, and which Government, under the terms of the sanad and under s. 15 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, cannot increase. He claims the benefit of the lower judi while repudiating the basis on which that judi was arrived at. It was argued by Mr. Coyajee for respondent No. 1 that even if it is assumed that the judi fixed in the sanad was based on the assumption that the shet-sanadi inam lands were kadim, and that the assessment on them was not to be taken into account in calculating the judi, there is nothing to show that the action of Government in treating the shet-sanadi lands as kadim inam and omitting them from consideration when calculating the judi was due to any representation made by the inamdar. On the contrary it appears that prior to 1852 at least the inamdars had been contending that the shet-sanadi inam lands were jadid. The sanad, however, was granted as the result of a commutation agreement voluntarily entered into by the inamdar. In that commutation the inamdar must be taken to have agreed that the shet-sanadi inam lands should be taken as kadim and be omitted from calculation when fixing the judi to which he was liable. If at that time he had refused to allow the shet-sanadi inam lands to be treated as kadim, and if this contention had been accepted by Government, he would have been held liable to a higher amount of judi. He had, by his act in agreeing to the terms of that commutation, led Government to believe that the sanadi inam lands were kadim, and induced them to fix a lower amount of judi than they would have fixed if those lands had been treated as jadid. He cannot now be allowed to repudiate the agreement on the basis on which the judi was fixed to his advantage.

Mr. Coyajee for respondent No. 1 has referred to the ruling of the Privy Council in Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (4) in support of his contention that s. 115, Indian Evidence Act, does not apply to a case where a statement relied upon is made to a person who knows the real facts and is not misled by the untrue statement, and that there can be no estoppel where the truth of the matter is known to both parties. The facts of that case, however, were different. In that case one Brahmo Dutt had taken a mortgage from one Dharmodas Ghose. It was found that Brahmo Dutt knew at the time that Dharmodas Ghose was a minor. In order to safeguard himself, Brahmo Dutt had taken a declaration from the minor that he was of age at the time. On a suit by the minor praying for a declaration that the mortgage entered into by him was void and inoperative owing to his being under age at the time, Brahmo Dutt contended inter alia that the minor's declaration as to his age was fraudulently made to deceive the defendant and disentitled the minor to any relief. Their Lordships on these facts held that there could be no estoppel in this case where the statement of the minor had been made to a person who knew the real facts and who had not been misled by the untrue statement. In the present case there is no question of any untrue statement. The agreement between the parties evidenced by the sanad was based upon the assumption that the sanadi inam lands were kadim inam. The respondent inamdar had by his conduct led Government to believe that he accepted this assumption. By giving Government this impression and allowing them to act upon it, he obtained the benefit of a lower judi in perpetuity. The fact which he led Government to believe and act upon was that he agreed to the sanadi inam lands being treated as kadim inam. He cannot now be allowed to contend that they are not kadim. In Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Lala (5), their Lordships of the Privy Council in dealing with the question of estoppel said (p. 215*):

"The learned Counsel who argued the present case on either side were agreed that the terms of the Indian Evidence Act did not enact as law in India anything different from the law of England on the subject of estoppel, and their Lordships entirely adopt that view. The law of this country gives no countenance to the doctrine that in order to create estoppel the person whose acts or declarations induced another to act in a particular way must have been under no mistake himself, or must have acted with an intention to mislead or deceive. What the law and the Indian statute mainly regard is the position of the person who was induced to act; and the principle on which the law and the statute rest is, that it would be most inequitable and unjust to him that if another, by a representation made, or by conduct amounting to a representation, has induced him to act as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement, to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it."

Judged by this principle the action of the respondent inamdar in agreeing as he did to the terms of the sanad of 1902, which was based on the assumption that the sanadi lands were kadim inam, clearly estops him from now contending that they were not kadim inam. The ruling in Secretary of State v. Indoorai (6), on which the learned Assistant Government Pleader on behalf of the appellant has relied, is, in my opinion, applicable to the present case. The facts in that case were very similar. The plaintiffs, who were inamdars of certain villages, paid a quit rent to Government at the rate of two annas in a rupee of the gross rental after deducting certain cash allowances for annual expenses to be incurred in the villages. The amounts for such expenses were settled in 1886 and Alienation Registers were made according to this settlement. In 1888 sanads were prepared in which the cash allowances were mentioned under the heading—"Alienations more ancient than the grant." The Government decided that the cash allowances should be disbursed in the villages by their Officers and not by the inamdars and that the allowances should not be paid to the inamdars. The inamdars were served with notices to refund the amounts which they had received since 1914. They thereupon sued Government for a declaration and injunction. In dealing with the inamdar's contention

Fawcett, J., observed (p. 1318*):

"First of all, they have accepted the settlement by which these amounts are deducted to their benefit for the purpose of fixing the payment of quit rent to Government, and the reason for that deduction, as I have already mentioned is clearly that Government treated them as kadim allowances. Having accepted this settlement and obtained the benefit of that part of it which allows this deduction, they cannot, under a well-known legal principle, repudiate merely that part of the agreement that they do not like, namely, that Government should have a free hand in regard to the payment and management of these particular allowances. This cannot be allowed under the principle laid down by the House of Lords in the well-known case of Crossley v. Dixon (7) which has often been followed by this Court as, for instance, in G. I. P. Ry. v Tamboli (8)."

The respondent inamdar, in my opinion, is clearly estopped from contending that the shet-sanadi lands are not kadim inam. The plaintiff's suit must, therefore, fail. The appeal must be allowed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Jurisdiction—Suit for possession—Land situated in Sub-Division D—Suit filed in Court in M sitting at P—Establishment of Court at D in M District—Execution—Court in M sitting at P, if has jurisdiction to execute decree—Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), s. 3—Costs—Privy Council—Whether carries interest—Interest.

A suit was instituted by the appellants in the year 1911 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of M (who at that time sat at P), for possession of certain lands situated in the Sub-Division of D and for mesne profits. The suit was decreed, but an appeal by the respondents to the High Court was successful and the judgment of the High Court was affirmed by the Privy Council. The suit was accordingly dismissed with costs. In the month of February 1931, the respondents, the present decree-holders, applied for execution in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of M sitting at P. Since 1911, when the suit was begun, by an order of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bihar and Orissa in 1917, a Subordinate Judge's Court was established at D in the District of M and the local limits of his jurisdiction ceased to be included in the local limits of the Subordinate Judge of P from October 31, 1917. The respondents decree-holders sought to sell in execution lands situated in the Sub-Division of P, that is to say, outside the Sub-Division of D. The appellants judgment-debtors resisted the execution on the ground that the proper Court in which to institute an execution case was that of the Additional Subordinate Judge of D and argued that the Subordinate Judge sitting at P had no proper jurisdiction though it was admitted that the case might afterwards be transferred to him :

Held, that the effect of the Notification was not to transfer the jurisdiction of the Court sitting at P to the Court sitting at D, but to divide the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge in the District of M, and that the mere fact that for administrative purposes the Court of the Subordinate Judge was now divided between the Subordinate Judge and an Additional Subordinate Judge and that a certain class of business or an area was allotted to the Additional Subordinate Judge did not make the Court of the Subordinate Judge sitting at P any the less the Court of the Subordinate Judge of M nor did it prevent it from executing the decree. The decree-holder had always the right to apply as of course to the Court which passed the decree for its execution even if it be in respect of property outside the territorial jurisdiction of such Court and even if execution by such Court can be no more than execution by transmission to another Court. Seeni Nadan v. Muthusamy Pillai (1), Prem Chand Dey v. Mokhoda Debi (2) and Sreenath Chakravarti v. Priyanath Bandopadhya (3), referred to.

C. A. from original order of Sub-Judge, Manbhum, dated August 29, 1931.

Messrs. P. R. Das & M. K. Mukharji, for the Appellants in M. A. Nos. 225 & 226 & for the Respondents in M. A. Nos. 274 to 277.

Sir Sultan Ahmad (with him Messrs. S. C. Bose, N. N Roy), for the Respondents in M. A. Nos. 225 & 226 & for the Appellants in M. A. Nos. 274 to 277.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—The first point for decision in these appeals is as to the proper Court for the execution of a decree against the appellants in favour of the respondents. The suit was instituted by the appellants in the year 1911 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum (who at that time sat at Purulia), for possession of certain lands situated in the Sub-Division of Dhanbad, and for mesne profits. The suit was decreed, but an appeal by the respondents to the High Court was successful and the judgment of the High Court was affirmed by the Privy Council. The suit was accordingly dismissed with costs.

In the month of February 1931, the respondents, the present decree-holders applied for execution in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum, sitting at Purulia. Since 1911 when the suit was begun, by an order of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bihar and Orissa. (No. 233-A. P., dated December 1, 1917, duly published in the Bihar and Orissa Gazette):

"In exercise of the powers conferred by s. 13, sub-s. (1) of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act (Act XII of 1887) the Lieutenant-Governor in Council is pleased to establish with effect from October 31, 1927, a Subordinate Judge's Court at Dhanbad in the District of Manbhum, and to fix with effect from that date the local limits of the executive Sub-Division of Dhanbad as the local limits of his jurisdiction."

By an order of the same date (No. 235 A. P.):

"In exercise of the powers conferred by s. 13, sub-s. (1) of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act (Act XII of 1887), the Lieutenant Governor in Council is pleased to declare that the local limits of the executive Sub-Division of Dhanbad ceased to be included in the local limits of the Subordinate Judge of Purulia with effect from October 31, 1917."

The respondents decree-holders sought to sell in execution lands situated in the Sub-Division of Purulia, that is to say, outside the Sub-Division of Dhanbad. The appellants judgment-debtors resisted the execution on the ground that the proper Court in which to institute an execution case was that of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad and argued that the Subordinate Judge sitting at Purulia had no proper jurisdiction though it was admitted that the case might afterwards be transferred to him. They rely on ss. 13 (1) and 17 (1) of Act XII of 1887. This Act established Civil Courts for Bengal, Bihar and Assam. By s. 3 it is enacted:

"There shall be the following classes of Civil Courts under this Act, namely; (1) the Court of the District Judge; (2) the Court of the Additional Judge; (3) the Court of the Subordinate Judge; and (4) the Court of the Munsif."

By s. 13 (1), the Local Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, fix and alter the local limits of the jurisdiction of any Civil Court under this Act and by sub-s. (2) if the same local jurisdiction is assigned to two or more Subordinate Judges or to two or more Munsifs, the District Judge may assign to each of them, such civil business cognizable by the Subordinate Judge of Munsif, as the case may be, as, subject to any general or special orders of the High Court, he thinks fit. Section 17 is as follows:—

"(1) Where any Civil Court under this Act has from any cause ceased to have jurisdiction with respect to any case, any proceeding in relation to that case which, if that Court had not ceased to have jurisdiction, might have been had therein may be had in the Court to which the business of the former Court has been transferred. (2) Nothing in this section applies to cases for which provision is made in s. 623 or s. 649, Civil Procedure Code, or in any other enactment for the time being in force."

Under the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, the references are to ss. 36, 37 and 114 and r. 1, O. XLVII. By s. 37, Civil Procedure Code:

"The expression 'Court which passed a decree or words to that effect, shall, in relation to the execution of decrees, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, be deemed to include; (b) where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute it, the Court which, if suit wherein the decree was passed was instituted at the time of making the application for the execution of the decree, would have jurisdiction to try such suit."

Now it is clear that the various classes of Courts are established by s. 3 of Act XII of 1887, and no such Court as that of the "Additional Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad" exists. When there is too much work for a single Subordinate Judge to do an Additional Subordinate Judge is appointed to assist him. The division of work between the Subordinate Judge and his assistant may be settled in one of two ways. Either the Government under s. 13 (1) may prescribe territorial limits as was done in this particular case or the matter may be left to the discretion of the District Judge who may divide the work either according to territorial limits or according to the magnitude or class of cases as he may think fit. In either case there is, but one Court of the Subordinate Judge though two or more individuals may exercise the jurisdiction of that Court within the District. Suits are not instituted "in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge," but in the Court of the Subordinate Judge the question of the individual before whom the case is ultimately heard depending upon the orders which may be passed in pursuance of sub-ss. (1) and (2), s. 13 above quoted. Section 17 (1) has no application at all. The case is not one in which "a Civil Court under this Act" has ceased to have jurisdiction with respect to any case. Moreover, sub-s. (2) expressly states that nothing in the section applies to cases for which provision is made by s. 37, Civil Procedure Code, and by para. (2), s. 37, the words "Court which passed the decree" are to include the Court which would have jurisdiction to try the suit if it were instituted at the time of making the application for execution. That section, however, though including such Court does not exclude the Court wherein the decree was passed.

In my opinion, the effect of the Notifications issued under the Act was not to transfer the jurisdiction of the Court sitting at Purulia to the Court sitting at Dhanbad, but to divide between two individuals the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge in the District of Manbhum and in this case the suit was begun in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Manbhum. It is true that at that time the business of the Court was transacted at Purulia and the Subordinate Judge stayed there, but it was open to the Government to fix the holding of the Court for the District of Manbhum at any convenient place. The suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum sitting at Purulia and the decree was passed by that Court. The mere fact that for administrative purposes the Court of the Subordinate Judge is now divided between the Subordinate Judge and an Additional Subordinate Judge and that a certain class of business or an area has been allotted to the Additional Subordinate Judge does not make the Court of the Subordinate Judge sitting at Purulia any the less the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum, nor does it prevent it from executing the decree. If as between two or more Subordinate Judge's Courts within a District the identity of any particular Court had to be fixed by territorial limits the identity of the Court might easily change from time to time and applicants for execution would have an intolerable burden thrown upon them in finding the Court for execution of their decrees. In the case of Seeni Nandan v. Muthusamy Pillai (1), at p. 830* Chief Justice Sir John Wallis said:

"The question really is, whether a litigant who has been authorized to bring his suit in a particular Court and has obtained a decree in such Court in his favour, which he is strictly bound to execute within the time limited in Art. 182, is not entitled to apply as of course to that Court as the proper Court for the purpose of saving limitation under the Article, or whether, when he decides to apply for execution, possibly at the last moment, he is bound to stop and inquire whether the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree have been altered, and if so, whether the immovable property which is the subject of the suit or the place where the cause of action arose was within the limits of the transferred area on pain of losing his right to execute under the article if he omits to make these inquiries or comes to a wrong conclusion when he makes them This last proposition is so unreasonable and involves such hardships to the decree-holder in a country such as India with a stringent law of limitation that we should hesitate to impute such an intention to the legislature if we can possibly avoid it."

If it had been the fact that the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum, sitting at Purulia neither at the time of the suit nor at the time of the application for execution had jurisdiction over the property against which execution was asked, it is clear that the application would have been bad: see Prem Chand Dey v. Mokhoda Debi (2). That is not the case. Both at the time of the suit and at the time of the application for execution the Court at Purulia had jurisdiction over the property now sought to be sold. But the decree-holders had always and still have the right to apply, as of course to the Court which passed the decree for its execution even if it be in respect of property outside the territorial jurisdiction of such Court and even if execution by such Court can be no more than execution by transmission to another Court. Such an application can be entertained by such a Court and if made within time would save limitation; see Sreenath Chakrawarti v. Priyanath Bandopadhya (3). Here the execution case was instituted in the proper Court and there is no force in the contention of the appellants on this point.

A further point urged by the appellants related to the question as to whether the decree of the Privy Council covered interest on the costs of the High Court and those of the trial Court in view of the fact that the judgment of their Lordships contains no reference to such interest. But the decree of the Privy Council affirms the judgment of the High Court which admittedly would have carried such interest. The learned Subordinate Judge thought that the lack of specific mention of interest in the Privy Council decree would eliminate such interest from the amount sought to be raised by execution. It was not seriously argued that his view could be supported on this point.

There is also a cross-appeal by the decree-holders against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge refusing to allow interest on the costs awarded by the Privy Council. In this matter it is clear that the Subordinate Judge was right and the learned Advocate for the decree-holders admitted that he could not seriously support the appeal. It has long been held that the costs of the Privy Council do not carry interest unless such interest is specifically mentioned. In the result I would, save in the matter of the interest on the High Court and trial Court costs, dismiss the appeals both of the judgment-debtors and the decree-holders. There will be no order as to costs.

Religious endowment—Bona fide endowment—Test—Trust—When effective—Communication to cestui que trust.

One test of a bona fide or a nominal endowment is to see how did the founder treat this property, or how have descendants treated it and has the income of the endowed lands been continually applied to the object of dedication. [p. 774, col. 1]

The general rule is that a trust to be effective must be communicated to the cestui que trust or that he should at least know about it. The question as to whether there has been an irrevocable trust or not must be a question of fact in almost every case.

Where a certain fund is set apart in the books for the purpose of charity and it is so continued for 60 years but there is no evidence that the owners of the fund intended to part with the ownership and control of it, and its existence was never communicated to the general trustees of the temple and there is no document creating the trust except the entry in account book and this fund is treated as an asset in partition, no irrevocable trust fund is created.

O. S. A. from judgments of Stone, J., dated September 26, 1933.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri for Mr. V. Varadaraja Mudaliar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Moresly and Thomas and S. Subramaniam, for the Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

Beasley, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Stone, J., and is a matter arising out of the insolvency of a firm known as the Ar. Ar. Sm. Firm. There are two insolvents, namely, Arunchalam Chettiar and Sundaresan Chettiar, sons of Ar. Ar. Sm. Somasundaram Chettiar (deceased). The petitioner is the brother's son of Ar. Ar. Sm. Somasundaram Chettiar. In his petition in the Insolvency Court he asked for a direction that the Official Assignee should pay him out of the assets of the insolvents the sum of Rs. 19,481-7-2 alleging that that sum was due to a charity being the principal and interest of half of a trust fund. The question before our learned brother was whether there had in fact been an irrevocable trust created in favour of a charity of which the amount claimed by the petitioner was half.

The petitioner's case is that for the purpose of conducting Uchikala Kattalai in Sri Nataraja temple in Chidambaram Rm. Ar. Ar. Arunachalam Chettiar, the father of Ar. Ar. Sm. Somasundaram Chettiar (deceased) and the grandfather of the petitioner founded and established a Kattalai and set apart certain sums of money as a permanent endowment thereof constituting himself as the trustee on behalf of his family. He invested the money in the family business in accordance with the custom prevailing among the Nattukottai Chetties to carry interest at the Madras Nadapu rate with yearly rests. It is alleged that he managed the trust fund during his lieftime maintaining distinct accounts headed with the name of the charity and that the fund accumulated by accrual of interest from time to time. After his death in 1901 a partition was effected between the petitioner and Ar. Ar. Sm. Somasundram Chettiar on April 18, 1901, and it was then agreed and arranged that the several family trusts should be continued and for the purpose of administration should be divided and held in two equal shares, one share being under the control and management of the petitioner and the other under the control and management of Somasundaram Chettiar, the amounts carrying interest at the same rate as before.

The trust fund as then shown in the account books was divided and half of it, namely, Rs. 3,016-9-8, was received by Somasundaram Chettiar and the other half was received by the petitioner. Somasundaram Chettiar invested his half share of the fund in the business he was carrying on on behalf of his branch of the family and kept distinct accounts in respect of it under the name and heading of the said charity. Somasundaram Chettiar died in 1923 and then his sons, the insolvents, took possession of the estate and assumed the control and management of the fund, it is alleged, with full knowledge that it was to be applied for the specific charitable purpose already mentioned, and it was held by them in a fiduciary capacity and as trustees thereof. The insolvents were adjudicated on July 16, 1925, and the Official Assignee, respondent No. 1 here, took possession of all the property including the assets of the business in which the alleged trust fund had been invested.

The origin of the fund is unknown but it is said that it has a continued existence of 60 years. There is no deed of gift and all that there appears to be is an entry in the account books the ledger page being headed with the name of the temple in the following way: "Credit and debit account of Uchikala Kattalai of Chidambaram temple." It is alleged that the object of this trust was to provide for the performance of certain duties in the temple by people who are known as Dikshithars and who received a fee for the performance of those duties. The sums of money so expended from time to time are debited against this account and in the account maintained by the petitioner, interest according to the Madras Nadappu rate is credited to that account. It is contended that these duties have been performed by the Dikshithars, who are persons forming the general trustees of the temple a very large body, continuously, and there being no deed of gift, the petitioner relies upon the following matters in support of his case that the fund was an endowment for the charity, namely, the Uchikala Kattalai of this temple.

They are, (1) that the fund was set apart in the books, (2) that it has continued for 60 years, (3) that an entry is found showing that a stranger to the family contributed Rs. 100 in 1899, (4) that the duties have been continuously performed, (5) that interest was paid for 11 years up to the date of partition and after the partition upto the present time by the petitioner showing that this interest did not belong to the petitioner but to the fund, and (6) that where wrong debits had been made there has been a re-credit. All these matters it is contended on the appellant's behalf show that a trust fund was created. Stone, J., however, held against this contention. The respondents contend that the entry in the account books is nothing more than a credit entry in favour of the temple and rely further on the fact that the existence of the trust was never communicated to the trustees of the temple.

On this point, Taylor v. London and County Banking Co. (1) was relied upon by the appellant. There, one of the two trustees of a settlement received a sum of money belonging to the settlement and without the knowledge of his co-trustee fraudulently applied it to his own use. By entries in his books, under the heading of the trust, he purported to appropriate his own mortgage debt to answer the sum of which he had defrauded the trust estate, but he never communicated the purported appropriation either to his co-trustee or to his cestui que trust all of whom were sui juris. It was held by Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L., JJ., (Rigby, L. J., dissenting), that there had been a good appropriation in favour of the settlement though not communicated by the trustee either to his co-trustee or to his cestui que trust. This is certainly a case where there was no communication to a cestui que trust of an appropriation in favour of trust. But this clearly was an exceptional case and is certainly distinguishable on the ground that there was without question a settlement and one of the trustees had acted fraudulently and in order to cover up his fraud made an appropriation of his own money concealing that fact and the fraud from his co-trustee and the cestuis que trust.

It is very different where a trust is originally started and the beneficiaries of the trust are kept unaware of its existence or of its obligations and this in my view is of serious importance because it bears strongly upon the question of irrevocability of the trust. An uncommunicated trust can much more conveniently be revoked than one of which the beneficiaries are aware and the revocation of which they are likely to oppose. This case was considered in In re Cozens Green v. Brisley (2). There it was held that in all cases where it is alleged that a defaulting trustee has appropriated securities to make good his breaches of trust and a declaration of trust is relied on, the Court must be satisfied that a present irrevocable declaration has been made. The Court refused to accept as evidence of such a declaration of trust pencil entries in private accounts kept by the defaulting trustee never communicated to any one, and which in some cases, appeared to have been altered and stated that the absence of communication in itself raised a strong inference against an intention to make the appropriation irrevocable. Neville, J., in that case was of the opinion that the finding in Taylor v. London and County Banking Co. (1), was not necessary for the decision of the case. In my view, Taylar v. London and County Banking Co. (1) can hardly be relied upon as an authority against the general proposition that a trust must be communicated to its beneficiaries. Another case relied upon by the appellant was Gopal Jew Thakur v. Radha Binode (3), when an extract from a judgment in Ganga Narain v. Brindabun Chunder (4), was quoted with approval, namely :

"One test of a bona fide or a nominal endowment is to see how did the founder treat this property, or how have descendants treated it; has the income of the endowed lands been continually applied to the object of dedication."

Clearly these principles cannot be disputed. Maruti Rama Rao v. Mallapur Shri Gopal Kristna (5) is to the same effect. A passage in a judgment in an income-tax case was also referred to in support of the appellant's case. The case is Aruna Challam Chettiar v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras (6) and the passage reads as follows :

"We are far from saying that it is necessary in order to create a trust that the person in whose favour the trust is created should know about it."

That is an extract from my own judgment and I feel sure that I must be understood to have meant only that there may be some exceptions to the general rule that a trust to be effective must be communicated to the cestui que trust or that he should at least know about it. The question as to whether there has been an irrevocable trust or not, must, in my opinion, be a question of fact in almost every case, and no doubt the facts relied upon by the appellant are strong ones but against them there are put the following matters, namely, that there is no evidence here that the owners of the fund intended to part with the ownership and control of it, that its existence was never communicated to the general trustees of the temple and that on a division the fund appears to have been treated as an asset in the partition. It is further contended that, if it were a trust fund, it could not have been partitioned. Further, there is no evidence about its original deed or document. There is only a ledger entry in 1901 and that does not mention that the sums credited there are held in trust for the temple. There is certainly no recital of a trust in it nor are its objects defined. It is, I think, quite clear that no third party could enforce this trust which seems to be entirely for the benefit of the founders of it and the family and not of strangers and thus there is an absence of charitable object. The general trustees of the temple have not sought to enforce it and its continuance, it seems to me, is purely voluntary. One test in such cases must be what those who are alleged to be obliged to carry out the trust would do in certain eventualities, for instance, when hard pressed for money. What happened in this case? It is perfectly clear that even during the life-time of the father of the insolvents the services which were being performed at the temple were stopped without objection being raised by any person. It is true that when Mani Chetty failed to carry out the objects of the alleged trust the burden was shouldered by another member of the senior branch but there is nothing to show that it was anything more than a voluntary act on the part of the latter. A letter from the petitioner to one of the Dikshathars certainly seems to me to shed some light upon this question. It is Ex. 16. There the appellant asks :

"Is it necessary that Thirupakshi and Pavadai should be conducted on the 27th instant or can it be stopped."

Thirupakshi is one of the offices, the performance of which, according to the appellant, the trust had in view and in this letter he himself makes a suggestion that it should cease. In Ex. X dated January 1, 1922, reference is made to Mani Chetty's difficulties and it is there stated that the expenses of Thirupakshi and Pavadai would be sent as soon as better times come. In Ex. 1 it is stated :

"S. M. A. R. Avergal (1st insolvent) has sent word that Uchikala Kattalai may be stopped"

But there is, to my mind, a still more important matter. Whereas in the accounts of the appellant interest at the Madras Nadappu rate was credited to the temple, in the accounts kept by the insolvents' branch in respect of that half share of the fund no interest at all was credited. That is clearly indicative of the fact that it was not regarded as a fund invested on behalf of the temple. No doubt the appellant has continued to have the offices performed at the temple but care must be taken to distinguish the voluntary acts of charitably-minded people from those who have no option in the matter, and after taking all the circumstances into consideration, I am not satisfied that the appellant was bound to apply the fund for the purposes for which it has been applied particularly having regard to the fact that the other branch of the family ceased to so apply it. The splitting up of the alleged trust into two on a partition seems to me also to be inconsistent with a trust; and the case relied upon by the appellant, namely, Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (7) does not really support the appellant's contention. In that case there was no splitting up of a trust fund. It was the management of the fund which was split up and it was there held that it was competent for co-trustees to settle a scheme of management by each of the co-trustees in rotation; and on appeal to the Privy Council, it was held that such an arrangement was not improper and was not a breach of trust: see Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (8). The decision was considered in Ayiswaryanandaji Saheb v. Shivaji Raja Saheb (9), where Kumaraswami Sastriar, J., points out that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council rested on usage as regards the trusteeship and on p. 146* says:

"I find nothing either in Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (7) or Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (8) which compels us to hold that the office should be treated as partible property that and on partition of the other properties of the family this office should be held by turns," and on p. 141.*

"I do not find anything in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (7), to warrant the rule even in the case of public charities and trusts, the claims of the dividing co-parceners should override the interests of the institution and the observation of their Lordships in Sethuramat swamier v. Meeruswamier (10) rather suggests that the rule laid down as to turns of management on partition applies only to private charities.'

It seems to me to follow that, if the office of a trustee is not partible, then the trust itself must also not be so, and the fact that it was partitioned appears to me to be entirely inconsistent with the existence of a trust. There is a further difficulty indicated by the learned trial Judge and that is that assuming that the trust fund was incapable of being so divided, the result has been that two trusts have been formed, one created by one branch of the family and the other by the insolvents' branch of the family, and as I have pointed out before, dealt with by the latter in a different way, namely, by its discontinuance and non-payment of interest to the trust. How can a trustee of trust A claim to enforce trust B of which he is not a trustee at all? Stone, J., has, in my opinion, correctly answered that he cannot do so. For the reasons I have stated, in my view, this application was rightly dismissed. It follows that this appeal also must be dismissed with costs on same scale as in the trial Court.

O. S. Appeal No. 93 of 1933.—Dismissed with costs.

Butler, J.—O. S. Appeal No. 92 of 1933.—I respectfully concur. There is one aspect of the matter to which I consider it desirable to draw attention. After the division of the alleged trust fund in 1901 the two funds were treated in different manners by the petitioner and the insolvents. The former allowed interest on the amount placed to the credit of the Kattalai, and the latter did not. The amount as per account was then Rs. 3,016 odd with each trustees. The insolvents' accounts now show (Ex. G) a credit balance of Rs. 1,244-2-4 whereas the petitioner's accounts (Ex. A) show a balance of Rs. 24,556-5-0. Thus the fund with the petitioner, after meeting all charges on his share, has increased by eight-fold in less than 30 years, and there is nothing to indicate how the surplus is ever to be employed, and it would seem that the cestuis-que trust would have no right to apply for its application, provided that the service of the Kattalai is properly maintained. The petitioner claims that there should be set apart as trust moneys from out of the assets of the insolvents, not the amount shown to the credit of the Kattalai in the insolvents' accounts, but the amount, which the account should have shown, if it had been treated in the same manner as in petitioner's. This would entail the setting aside of a large fund to the benefit of a trust of an ill-defined nature, the expenses of which on their present scale fail to absorb a large portion of the interest. Supposing, therefore, that interest should have been allowed on the fund, the result would have been that an ever smaller proportion of the amount at credit would be paid towards the Kattalai, while the balance, which could be continually increasing would stand to the credit of the alleged trust in the accounts, but in effect would be employed by the "trustee" in his own business for his personal benefit. The conduct both of Mani Chetty and of the present insolvents shows that when the business gets into difficulty, the so-called trust fund is drawn on to make good the losses incurred in trade, and the trust was treated as being of a revocable nature. I would, therefore, hold that the trust is both indefinite in character and of a revocable nature, and fails to comply with the requirements of a valid trust. I, therefore, agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XL, r. 1—Receiver during pendency of mortgage suit — Sums realized by him from mortgaged property, whether form part of mortgaged property—Receiver, when can be appointed—Deed—Construction — Mortgage—Held on interpretation, that Receiver appointed during pendency of mortgage suit held rents collected, as part of mortgage security—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 8.

The nature of the office of a Receiver is simply this: that he is an impartial person appointed by the Court to collect and receive, pending the proceedings, the rents, issues and profits of land or personal estate or other things in question which it does not seem reasonable to the Court that either party should collect or receive. The object sought by the appointment of a Receiver is the safeguarding of property for the benefit of those entitled to it. His possession is on behalf and for the benefit of all the parties to the suit in which he is appointed, and is the possession of all the said parties according to their titles. Th property in his hands is in custodia legis for the person who can make a title to it. The title of the real owner is in no way affected either in theory or on principle by his appointment. He collects and receives the rents, issues and profits not upon his own title but upon the title of some persons, parties to the action The appointment of a Receiver by the Court under O XL, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, in no way diminishes or enlarges the title to the property which comes into his possession so far as the person otherwise entitled to it is concerned. It follows therefore, that the sums of money in the hands of the Receiver are not sums payable to the mortgagor, but form part of the mortgaged property upon which the debt due to the mortgage was secured. Rameshwar Singh v. Chun Lal Shaha (10) and Venkata Kumara Mahipathi Surya Rao v. Gokuldoss Goverdhandas (11), dissented from. *Eastern Mortgage & Agency Co. A mortgage deed provided that the property mentioned therein was mortgaged with "all appurtenances to the said premises belonging and all the estate, right, title, interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever of the mortgagors into and upon the said premises to hold the said premises unto the mortgagees subject to the proviso for redemption hereinafter contained :"

Held, that the mortgage was in the form of an English mortgage and that the mortgagee was entitled as a secured creditor of the mortgagor to the rents and profits of the land of which the Receiver was in possession.

Held, also that even if no reference had been made specifically to the transfer of "all the estate, right, title, interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever of the mortgagors into and upon the said premises" by reason of the provisions of s. 8, Transfer of Property Act, in the like manner the rents and profits arising out of the mortgaged land in the hands of the Receiver would form part of the mortgage which was created to secure re-payment of the loan. Ashgar Reza v. Mohamad Mehdi Hussain (5) and Chandra Gajapati v. Narayan Deh (6), relied on.

C. Mis. A. from an order of the High Court, in C. R. S. No. 141 of 1931.

Facts.—Plaintiff obtained a mortgage-decree against the defendants-mortgagors. At the instance of the mortgagees, the Court appointed a Receiver during the pendency of the suit. The Receiver held moneys collected by him as rents.

The Collector of Rangoon claimed Rs. 1,029 being the amount of forfeiture imposed under s. 19 (g), Court Fees Act, from the defendants, and applied to the Court for payment of the same out of the rents held by the Receiver.

Mr. Hormasji, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Eggar, for the Crown.

Page, C. J.—This appeal must be allowed. The plaintiff in a mortgage-suit obtained a decree against the defendant. Pending the determination of the suit a Receiver was appointed by the Court on May 18, 1931, "to take possession of the suit property" with the exception of a small strip of land. Now, what is the nature of the possession of a Receiver so appointed?

"The nature of the office of Receiver is simply this: that he is an impartial person appointed by the Court to collect and receive, pending the proceedings, the rents, issues and profits of land or personal estate or other things in question which it does not seem reasonable to the Court that either party should collect or receive. The object sought by the appointment of a Receiver is the safeguarding of property for the benefit of those entitled to it. His possession is on behalf and for the benefit of all the parties to the suit in which he is appointed, and is the possession of all the said parties according to their titles. The property in his hands is in custodia legis for the person who can make a title to it. The title of the real owner is in no way affected either in theory or on principle by his appointment. He collects and receives the rents, issues and profits not upon his own title but upon the title of some persons, parties to the action;"

[per Mukerji, J., in Eastern Mortgage & Agency Co., Ltd. v. Muhammad Fuzlul Karim (1) and Maung Ohn Tin v. P. R. M. P. S. R. M. Chettyar Firm (2).]

The question in the present case is with respect to who is entitled to the rents and profits which were collected by the Receiver. At one time the Court felt some diffidence in appointing a Receiver at all in a mortgage-suit, but both in England and in India the propriety of appointing a Receiver in a suitable case cannot now be challenged. Jaikissondas Gangadas v. Zenabai (3) and Pratchett v. Drew (4). In the petition of the Collector of Rangoon the petitioner states that he:

"is desirous of having an order passed directing the Official Receiver to pay to your petitioner the said sums (i. e., sums due to Government) as a first charge on such of the rents collected by him as may be payable to the defendant."

The question therefore is:

"are the sums in the hands of the Receiver representing the rents and profits of the land which was subject to the mortgage payable to the defendant, i. e., the mortgagor."

In my opinion they are not. Under the terms of the mortgage in suit which is dated January 3, 1928, it is inter alia provided that:

in pursuance of the said agreement and in consideration of the sum of Rupees thirty thousand (Rs 30,000) paid by the mortgagees to the mortgagors on or before the execution of these presents (the receipt whereof the mortgagors hereby acknowledge) the mortgagors hereby convey unto the mortgagees all that piece or parcel of garden land situate in Kwin No. 78, Thayetken Circle, Rangoon Town District, and known as Holding No. 1 of 1926-27 and measuring acres 10-15 or thereabouts (formerly known as Holding No. 11 of 1916-17 in Kyetshazun Kwin Mingaladon Circle Insein Township) together with the buildings and structures thereon and bounded on the North by Cart Track, on the East by Prome Road; on the South by land of U Nun Han and others and Ywathet Village and on the West by Insein Road and all appurtenances to the said premises belonging and all the estate, right, title, interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever of the mortgagors into and upon the said premises to hold the said premises unto the mortgagees subject to the proviso for redemption hereinafter contained."

This mortgage is in the form of an English mortgage, and in my opinion under the terms thereof the rents and profits arising out of the land subject to the mortgage form part of the property subject to the mortgage upon which repayment of the mortgage-debt is secured as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. In my opinion under the express terms of the deed of mortgage the mortgagee was entitled as a secured creditor of the judgment-debtor to the rents and profits of the land of which the Receiver was in possession. As at present advised I am further of opinion that even if no reference had been made specifically to the transfer of:

"all the estate, right, title, interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever of the mortgagors into and upon the said premises"

by reason of the provisions of s. 8, Transfer of Property Act, in the like manner the rents and profits arising out of the mortgaged land in the hands of the Receiver would form part of the mortgage which was created to secure repayment of the loan. Ashgar Reza v. Muhammad Mehdi Hussain (5), Chandra Gajapati Narain Deb v. Makunda Deb (6), Bank of Upper India v. Administrator-General of Bengal (7) and Tilok Chand Surana v. *J. either to English statutes or English authorities, in my opinion the view which I have expressed is in consonance with the rule obtaining in English Law: for in Wilson v. Wilson (9) at page 40*, I find Malins, V. C., observing:

"We know perfectly well that a mortgagee of land has a right, from the very day of his mortgage, to receive the rents. We also know that if he does not choose to enter into possession or give notice to the tenants, but regards his security as sufficient and allows the mortgagor to receive the rents, those rents can never be recovered back again as rents."

Now, that means, I apprehend, not that the mortgagee has not a legal title to the rents as forming part of his security, but that if he allows the mortgagor in possession to receive the rents he may be precluded from recovering those rents from the mortgagor in the particular circumstances of the case.

I desire further to state, with all due deference, that as at present advised I am not satisfied that the ratio decidendi of Rameshwar Singh v. Chun Lal Shaha (10) and Venkatakumara Mahipathi Surya Rao v. Gokuldoss Goverdhandoss (11) was correct, namely, that:

"the possession of a Receiver in a mortgage-suit was prima facie for the benefit of the party who had obtained the appointment. On this principle it has been argued that the Receiver who was appointed at the instance of the first mortgagee holds the property for his benefit alone, and is bound to make over to him the entire income for the satisfaction of his dues. In our opinion this contention is clearly well founded."

With all respect I am disposed to think that the appointment of a Receiver by the Court under O. XL, r. 1, in no way diminishes or enlarges the title to the property which comes into his possession so far as the person otherwise entitled to it is concerned. It follows, therefore, that the sums of money in the hands of the Receiver are not sums payable to the mortgagor, but form part of the mortgaged-property upon which the debt due to the mortgagee was secured. In these circumstances, in my opinion, the Crown is not entitled to claim to be paid this sum in priority to the party entitled to it, namely, the mortgagee-decree-holder. The appeal must be allowed, the order of Leach, J., set aside, and the application dismissed with costs five gold mohurs in each Court.

GYANIRAM PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Contract—Sale—Breach by buyer—Vendor, if can keep it alive for recovering heavier damages—Measure of damages—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Finding as to who broke the contract, if can be challenged in second appeal—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 55, 82, 107, 93, 94—Mercantile contract—Presumption that time is essence, whether arises—Goods neither ascertained nor appropriated—Sale, if complete—Right of re-sale—Delivery to be given at godown of seller—Telegraphic notice by buyer, whether adequate application for delivery.

In a contract to sell and buy it is open to the seller to avoid the contract when the buyer fails to take delivery but he cannot elect to keep alive the broken contract in the hope that he might recover heavier damages for the breach of the contract than he would be entitled to recover at the time of the breach of the contract. In such cases the measure of damages is the difference between the contract rate and the market rate at the expiry of the period agreed upon as the time for delivery in the contract; it is, however, open to the parties to agree that the time for performing the contract of sale should be postponed. In such circumstances, the damages for non-delivery or non-acceptance of the goods will be calculated at the market price of such goods on the last day to which the contract was extended if a date was fixed, or at the date when the plaintiff refused to grant further indulgence, or at a reasonable period after his last grant of an indulgence. Mutthaya Maniagaram v. Lekku Reddiar (1), referred to, Coorla Mills v. Vallabhdas (2), relied on.

In a contract to sell and to buy, a finding by the lower Appellate Court as to who broke the contract is a finding of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal

There is no place in mercantile contracts for the presumption that time is not of the essence of contract.

Where the goods are never ascertained or appropriated, the property in the goods does not pass from the seller to the buyer, and so there is no question of re-sale. Even if the seller has power to re-sell under s. 107, Contract Act, he has no right to re-sell without notice to the buyer. Angullia & Co. v. Sassoon & Co (3)and *Narainda*s v. Kunjilal (4), referred to. [p. 780, col. 2.]

Under ss. 93 and 94 of the Contract Act, the seller is not bound to deliver goods until the buyer applies for delivery, and delivery is to be given at the place at which goods were at the time of the contract for sale. A telegraphic notice is not an adequate application for delivery of goods. The buyer is bound to send some one to take delivery at a place where the goods are and until that is done the seller is not bound to make delivery. [p. 781, col. 2.]

S. C. A. against the decree of the District Judge, Raipur, in Civil Appeal No. 26 of 1933, dated July 31, 1933, arising out of Civil Suit No. 107 of 1931, in the Court of the Second Sub-Judge, Second Class, Raipur, dated February 13, 1933.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellants.

R. B. M. R. Kinkhede and Mr. R. M. Bhagade, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This judgment will also dispose of Second Appeal No. 337 of 1933.

It is common ground that the parties through their agents, entered into a contract for the sale of urad at the rate of 1 katha 10 pohas per rupee, not at Re. 1-10-0 per katha as stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The buyer never paid the price or took delivery, and eventually each party sued the other for damages for breach of contract. Each suit was decided in favour of the buyer in the Court of first instance and in favour of the seller in the Court of the District Judge, who awarded the seller as damages the difference between the contract price and the price obtained by re-sale.

According to the plaint in the suit filed by the seller, the buyer offered on December 4, 1928, to buy urad stocked in the Seller's godown at Raipur at the above rate, and this offer was accepted on the same day, the buyer agreeing to purchase urad about 300 bags and promising to have the goods measured on the next day, December 5. To this the buyer replied that he had contracted to buy 300 bags of urad and this allegation was not contradicted in the pleadings. It was assumed in the issues that the contract was for the purchase of 300 bags of urad and thereafter it was never suggested that the contract was for the purchase of the entire stock of urad, which admittedly was 303 bags 7 kathas. As the Indian Sale of Goods Act was not then in force, the case is governed by the Indian Contract Act, and it is clear from s. 82 and the illustration thereto that the goods were not ascertained at the time of making the contract of sale and that, therefore, the sale was not complete, nor was there any subsequent appropriation to complete the sale under s. 83.

According to the seller's pleadings, the contract was made on December 4, and delivery was to be made on the 5th. On the 6th the seller was informed that the buyer had refused to take delivery on the 5th, so the seller went to Raipur and saw the buyer's munim on the 8th and the munim stated that he would certainly take the goods; but in spite of this the buyer took no steps to take delivery up to December 12, when the seller again spoke to the buyer's munim who promised to take delivery in a day or two. The seller then left Raipur and was informed by a letter on the 14th that the buyer's munim had declined to take the goods on the ground that they were old stock. The seller again returned to Raipur and made further attempts to get the buyer to take delivery, but finally on the 19th the buyer's munim declined to keep the contract. The buyer alleged that the contract was made on December 6, that no specific date for delivery was fixed, that in spite of demands the seller continually postponed giving delivery and that ultimately the buyer sent to the seller a telegraphic notice on December 15, demanding delivery within 24 hours. It is now conceded that the contract was made on December 4, as alleged by the seller, and the learned District Judge has accepted the story given by the seller that the buyer broke the contract, a finding, of fact that cannot now be challenged in second appeal.

The learned District Judge, however, has given no finding when the contract was broken. The seller in his plaint stated that the cause of action arose on December 19, when the defendants made a "final breach." Subsequently in his pleadings, however, he stated:

"The breach took place on December 5 or 6, 1928, and the conduct of the plaintiff in making endeavours with defendants to keep up the contract did not prolong the breach to December 19, 1928, so as to make the rate on December 19, 1928, as the basis of calculation of damages. Plaintiff does not know the rate of urad on December 19, 1928. On December 5, 1928, the rate of urad was at 1 katha 10 pohas per rupee. The plaintiff is entitled to get damages according to rate on December 19, 1928."

From this it is difficult to make out what the plaintiff's case actually was and possibly the word "not" has been omitted from the last sentence in the pleadings quoted above.

According to the plaintiff, then, the contract was to be performed on December 5. It is well settled that there is no place in mercantile contracts for the presumption that time is not of the essence of contract see Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract, 6th Edition, p. 334; nor was there any pleading in this case to that effect. Under s. 55, of the Indian Contract Act:

"When a party to a contract promises to do a certain thing at or before specified time, and fails to do any such thing at or before the specified time, the contract, or so much of it as has not been performed, becomes voidable at the option of the promisee, if the intention of the parties was that time should be of the essence of the contract."

It was, therefore, open to the seller to avoid the contract when the buyer failed to take delivery on December 5, but he could not elect to keep alive the broken contract in the hopes that he might recover heavier damages for the breach of the contract than he would be entitled to recover at the time of the breach of the contract. In such cases the measure of damages is the difference between the contract rate and the market rate at the expiry of the period agreed upon as the time for delivery in the contract: See Mutthaya Maniagaran v. Lekku Reddiar (1).

It was, however, open to the parties to agree that the time for performing the contract of sale should be postponed. In such circumstances, the principle on which the damages must be calculated is stated, as follows, by Mayne on Damages, cited with approvel in Coorla Mills v. Vallabhadas (2):—

" Where the time for performing a contract of sale has been postponed, at the request either of vendor or purchaser, and the contract is ultimately broken, this has the effect of deferring the period at which the breach takes place, and, therefore, alters the date with reference to which the damages are to be calculated. The old contract continues, but the date of the breach is shifted. The damages for non-delivery or non-acceptance of the goods will be calculated at the market price of such goods on the last day to which the contract was extended if a date was fixed, or at the date when the plaintiff refused to grant further indulgence, or at a reasonable period after his last grant of an indulgence."

On the February 22, 1929, the seller sold 151 bags of urad of which the buyer failed to take delivery, and on various dates in December 1929 and January 1930 he sold the remaining 144 bags 5 kathas, the other 8 bags, and 2 kathas having disappeared into dust. The learned District Judge awarded him as damages the difference between the contract price and the price realised by these sales. The seller had no right of re-sale by the terms of cantract and such a right, if it existed at all, existed under s. 107, of the Indian Contract Act. I have pointed out above that the goods were never ascertained or appropriated, and, therefore, the property in the goods had not passed from the seller to the buyer, and so there was no question of re-sale. In discussing the construction of this section, Jenkins, C. J., in Angullia & Co. v. Sassoon & Co. (3), stated :

" What then is the scope of this power of re-sale ? The goods would have come within its operation if they had been ascertained, or even if they had been appropriated for the purpose of the agreement. But in my opinion it would be going beyond the true meaning of the words to extend the operation of the clause to goods which had not even been appropriated, and thus had in no sense become the subject-matter of the contract."

Even if the seller had power to re-sell under s. 107, he had no right to re-sell without notice to the buyer, and it is admitted that no notice was given. There was, therefore, no lawful exercise of the power of re-sale: See Naraindas v. Kunjilal (4).

The damages to which the seller is entitled, are the difference between the contract rate and the rate prevailing on the date on which the breach of contract occurred. It seems to be the seller's case that the breach of contract occurred on December 5, but it has been argued on his behalf that the breach occurred on the 19th. It is admitted that the rate prevailing on December 5, was the same as prevailed on the previous date when the contract was made, and there is no evidence to show what was the rate on the 19th. It is for the plaintiff to plead and prove the facts on which he relies to show the quantum of damages. As he has failed to prove the facts which would entitle him to damages, his claim for damages must fail. It was stated in the judgment of the learned District Judge that there was no argument before him as to the actual sum in either suit, but this seems to me merely to mean that the contract rate and the prices realised by the subsequent sales were admitted. I do not think that it can be said there was an admission that the seller was entitled to the difference between the contract price and the price obtained by the subsequent sales.

I have stated above that the lower Appellate Court's finding that the buyer had broken the contract has now to be accepted. It is suggested that the lower Appellate Court has ignored the fact that the goods in question were pledged with the Imperial Bank and were not released until December 10, and that the buyer sent to the seller a telegraphic notice on December 15, demanding delivery within 24 hours. Under ss. 93 and 94 of the Indian Contract Act the seller is not bound to deliver goods until the buyer applies for delivery, and delivery was to be given at the place at which goods were at the time of the contract for sale, i. e. the godown. A telegraphic notice is not an adequate application for delivery of goods. The buyer was bound to send some one to take delivery at the godown, and until that was done, the seller was not bound to make delivery. There is no reason to suppose that the seller could not have redeemed the goods earlier, if an application for delivery had been made.

The result is that the appeal in the suit brought by the seller is allowed, and the appeal in the suit brought by the buyer is dismissed, i. e. both suits stand dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Stridhan—Property purchased from income of property settled upon widow in lieu of maintenance—Whether stridhana—Right of alienation.

Property purchased by a Hindu widow from the income of property settled upon her in lieu of her maintenance becomes her stridhan and she is competent to transfer it

[Case-law discussed.]

S. C. A. against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated February 10, 1933, confirming that of the Munsif, Fyzabad, dated January 23, 1932.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mahabir Prasad, for the Respondent.

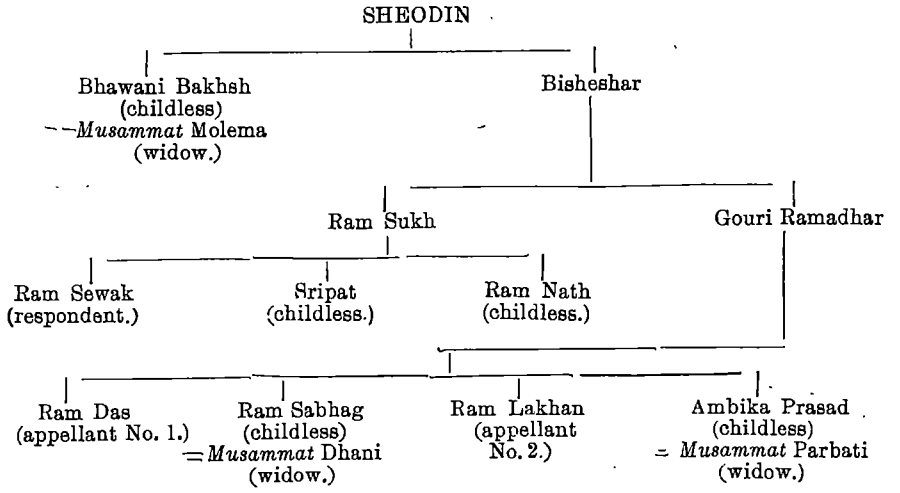
Judgment.—These two appeals were filed by Ram Das and Ram Lakhan against Ram Sewak, respondent, in two cross-suits that were instituted by the parties against each other in respect of property left by Musammat Molema. The following pedigree will show the relationship existing between the parties—



The admitted facts are that Bhawani Bakhsh, husband of Musammat Molema, died about forty years ago. It has been found by the Courts below that he died in a state of jointness with his brother and nephews and this finding is not challenged in the appeals. It is also an admitted fact that out of the family property, 19 bighas 10 biswas of land in village Dasauli was made over to Musammat Molema in 1899 in lieu of her maintenance by Ram Adhar, father of the appellants and Ram Sewak, respondent. It is also not disputed that Musammat Molema made the following purchases—

(1) 1 bigha 7 biswas of land in village Dasauli in 1901.

(2) 5 bighas 12 biswas of land in village Usru in 1902, and

(3) 3 bighas 11 biswas in village Usru by pre-emption jointly with Ram Nath, brother of the respondent.

It will thus be seen that Musammat Molema was purchaser of 9 bighas 3 biswas of land in village Usru and of 1 bigha 7 biswas in Dasauli. The former property was the subject of a suit brought by the present appellants against Ram Sewak, respondant, while the latter sued for possession of 1 bigha 7 biswas in village Dasauli.

The case for the appellants was that the properties mentioned above were purchased by Musammat Molema from the income arising from her husband's property. Ram Sewak on the other hand pleaded that they were purchased by her from her personal funds and were her stridhan property. He also set up a will of all these properties executed in his favour by Musammat Molema.

Both the lower Courts have upheld the case set up by Ram Sewak, respondent, and decreed his suit in respect of the Dasauli property and dismissed the appellants' suit in respect of the Usru property. Hence these appeals by Ram Das and Ram Lakhan in both the cases.

The appellants in their grounds of appeal challenged the lower Courts' finding about the alleged will of Musammat Molema but gave up that plea at the time of arguments. In fact, the finding being a finding of fact and based on admissible evidence could not be challenged in second appeal. The only question therefore that remains is whether the properties in question in both the cases were accretions to the property of Musammat Molema's husband or whether they constituted her stridhan property.

The learned Advocate for the appellants has relied on the following cases Nabakishore Mandal v. Upendrakishore Mandal (1), Bharose Shukul v. Manbasi Koer (2), Srimati Charusila Dasi v. Srimati Mrinalini Dasi, 64 Ind. Cas. 531 (3), Isridat Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (4) and Sheolochun Singh v. Saheb Singh (5).

In all these cases it has been more or less held that when a Hindu widow makes purchases of property from the income of her husband's estate, the presumption is that she intended that they should be regarded as accretions to the husband's estate and not as a separate estate descendible in a different line of succession; but in the present case Musammat Molema was not in possession of any property of her husband as a Hindu widow. According to the case for the respondent the purchases were made by Musammat Molema out of funds that she received from her father, but even if it be taken for granted that they were made out of the income of the property that was put in her possession in lieu of her maintenance the purchased property would be her stridhan property. In the case of Krishna Kumari Devi v. Rajendra Bahadur Sinha Deo (6), it was held that if a certain property is purchased by a Hindu widow out of the savings from the income of her husband's property, it is presumed to belong to the estate but that this presumption cannot be extended to the case of property held by a Hindu female not as a Hindu widow's estate but as a life estate under a will or deed inter vivos. It was further held that if the property which had been obtained by a widow under a bequest from her husband is a property to which she would not be entitled as heir to her husband, the savings from the income of such property and everything purchased out of such savings would belong to herself and would constitute her stridhan. In the case of Bhagbutti Devi v. Bholanath Thakoor (7) in which a Hindu widow was given an estate for life, with power to appropriate the profits, it was held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that whatever property, real, or personal, was bought by the widow out of the proceeds of her husband's estate, belonged to her. This case was referred to later in the case of Isridut Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (4) relied on by the learned Advocate for the appellant and their Lordships distinguished it by saying that in that case it was held

"that the widow held the husband's estate not in her capacity of widow but as taken of a life interest after a settlement."

(7) 2 I A 256; 1 C 104; 24 W R 168; 3 Sar. P C J 528; 3 Suth. P C 186 (P C).

It is thus clear that even granting that Musammat Molema purchased the properties in question from the income of the property, small as it was, which was settled upon her in lieu of her maintenance the properties became her stridhan and she was competent to transfer them by law.

The conclusion arrived at by the Courts below in both cases was correct and I dismiss these appeals with costs.

S. V. NALLAPERUMAL PILLAI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Partnership—Partner taking partnership property to himself and crediting some price of his own fixing in favour of partnership—Other partner, if bound by such valuation—If he can compel former to take such property at proper price found by Court—Accounts—Day book—Lump sum debited after several months—If a day book—Value to be attached—Uncertain and indefinite accounts—Value of—Interest—Interest charged at end of each year after deducting counter-interest—Each party charging interest on overdrawings of the other—Compound interest, if to be allowed.

If a partner takes the partnership property and credits in favour of the partnership some price of his own fixing, i. e, behind the back of the other partner, the other partner is not bound by such valuation and if he questions the valuation, the Court is entitled to scrutinise it. If his price is not found to be the proper price by the Court, his taking over might be set aside, but he cannot be compelled to purchase them at the price found by the Court to be the proper price. The only result of setting aside his taking over of the property would be that his so-called one-sided purchase is simply set aside and the property remains as partnership property. Muthiah Chetty v. Veerappa Chetty (1), explained and English case-law considered. [p. 785, col. 2.]

The very object of accounts being kept, especially of day books, is the value that is to be attached to the entries made as each event happened. It is on the likelihood of such entries being made that the value of accounts depends But if an argument is advanced that though a drawing is made from the partnership account, it is not debited in the day-book at the time when it is drawn but only a lump sum is debited several months afterwards, it is not a proper day book; it ceases to be such an account book to which Courts are accustomed to attach value. [p. 789, cols. 1 & 2.]

The party who relies upon uncertain and indefinite accounts and accounts which on the face of the argument do not represent the actual transaction that took place must fail. [p. 789, col. 2.]

Where the accounts themselves showed that whenever accounts were settled at the end of each year the parties have charged interest on the overdrawings of each partner, and at the various stages of the case each side was insisting upon the payment of counter-interest on the footing that he was going to recover some amount :

Held, that in these circumstances the plaintiff was entitled to compound interest on the principal charged. [p. 790 col. 1.]

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Iyengar and V. Ratnam, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. Varadachariar and K. V. Sesha Ayyangar, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—These two appeals are appeals against the preliminary and final decrees in Original Suit No. 53 of 1925, on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Tuticorin. In both the appeals defendant No. 2 is the appellant. The suit was filed for the winding up of a partnership and for taking its accounts and for the recovery of such amount as may be found due to the plaintiff. The plaintiff estimates that the amount due to him would be approximately Rs. 22,000. It will now be convenient to state the history of the partnership whose winding up is sought. The plaintiff's father, defendant No. 2's husband and a third person originally carried on a partnership under the style of S. V. from the year 1904. The plaintiff's father died in the year 1905 and the third person retired from the business in the year 1911. So legally a new partnership consisting of the plaintiff and defendant No. 2's husband (Kailasam Pillai), began to work from the year 1911. The business of the partnership consisted of the manufacture of salt under licenses issued by the Government and under the rules of the Salt Department. In the year 1918 it was agreed that the capital of the partnership should be two lakhs of which the plaintiff contributed three-fourths, i. e., lakh and fifty and Kailasam Pillai contributed the remaining one-fourth. As a matter of fact this capital was contributed from out of the profits of the prior business. The capital itself was to bear no interest but interest at 1 per cent was to be charged on the drawings by the partners and on the sum standing to their credit.

The partnership possessed 1327 salt pans in Levynjipuram extension factory bearing licenses Nos. 102 and 155. Besides these there were also another set of 11 salt pans which were purchased in auction in the name of Kailasam Pillai. There was some dispute about the ownership of these salt pans at one time in the lower Court, but now they are also admitted to be the property of the partnership. Kailasam Pillai died on June 27, 1922. At the time of his death he had made considerable overdrawings from the partnership funds. There is no dispute about the amount of his overdrawings. [illegible] February 1922, this amount was Rs. [illegible]. There was also a sum due from h[illegible]der another account called market acc[illegible]. The account of the transactions between the firm and Kailasam Pillai has been filed as an annexure to the plaint. It appears that there was a large stock of salt belonging to the partnership remaining to be sold and this amounted to 6,83,000 maunds. In para. 11 of the plaint the plaintiff alleges that on January 28, 1923, he fixed a reasonable price for the aforesaid salt heaps and took them to his own account. He also took to his own account some of the outstandings due to the partnership and also the salt pans. He also took over the lands, houses, gardens and other immovable properties belonging to the partnership at a certain price. The plaintiff states that so far as the salt is concerned, he took it over for such price as he considered reasonable according to the then market and with reference to the superior or inferior quality of the goods. The salt consisted of several varieties and also of the stock of several years, i. e., some portion of it was old and belonged to the stock of prior years.

On the footing that the defendant raised no objection to this taking over of the properties of the partnership it was found that a sum of Rs. 25,506-6-4 was still due to the plaintiff from the deceased Kailasam Pillai on January 28, 1923. Afterwards the parties got a rebate from the Government of duty, to defendant No. 2's share which amounted to Rs. 4,075. Deducting this amount, at the time of the suit a sum of Rs. 21,431-6-4 would still be due according to the plaintiff from defendant No. 2 the widow of Kailasam Pillai. Defendant No. 1 is a brother of Kailasam Pillai. At one time he claimed all the properties left by the deceased Kailasam Pillai to be joint family properties and there was litigation between him and the widow (defendant No. 2). It is said on behalf of defendant No. 2 that the plaintiff set him up and helped him in that litigation. But it is unnecessary to determine whether this is correct or not. On the ground that there was a rival claimant to the estate of Kailasam Pillai his brother was impleaded as defendant No. 1, but now that it is decided in the other litigation that defendant No. 2 is the sole heir to Kailasam Pillai, he has no further interest in the suit and he is not a party in the appeal. In para. 13 of the plaint the plaintiff alleges that besides the sum due from defendant No. 2 there are a number of other outstandings due to the partnership. These amount to about Rs. 37,600 On the plaint it was estimated that probably there would be a loss of Rs. 12,000 in respect of the outstandings and it was expected that the rest would be collected.

Defendant No. 2 pleads that the prices at which the properties of the partnership were taken over were not the proper prices. She contends that much larger sums than those at which the plaintiff took over the properties should be debited against him, and if this is done far from her owing a sum of Rs. 21,000 due by her there would be a large sum of money due to her. She therefore prayed that the suit should be dismissed with costs. It is scarcely necessary to add that the so-called settlement of January 28, 1923, was all made behind the back of defendant No. 2 and though it may ultimately turn out to be fair, defendant No. 2 is entitled to insist that it should be scrutinized. What the rights of the parties exactly are on such scrutiny will have to be further considered. On October 29, 1923, defendant No. 2 sent a registered notice through Vakil, Mr. A. Ramaswami Ayyar, claiming some documents and movables belonging to her husband. A reply was sent to this on November 12, 1923 (Ex. 11) by Mr. Venkatachala Ayyar, a Vakil, on behalf of the plaintiff. After replying to the subject-matter of the notice under reply, the letter winds up by saying:

"You are hereby informed that in respect of the dealings had by the said Kailasam Pillai when he was a partner of our client's salt firm, there is a sum of Rs. 25,506-6-4 inclusive of principal and interest up to the 15th Thai, 1098 (January 28, 1923) due to our client from the said person as well as subsequent interest and that he is ready to take the requisite proceedings for recovery of the said amount."

It is noticeable that this is the first information given by the plaintiff of the so-called settlement of January 28, 1923, which was effected by the plaintiff behind the back of defendant No. 2 and even this does not give any details of the settlement. In reply to Ex. 11 defendant No. 2 sent Ex. IV dated December 5, 1923, through a different Vakil, Mr. K. Ramaswami Ayyangar instead of his former Vakil. In this letter after replying to the prior correspondence it is alleged that a sum of Rs. 60,000 will be due from the plaintiff if accounts were taken of the business. So the plaintiff is called upon to give the details of the accounts, the balance sheets of the salt
